
Saint Joseph's Ahmad Nivins averages 19.3 points per game to go along with 11.5 rebounds per contest and a .643 shooting percentage.

Assist record within reach against URI

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

guys realize, and they've said it, that that's one of the most physical teams in the league and a team that will pressure the whole game and play up and down."

UMass has had a season full of stops and starts, but one constant has been that the Minuteman have never been blown out against any conference foe. UMass knows it can compete and win if it can execute down the stretch.

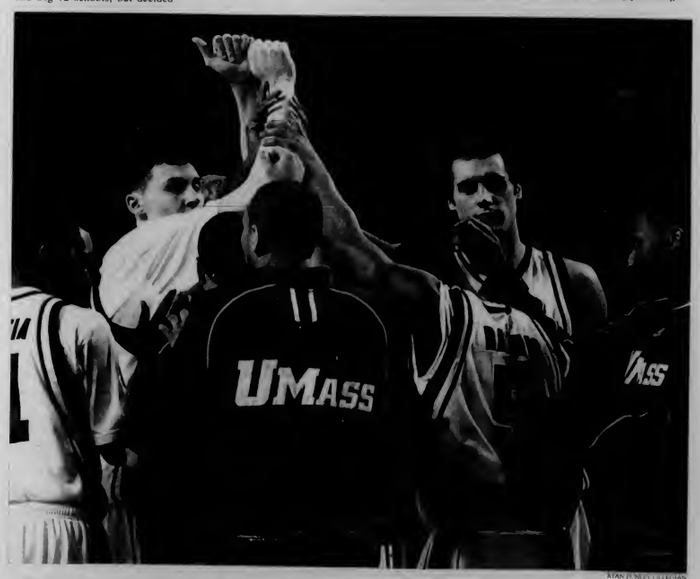
"This is a game where you're going to have a nice crowd, they're a little bit ahead of you in the conference, and they're playing very well," Kellogg said of Rhode Island. "It gives you a chance to come out and compete with one of the best teams in the league."

The Rams (18-8, 7-4 A-10) enter Wednesday's game on a hot streak. They have won six of their last seven games, most recently a 69-61 win over Saint Louis, who beat UMass 69-64 back on Jan. 14.

Rhode Island is led by a balanced scoring attack which features four starters who average double figures. Senior guard Jimmy Baron is the high-scorer for the Rams, putting in 16.6 points per game while hitting 44.3 percent of his 3-pointers.

Rebounding differential will be critical to the Minutemen's success against URI. Against St Bonaventure, UMass was outrebounded 48-28 in an eight-point loss, so Kellogg will emphasize the importance of rebounding, particularly by the guards who must help standout forward Tony Gaffney (10.7 rebounds per game) control the glass.

This could be a memorable game for senior point guard Chris Lowe who has 628 career assists, six short of the all-time UMass record of 633 held by Carl Smith. Considering that Lowe averages about eight assists per game at home, he could break the record in front of a crowded building against a team that is arguably UMass' biggest rival.



"It will be an impressive capstone to a very solid career and a fond memory from a senior season that has not been as successful as he had hoped. Despite the team's subpar record, Lowe has been instrumental in preparing some of the younger guards, such as freshman David Gibbs, for the future.

"He's done a good job of trying to help the younger kids play at a certain level. It's pretty difficult because he's in a learning curve himself with a new coach," Kellogg said.

Kellogg also hopes to see Lowe maximize his own potential for the remainder of the season.

"As the season's gone on, he's gotten better suited to lead in the locker room and on the floor," Kellogg said. "He can even take it to one more step and one more level in our last six games of the regular season and the Atlantic 10 Tournament."

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

The Minutemen come together as a team during a stoppage in play in a game earlier this season. UMass will host Rhode Island today at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center in the 131st matchup between the two rival schools.

Add for pleasure.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | 5 | | 3 | | | |
| | | 1 | | | | 3 | | |
| 8 | 3 | | | | | | 2 | 4 |
| | | 3 | 9 | | 5 | 7 | | |
| 7 | 6 | | | | | | 8 | 9 |
| | | 4 | 7 | | 1 | 2 | | |
| 1 | 9 | | | | | | 3 | 2 |
| | | 2 | | | | 6 | | |
| | | | 1 | | 6 | | | |

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Gymnast Korbut
5 Pitcher Maglie
8 Mary Tyler and Roger
14 hearty hopeless
15 Money payer
18 Insincere
17 Scared past
19 Frilled strip
20 Finery
21 Certainly!
22 Crater edge
23 Hance holiday
24 Paraffin
25 Colleen
26 As it were
30 Disney dwarf
31 Become too hot
32 Baby's foot
35 Jacob's fifth son
36 Regular job
38 Mamie's mate
39 Los ___, NM
41 Island of Ireland
43 Writer Heinlott
44 Plans again from scratch
45 ___ de foie gras
47 Fizzler
48 Bribe
49 Kubrick's computer
50 Wrath
51 Superlatively tangy
55 You better!
57 Tyrant
58 Snooping
59 Wapiti
60 Immaculate
61 Beginnings
62 Help!
63 Web location

DOWN
1 Redolence
2 Draw breath
3 "Dilemma &
4 Turf ventilating device
5 Green soup base
6 Precinct
7 Heavyhearted
8 Purple dye source
9 Millstone
10 Canceled
11 Acting as a lens
12 Writer Peters
13 Parts of pipes
18 Red-light district
21 Flap gums
24 Observed
25 Old card game
26 Word with easter or pop
27 Racetrack layout
28 Lacking lessees
29 Take in food
30 Inlers from into
32 One-size-fits-all footwear
35 Cooling
37 Put out of the way
40 W.C.'s co-star often
42 Foundation stones
44 Regret
45 Graph starter?
46 Blugger Henry
47 Cabinnet sediments
50 Fails to be
51 Storage cylinder
52 Sewing case
53 Alphabetize
54 Sycamore or palm
56 Peruse
57 ___ Moines

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach
THINK AHEAD
Two 6-week summer sessions
Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net
Registration begins March 9
SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"When we ask for advice, we are usually looking for an accomplice."

— Marquis de la Grange

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! By Tim Rickard

The Duck Pond By AC Moore

Labrat By Richard Martell

follow the breadcrumbs
send in your comics to
COMICS @ DAILY COLLEGIAN DOT COM

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Today you'll finally understand what it actually feels like to "go get bent." It won't be fun.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your request for Federal bailout money for your small business (UMass Gone Wild) did not go unnoticed. There is a check coming.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Stop engaging in fear-inducing, truth-denying, freedom-hating, rights-restricting, United States-cursing leftism, you Commie.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Why can't we all just get along?

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Let out your inner "woooooooooooooooooooooooo!" today.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
It's no surprise that bands want to be labeled "post-rock" these days, with "Christian rock" souring the name and all.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Some UMass sporting event-related crap happened yesterday. Check the next page over for more details.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Don't go to that class.
It won't matter in the long run.
Trust me. (Why won't you trust me?)

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You've been shedding new light on things lately, but your chest hair is not something that anyone wants to see.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You are going to do horribly on your BASICS final exam, mostly because you're totallly wasted.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your ability to Facebook stalk puts real stalkers to shame.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
The scent of your conditioner reminds those around you of Indian food. Stop using vindiloo curry as a conditioner.

tasty crackers!
free pizza & hot cocoa!*
www.dailycollegian.com/comics
*none of this is true

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Survey Takers Needed: Make $5 - $25 per survey. Do it in your spare time. www.GetPaidToThink.com

ANNOUNCEMENT

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblow-out.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076. Sign up at Campus Center Feb. 20

Spring Break 09
TRAVEL FREE
LOW LOW PRICES!!
WE HAVE IT ALL...
Sun Splash
BOOK NOW!!
1800-426-7710
www.sunsplashtours.com

FOR RENT

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms, hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincoln-realty.com

Visit our new and improved website at dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BRIAN TSUCHIDA/COLLEGIAN

Junior Merritt Cosgrove scored two goals on seven shots as the Minutewomen fell 11-7 to Holy Cross on Tuesday. UMass overcame two three-goal deficits before giving up four unanswered goals in the final 18 minutes of the game.

UMass rallies, falls in the end

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With many of its players seeing their first game as a collegiate athlete, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team failed to overcome a late surge by Holy Cross, dropping the first game of the season Tuesday, 11-7.

UMass, which boasts a roster of 13 true freshmen and only three seniors, twice came back from three goal deficits. But with a four goal burst at end the game, Holy Cross had the last word in the back-and-forth affair.

| | |
|---|---|
| HC | 11 |
| UMass | 7 |

Due to the high turnover from last year, UMass entered its first game with many players in new roles and is still developing in terms of players adjusting.

"We have a couple of new faces in the lineup, we have people playing different positions than they did in the fall," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We have to do a better job of being able to react when adversity happens and instead of reacting, being proactive and trying to take leads and control the game rather than playing behind. Because when you play behind, it takes a lot of energy."

The Minutewomen (0-1) were led offensively by junior Merritt Cosgrove and senior Holly Drown. Both had a pair of goals. Meanwhile, UMass saw freshman goalkeeper Kathryn Florense make her first start, making nine saves on the day.

The Crusaders beat out the Minutewomen in shots on net (30-25), draw circle controls (14-6) and ground balls (13-11).

UMass' season dawned with Holy Cross (1-0) jumping out to a 2-0 lead within the first eight minutes with goals by Annie Boylan and Kaitlyn Curley. The Minutewomen then tallied their first goal of the season with sophomore midfielder Jackie Lyons beating out HC goalkeeper Amy Martin with 21 minutes, 19 seconds left in the first half.

Following another Crusaders goal, the Minutewomen tied it up at three with back-to-back goals from Drown and Stephanie Hopkins. The comeback was short-lived, however, as Holy Cross closed out the half with three-straight goals, two by junior Megan Fenton.

"Holy Cross came out strong right off the bat, and [we] were basically playing behind the entire game, down 3-1 and right before the half when

See W. LAX on page 7

Rivalry game for 132nd time

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With six games left before the Atlantic 10 Tournament begins, UMass coach Derek Kellogg will try to rally the team for a stretch run in an effort to enter the tournament with some positive momentum.

He will have the perfect chance Wednesday when the Minutemen face off against nemesis Rhode Island for the 131st time in school history. Tip-off at the Mullins Center is slated for 7:30 p.m.

The trip home comes at an opportune time for the Minutemen, who are coming off a disappointing 83-75 loss at St. Bonaventure last Saturday. It was the fourth time this season in which the Minutemen lost a conference game after holding the lead or being tied at the half.

The good news for UMass (9-14, 4-6 A-10) is that this will be a home game. This is important for a few reasons. First, the Minutemen play much better at home (6-5 overall) than on the road (2-9). Secondly, the Rams are much worse on the road (6-5) than at home (11-1). And finally, UMass has a 17-4 record all-time at the Mullins Center against URI.

Kellogg remembers how intense this rivalry can be and how his players will have to be prepared for a grueling game.

"It's been taken to another level since even when I played because Rhode Island is our rivalry game and one that seems to draw a great crowd at both places," Kellogg said at the weekly A-10 teleconference. "Our

See M. BASKETBALL on page 8

RYAN TSUCHIDA/COLLEGIAN

Point guard Chris Lowe needs just six assists to become the all-time assists leader in UMass history. The senior averages over eight per game at home.

Youthful squad for '09 season

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The youthfulness of the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team is a concern for coach Greg Canella as they head into the 2009 season, but with leadership from a variety of upperclassman, it shouldn't pose too much of a problem.

Numerous freshmen and sophomores will have to step up and fill holes from last year's roster. With little game experience at the collegiate level, Canella hopes the underclassmen can be consistent performers early this season.

The Minutemen have three captains – Doc Schneider, Joe Reale and Tim Balise – and other upperclassman who have shown crucial leadership to support the younger players throughout the season.

"[The captains and upperclassman] bring a lot to the table. Those guys were part of the 2006 team that went to the national championship so they have that type of experience, the winning experience," Canella said. "It's their job to convince some of these younger guys that this system works, that what we do here works, but they've been great."

The leadership from the senior and junior classes will have an impact on the outcome of the season.

DEFENDERS

Although UMass has lost three defenders from last season in Brian Danvers, Sean Krygier and David Von Voigt, the Minutemen have a solid defensive core that is backed by Diogo Godoi and goalkeeper Schneider.

"Defensively I think we're pretty solid," Canella said. "I think we have six guys that we feel can play

See YOUTH on page 7

JAMES WELLINGTON/COLLEGIAN

Attackman Steve D'Amario is one of 14 freshmen on the No. 20 Minutemen squad. D'Amario saw time in UMass' rout over Sacred Heart and had one shot in the victory.

UM hopes to return to form

Minutemen look poised to recreate success of 2006 season

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, a lot has happened since the end of the 2006 season.

Three players were arrested and eight were suspended for their alleged involvement in an off-campus incident, two players were reinstated, one freshman sensation became academically ineligible and the Minutemen had two mediocre seasons after the 2006 run to the national championship game.

Now a full year after the controversy surrounding the team, the Minutemen appear poised to once again be among the nation's elite – just as they were in 2006.

And after two years of struggles on the field, they'll get to do it while perhaps flying under the radar a little bit, as teams may underestimate the firepower on this year's Minutemen.

"Flying under the radar is a good thing, and if you can do that and perhaps sneak up on teams, then great," said UMass coach Greg Cannella, now in his 15th season at the helm. "But I don't think anybody is going to take UMass lightly – ever. We're still a team that people are going to look at and say that's a good, solid program."

After defeating UMass in 2008 – most teams did last year in a 5-9 season – Sacred Heart may have taken the Minutemen lightly headed into last weekend's season opener. UMass made sure that they paid for it – demolishing the Pioneers, 15-6, at Garber Field to start the season off the right way.

Of course, UMass began 2008 with an 8-4 win over Hofstra – so you never know. But this year's Minutemen are different.

The convincing victory over Sacred Heart was a good start, but

See M. LAX on page 7

Real season begins at A-10's in Buffalo

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For the Massachusetts men's and women's swim, the official UMass athletics press release says it all: "The season starts now."

Armed across the board with the best divers in their respective conferences, two very different Massachusetts swimming teams departed Tuesday for the Atlantic 10 Championships in Buffalo, N.Y.: a powerful Minutemen squad hoping to repeat as champions and the dark horse Minutewomen, who come in with a 2-2 dual meet record against A-10 foes this season after finishing fourth at last year's finals.

A Minutemen repeat may be more accurately termed a "three-peat" and would mark the 11th championship UMass has won in the league's 14-year history.

On the other hand, from today until Feb. 21, coach Bob Newcomb's underdog Minutewomen have a chance to rattle some of the region's best competition. As is the case with their male counterparts, the women's side of the pool returns a dominant champion in Richmond, who will swim for a record eighth-straight conference finals victory.

Though the Minutewomen's conference dual meet record appears even, the team has consistently turned it up a notch for invitationals this season, where they have finished in the top three on multiple occasions.

On Feb 2, in what is perhaps the most crucial method of foreshadowing college swimming has, senior captain Christa Narus, juniors Kathryne Chaliklis and Elizabeth Walsh and freshman Chelsea Downing were showed scaling many key lists in the latest release

See SWIMMING on page 7

A dynasty goes unnoticed

Holly J. Galvin

While you were sleeping off that long weekend hangover early Tuesday morning, the best team on campus left Amherst without any fanfare, media coverage or belligerent fans hoping to score free t-shirts.

No, the aforementioned team isn't the dismally schizophrenic Mass Attack, who with streaky wins over then-No. 3 Northeastern and subsequent chokes against the likes of Providence, continue to topple the hopes of UMass hockey faithful on a weekly basis. And no, the team isn't the similarly inconsistent Massachusetts men's basketball program, which has come frustratingly close to knocking off the class of its conference and still remains at a frustratingly mediocre 9-14.

The best team in town is one it's safe to say you've never heard of, likely can't even name three members of and will probably never watch on ESPN primetime while eating sushi at the Berkshire Dining Commons. The best team in town goes anonymously about its business, annihilating all comers faster than Alex Rodriguez is losing credibility.

Tucked quietly away in Buffalo, N.Y., this week and potentially en route to its eighth conference championship in 10 years is the most successful team UMass has seen in years: the men's swimmers and divers.

Unsurprisingly, however, next to nobody on campus cares, and it's time to examine the disrespect of a dynasty.

Look, let's not kid ourselves. Most of the UMass student body couldn't care less about the swim teams, or for that matter, any other sport that doesn't provide their weary Southwest bodies free T-shirts and ample opportunity to verbally harass opposing players on a weekly basis. Just ask infamous BU hockey forward Dennis Yip – he's heard all about it.

Such self-serving and flakey fandom is not going to change anytime soon – realistically and maybe, rightfully so – but neither is the unmatched tradition of excellence UMass swimming has earned. In a decade where the Minutemen have failed to become conference champions only twice, what's truly daunting is the fact that they own 71 percent of the league championships in all of A-10 swimming history.

Still, the boys in Boyden get next to no respect. When they show up to practice every morning, each varsity swimmer gets a $50 million slap in the face. This comes in the form of the new campus recreation center being constructed only a parking lot's walk from the antiquated Boyden swimming facilities. This, where die-hard fans can barely cram into during home meets, and where swimmers frequently put in four hour-plus days.

See GALVIN on page 7

CLIF RITSY HOBBS/UMASS ALUMNUS

UMass coach Russ Yarworth received a Massachusetts State Senate Citation honoring his 30-year commitment to student athletics.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

A.M. FLURRIES HI: 41 LO: 21 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2009

UMass groups discuss budget

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Yesterday afternoon, members of the University of Massachusetts community packed the Campus Center auditorium with one common interest: finding a solution to the University's impending budget crisis.

Four campus organizations led the forum to call attention to some of the potentially overlooked consequences of fee increases and service reductions. The event, held during the noon lunch hour to accommodate campus employees, attracted approximately 200 concerned individuals and featured speakers from several unions and student leadership groups.

"Our whole position is that the economic crisis is the worst time to cut the best investment we have," PHENOM President and UMass-Boston Trustee Alex Kulenovic told The Collegian on Tuesday. "Public education fuels the economy, and is one of the best tools we have. On top of that, it seems that with the stimulus package, some of these cuts may not be necessary."

The meeting was intended to rally students and the unionized members of the University workforce, while serving as a symbol of support for the interests of students, faculty and staff. Each of the six speakers shared their thoughts on possible budgetary solutions.

Yet much of the meeting's impact was lost among the convoluted rhetoric that prominently focused on shifting the blame to the administration.

The informational session, marketed as "Understanding the UMass Budget Crisis" was sponsored by the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM), Student Government Association (SGA), Graduate Student Senate (GSS) and the UMass Labor Coalition.

Student trustee Lindsay McCluskey entreated the students and staff to advocate their state legislatures to restore higher education funding. McCluskey cited several states which have maintained public

See BUDGET on page 2

Vassell held in abeyance

BY WILLIAM MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Superior Courtroom 2 was filled with Jason Vassell supporters yesterday, and those who could not make it inside peered through the room's windows to witness what the accused stabber's attorney called, "Just another step in the process."

Vassell, a former University of Massachusetts student, was scheduled to appear today for a motion to dismiss his case, which goes back to an incident last spring in which Vassell, who is black, fought with Jonathan Bosse and John Bowes, who are both white and not UMass students. Vassell sustained a broken nose, and Bosse and Bowes sustained multiple wounds from a small knife.

Vassell's motion to dismiss reads that the prosecutors made judgments on whom to prosecute and what to bring based largely on the race of the parties involved.

"In doing so, it disregarded principles embodied in our state and federal constitutions that prohibit the discriminatory enforcement of impartial laws," the motion reads.

Currently, Vassell faces a maximum of 30 years in state prison; Bowes faces four years in a house of correction and Bosse has not been charged. The motion alleges that Bosse "has not

See VASSELL on page 2

Justice for Jason supporters hold a march on campus on Feb. 3. Jason Vassell appeared in court yesterday for a motion to dismiss the case on grounds of racism.

Crucial two at Mullins

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was three weeks ago when the Massachusetts hockey team again had a chance to build off a huge win, with the hope of creating enough momentum to carry them through the rest of the season.

The win came against No. 3 Northeastern. Their next game was a loss to Main on Feb. 1.

The same could happen this weekend.

"It was a very difficult game," UMass coach Don Cahoon said of the last meeting between the two teams. "I don't think we ever got going in terms of applying pressure; we did it sporadically. It wasn't a start to finish type of effort.

"We can't think about playing the same way and expect the same type of success we need this weekend."

Rather than the usual home-and-home series between the two teams, the Minutemen (12-15-3, 7-11-3 Hockey East) will host the Black Bears (12-14-4, 7-11-3 Hockey East) in an unusual two-game set at the Mullins Center. With the season winding down, this weekend's series means more than any other played this season.

The Minutemen find themselves tied for seventh place in Hockey East, only five points ahead of Providence. A mere 10 points separate third place from seventh, so no matter the outcome, UMass' performance will weigh heavily on who it faces in the Hockey East Tournament, which starts March 13.

Last Saturday, the Minutemen traveled to the historic Matthews Arena and not only beat the Huskies, but dominated them. The win showed a lot about whom the Minutemen are as a team; they can get beat at anytime, but they can also beat the best on any given night. They are still looking for that certain line, that certain moment – anything that makes the team click and play to their full potential.

"We played very well together on Saturday night and very inconsistently on Friday night," said Cahoon. "Saturday night might have been an identity game in terms of [finding] out what we are, who we are and how we need to play.

"It's to be seen yet if we can wrap ourselves on that type of performance and bring it on a consistent basis."

Their goaltending, though, isn't the issue. On Saturday, junior net minder, Dan Meyers, nearly shut out the Huskies, stopping 21 shots. Putting his save totals aside, Meyers also showed great rebound control and position throughout the game. It will be interesting to see if the Minutemen continue to go to Meyers more throughout the final stretch.

The power-play unit is another aspect of the Minutemen that has come on as of late.

"We made a few adjustments, personnel wise," Cahoon said of the power play. "We moved people into the left point and the two other forward slots so now we have [Matt] Irwin there and it seems that we have committed ourselves to that.

"I think the guys have done a better job of playing together and executing and following through with the principals."

Fortunately for the Minutemen they get to host two games in friendly Amherst instead of traveling to Orono, Maine, where the Minutemen have not won a game in the last three years.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

UMass' Michael Lecomte rushes into the offensive zone in last Friday's game against Northeastern. During the season the sophomore has tallied five goals (three power play goals) and four assists.

Animal science students get hands-on 'lambing'

BY ERIC TRIPOLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Traveling down the Pioneer Valley's endless circulatory system of backcountry roads, you may end up on North Maple Street in Hadley. And if you happen upon this quiet but pleasantly lonely stretch of asphalt, you will no doubt pass the Hadley Farm.

Safely tucked away from the immediate roadside, the farm looks like most any other farm. Wooden fences create the border between pasture and pavement while a smattering of barns dominates the foreground. In the distance looms University of Massachusetts structures like the Southwest dormitories, the W.E.B. Du Bois Library and the Lederle Graduate Research Center.

The driveway is dirt, of course. A farm such as this New England staple is not unfamiliar for those who have been on this road before or those who may have made a right when they should have made a left. The house on this land lends itself to a modern feel. It bears wide-angled gables and a turret-shaped section spanning three floors. The barns are Picasso grey rather than Rockwell red. They stand as traditional monuments of self-sufficiency; hallmarks of a time now largely out of mind.

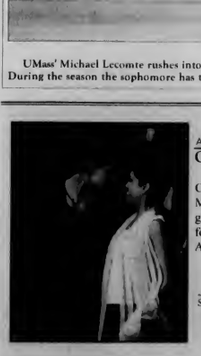
Inside the main barn, sound and cold bounces freely off one another. Wooden equipment is scattered about the edges of the floor. A bulletin board hangs on the wall, featuring an array of ribbons in blue, purple, and red from fairs across the county, serving as a testament to the work of the farm.

The hay gives off an abundantly earthy aroma; it is the olfactory version of the mixture of sweet and salty. The strands of hay are still golden, bearing the insignia of the sunlight responsible for their growth. The sounds of animals permeate the space, among them are goats, kids, sheep and lambs. Birds twitter about in the rafters above and flitter around looking for suitable additions for their nests, be them of plant or fur.

Past and present converge at the Hadley Farm; an old school environment that mixes with the thriving UMass community.

UMass students enrolled in spring semester course Introduction to Animal Management this spring are given the opportunity learn away from campus and get their hands dirty by working with livestock on this Hadley farm.

The course is a continuation from Introduction to Animal Science, which is offered in the fall semester.



Students put away the books and put on a pair of work gloves in order to gain experience with the necessary steps to raising farm animals for a variety of purposes. They learn how to manage animals in the six areas of the industry: sheep, beef cows, poultry, swine, dairy, and horses. This includes daily maintenance of the pens, from sweeping, cleaning, and feeding to tagging the animals. Each student is required to perform at least three shifts per semester.

"Rather than see a picture, they get a variety of situations to work directly with. We give them a very detailed animal

See SHEEP on page 3

University of Massachusetts alumna and employee Alice Newth monitors the mother ewe and her nursing lamb.

ARTS & LIVING
OSCAR NODS

Collegian critics Shayna Murphy and Justin Gagnon give their predictions for this year's Academy Awards.

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS
FALLING SHORT

A collapse in the second half sent the men's basketball team reeling, walking away with another loss last night.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORAL & OPINION
POINT COUNTERPOINT | KENT VS. WAYNE

Clark Kent and Bruce Wayne engage in a powerful battle of words. Is President Obama an inspirational ray of hope, or a total g*damn mama's boy?

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
SLIDESHOW | MEN'S BASKETBALL

Watch the Minutemen fall in a heartbreaker to Rhode Island in last night's game at the Mullins Center.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 18

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Mekoni
Business Manager Alex Waszczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor James Mathews
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenwaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murrin
Photo Editor P.J. Stanley
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Asst. Editorial Leigh Greaney
Asst. Editorial Nick O'Malley
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo Ryan Fung
Assistant Photo Matthew Harrison
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillemeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Wellver

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aleph Lyf, became the College Signal in 1902, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been printed since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kate Olesin

COPY EDITOR
Shayna Murphy

PRODUCTION TEAM
Dan Centola

Online exclusives at DailyCollegian.com

NEWS

SLIDESHOW | Catch some shots of the juggling club

VIDEO | A DailyCollegian.com exclusive interview with Sudanese hip hop artist Emmanuel Jal

SPORTS

SLIDESHOW | Men's basketball photo slideshow

ARTS

VIDEO | A video recap of this weekend's Chocolate Celebration at Historic Deerfield

Interested in writing for News?

Contact Will McGuinness at news@dailycollegian.com

Visit us Online at dailycollegian.com

Bill high for GI

By Dominic Poli
Collegian Staff

The U.S. Department of Veterans Affairs has produced a preliminary, state-by-state list of the maximum amount of fees and tuition payable to veterans under a new GI Bill that goes into effect in August. However, the numbers are raising some questions because they are higher than anticipated.

In accordance with the new GI Bill – officially the Post-9/11 Veterans Educational Assistance Act of 2008 – eligible veterans will be able to get their tuition covered at the most expensive public college in the state, based on undergraduate resident tuition and fees, in addition to getting housing and book stipends, according to an Inside Higher Ed article.

"It's definitely going to be a good thing," said Andrew Masciola, president of the University of Massachusetts' Veterans and Service Members Association (VASMA). "It's going to raise up the benefit levels for active duty guys and everyone else coming back that don't get the same benefits that the [National] Guard guys currently get," he said.

However, the legislation is expected to cost Congress $28.1 billion over the first five years and $78.1 billion through 2018, Inside Higher Ed reported. Some are concerned the cost will increase if the preliminary rates published on the Veterans Affairs' (VA) website stand.

In Texas, for example, the maximum charge per credit hour listed is $1,333, meaning students pay $1,333 for every credit taken. The maximum total fees per term in the Lone Star State are $12,750, according to Inside Higher Ed.

But the figures in the VA's table vary greatly on a state-by-state basis.

Andrew Masciola, President of UMass Veterans and Service Members Association, supports the benefits of the new GI bill.

Kentucky and Massachusetts are marked as not having responded to the VA's request for data.

Bryan J. Cook, director of the Center for Policy Analysis at the American Council on Education, compared the VA's published maximum rates to flagship university rates across the country. He told Inside Higher Ed that the VA's rates were significantly higher in about 30 states.

"In most states, students would be eligible for a tuition and fees amount above [that of] the highest-costing flagships," Cook told Inside Higher Ed. "Essentially, what it looks like they've done is they've taken the highest charge per credit hour of a particular institution and then they found the highest fee amount at an institution, but they could be two completely different institutions.

"And then you put those together to come up with the amount that a student would be eligible for under the new GI Bill in that particular state," he continued.

According to Inside Higher Ed, if rates in certain states remain higher than what was anticipated, it could mean a transfer of federal educational benefits to private colleges, both nonprofit and for-profit.

For-profit colleges educate more veterans than almost any other institution of higher education, with the University of Phoenix (an online college) as the leader in terms of receiving veterans' benefits.

Masciola acknowledged the confusion involved with the new GI Bill, but said he's thankful the legislation has been passed and hopes to soon hear that the uncertainty surrounding the GI Bill's language is cleared up.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu

Intern fair held

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

At last week's Summer Co-op and Internship Opportunities Fair, students of all majors at the University of Massachusetts were able to get a feel for the types of opportunities awaiting them during and after college.

Many students agree that, with the economic decline of the past few months, finding any type of work at this phase of life can be a challenge. However, many of these same students also offered advice for their counterparts struggling to find a resume-building internship.

Daryl Popper, who graduated from UMass in 2008, is now working as a program coordinator for the Washington Center, a non-profit organization that provides qualified students with leadership building internships in Washington D.C.

Popper interned with this organization as an undergraduate at UMass.

"What's most important about interning is expanding your connections and building a network," she said.

Popper added that the best places to start are career and internship fairs, as well as Career Services.

"Communicate as much as you can," she continued. "There's something out there for everyone."

Popper also suggested students have their own business cards printed, even if they don't have a job relevant to their desired employment. A simple card with your name and contact information can come in handy when meeting with a potential employer for the first time.

Freshman marketing major Cameron Cox agreed that networking is a vital tool for students.

"Without the right connections, it's hard to find an internship," said Cox. "Get to know people, especially professors and people you know of who have the kind of job you're interested in."

Cox mentioned that while he was in high school, connections in his field of interest played a major role in gaining an internship.

"Go to career fairs, get acquainted with employers, let them see your face," added Cox.

UMass sophomore Charles Beyrouthy, a biochemical engineering and chemistry major, is looking forward to an internship with Abbott Labs this summer.

UMass Career Services, located in Goodell, assists students with internships, co-ops and résumé writing and advice.

He said he has numerous academic departments he worked with to thank, including the College of Engineering, the chemical engineering department and the chemistry department. He also related his successes to the support of his parents and his advisors.

"Make sure your resume is in order, and be persistent," Beyrouthy's advised.

Jeff Silver, the associate director for the Field Experience program at Career Services, has helped UMass students find internships and co-ops since 1982. He said that securing an internship for academic credits during a fall or spring semester has never been difficult, no matter where a student is looking. The competitive internships are during the summer.

"UMass students need to get summer out of their minds," he said in an e-mail. "With the economy not doing well, summer jobs will be harder than ever to obtain. I've never seen a student not obtain a semester internship."

Silver also suggested students attend one of his internship workshops – if they haven't already. The workshops take place every Monday and Thursday in Goodell Hall, room 508, at 3 p.m.

The final aspect of the package that employers look for (aside from a strong grade point average, of course) is personality.

Junior sociology major Elena-Marija Gruc used her persona to her advantage last summer while interning for the Department of Youth Services. She said that in the end, "they liked me more than my credentials."

Junior marketing major Konstantin Blogov offered that overcoming one's social boundaries and speaking to employers in person can often make a good first impression on potential employers.

Sophomore Matt Firmani, a computer science and psychology major, agreed, and said he thinks his social skills may be his best asset when looking for an internship.

"Talking with people is what will get their attention," said Firmani. "Just sending in my resume isn't going to be enough."

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorreia@student.umass.edu.

Cuts under scrutiny

BUDGET from page 1

higher education funding through fiscal uncertainty as models to the Bay State.

She also directly chastised the administration, demanding that it maintain a greater lobbying presence at the state house.

"It's your job to demand that there's enough money to fund the University," McCluskey said.

Chancellor Robert Holub took in the meeting from the rear of the auditorium, sitting among the 200 attendees.

"I agree that we should prioritize our faculty and try to minimize layoffs – that's exactly what we're trying to do," Holub said.

The chancellor reiterated that he was not at odds with anything presented at the meeting, stressing only that a $46 million deficit places his administration in a difficult position.

Dale Melcher, from the Labor Relations Center and a member of the Professional Staff Union negotiating committee, emphasized that the University administration should not immediately look to eliminating staffing positions.

"It's a good business practice to be loyal to employees," she said.

She also advocated for more transparent accounting of University funds, including the $19 million spent by the President's office. She also called on the administration to "freeze the hiring process for all upper-management positions."

Others encouraged the administration to discontinue the privatization of key university services, while shifting responsibility to existing departments.

Graduate Employee Organization member Dominique Cambou argued that increased student fees coupled with wage reductions would cripple a typical graduate student's ability to pursue a degree.

Lisa DeBenedictis contributed to this report.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

Lawyers claim racism played a role in charges

VASSELL from page 1

been prosecuted despite clear evidence he violated numerous laws."

The motion continues that racism is the only plausible explanation for the criminal charges now pending, and the point serves as the defense's primary point for the motion.

"By declining to prosecute one of these men, and bringing inappropriately reduced charges against the other, the District Attorney has engaged in selective prosecution based on the basis of race," the motion concludes.

A precedence of prejudice

Vassell's lawyers said yesterday that his case is similar to another, which stems from a 2006 incident at the University.

Then, Demian Vennell, a 36-year-old former University security guard, was charged with hitting two men with a metal flashlight in the Southwest Residential Area.

The case was dismissed when his alleged victims did not show up to court, but Vassell's defense said Vennell was similarly targeted for prosecution despite the reported violent actions of his alleged victims.

Since the incident between Vassell and Bosse and Bowes in MacKimmie Hall last year, opinion has split regarding just who the victims and the culprits are.

Vassell's attorneys say he was acting in self defense against drunken strangers who arrived at his window yelling racial slurs. The Commonwealth of Massachusetts and prosecutors warn that judgments should not be rushed to, and the facts must be presented in court to see if Vassell used excessive force.

Judge Judd Carhart ruled to hold the motion in abeyance until an evidentiary hearing is held, at which both the defense and prosecutors will present that evidence, exhibits and witnesses to either support or bring down the motion.

UMass African-American studies professor Michael Thelwell, a source close to Vassell and his family, said they have been distressed by the trial thus far and the tedium of the proceedings.

Before leaving the courthouse, Vassell's father waved to Thelwell and said, "I guess I'll see you next month and the month after that and the month after that."

William McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu.

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Gloss Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 4th from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

SGA holds senate meeting on election

By Mike Fox
Collegian Staff

Last night the Student Government Association (SGA) senate confirmed the remaining eight appointments to the election commission.

The eight appointments faced a varying degree of questioning from the body that was focused on how the appointments heard about the position, their motivation for pursuing it, any past experience in the SGA, and participation in past elections. Concerns revolved around some appointees' seeming lack of SGA experience.

Speaking about this criticism to his candidates, Chancellor of Elections Sean McNair said, "I think it's good because it brings fresh blood to the process. Additionally, freshmen bring the potential to be involved with campus elections long term."

Student responses to the questions followed several common themes. Many wanted to use this experience to begin participating in the SGA from an unbiased perspective, or to help increase voter participation and pursue their passion of politics to greater degree.

Only one of the current appointments has sat on an election commission before.

Senior Awais Kazi said about returning to the position, "Every single time that I was involved in the process, I had a good experience that helped me feel that I could contribute positively to the school."

"I feel that the democratic process is very important and should be instilled throughout education to help bring this important tradition throughout society," said Kazi on the importance of civic engagement in college.

SGA Attorney General Alison Marshall also made the announcement that the recently debated issue of bringing SGA elections online would have to be prolonged until after the upcoming election.

She stated that she wanted to encourage a more extensive dialogue between the Senate and the executive branch on this matter.

She also mentioned that she was, "under the impression some senators weren't aware of what by-law changes entailed and how soon before an election changes to the by-laws can be made."

"Because of the importance of the proposed changes, it seemed that many senators felt that they needed more time to properly review the amendments," McNair stated in response to senators' concerns over the possible move to online voting.

"The election commission plans to continue pursuing ideas such as online voting that could help raise participation in the future," McNair added.

On finally receiving a full election commission, McNair added, "I think we have an incredibly diverse commission, which adds a lot of integrity to the elections process."

Nomination packets for the upcoming March election are now available at room 420 of the Campus Center.

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu

New Appointments to SGA Election Commission
Erica Nyer- Freshman, Management
Sarah Eldredge- Sophomore, Management
Patrick Ashline- Sophomore, Political Science
Ryan Johnson- Sophomore, Management
John Vasquez- Freshman, Mathematics
Reynaldo Sanchez- Freshman, Undeclared
Awais Kazi-Senior- Electrical Engineering
Syed Anas Akhtar- Senior, Philosophy

'Lamb Watch' lets AS students monitor the birthing of lambs

SHEEP from page 1

management experience for later on in their careers," said Alice Newth, a UMass alumna from the program, who has been working at the farm since she graduated in 1982.

Newth and has long been helping to manage assisted in the management of the students in the program.

Despite their normally dirty, slightly smelly workload, the students enjoy their time with the animals and come to care for them beyond their physical responsibilities. Every animal has a distinct personality that the students feel some connection to.

Nancy Malcuit graduated from the UMass Animal Science program in 1997 and has been teaching since 2002. She is the faculty member in charge of Animal Science 103.

"It's a really great resource for the students. The kids love to go down and just hang out with the animals," said Malcuit. "A lot of the students have cats and dogs at home that they miss. They gravitate toward the animals."

One unique element of the course is an event called the Lamb Watch. At the beginning of each semester, students are assigned ewes to monitor during their pregnancy and ultimately, make sure they lamb safely and healthily.

In this part of the program, students are to sign up for at least one overnight shift of watching the ewes during the lambing process.

They arrive at 7 p.m., sleeping in the barn and keeping watch over the animals that may soon lamb.

Should an issue arise, they are to contact the TA on call, who is also responsible for delegating any work that still needs to be done. They leave at 6 a.m.

Angela Locantore is a senior in the animal science department. She graduated from Norfolk County Agricultural High School and has been assisting at the Hadley Farm since her freshman year.

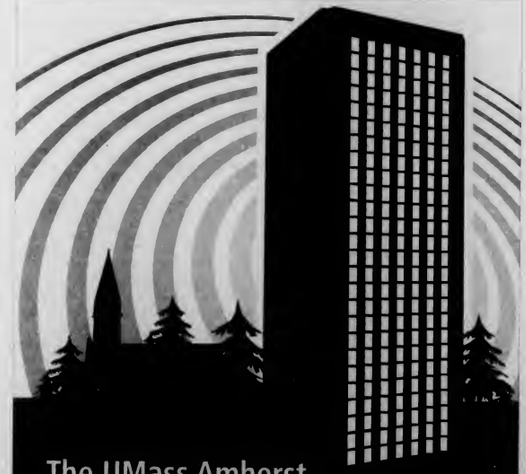
"I wanted to work with livestock and have gotten a lot of experience at UMass. I love the animals. I used to keep horses for about nine years and was in 4-H for a long time," said Locantore.

Edmund Hu, a freshman in the program with plans to attend veterinary school down the road, already sees how working at the Hadley Farm will benefit him in the future.

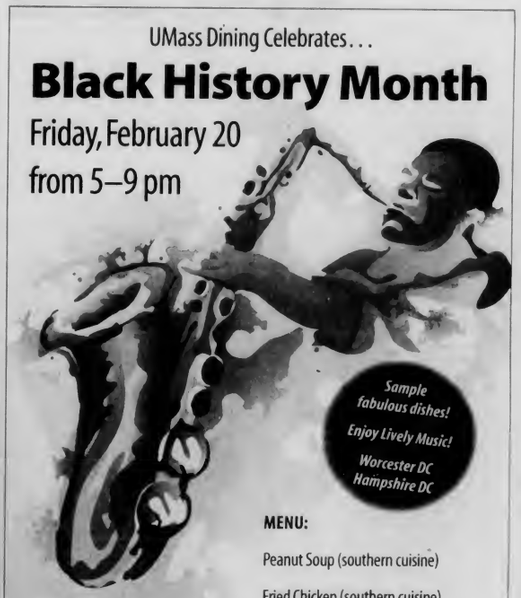
"I never had animals at home but I got an internship in high school at an animal hospital. My favorites are the sheep. I was considering being a more traditional veterinarian for my career, but I may like to be a livestock vet," Hu said.

The evenings can be long, the nights chilly, and the mornings all too early. Yet the escape to the farm for these students is a welcome diversion from the classroom.

Academically, the work may not be as traditional as most are used to, but in this program, students are taught skills that extend far beyond the binding of textbooks and the dust of chalkboards.



Sore backs and callused hands indicate a job well done, and while farms may not play the major role in society that they once did, they nevertheless serve an integral function. That is why people like Newth and Malcuit continue to do this work and pass it on to others.



As Malcuit said, "We are trying to preserve this practical knowledge for the students and community."

Erie Tripoli can be reached at etripoli@student.umass.edu

A mother ewe at the Hadley Farm watches over her newborn lambs. Animal Science majors at UMass can enroll in a spring semester course that includes 'Lamb Watch' to assist in the lambing process.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2009

"FREEDOM OF SPEECH IS OF NO USE TO A MAN WHO HAS NOTHING TO SAY..." - FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

How to put an elephant back on its feet

Dmitriy Shapiro
politicos

About a month after the historic inauguration of Barack Obama, when millions of Americans converged on the capital to celebrate his victory, the nation's most active Conservative will return to the city for the Conservative Political Action Conference (CPAC). To be sure, the issues that will be in the forefront of peoples' minds will be the miserable loss in the recent election and 'where do we go from here?'

Everyone in today's Republican party agrees that there needs to be a change. Yet there are differing opinions of what this change should be. The entities that threaten to break our party are elements that have been strained with John McCain's loss.

I truly believe that it was not John McCain's fault that we lost the election. There were many factors that were stacked against him and our party. But I find it hard to believe, as many in our party do, that we lost because we were not "conservative enough." We lost because we lost touch with the voice of the voters.

These right wing talking heads, that I proudly listen to often, but don't always agree with, withheld their support for our candidate because of ideology and compromised party unity. These intolerant individuals are now trying to purge our party of what they believe to be "not true Republicans."

They are turning our party of the people, a big tent party, into a party of the few hardcore ideologues that take cheap shots at all who dare to slightly veer off the party orthodoxy.

In my view, it is essential to have a 'big tent' party, or else we will not win another election in years, and it is the moderates, not partisan politicos that should be our target audience.

Ann Coulter for example, was so adamantly against McCain, that she threatened to vote for Hillary, and once Hillary was out of the race, she had a website titled "Get Drunk and Vote for McCain."

Wasteful spending ... will lead to ... debt that we will be paying off for generations.

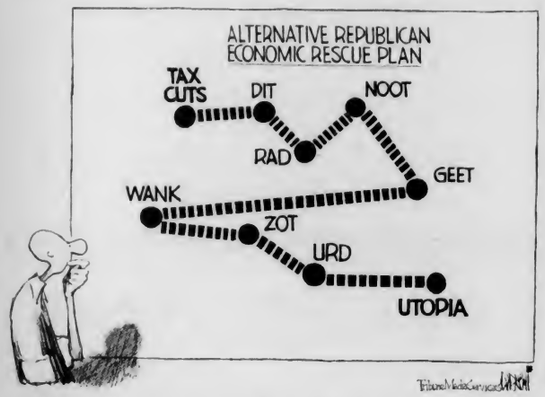
Now, I love Ann Coulter's opinions and books. She is a smart and strong person, but she is not trying to run a nation. She is only trying to run her mouth. People like her pushed John McCain, a usually agreeable moderate, further to the right into territory he was not equipped to handle.

It was not the John McCain that the voters liked, but a fake. And the deal was sealed when Karl Rove and the rest of the old guard blowhards pushed him to pick Sarah Palin, a controversial paleoconservative, just to appease the extremists, during a time when Obama was working his way to the center, where McCain already was, and had the advantage; thus McCain gave up precious ground to Obama.

There is an economic anecdote that concerns two ice cream vendors on a beach. If each took a separate end of the beach, or political extreme in our context, they could only hope to get half of the customers. But if both stood in the middle of the beach, they then have the potential to play for everyone on the beach, because everyone would be forced to go to the center and decide based on the nuances of the ice cream quality. Obama was at the center of the beach while McCain was being pushed to the side, where crossover with moderate Democrats that allowed Reagan to win was impossible.



Most of America is not partisan but moderate, and it is those who capture these Independents who win elections and party line crossers that win elections.

I often mention other countries in relation to the United States because lots of the things we are talking about now have been tried elsewhere. Margaret Thatcher, the Conservative party in the United Kingdom, lost the interest of the people with their old fashioned rhetoric. But the Conservatives stuck to their ideology and lost big in every election, until finally they realized: the people aren't just one day going to wake up and realize that the conservatives have been correct on every issue, and start voting for them.

They realized that a serious image change had to happen: not to forget their principles, but to also accept new, moderate viewpoints, and to meet the constituency in the middle and 'nudge' them slowly to the right. Now we are seeing a great resurgence of the conservative party in England, while here we are on the decline.

It is our time to look at our party again and realize that to capture the nation's attention. We must meet 'them' at a reasonable halfway point, even if that means embracing viewpoints that we don't all agree with. Otherwise we may not win another election for twenty years.

Dmitriy Shapiro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dshapir@student.umass.edu.

It ain't that vain, to protest

S.P. Sullivan

It takes a hearing to have a hearing. Over 100 people made their way over to the Northampton District Court yesterday to rally in support of Jason Vassell, and walked away with another appointment to wield their picket signs.

Judge Judd Carthart heard the defense attorneys for Vassell – the former University of Massachusetts student facing up to 30 years in prison after a racially charged incident that gets more difficult to provide background on every time it gets written about – as they filed a motion to dismiss.

After an hour or so of proceedings, an evidentiary hearing was scheduled for March 3. A hearing from another hearing. Another day to protest in the snow.

The court room, its capacity 50 or 60 people, was full before the ease even began, and I milled about outside talking to Vassell's supporters as they spilled over in the hallway outside Superior Court 2.

Mary Snyder, an Amherst resident, sat herself on the bench outside the courtroom, unable to get inside, but remained. She said she got her wires crossed and went first to the Belchertown court house, righted her course and showed up in Nolio. She and Will Snyder, a UMass freshman who accompanied her, heard about the incident from all the talk that's been going on in the community.

"My husband was a professor of biology before he retired, and I heard Jason was a student in the department," she said.

"It seems to be a miscarriage of justice. Jason was just defending himself, and now he's on trial," she said, and she laughed. The late author Kurt Vonnegut once wrote that laughter and tears were both responses to frustration and exhaustion. Vassell's supporters keep showing up to hearings and rallies, almost invariably in the snow, and always leave with another X on their calendar and more frustration to laugh – or cry – off.

"I heard a lot about the case last year," said Will Snyder. "We talked about it a lot in my Race, Gender, Class and Ethnicity class." He came to learn more about race in the justice system and, of his own volition, to lend his support.

It is easy to write these people off as crazy liberals in an Internet forum or a news website, but it's not so easy to see it on their faces.

It is easy to write these people off as crazy liberals in an Internet forum or a news website, but it's not so easy to see it on their faces.

The dialogue this controversy has sparked on Dailycollegian.com and Masslive.com, and to a lesser extent in private conversations, has been bipolar at best. There is the highly-charged rhetoric of the Committee for Justice for Jason Vassell [CJJV], and the equally knee-jerk allegations from Vassell's detractors. There are the protest-jumping Amherst liberals, and then there are racists.

But Mary Snyder isn't a protest-jumper; she's a sweet old lady who wanted to lend her support to a nice boy who studied in her husband's department. And Will Snyder isn't liberal whacko; he's a young white man trying to understand inequality in his community.

That's right: inequality. There are many, many questions left unanswered about this case. Vassell's culpability being the biggest. But there's no question about this being an issue of race, no matter what people hiding behind the mask of anonymity write on message boards.

That's not to say that Vassell should become the poster boy for racist prosecutions in the Valley. It's one thing to let an issue shine light on institutional wrongs; it's quite another to let a community member become its token.

But there is no layered understanding of this issue going on in the public sphere. There's only: "He's guilty, he's playing the race card," and, "He's innocent, and anyone who says otherwise is a racist."

There's no discussion of the possibility that regardless of what Vassell did or didn't do, his prosecution – and the treatment of the other two men involved – is more than a little suspect. There is politics involved in this case, and the most painful politics are local. Yet many of the 100 or so people who gathered outside the district courthouse as the snow grew heavier and stacks of paperwork higher weren't political crusaders. Right or wrong, they're concerned community members.

You don't have to be an innocent to be innocent, and you don't have to be a "drug dealer" to exercise poor judgment in a time of crisis. And when the last hearing is heard, and a decision made, we all have to live with each other, and get over this – with tears or with laughter.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian columnist. Read him online at blog.massive.com/umass101.

Give our greenbacks a red-blue changeover

Nick Milano

In recent memory, there have only been two, genuine liberal accomplishments on Capitol Hill. The first was the new GI Bill that came out this past June; the other was the expansion of the State Children's Health Insurance Program (SCHIP) that took place in the first few weeks of the Obama administration. After years of conservative policies, however, the political climate has changed and a liberal agenda should begin to make waves. President Obama must recognize the way the political winds are blowing lest he suffer an attack from a new populist party, be it reorganized Republicans or a dissatisfied Democrat.

Looking back on the last few presidencies, it is clear that liberals have had to suffer in silence, be it by lack of a political backbone or inability to get past Republican obstacles on Capitol Hill and in the White House.

First, a serious attempt to reform the health care system in the United States suffered an abysmal defeat in the Clinton administration. The blame rests on everything from Clinton's inability to use the bully pulpit to the confusing content of the health care bill, to bad luck in the form of the military crisis known as Black Hawk Down.

Then, liberals suffered another defeat at the hands of Clinton himself who used much of his political capital convincing both Republicans and liberal Democrats to vote for the approval of the North American Free Trade Agreement. The unions, an important voting and fundraising interest for the Democratic Party were cast aside in the name of corporate interests. The result is a free trade climate in which corporations can easily cross borders in pursuit of the lowest cost at the expense of unionized workers.

As if this were not enough, the supposed liberal President Clinton adopted welfare reform. While there is no doubt the old form of welfare was outdated and irresponsible, the new product is not much better. There are still 37.3 million people living in poverty in the United States according to 2007 census data while there were 36.5 million people living in poverty when Temporary Assistance to Needy Families, welfare reform, was passed. That is not much of an improvement.

While there is no doubt the old form of welfare was outdated and irresponsible, the new product is not much better.

Thanks to silence from Democrats and liberals, two wars have been launched. One, in Afghanistan that was necessary to go after the perpetrators of Sept. 11, but this war continues on today thanks to the second war in Iraq. There have been assaults on civil liberties, Wall Street banks have gone unregulated, pharmaceutical companies have run amok (read about the drug Zyprexa in the Jan. 28 issue of Rolling Stone) and the environment has been cast aside.

But all that is bound to change, if President Obama has the willingness to pursue a liberal agenda. The healthcare system in the United States is truly broken. There are many ways that it can be fixed and he had a few bright ideas during his campaign.

There needs to be a new emphasis on preventative and not just curative care. The profitability of health insurance companies should be considered. The ability for pharmaceutical companies to advertise directly to consumers must be curtailed. The insane number of uninsured people in the United States must be finished. Just this past Monday, GM announced it would ask its unions to accept lower expenditures on health care benefits. Is it not time that the United States join every other industrialized nation in constructing a nationalized health care system?

Economically, there is also much that can be done.

The minimum wage was just raised, but should it not be adjusted every year for inflation. For years the income tax threshold has fallen with tax loopholes expanding for the rich, throw out the Republican view on taxes. Attending college seems to be a universal necessity to finding a solid paying job and statistics show that with every degree, earnings go up. Should there not be more assistance in paying for secondary education.

Unfortunately, this is more of a plea than a prediction. President Obama did not exhibit boldness when trying to pass the stimulus. He caved when Republicans made demands, despite the fact that only three voted for it in the Senate and none in the House. For years, even in the Clinton years, conservatism has dominated the national debate. This is a chance for liberals to take back some of the power. If it does not start with President Obama, he might face a very upset electorate for the 2010 midterm elections and when running for reelection in 2012.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

edopblog.blogspot.com
not yet approved by the F.D.A won't make you fat or wrinkled

"I think it's important for girls to be confident. Believe in yourself and ... everybody's hot."
PARIS HILTON. THE FIRST HORSEWOMAN OF THE (ED/OPALYPTO)

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Our President: superhero or total sissypriss?

An inspiration to us all

Clark Kent

President Obama is a true superhero. A unique yet deceivingly normal boy from a somewhat broken yet still intact home, he grew up in an American Neverland and made his way to the city.

After meeting the love of his life, he donned his superhero costume by day – a well tailored suit, cufflinks and all – to fight the only kind of crime that's worth fighting: pessimism.

He is a beautiful coconut, or perhaps a pineapple. Only Hawaii could bear such a beautiful sun, a child full of hope for humanity, and dreams of a fairer tomorrow: A child that grew into a strong father, a loving husband, a devout Christian.

Behold our beautiful racially ambiguous first family! How far we have come!

He even read Nietzsche! What a demonstration of "sympathy for the devil that was.' And he still goes to church! Nietzsche is difficult to understand. Shouldn't we be happy that the President is a certifiable genius?

He cares, better than Ronald Reagan and Jimmy Carter combined, about the ritual importance to the health of the nation of the President's public face. He dresses his daughters well, but conservatively, and at a relatively low cost. He gives them a normal life, and displays it to the nation so that we may follow his example.

He resuscitates the once-again-dying ghosts of Abraham Lincoln and Franklin Delano Roosevelt. He has the courage to chase Martin Luther King's dream, and to say so publicly.

He negotiates in public his arrival at his political philosophy – an audacious, hopeful stance – and he negotiates in public his role in his family. He dreamed of his father, and we all know it. Who else has put so much work into articulating a public apologetic for their life's decisions, before entering the presidential race?

We have a lot to be thankful for. He didn't have to try this hard to be a good president, but he has, because he is a unique, extraordinarily valuable man.

He brings musicians of all stripes together for a retrospective inauguration. Pete Seeger – the man who sang "We Shall Overcome" – sharing a stage with Mary J. Blige, and that stage was the very stage from which Dr. King sang out that he had a dream.

He understands the power of rhetoric, of the image of the speaker, of the power of speech. He goes out of his way to stir us up, to expect more from us, and even to encapsulate his hopeful philosophy in easily understandable tidbits for all you non-super non-geniuses. "Yes We Can!"

This country made the right decision. Not only that, it could not have asked for more. Every day with Barack Obama is a blessing. We will never have a better president.

Only once in the lifetime of a nation can we expect to be led by such a natural leader, a man so talented at organization, inspiration, and so understanding of the vastly important nuances of the public masquerade of the presidency. The Obamas are better for America than Camelot ever could have been.

Behold our beautiful racially ambiguous first family! How far we have come! What more could we ask for?

Barack Obama can do no wrong. A man who looks that presidential could never do any wrong. Not from the Oval Office. That room was built for him.

Clark Kent is a Globe columnist, corresponding with the Collegian from his Wi-Fi enabled Metropolis apartment.

This week's Point/Counterpoint was written in whole by James Mathews, the Collegian's Ed/Op Editor. He can be reached at jwmathew@student.umass.edu.

A pain in my goddamn neck

Bruce Wayne

President Obama is a mama's boy posing as a country's leader. He grew up in Hawaii fer Chrisake. Hawaii might as well be another planet. How could 'Barack' – is that really his name? – understand the complexities of bureaucratic finance in Gotham, let alone in Kansas, when his entire environment was supported by tourists wearing sandals, buying leis, and making unsatisfactory love in cheaply designed hotel rooms?

President Obama may look like a playboy, but he's a country boy at heart with a very nice upbringing he didn't deserve, just like George W. Bush. Those of us who grow up with wealth know how to handle it. We know how to be conservative with money. We know the difference between our image and our reality.

Those of us who come up fast into fame and fortune often get our heads unscrewed a bit on the way up, and end up doing loony things. For example, one loony thing to do is to spend, without second thought, $800 billion of other people's money.

I'll try to be reasonable. I went to college once. I think.

What, is it still 1985? Obama-nomics seem a lot like Reaga-nomics. The federal government just provides a source of wealth through some magical imaginary economic trick of the hand, and the greenbacks just float on down to the rest of us, right?

Wrong. In the 80s, the money stayed in Wall Street, got locked up, and never made it to the man on the street. In the 00s, or whatever it is we're supposed to call this god awful decade, the money will just get stuck in the federal government.

What, big boy Barack dreams of daddy, waves his magical man hand, and suddenly the states of our union learn how to spend money wisely?

Unlikely, my Hawaiian friend.

What ticks me off to all hell, and frankly makes me want to hang around my family mansion drinking expensive scotch while repeatedly breaking my empties over the Batmobile, is this: the guy's a complete freakin' lunatic!

He's standing there talking about 'hope, change, hope, change' and we all acknowledge that it's important, but who the hell seriously thinks that we can get by on 'hope' and 'change' alone? Can a car run on water? Can a man get drunk on Coca-Cola?

Excuse my rhetorical questions. I haven't fought crime in a while, what with all this unbearable racial harmony, and I'm getting a little frustrated.

I'll try to be reasonable. I went to college once. I think. I know I got kicked by a Chinese weirdo once, but I was pretty high on these endangered lotus blossoms from the foothills of Everest, at that point.

I'm getting old. At least I have an old wise African-American guy to take care of me and give me the tools I need to satisfy my bloodlust. O god, I hate black people. No, I don't mean that. I swear to Christ, I'm a progressive crime fighter.

Where's my whiskey?

That rat-bastard. He has the nerve to get up in front of my country, the country I've fought so hard for, and preach hope and change while not putting in the basic work it takes to understand a 21st century economy built on money markets, complex systems of lending, and intense competition between international corporations?

I'm Bruce Wayne! I'm not some useless two-bit mama's boy from a planet far away! I'll kill you, Clark! I bet you sit around and watch Star Wars, sometimes, just to pretend that Duke Moonjumper is your brother so that you don't feel so lonely! I hate you!

I'm Bruce Wayne! I understand money! I run an international corporation. International. Cooocorporation

O Christ. I'm singing again. I miss Frank Sinatra. I miss Bobby. I miss John Kennedy. I miss Jackie. She was hot. I slept with her once. I wish to hell I hadn't been drunk.

Why did I eat that lotus flower? I could've been a contender! I could've been a public figure! I could've been President.

That's right. I could be President, and I could do a better job. I'm smarter than that bastard. Just because he's special and valuable and hopeful and inspiring and all that, which I'm drunk enough to admit that he is, after all ... it doesn't mean that he's better than me.

I'm the big man in town. I know how to take care of my city. I wish I could take care of this country. I like the guy, really, it's just that I see him destroying my hard work. He can talk a talk, but we need more than a good lead singer for our national band.

I talk like this when I'm drunk. We need a singer songwriter, one that knows how to tech the stage, build the amplifiers from the ground up, and run thes lighting if he needs to. Shit. A good lead singer needs to be able to hustle up an audience, even, by selling tickets on the street, in the case that all the roadies die of syphilis or something.

What in the name of my poor dead father am I talking about?

If the Oval Office were mine, the White House would be much more badass.

I could find Bin Laden. I could win this godawful war.

Now. Where's my whiskey? It's getting late. I miss Rachel.

Bruce Wayne is a poor, lonely, man. He's rich enough to afford high speed internet on an absurd array of screens, which he uses to send us columns when he's not watching videos of his dead ex-girlfriend.

Point-Counter-Point. Ed/Op Thursdays.

Doubt the dames of disneyland

Ashley Lesperance

I remember it so clearly. Plastic wand in hand, I marveled at the princesses around me, at the twinkling of lights throughout the room. Cinderella, with a princess perfect smile, was standing to my left, and Belle was gracefully making her way to our table. High in Cinderella's castle at Disney World, having breakfast with my family and the princesses, I couldn't have been a happier 20-year- old.

It's pretty clear that I don't hate Disney. I loved my first visit there in summer 2007. I grew up on Disney, thinking that each story was perfect, that the princesses were flawless, and that Disney could do no harm. I never questioned any of it, and I think most of us did the same thing. Now that I'm older, and no longer bewitched by the magical lands and happily ever after, I see that Disney can, and does cause harm.

We all remember the stepmother in the story of Snow White. "Mirror, Mirror on the wall. Whose the fairest of them all?" When the mirror replies that Snow White is the fairest of them all, the stepmother becomes jealous and attempts to destroy the princess, so that she may again be the fairest in the land.

Fairy tales emphasize beauty.

Cinderella, Snow White, Aurora from Sleeping Beauty and the other Disney princesses all have two things in common: beauty and innocence. The antagonists in the stories also have two things in common: ugliness and evilness.

The stepmother in Snow White, when attempting to kill the princess, becomes an ugly witch. The two stepsisters and stepmother in Cinderella are all unattractive. Maleficent, the witch from Sleeping Beauty, is gaunt and pale, aptly wearing a headdress resembling the horns of the devil. Beauty equals innocence while ugliness equals evilness.

It's probably something you've never given much thought to. And why should you? They're just harmless children's stories, right? Wrong. It's something we should all be aware of. Fairy tales have a long lasting effect on everyone.

Has being a woman ever made you feel powerless in your professional field? Glass slipper? Try glass ceiling. According to the article "Behind the Gap," published by the American Association of University Women Educational Foundation and written by Judy Goldberg Dey and Catherine Hill, women working full time one year out of college earn only 80 percent as much as their male colleagues earn. Ten years after graduation, the pay gap increases, putting women further behind, earning only 69 percent as much as men.

Has being a woman ever made you feel powerless in your professional field? Glass slipper? Try glass ceiling.

Not a very happy ending for women, is it?

The Disney Fairy Tales help reinforce already embedded stereotypes of women, making it difficult for women to succeed in society and be seen as equals.

If you're still wondering, "Why should I care?" think about this.

According to Dr. Ann Kearney-Cooke, a psychologist and self-esteem expert, "Low self-esteem among girls and young women has reached a crisis level" as of Jan. 2009. "Real Girls, Real Pressure: A National Report on the State of Self-Esteem," conducted by the Dove Self-Esteem Fund, found that seven in ten girls feel they do not measure up in their looks.

Over 75 percent of these girls report engaging in negative behaviors, such as smoking, drinking, anorexia, bulimia, cutting and bullying.

While I don't believe that fairy tales are to blame for all of the discrimination and low self-esteem, they certainly present unattainable self-images, further reinforcing and internalizing negative beliefs among girls and boys.

So, what is the solution? Should we ban Disney movies and fairy tales from being created? Absolutely not. Censorship is not the answer. Proper parenting is the answer. Let your children watch Disney movies and pick a favorite princess. Just be sure that both the boys and the girls understand that women don't have to be beautiful to achieve success, that women are not always damsels in distress.

Provide positive images about groups that are not white, middle class or heterosexual.

Teach children to think outside of stereotypes and outside of the magical, and dangerously prejudice world that Disney creates in its fairy tales.

If we do this, then maybe one day, discrimination will become something that was once upon a time.

Ashley Lesperance is a UMass student.

t - minus 8 [ed/opalypto]

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

THE UGG-LY YOUNG WOMEN OF UMASS

Dear Editor,

After reading the article "Ugly in Every Way" from the Collegian's February 9 issue, I was inspired to bring up the topic of the "Southwest Girl" and the horrific image she is portraying. I am a junior here at UMass and have seen a lot during the past three years. I love this college but admit the image of the Southwest Girl infuriates me.

(Note: not necessarily girls living in Southwest, but mostly.)

Everyone on this campus knows what I am talking about, carbon copies of the following: Ugg boots, highlighted and straightened-to-look-plastic hair, low-cut shirts, North Face jackets and everyday eye make-up that rivals Barbie's.

Oh – also of note, the Ugg boots are exchanged for brightly colored high heels on weekday and weekend nights, and sweatpants or jeans are exchanged for obscenely short skirts.

Ladies, have we steeped so low to attract the opposite sex? Since when do we have to look exactly the same, cake on the makeup and show a lot of skin to be beautiful? We are reduced to Barbie dolls without originality, personality, and real beauty. Have some courage to be different, or even better, yourself.

Katelyn Haggerty
UMass Student

SEX ED IMPORTANT, AND BEST WHEN DIRECT

Dear Editor,

In this Tuesday's editorial by Greg Collins, "SEX EDUCATION: SAFE OR NOT?" Mr. Collins fails to discuss the topic of sex education entirely. Rather Mr. Collins discusses how, Little Jimmie would be better off not having sex at all rather then getting condoms from a vending machine. He stresses that the lack of preparation by Little Jimmie should be clear a signal that he is not ready to engage in the life altering Endeavor that is SEX. I'm not sure about Mr. Collins but in my life occasionally sex happens when I am not expecting it. As a generally chivalrous dude I rarely walk around with a pocket full of condoms, expecting sex. In the event that the mood is right and there is consent I would love to be able to purchase a condom from a vending machine, as I'm sure would the vast majority of my peers.

So in response to Mr. Collins, We all enjoy your occasional deviation from praising Moderate Arab States and Pro-Life groups, no really we do, hut do us all a favor, take a deep breath, lighten up, and get laid.

Sal Manuno
President
UMass Chapter
Peter North Fan Club

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2009 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Measuring up the Oscar contenders

Boyle's 'Slumdog' a winner

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

They haven't even been given out yet, but already the 2009 Academy Awards are rife with controversy. While "The Curious Case of Benjamin Button" racked up a total of 13 nominations, such films as "The Dark Knight" and "WALL-E" went largely overlooked by the Academy, much to the ire of fans. Will "Slumdog Millionaire" sweep the event? Will Kate Winslet break her five-time losing streak? Will Mickey Rourke stomp out the competition (meaning Sean Penn) and complete his comeback? The following is a list of prediction for this Sunday's upcoming 81st Annual Academy Awards.

Best Picture
WINNER: "Slumdog Millionaire"

Director Danny Boyle's latest film has been a critics' darling since its release last fall, and with just cause. This triumphant underdog fairy tale, set in the slums of Mumbai, tells the story of a young street urchin named Jamal (Dev Patel). When the opportunity of a lifetime, the chance to go on the Indian version of "Who Wants to be a Millionaire?" falls into his lap, Jamal is afforded the rare opportunity to make up for past mistakes. Will he be able to win the dough (20 million rupees, to be exact), get the girl (Freida Pinto), and reunite with his estranged brother (Madhur Mittal), all in one foul swoop? Although some graphic themes threaten to curtail the film's overall cheery vibe, the film's madcap energy and riveting scenery help ensure that it remains a top contender in the Oscar race this year.

Best Actor
WINNER: Mickey Rourke

The Oscars are all about comeback stories, and boy, does Mickey Rourke have a tale to tell the audience. The role of aging wrestler Randy "The Ram" Robinson is a fitting comeback vehicle for the similarly aging actor, who back in the early 90s, spent time in the ring as a professional boxer. Rourke immerses himself in the performance, pumping it full of desperation and yearning as Randy struggles to keep his battered body young and his spirit thriving. Underneath all that hard, stretched-out flesh and scar tissue, some vulnerability still remains. Rourke's wrestler is a gentle giant not yet ready to go quietly into the night, and its funny – neither is the guy playing him.

Best Actress
WINNER: Kate Winslet

With her lips pursed tight and her golden locks pulled far from her face in a severe bun, Kate Winslet hardly looks like herself in "The Reader," and that's exactly the point. Winslet, seemingly tired of missing out on that Oscar gold, covered all her bases this time around. In "Revolutionary Road" she stars as a frustrated housewife (akin to her role in 2006's "Little Children"), while in "The Reader," she plays as an illiterate German woman with a secret Nazi past. Thankfully, she's been nominated for the better role. Will this Sunday finally mark the end of her five-time losing streak?

Best Supporting Actor
WINNER: Heath Ledger

Our dearest sympathies should go out to the poor actors forced to square off against Mr. Ledger here – they don't have a prayer. It's not just the sympathy vote that Mr. Ledger stands to posthumously cash in on come Sunday, either. As the Joker, he's the kinetic core about which "The Dark Knight" revolves. Snubbing him on awards night would be a crime of epic proportions (think Kevin Costner winning best director over Martin Scorsese in 1990 for "Dances with Wolves"), and one the Academy is unlikely to commit.

DARK HORSE: Robert Downey, Jr.

Were it not for the total eclipse of this category by

See MURPHY on page 7

Danny Boyle's "Slumdog Millionaire" is the consensus favorite to win best picture according to Daily Collegian movie critics Shayna Murphy and Justin Gagnon.

Round two for Penn and Rourke

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

Actor in a Leading Role

Both Sean Penn and Mickey Rourke were phenomenal in "Milk" and "The Wrestler," respectively. Rourke won the first battle at the Golden Globes for his role as Randy "The Ram" Robinson, an aging wrestler seeking redemption for the things he sacrificed to be famous. The other leading candidate to win, Penn, is looking to take home his second Oscar for best actor, after winning in 2004 for "Mystic River." He depicted Harvey Milk, the first openly gay man elected into public office in California, with a very charismatic and passionate performance. While Rourke took round one, it's hard to believe that the Academy would chose him over Penn, if not for his incredible work, then because his role and his style simply is more appealing to the voters.

Winner: Sean Penn, "MILK"

Actor in a Supporting Role

Heath Ledger will likely take the posthumous victory in this category. Philip Seymour Hoffman was outstanding in "Doubt" and seems to be the only contender capable of upsetting Ledger. On the other hand, while many see him as a potential underdog candidate, Josh Brolin ("Milk") did not provide a bold enough performance to give him the edge, even though his portrayal of former San Francisco city supervisor Dan White was quite exceptional. In the end, Ledger's performance as the Joker in the second biggest blockbuster of all time was unquestionably good enough in combination with his untimely death to win over the Academy.

Winner: Heath Ledger, "THE DARK KNIGHT"

Actress in a Leading Role

This one is probably going to go to Kate Winslet. She is not only overdue to win an Oscar, but her role in "The Reader" was powerful enough to win it for her. Meryl Streep was phenomenal in "Doubt" and my personal vote would go to her. Even still, her role will probably come in third behind Anne Hathaway ("Rachel Getting Married") and Winslet.

Winner: Kate Winslet, "THE READER"

Actress in a Supporting Role

Both Amy Adams and Viola Davis were fantastic in "Doubt," and deserve the nominations they received. Penelope Cruz won the Golden Globe from her role in "Vicky Cristina Barcelona" and will probably do the same here. However, Marisa Tomei ("The Wrestler"), seems likely to win, garnering her a second Oscar since winning Best Supporting Actress in 1992 for "My Cousin Vinny."

Winner: Marisa Tomei, "THE WRESTLER"

Best Picture

A very successful year in the world of film comes down to this: The five Best Picture nominated films were remarkably impressive, and there are many others that could be deemed so, including "Doubt" and "The Dark Knight." "The Reader" and "Frost/Nixon" were borderline nominations, and that is good enough prize for these two great, but not outstanding films. "Benjamin Button" and "Milk" both were memorable for particular reasons, "Button" for its incredible visuals and "Milk" for its stunning performances. The one film that brings the whole package, however, is "Slumdog Millionaire." Every aspect of the film was done to absolute perfection from the music, to the visuals, to the acting, and of course the directing. "Slumdog" has you locked in for the full two hours and leaves you satisfied yet wanting more. The best general characteristic of the film is its appeal to both those who love to analyze and critique movies in addition to those who are casual film viewers.

Winner: "SLUMDOG MILLIONAIRE"

Justin Gagnon can be reached at jegagnon@student.umass.edu.

Winslet shines in 'The Reader'

By Frank Godinho
Collegian Staff

One actress that seems to be on everyone's mind before the highly esteemed Academy Awards ceremony is Kate Winslet. The six-time nominee has been nominated in the past for performances in "Sense and Sensibility," "Titanic," "Iris," "Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind," "Little Children," and now "The Reader." Winslet, who also gave an award-worthy performance in the recent "Revolutionary Road," seems primed to win the award for Best Actress this upcoming Sunday night.

Though the story of "The Reader" is about Michael Berg (played by Ralph Fiennes and David Kross), it is Hanna Schmitz (Winslet) that truly captivates the essence of the film.

During our first encounter with Hanna, we witness her helping a sick teenage boy outside of her apartment to find his way home. The boy, Michael, falls ill and is bedridden for months. After his recovery, he returns to Hanna's home to thank her but stops to glance at her while she's changing. Hanna catches him staring at her and the teen boy runs away out of embarrassment.

At a third interaction outside Hanna's apartment, she sternly instructs Michael to carry some things upstairs for her. This time around Hanna disrobes herself, and blatantly begins a torrid affair with the 15-year-old "kid," as Hanna refers to him.

Kate Winslet and David Cross star in the Oscar-nominated drama "The Reader." Winslet is considered by most to be the favorite to take home the best-actress award for her performance.

"THE READER"

STARRING:
KATE WINSLET,
DAVID CROSS

The Reader ★★★★

The affair is something Michael prefers to keep a secret from his friends, as he leaves the schoolyard early everyday, even his birthday, without mention. His family also is left in the dark, as he awkwardly eats at the dinner table as images of sex flash through his mind.

For Michael, it is an experience of sexual awakening. But for Hanna it is a different kind of experience. Her odd reluctance to reveal her name is only a slight clue that we're given to infer that Hanna has a secret, a secret which isolates her from an ordinary life.

In addition to making love to Hanna, Michael also reads to her, hence why the film is called, "The Reader." Week after week during their summer love affair, Michael reads to her significant pieces of literature including, "The Odyssey," "The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn," and "The Lady with the Little Dog," among many others.

The eerie chemistry between Michael and Hanna is captivating. Winslet's reactions to Michael as she is read to endear the audience to her character and are incredible to watch. It's a rare quality for an actress and a character to become one as Winslet does in these scenes. "I'd rather listen to you," she says to Michael in one particularly charismatic scene.

Meanwhile, newcomer David Kross convincingly portrays a young man and his devotion to his mysterious older lover.

As the film flashes forward to Michael in as a law student, we see how much the affair has affected him. He's selected to attend a war-crime trial of which Hanna is among the defendants. Michael's reaction to Hanna's presence is a testament to the feelings he still has for her. During one of the many episodes of their love making, Michael once told Hanna that he loved her, and in this scene it shows that he still does.

The war-crime trial describes Hanna's and several others' involvement in the deaths of at least 300 Jews during their time as concentration camp guards in Nazi Germany.

Stephen Daldry's "The Reader" will have most watching in both intrigue and hesitation as they witness the illicit affair between a woman in her mid-thirties and a 15-year-old boy.

Some may have complaints that the dialogue in "The Reader" is in English, despite being a German period film, but the skillfully crafted film makes up for it with its high production value, brilliant performances and haunting story.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu

Plot holes–a-plenty in 'International'

By Morgan Meagher
Collegian Staff

Those who are familiar with director Tom Tykwer probably know him from his most famous film, the 1998 indie "Run Lola Run." Couple that credit with the gritty, volatile Clive Owen and "The International" promises to be a thinking man's action movie.

As expected, Tykwer delivers lots of action and suspense. But while Eric Singer's script takes the film to plenty of interesting and beautiful locales, it is also muddled and borderline absurd.

The plot is worthy of a Dan Brown novel, with the convoluted conspiracy theory reaching new heights of outlandishness. The culprit in this case is the bogeyman du jour – a bank. Not a single villainous banker but an entire corporate entity.

The Luxembourg-based International Bank of Business and Credit, or IBBC as it is known to its friends and foes alike, is particularly sinister. While most banks these days just seem to be run by greedy CEOs concerned with their own personal wealth, the IBBC has loftier aims. Their goal: the banking version of world domination. The plan is crafty but far-fetched, and involves the brokering of missiles, the funding of revolutionaries, and the assassination of anyone who stands in the IBBC's way.

Here's where the heroes come in. On the one hand we have the good cop, Ellie Whitman (Naomi Watts), who works for the Manhattan district attorney's office. The district attorney is trying to bring down the IBBC for shady dealings based out of its New York offices, and Whitman is the cute, spunky blond assigned to the case.

See INTERNATIONAL on page 7

"THE INTERNATIONAL"

STARRING:
CLIVE OWEN,
NAOMI WATTS

★★½

"The International's" far-fetched plot detracts from its slick direction and action-packed visuals.

'Confessions' hit too close to home

Free spending flick rings true for many viewers

By Jennifer Turner
Collegian Staff

Identifying with a cinematic character can be a wonderful, enlightening experience. It is like being able to see oneself in a giant mirror – glamorized and beautified.

However, when the character is a debt-ridden shopaholic, it may result in more of a cringe-worthy realization for the viewer than they initially prepared for.

"Confessions of a Shopaholic," starring Isla Fisher and Hugh Dancy, opened in theaters this weekend and stirred up a mix of emotions for viewers. Most audience members were able to simply sit and laugh at the silly, comedic performance of Fisher – a beauty with the comedic grace of Lucille Ball and Carol Burnett. However, for some the plight of the credit card-loving fashionista hit a bit too close to home.

Fisher stars as Rebecca Bloomwood, a vivacious young journalist with a serious shopping addiction. After spending her childhood years with the world's most practical and penny-pinching parents, she decides to live her life to the fullest – and her credit card bills are proof. Bloomwood soon finds herself out of a job and more than $16,000 in debt, but she has a plan.

She has aspirations to work at Alette, the ultimate fashion magazine (think Vogue), but instead inadvertently lands herself a position at Successful Savings – a financial journal. The woman that can't stand to walk by a store without running in to buy something is now advising people on how to handle their money.

Her column, titled "The Girl in the Green Scarf", uses shopping metaphors to explain financial jargon to everyday people. The column quickly becomes an overnight sensation and she finds herself propelled into the Successful Savings spotlight.

Ironic? Yes. Funny? For the most part, sure.

In an effort to help change her bad habits, Bloomwood's best friend enrolls her in shopaholics anonymous. Bloomwood swears she doesn't have a problem and continues her incessant shopping sprees. Her antics cause chaos in the rest of the group and force many of them to fall off the wagon.

A new iron-fisted leader of shopaholics anonymous, perfectly played by Wendy Malik, arrives at the meetings and forces Bloomwood to look at herself and her shopping addiction more clearly. The comedic irony here is that many people may remember Malik as the fashion-forward character Nina Van Horn on "Just Shoot Me."

"Confessions of a Shopaholic" was a completely predictable romantic comedy, but still rather enjoyable. It doesn't require much thinking, just a sense of humor.

Isla Fisher stars in "Confessions of a Shopaholic," a lighthearted, yet incredibly predictable comedy about a compulsive shopper who is employed as a financial-advice columnist.

Obviously, the most enjoyable part of this film is the fashion. The clothes (and shoes!) are fabulous – thanks to the work of famous costume designer and fashion diva Patricia Field.

One element of the film that really detracted from its agreeability was the use of animated mannequins. The store-front statues would come to life every time Bloomwood walked by and urge her to shop. One mannequin even talked to her, describing all the reasons that she needed to buy a superfluous scarf. With the exception of that absurdity, it really was a cute movie.

"Shopaholic" finished fifth at the weekend box office with a gross of $17.8 million, losing a lot of ground to the remake of "Friday the 13th" which earned a staggering $43.6 million.

"Confessions of a Shopaholic" is based on a bestselling book series by Sophie Kinsella.

For any of the readers out there that identified with Rebecca Bloomfield a little too much – shopaholics anonymous is a real organization and you can find out more information by visiting www.shopaholicsanonymous.org.

Jennifer Turner can be reached at jturner@student.umass.edu.

"CONFESSIONS OF A SHOPAHOLIC"

STARRING:
ISLA FISHER, HUGH DANCY

★★

Action not enough to save film

INTERNATIONAL from page 6

As the bad cop Louis Salinger, Clive Owen is much more convincing.

Formerly of Scotland Yard, Salinger now works for Interpol; his job is to gather intelligence on the IBBC. Salinger has a long personal history with the IBBC; the most recent offense being that they had his partner killed in the opening scenes of the movie. For Salinger it's personal; his quest for justice (or is it vengeance?) is the center of the film.

The plot has more holes than solid spaces. Why, for instance, is the Manhattan district attorney investigating an international financial organization, rather than the FBI? To be fair, this point is raised later in the film, when Whitman's boss realizes the case is out of their jurisdiction. Of course, this is stuck in just so Whitman can say to hell with it and keep fighting, because, like many action movies, the script is trite and predictable.

Sometimes it's just too neat.

The bank's assassin (Brian F. O'Byrne), for example, is perfectly nondescript, the kind of guy your eyes just slide right over. Except for one key thing – he wears a very distinctive leg brace, which leaves very distinctive footprints at the scenes of his crimes. As anyone who has ever seen an episode of "CSI: Crime Scene Investigation" knows, leaving footprints at a scene is a surefire way to get caught. And indeed, this is how Salinger and Whitman track the assassin down. Why the IBBC would go to the trouble of hiring an assassin, but pick the one who could then be linked back to the bank, is a mystery. "The International" doesn't touch on. The real reason, of course, is because it's good for the plot.

"The International" has one great scene, so good it alone is almost worth shelling out the price of a ticket. The rest of the film fails to live up to this embedded standard, so unfortunately the best part also puts a spotlight on how disappointing the remainder is.

This scene is an epic shootout in the ramplined rotunda of the Guggenheim museum. The sequence makes the Guggenheim look as if it were designed for this very purpose. It starts as a showdown between Salinger – backed by a couple of police agents – and the IBBC's assassin, and evolves into a full-fledged gun battle against a league of henchmen, also sent by the IBBC to kill the assassin before he can give them up.

The visual side of "The International" is as stunning as the plot is lackluster. In this day and age, an action movie with no shaky-cam sequences and skillful editing is a rare treat. The director of the next Bond movie could learn a thing or two from Tykwer's well-framed, suspenseful chase scenes as we;; as the final shootout.

Singer's script is not only too complex and too trite but at times too preachy as well. There is more than enough ponderous dialog on the subjects of truth and justice. Owen and the rest of the cast do as much as can be expected with it, except for Watts, who fails to deliver a noteworthy performance.

It's abundantly clear that Tykwer did in fact do his best to craft a great action movie with an intellectual edge. Unfortunately, the formulaic mess of a script would probably prove too much for any director. "The International" actually is good, action-filled entertainment – as long as you don't think too hard about it.

Morgan Meagher can be reached at mmeagher@student.umass.edu.

Rourke, Boyle deserve Oscars

MURPHY from page 6

Heath Ledger, the big story of the year may have been that Robert Downey Jr. was able to snag a nomination at all. We all knew he was hilarious in last summer's "Tropic Thunder," but who would have guessed that the Academy had an appreciation for that kind of humor? Granted, if anyone is able to sneak one by Heath Ledger, it will likely to be either Josh Brolin or Philip Seymour Hoffman. Nevertheless, it's fun to fantasize otherwise, and with any luck, there are more accolades of this nature waiting in the offing for the ever-entertaining Mr Downey, Jr.

WHAT WERE THEY THINKING?

Painful, cloying, and at all turns really annoying, Michael Shannon was meant to voice all the audience's frustrations with the frustratingly inept Wheelers in "Revolutionary Road." Instead, he was more grating than either of the lead characters combined. As the neighborhood nut job that can't help but say what's really on his mind, Shannon's character pinpointed all the internal demons plaguing the sparring couple (played by Kate Winslet and Leonardo DiCaprio). But in this regard, he was also too telling and too sloppy a narrative device to ring wholly authentic to the audience.

Best Supporting Actress
WINNER: Penelope Cruz

If Penelope Cruz knows what's good for her, she'll stick to her native tongue. As Maria Elena, the Spanish-speaking hellion of "Vicky Cristina Barcelona," Ms. Cruz sets the screen ablaze. Whether barging her way back into her ex's life (Javier Bardem, who has since become Ms. Cruz's ex) or indulging in a tryst with his new lady love (Scarlett Johansson), it's hard not to be swept away by her charms. And when she goes, she takes the whole movie with her. The Academy certainly owes Ms. Cruz one, following standout performances in "Elegy" (2008) and the 2006 Pedro Almodovar film, "Volver." Hopefully they'll pay up this Sunday.

DARK HORSE: Marisa Tomei

Every couple of years, Marisa Tomei gives a performance that reminds you just how good she really is. Back in 2001, that role was as a distressed mom in the critically acclaimed film, "In the Bedroom." And in 1999, it was as a flighty would-be nurse in "Slums of Beverly Hills." With "The Wrestler," Ms. Tomei has found another role worthy of her talent. Her world-weary stripper is a perfect match for Mickey Rourke's battered wrestler, and together they infuse the film with heart and substance.

WHAT WERE THEY THINKING?

Taraji P. Henson has delivered some dynamic performances in the past (see 2005's "Hustle & Flow"). Sadly, this isn't one of them. Of all the ladies to co-star in "Benjamin Button," Henson's performance is perhaps the most forgettable, which is what makes her nomination so puzzling. The fault rests with the Eric Roth's script, and not with Henson, who does her best to channel a bit of spunk into the thinly drawn character of Queenie. Still, her performance as a kindly nursing home attendant is hardly noteworthy. What gives, Oscar?

Shayna Murphy can be reached at shmurphy@student.umass.edu

more arts online @ dailycollegian (dot)com

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

what a girl wants...

There's always something new at ZANNA.

ZANNA
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com

Act Out

WARNING
You may be required to work with some real characters.

Actors, Dancers, Singers, Drummers, Technicians

Work at Six Flags and you will find yourself showing your silly side, belting out songs and dancing to the music in one of many different roles we are currently casting. By performing in one of our shows you'll be entertaining thousands of Park Guests while sharpening your performance skills this summer.

OPEN CALL AUDITION TOUR

FEBRUARY 20th, 1-7PM
Holyoke Community College
303 Homestead Ave., C Forum, Holyoke, MA

FEBRUARY 21st – 22nd, 11AM-5PM
Six Flags Human Resource Center
1756 Main St., Agawam, MA (Across from the park)

FEBRUARY 27th, 4-8PM
Clarion Hotel - East Windsor, CT
I-91, EXIT 45, CT (Formerly Best Western)

MARCH 6th, 4-7PM
Six Flags Human Resource Center
1756 Main St., Agawam, MA (Across from the park)

MARCH 11th, 4:30-7:30PM
UMass Amherst
Fine Arts Center, Theater Rm 204

For More Information:
Call: (413)786-9300 x3320, E-mail: jtingley@sftp.com
For Audition and Job Requirements visit: www.sixflags.com/newengland/jobs/auditions.aspx

Six Flags NEW ENGLAND

apply now: sixflagsjobs.com
Six Flags is an Equal Opportunity Employer and supports a Drug Free Workplace

SIX FLAGS and all related indicia are trademarks of Six Flags Theme Parks® TM and ©DC06. LOONEY TUNES & ©Warner Bros. Entertainment Inc. ★ ...s/08

Gurley needs to raise game

ROSENSWAIKE from page 10

St. Bonaventure, Saint Joseph's, Xavier, La Salle, Charlotte, Saint Louis, Boston College, Toledo or Jacksonville State this season.

Someone needs to step up in the final minutes. Lowe has done it before. So have Ricky Harris and Gaffney. These are good players who are more than capable. They just have to do it.

The bench play needs to improve. UMass was outscored 41-6 against the Rams. The rebounding has to improve. The Minutemen were outrebounded by 12 in the second half.

Perhaps most importantly, someone other than one of the "big three" has to step up and contribute on a regular basis.

That means you, Anthony Gurley.

The sophomore transfer from Wake Forest was taken out of the starting lineup for the first time this season Wednesday night. One could see why, as the 6-foot-3 guard has no points, no rebounds, no assists and no steals in 15 minutes of game action off the bench.

Gurley has had a disappointing season with the Minutemen.

His 10.7 points per game rank fourth on the team, but he's been turnover-prone (49 in 24 games), hasn't gotten to the line (just 41 attempts), hasn't shot well from the field (37.9 percent), hasn't gotten his teammates involved (0.79 assists per game) and hasn't caused many turnovers (13 steals).

"I felt like we've been physically overmatched at that spot size-wise," Kellogg said of benching Gurley for the 6-foot-7 Matt Glass. "I thought our lineup shakeup was good for the team – it got guys thinking that nobody's spot is really safe and I want the guys to compete every day for their position."

With Gurley, the talent is unquestionably there. The results just haven't been.

That certainly sounds familiar.

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Junior guard Ricky Harris looks down the court in last night's game. Harris scored 15 points and added three steals.

Cold at finale

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

said. "Cothran had a career night which obviously wasn't in the game plan."

Cothran was just one of the catalysts off the bench for the Rams. Stevie Mejia and Delroy James contributed with seven and eight points respectively, as URI's bench would outscore UMass' 41-6 in the game and outscore its own starters 41-30.

While the Rams had Cothran to lean on, the Minutemen had no one who threw the team on his shoulders when they needed it most.

"Until someone steps up, and it should be one of us seniors, until someone steps up and says 'I'm taking this team over and I'm going to be tough and not letting us lose', we'll continue to throw games away at the end," Gaffney said. "Our season will end before we know it."

Ricky Harris and Chris Lowe led UMass with 15 points each, but in the last 26:05 of the game neither did what they are known for doing. With 6:05 left in the first half, Harris hit a 3-point shot that was assisted by Lowe. After that shot, Harris, as well as the rest of the team, did not hit another 3-pointer and Lowe did not have another assist.

The Minutemen, who shot 5-for-16 from 3-point range in the first half, shot 0-for-10 in the second half, finishing the game shooting 19.2 percent from deep. Lowe, who was six assists shy of the all-time record at UMass prior to the game, finished with five assists to tie Carl Smith at 633.

The end of the second half was similar to the first. With the game tied at 57 with 2:56 to go, the Rams went on a 14-2 run to close out the game. The Minutemen did not hit a field goal in the final three minutes of the game, going 0-for-5 in the stretch.

"I thought we played pretty hard but to give up 60 percent [shooting] in the second half and get out rebounded by 12 is kind of a resounding theme of the team," Kellogg said after the loss. "Well it's getting a little redundant to play great basketball for 36 minutes."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Patience and learning

LACROSSE from page 10

learning and they have so much potential desire and drive. I think this year we will have so much room to grow," Drown said.

This group of freshman includes goalie Katie Florence, who could have some struggles early on as she deals with the responsibility of being the last line of defense as a rookie. Venechanos is not that worried about her inexperienced and noted that she had a very solid preseason.

With the departure of top goal-scorers such as Typadis and McCormick, the Minutewomen will be looking to employ a more balanced attack. One adjustment has Drown moving from the defensive midfield and giving her more responsibilities to attack.

Venechanos is able to make the switch due to the play of Jackie Lyons. An all A-10 Rookie last year, Lyons will be counted on to lead the midfield, which Venechanos feels is the team's strongest unit.

"We're asking our midfield to do a lot of transition and set up attacks and help out on defense, we are fairly athletic so we're going hopefully be able to run the ball up the field," Venechanos said.

UMass will have to get used to the new tactics that Venechanos is planning to implement this season. The team has been working on a number of new offensive techniques including pressuring behind the net and synchronizing off-the-ball movement. The Minutewomen have also been preparing with two-a-day practices, but the Minutewomen believe the hard work will pay off.

"[Venechanos] is hard on us definitely but we definitely see what it's for. It's a tough preseason but going into this season I feel so prepared," Drown said "I'm in the best shape of my life, I have a better [feel for the game]. It makes sense, it takes a lot of time, but in the end we are really prepared for what's to come."

The Minutewomen will be facing an extremely difficult out-of-conference schedule facing powerhouse teams such as No. 7 Maryland and a game against Northwestern at McGuirk stadium. UMass has already opened its season with an 11-7 loss to Holy Cross, and the games will only get tougher.

The team might not have a very good record by the time it hits the conference portion of the season, but they will be battle-tested, and prepared to attempt to unseat perennial powerhouses Richmond and Temple and make the NCAA Tournament.

"This is my last season and I don't want to lose that game again, in the championship," Drown said. "I would do whatever I can to make us better."

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

UMass fails to fight back

W BASKETBALL from page 10

going on the attack and taking open shots."

The Colonials played spoiler for sophomore Teya Wright on one of her best nights offensively this season. Wright recorded 19 points on 7-of-9 shooting while for 5-for-5 from the foul line. Wednesday's point total was her highest total since her 24-point performance at Colorado back in November.

Seniors Stefanie Gerardot (16 points) and Sakera Young (11 points) contributed with double figure point totals. Meanwhile, freshman standout Kristina Danella was limited to six points and redshirt sophomore Diatiema Hill did not score. Danella, normally one of the team's best shooters, went 2-of-10 from the field, including 1-of-6 from behind the arc.

Wright, who was struggling to stay in games earlier this month, has returned to form. However, it would not be enough against the Colonials.

UMass took the lead at four different points in the first half but failed to produce a lead of more than three points, allowing George Washington to storm right back into the lead.

With a 32-31 lead and eight seconds left in the half, it looked as though the Minutewomen were going have the lead going into the locker room. However, when junior Kim Benton fouled George Washington's Tara Booker behind the 3-point line, she gave the Colonials the opportunity to steal the lead away right before the half. And Booker did, hitting all three free throws.

UMass would not regain the lead for the rest of the game.

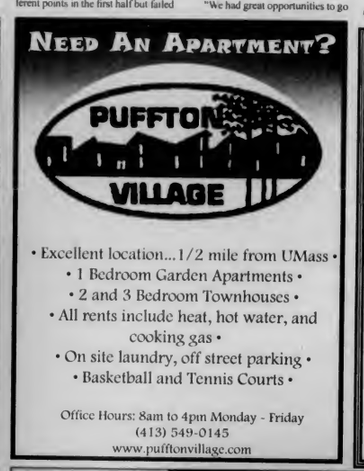
"If we come into the locker room up 10 or 11, it's a vote of confidence for us and we get them talking to themselves," Dacko said. We had them where we wanted them in the first half in terms of running them and getting [the Colonials] in foul trouble and we didn't capitalize on it."

Foul shots would prove to be a pain in UMass' side all night as it shot a pedestrian 59 percent from the line.

"We had great opportunities to go into the locker room and be up about 10," Dacko said. "And we missed free throws … it's those free throws that will come back to haunt you.

The second half began well for the Minutewomen as they stayed dead even with the Colonials and, with a Teya Wright layup, forced a 42-42 tie with 14:13 left on the clock.

The tie, though, would be the last time the Minutewomen would get close to victory in the game as a Yolanda Lavender 3-pointer sparked what would become an 18-4 run after which UMass could not recover.



From the tie on, George Washington outscored UMass 41-20, erasing any trace of the close game that had existed beforehand.

Taking care of the ball was once again an issue for UMass as it lost the turnover battle to the only team in the A-10 with a worse turnover ratio (-4.36). The Minutewomen had 16 giveaways compared to George Washington's 12.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Sudoku poo-poo.

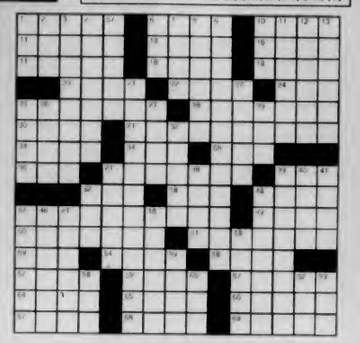
| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | 2 | | | | 7 | 1 |
| | | 6 | | | | | | 8 |
| | 2 | | | 1 | | 3 | 4 | |
| 2 | | | | 4 | 3 | 6 | | |
| | | | 9 | | 1 | | | |
| | | 3 | 8 | 6 | | | | 7 |
| | 7 | 5 | | 8 | | | 6 | |
| 4 | | | | | | 9 | | |
| 1 | 9 | | | | 4 | | | |

amherst cinema
Fri Feb 20 - Thu Feb 26
MILK
1:45 4:15 7:00 9:30 + 11:15am Sat & Sun
THE WRESTLER
2:15 4:45 7:15 9:45 + 11:45am Sat & Sun
slumdog millionaire
2:30 5:00 7:30 10:00 + 12:00pm Sat & Sun
28 Amity St Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547



PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Feb 20 - Thu Feb 26
Revolutionary Road
4:45 7:15 9:45
+2:00 Sat & Sun +10:15am 2:00 Wed
The Reader
4:30 7:00 9:30
+1:45 Sat & Sun +10:00am 1:45 Wed
27 Pleasant St Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY:
Every Wednesday:
LOST UPSTAIRS AT ABC
Every Sunday:
SUNDAY BRUNCH 10AM - 2PM
Sunday Nights:
FREE POOL!
NEW Slider Menu from 10-12pm
COME CHECK OUT THE NEW EXPANSION WITH COMFY BOOTHS & HDTV'S
Keep updated on ABC events on facebook
24 NORTH PLEASANT ST. AMHERST
AMHERST BREWING COMPANY
WWW.AMHERSTBREWING.COM

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!
sunraise printing
Custom Printed Tees
Student Discounts
586-7133
sunraiseprinting.com
Hadley, MA 01035

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Never try to tell everything you know. It may take too short a time."

— Norman Ford

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Go skydiving without a parachute today. There's no thrill like the one you get when death is imminent. And chicks dig it!

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You are a master poet of lying; every verse is handcrafted, and could be made to mean anything you want it to.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You can't understand why no one takes you seriously anymore, but taking off the "I'm with stupid" t-shirt is a good start.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You are a gentle ballerina in a school full moshing metal freaks. Tiptoe your way out of here.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Stop smoking before your vocal chords complete their transformation into Darth Vader's voicebox.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
There is a constant game of Pong going back and forth in your brain at all times, and not a whole lot else happening.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You're uglier than Mickey Rourke. And that's really saying something.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Using your hunting skills, dig a trap in Orchard Hill full of wood spikes. Cover it with a leaves, then press "Record."

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Stop acting like it's some big surprise why your keyboard stopped working, you chronic masturbator.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Selling your body to science normally doesn't happen via Craigslist. Be wary.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Put down the bottle, at the very least until you're done reading the horoscopes. You need 30 seconds to sober up, if not more.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You may never get to live your dream of being on the hockey team, but being Pluto in Disney on Ice is quite possible.

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY KID SHAY

tasty crackers!
free pizza & hot cocoa!*
www.dailycollegian.com/comics
*none of this is true

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Survey Takers Needed: Make $5 - $25 per survey. Do it in your spare time. www.GetPaidToThink.com

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lake-front cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, lifeguarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders, & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.camp-mataponi.com

ANNOUNCEMENT

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblow-out.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076. Sign up at Campus Center Feb. 20

FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincoln-realty.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Disappointment Rhode

Talent there, results not

Eli Rosenswaike

This column was supposed to be about Chris Lowe breaking the UMass all-time record for career assists.

It was supposed to come in a win, so everyone could celebrate his special accomplishment.

But there wasn't any champagne sprayed in the UMass locker room following last night's game against Rhode Island at the Mullins Center. And Lowe, who tied Carl Smith's record with 633 assists late in the first half, never got his 634th.

And for seemingly the 634th time this season, the Minutemen faltered down the stretch of a close game in a 71-59 loss to the Rams.

"I'm at a loss for words, I really am," UMass forward Tony Gaffney said in a somber press conference. "It's just the same thing every single game. Until someone steps up and says 'I'm taking this game over, I'm going to be tough and I'm not letting us lose' – we're going to continue to throw games away at the end and our season will end before we know it."

Don't let the score fool you, this was a close game. In fact, it was UMass that held the lead for much of the contest – including a 12-point cushion with just over five minutes remaining in the first half. But the Rams quickly cut the lead to three points by halftime – going on a 9-0 spurt to end the half as the Minutemen missed their final 11 shots of the first half.

It was also tied at 57 with 2 minutes, 56 seconds to go in the game, but the Rams went on a 14-2 run to finish off the Minutemen. UMass missed its final five shots, eerily reminiscent of the way things ended in the first half.

The Minutemen have beat two of the top three teams in the conference (Dayton and Temple) and only lost to then-No. 10 Xavier by two points. And somehow, someway, they are 9-15 overall, 4-7 in the A-10 and in a tie for 10th in the conference with St. Bonaventure – who, of course, they lost to.

"Well, it's getting a little redundant," said UMass coach Derek Kellogg said after the game. "[It's frustrating] to be right in the game and I'd say almost figure out a way for yourself to lose instead of the other team totally executing."

And considering that they've been right there in the end of so many of these losses, it has to make it that much more difficult to swallow.

UMass coach Derek Kellogg accosts the referees in last night's game against Rhode Island. The Minutemen lost 71–59.

"I've preached every single day that we've competed with numerous teams in the Top 100 RPI and that we've competed with the best teams in [the Atlantic 10]," Kellogg said. "I'm confident that we can beat anybody in this league on any given night, I'm confident that we can go to Atlantic City [for the A-10 Tournament] and play well and have a chance to do something … now they have to believe it because they're the ones out there making plays and having to do it."

UMass hasn't exactly fared well in the A-10 Tournament lately. If it seems like every time they play there, they lose – it's because it is. The Minutemen have lost seven straight games – including six consecutive one-and-done's in the last six years in the tournament.

If they want to avoid the same fate this time around, a few things are going to need to happen.

Firstly, they will have to finish a game at some point. For an example of what not to do, the Minutemen can do the opposite of what they did against Rhode Island,

See ROSENSWAIKE on page 8

Another late collapse dooms Kellogg and Co. vs. Rams

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There are no fairy tale endings this year.

Last year the Massachusetts men's basketball team found anyway possible to win games – overcoming a 12-point deficit to beat Akron, a 22-point deficit to top Syracuse and a nine-point halftime deficit to overcome Florida – en route to an NIT Finals appearance.

| | |
|---|---|
| URI | 71 |
| UMass | 59 |

This year the Minutemen (9-15, 4-7 Atlantic 10) are finding anyway to lose games, as they dropped another heartbreaker, this time to Rhode Island, 71-59, Wednesday night at the Mullins Center.

"We're writing the same story over and over again," senior Tony Gaffney said after the loss. "We don't finish plays, we get lay ups down low and most of the time those aren't the issue, we usually finish that, but tonight we of course find another way to throw a game away."

UMass came out on fire, starting the game off with two 3-pointers by Luke Bonner and Matt Glass, respectively, on their way to a 15-5 lead in the first six minutes. The Rams (19-8, 8-4 A-10) fought back, cutting the lead to as little as four, before UMass built the lead back to 12 on a layup by Tyrell Lynch.

That basket, which put the Minutemen up 31-19 with 5 minutes, 1 second left in the first half, would be the last of the half for UMass. URI would instead go on a 9-0 run to close out the final five minutes. The Minutemen played a far better first half than the Rams, out rebounding them 27-18 and shooting 37.1 percent (13-35) compared to URI's 29.4 percent (10-34), but had just a three-point lead to show for it going into the locker room.

UMass could not hold URI at bay in the second half as the Rams, led by Keith Cothran's career night off the bench (26 points, two rebounds and three steals), would shoot 60 percent in the half and outscoring the Minutemen 43-28 on its way to the win.

UMass entrained the Rams two leading scorers all night, holding Jimmy Baron and Kahiem Seawright to six points apiece, but had no answer for Cothran.

"[We] did great on Baron, did a great job on Seawright," UMass coach Derek Kellogg

See M. BASKETBALL on page 8

Merritt Cosgrove is one of three players who played in all 18 games last season. The junior will look to improve on her eight goals and two assists, which she tallied last season.

Determined to excel

Minutewomen strive to go deeper in A–10 Tournament

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With the combination of a large incoming freshman class and a few experienced returning upperelassmen, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will be looking to improve on last years Atlantic 10 Tournament finals appearance.

"We have five upperclassmen returning and they have a wealth of experience and we're looking forward to them meshing with our underclassmen," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We're hoping their experiences could have a domino effect on our younger players."

Last year, the team made a strong run in the conference portion of the season going 4-3 in the A-10 and winning its first round matchup in the A-10 Tournament against Richmond, 10-9, in overtime, before losing to Temple 10-3 in the championship game.

"The goals are to get to the A-10 tournament again and then get to the final and take that next step and win the final game. Every year I've been here we have been able to progress in the A-10 tournament," Venechanos said.

It will be challenge for the team to replace several of its best players. Two of the top seniors graduated, notably Kathleen Typadis and Julie Papaleo, A key scorer and would-be senior, Kaytlin McCormick, left to concentrate on school, leaving only three seniors left on the roster.

These seniors, Holly Drown, Jackie Rosenzweig and Meghan Reddy will be called upon to help integrate 15 freshmen recruits into the system. Venechanos claimed that building team chemistry has been her primary focus throughout the preseason.

The team will be at a disadvantage in terms of experience, but there are upsides to having a roster stocked with freshman.

"This year we have a lot of young girls that are so good at

See LACROSSE on page 8

New faces to play huge role

Young recruits could determine success of upcoming season

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As temperatures in the Pioneer Valley slowly trickle back to bearable levels, pressure mounts upon a baby-faced Massachusetts women's lacrosse team (0-1) featuring 15 new recruits coach Alexis Venechanos has said might start or get significant playing time right away.

Venechanos spent the off-season in a recruiting surge to plug gaping holes in a UMass line-up that looks radically different from the 2008 squad that grinded out a run to last year's Atlantic 10 Championship game.

"As a whole, the [freshman recruiting] class is very strong from top to bottom," Venechanos said. "We have kids who are All-Americans, Under Armor All-Americans, Player[s] of the Year, state championship winners, girls who put their teams on their backs."

Accolades aside, after the young Minutewomen surrendered four late goals in Tuesday's disappointing, season-opening loss at Holy Cross (1-0), some may question just how much immediate pressure these rookies' backs can hold. It's time to preview a UMass roster at a fulcrum point in the program's future – poised to either stage major upsets or take major lumps against some of the region's toughest, non-conference opponents this season.

GOALKEEPER

Inexperience in goal could prove to be the first, glaring handicap for the Minutewomen, but only time will tell. For now, UMass can take comfort in that notion that Venechanos, a star goalkeeper herself on Maryland's mid-2000's NCAA Tournament squads, innately knows how to identify raw talent in net.

Fans will have to put their faith in one of the third-year coaches' signature recruits: the three-time high school league all-star backing this year's defense, Katie Florence. The Boston Globe All-Scholastic and All-Eastern Massachusetts goalie was a four-year standout at King Philip High School, where she subsequently led her team to four-straight league championships.

In her collegiate debut Tuesday versus Holy Cross, Florence faced 30 shots and gave up 11 goals in an opener that saw a newly restructured UMass defense still adjusting to in-game adversity.

Perhaps due to rookie jitters, Florence gave up two quick goals in the opening minutes of play. Still, Venechanos is confident her star recruit will be able to handle future pressure. She noted that Florence has already adapted extremely well to the inherent leadership responsibilities that come with serving as a Division 1 starter – arguably the game's most critical position.

Depth-wise, the Minutewomen may have to adjust in the unfortunate event that Florence goes down with an injury. Having only Florence to play in net and left with no goalkeepers returning from last year's radically different roster, the Minutewomen were forced to get creative, and quick.

Luckily, the coaching staff recently picked up junior Leslie Barber from the club team as a backup. Barber, a relatively unknown walk-on, was a three-year letter-winner at Andover High School, where her team lost only five times in her last two seasons.

"We went after [Barber]," Venechanos said. "The girls are taking her under their wing and so far she's adapting really well to Division I lacrosse."

DEFENSE

True to her liberal philosophy on walk-ons like Barber, in discussing general preseason competition for playing time, Venechanos was quick to say that every position is up for grabs. Such a mentality may prove especially pertinent to a defense that lost A-10 All Championship standout Jeannette Villapiano last spring.

"We try to make everything really competitive, every single day," she noted. "I believe if you deserve to play and start, and you have a good week at practice, you will. Our team isn't really complacent and there are always slots open.

Senior captain Jackie Rosenzweig, who reportedly has had an exceptional preseason, will take the defensive reigns this year. The aggressive veteran notched the sixth-highest career turnover total in UMass history last season (64), and was ranked 61st nationwide in overall caused turnovers. Look for the durable and dependable Rosenzweig, who has started every game of the past three seasons of her career, to anchor a young defense in front of rookies Florence and Barber.

ATTACK/MIDFIELD

In front of captain Rosenzweig's defense, the Minutewomen are hoping to draw upon a corps of experienced offensive returnees. Citing a poised and confident attack building off strong speed in the backfield, Venechanos will cultivate positional depth up front.

"We don't really have a lot of straight up attackers and defenders," Venechanos explained. "We have a lot of midfield and utility players. We're trying to play a lot of people this season, that goes right back into what we're trying to do: play a lot of people, be all over the field. And that's conducive to having a lot of athletic, midfield-type players."

The commitment to such versatility will be entrusted in veterans like captain Holly Drown. The 5-foot-6 Drown, named by Venechanos the "workhorse" of the maroon and white midfield, after coming into the preseason in top shape, has been amplifying her game ever since she started the last 11 games of 2008. She finished with a steady 58.3 shooting percentage, 13 groundballs, 11 draw controls and eight caused turnovers.

Drown will be joined upfield by fellow returnees Kelsey Shreiner, Jackie Lyons and Merrit Cosgrove, each of whom started all 18 games last season and together combined for almost 20 percent of UMass' goals in 2008.

Venechanos has noticed how well her veterans complement each other both on and off the field.

"We have a great, strong, vocal leader presence," she said. "We also have Steph Hopkins and Meg Reddy, who kind of keep the girls on the same page [and] loose. I think it's a good dynamic – not just one captain is in charge on one thing. They definitely spread the responsibilities out evenly."

Holly J. Galvin can be reached at hgalvin@student.umass.edu.

Second half surge drowns Minutemen

UMass fails to play full game

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After 26 minutes of play, the Massachusetts women's basketball team was dead even with one of the top teams in its conference. But for the other 14, the Minutewomen looked like a mere shadow of the team that beat Temple just one week earlier as they lost to George Washington, 83-62 in Washington, D.C.

| | |
|---|---|
| GW | 83 |
| UMass | 62 |

Regardless of how well the team performed in the other 35 minutes, it was a five-minute stretch in the middle of the second half that dashed any hopes of victory for the Minutewomen.

A devastating 15-3 run for George Washington (16-10, 8-3 A-10) ruined what was, up to that point, a good night for UMass (10-16, 3-8 A-10) as the once close game digressed into a blowout.

"In the second half, we came out and stopped shooting the ball," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said of the team's second half slide. "We stopped shooting the ball, we put the ball down and then everyone stood and we kind of looked around instead of

See W. BASKETBALL on page 8

Kim Benton, right, and the Minutewomen dropped an 83–62 decision to George Washington Wednesday night. Benton had six points in the loss.

the daily collegian

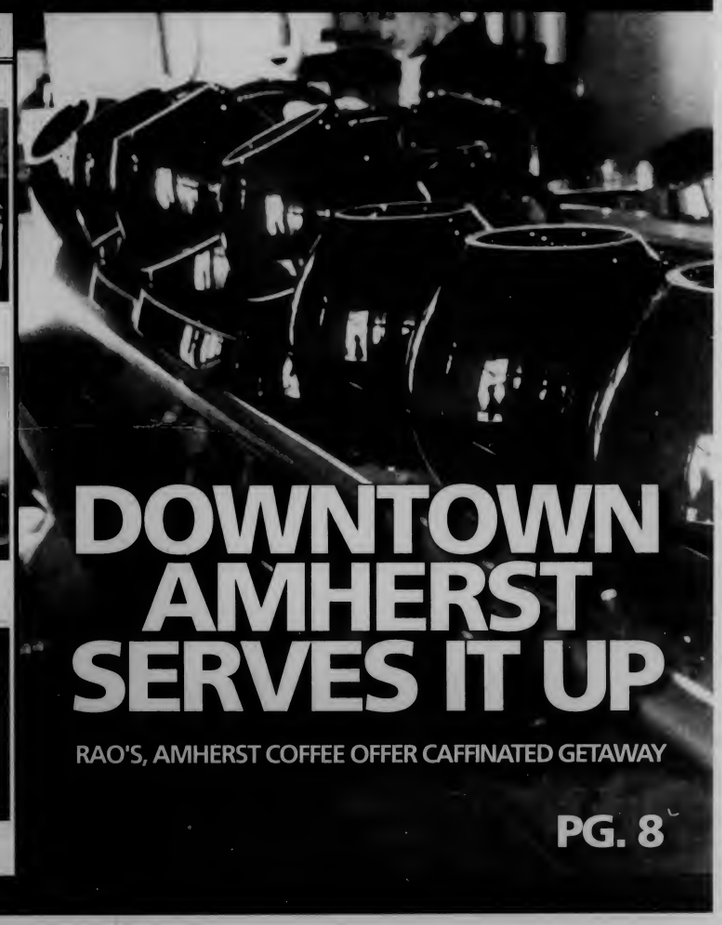
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FEBRUARY 20, 2009

inside this issue:

SPORTS

SEE PAGE 12

NEWS



SEE PAGE 5

ARTS

SEE PAGE 10

DOWNTOWN AMHERST SERVES IT UP

RAO'S, AMHERST COFFEE OFFER CAFFINATED GETAWAY

PG. 8

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 20

113 Campus Center, University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Mellone
Business Manager Alex Waszczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Dolan
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Mac Zelmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor James Mathews
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor D. Kevin Dupont
Multimedia Editor J.P. Mercier
Features Editor Anthony Mormile
Photo Editor Pat Nagurney
Web Editor Kyrylo Lisovin
Asst. Business Manager Mary Gilmartin
Assistant Advertising Brendan O'Leary
Assistant Operations Emily Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Emily Rauscher
Asst. Arts & Living Jon Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Tuckman
Asst. Editorial Leigh Greaney
Asst. Editorial Nick O'Malley
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Kachmarik
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Lamarre
Assistant Photo Danielle Aucoin
Assistant Photo Matthew Hamilton
Assistant Multimedia Mike Dittmeier
Assistant Multimedia Peter Ritzo
Assistant Multimedia James Weaver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING AS A CONFIDENTIAL BUSINESS SUBJECT TO ALL THE RIGHTS AND RESPONSIBILITIES OF THE FREE PRESS AS GUARANTEED BY THE UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION. THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IS NOT AND HAS NEVER BEEN AFFILIATED WITH THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST. ALL MATERIAL CONTAINED HEREIN IS COPYRIGHTED AND MAY NOT BE REPRODUCED WITHOUT EXPRESS WRITTEN PERMISSION. ADVERTISING INFORMATION IS AVAILABLE BY CALLING 545-3500.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. SULLIVAN

COPY EDITOR
MICHELLE FREDETTE

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHAEL SARKES

Love 101 sets mood for year

By Gisel Saillant
Collegian Staff

In the western world, things are sometimes understood in dualities, mind and soul, black and white or independence and intimacy as in the event "Where's Love 101," last Wednesday, Feb. 10, which discussed how intimacy and independence are balanced in a relationship.

In the ninth floor of the Lincoln Campus Center, participants struggled to find seats as the crowded room brimmed with 50 people. This year marked the event's third anniversary, which was hosted by the Women of Color Leadership Network, Everywoman's Center, Student Legal Services and the University Health Services.

The panel-style event hosted couples who were asked to share different aspects of their relationship, ranging from their versions of their first encounter to the way in which they each deal with conflict issues.

The panel consisted of four couples. The first of these couples was Dwayne Brewington and La Warza Lett-Brewington, who met in the University of South Florida in Tampa and admit to meeting by accident as Mrs. Lett-Brewington accompanied her cousin to the gym as her business attire Dwayne was working out when he saw her and admits to finding La Warza "more interesting," in her work attire deserve her discomfort at the moment. The couple has since divorced and returned but mark their separation as the day their relationship began.

Right beside them were Adi Bernak and Rob Okun, a relationship void of any fireworks in their courting as their relationship stemmed from a 25-year friendship and switched to something more serious in the last 15 years. Okun describes their interactions prior to their commitment as solid in the nature of the conversations they had, but he said the transition felt like inches in time as they both resisted their connection.

The third couple was Betsy Archer and Shuli Archer, who had very different versions of how they first met. Betsy recollects their meeting at a high school queer youth group in Atlanta, Ga., while Shuli retells their meeting six months earlier at a punk festival. Regardless, this couple has been together for 12 years.

Aaron Buford and Sophia Bar held the last seats as they took turns holding their son. They shared how they met through mutual friends and very quickly created a momentum that has kept their relationship intact.

Love 101's panel fielded questions from the audience on a number of relationship issues. Some 50 people packed the room to observe or participate.

"Sofia has it going on, we were both straight-up with ourselves."

Questions were asked by the panel facilitator while some questions came directly from the audience.

Adi Bernak commented on the importance of having intimacy with your own body as well with others. Her partner, Rob Okun, defined this relationship as two sides of the same coin.

"The intimacy with yourself fosters independence," Okun said.

Betsy Archer and Shuli Archer, detailed the importance of space and how that benefits the quality time they spend with each other. They take separate vacations during the year. They maintained a long-distance relationship while in college, which has resulted in their greater individual independence.

La Warza struggled to accept the roles that were expected of her, like being a career person, a wife or being "too submissive," which she said she couldn't be. La Warza describes their relationship as "great and imperfect" as she expressed the struggles they had in common like going to school together and being a black couple. She recalled how Dwayne was often ostracized while completing their master's degree, and she reflected on what she called "society's isolation of men of color."

Sophia Bar took a different approach and shared how she and her partner each have different needs when it comes to intimacy. She mentioned how their needs have come in cycles from the trips she made from New Haven, Conn. visiting Aaron to being pregnant.

Male vulnerability is a concept Aaron expressed as being part of learning his level of intimacy. He said being aware of the boxes society has placed on being a male is important, and, for him, understanding males as tough and independent early on has placed this balance as one he tries to be aware of emotionally.

Commenting on the talk, Jessica Almeida, a senior psychology major said, "I absolutely loved it. It was an insightful experience; it opened my eyes in different ways in going into a relationship. It also helped to understand my needs better."

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillant@umass.edu.

(Left to right) Betsy Archer, Shuli Arhet Archer and Aaron Buford sit on Love 101's panel of couples. The talk was centered on intimacy and independence.

et in arcadia ego: A stabbing, Even at Amherst

William McGuinness

Amherst College was shocked in its Ivory Tower last past weekend. Marcus Smith, a student from the University of Massachusetts, and Isaac Cameron, from Amherst College, were involved in an on-campus altercation that left both wounded, according to police documents. The fight was at a party and was said to be over a girl. Nothing fresh there, but the reaction was anything but.

The UMass student allegedly pulled a knife and stabbed the Amherst College student between six and seven times in the abdomen and back. Some eye witnesses said they came together in an embrace, as if calming each other down. Others said the knife was out from the start and what looked like a hug was actually one student repeatedly stabbing the other.

Students answered television reporters' questions with shock and disbelief.

"I absolutely feel safe in my dorm and I always have before. I'm sure the school will react accordingly and make us all feel safer," said Tyler Tory-Murphy to Channel 22 News. Freshman Jesse Fried of Milburne, N.J., told The Amherst Bulletin that he regarded the stabbing as a "freak occurrence."

"I was definitely surprised. I didn't think that was something that could happen here. I don't feel any less safe, though," he said.

But their surprise is to mine. The title of this article "Et in arcadia ego" is Latin for "even in arcadia, I exist," and the statement is historically said by a personification of death. In a painting by Nicolas Poussin, several people surround a headstone with the phrase engraved into it. They look more somber than surprised.

Similarly, Samuel Johnson wrote a novella, "Rasselas", set in a "happy valley" that sounds much like the one local college students have created. Johnson's valley is a place free of problems, where desires are quickly satiated. The characters kept there, however, are not happy and wish to escape to the outside world – one they find is filled with human suffering. But once they witness and experience this, they elect to stay there rather than returning.

In the land of "philosopher kings" that Amherst is jokingly said to be, it's troubling that students never thought this could happen to them, or near them, or at a school at which they are enrolled. It is as if, when embarking for the progressive Pioneer Valley, they imagined a utopia where people do not fight over women and where men don't bring knives to parties.

Students to whom I've spoken often say that a bubble exists around their campuses – one that restricts the flow of information, ideas and the creation personal relationships with others outside of it. The seclusion is voluntary, in a way, as 98 percent of Amherst College's students live on campus. But as this weekend proved, the bubble is not literal. The admissions department may keep incoming grade point average high and a fresh stock of eager students coming in, but it does not protect against the problem of off-campus reality.

The sense of security they have created for themselves is not immune to a world's reality they have forgotten to consider their own.

William McGuinness is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu.

Nicolas Poussin's "Et in Arcadia Ego" is a statement that, even in Utopia, Death exists. Amherst College was similarly shook when a student was stabbed recently, though the student lived.

On Darwin's birthday, his ideas, head renew

By Ian Edward Dethlefsen
Collegian Staff

Every good story needs a wonder – something to make it stand out. For Daniel Fairbanks' presentation on Charles Darwin's 200th birthday, Feb. 13, that wonder was a bust of Darwin's head he made while talking about the famed naturalist's life and achievements.

A nearly-packed house attended Fairbanks' presentation. He began, "'The Origin of Species' is the most important book never read," while pounding a blob of red clay into a featureless head.

Darwin is known for two things primarily: "The Origin of Species," his first book, which outlined the principles of natural selection, and "The Descent of Man and Selection in Relation to Sex," which connected his past observations of the relationships between all nature with humans and posited sexual selection to bolster his redoubtable armament of acute observational data.

These books were just the meat between bookends. "The Voyage of the Beagle" and "The Expression of Emotions in Man and Animals" were not as popular as Darwin's first books, but were still considerable best sellers. Darwin's letters are still being compiled and ruminated over in Cambridge, England, under lock and key. With this data, Darwin took each and every creature on earth and linked it together to one primordial ancestor, not only solidifying the whole mass of life on Earth with a foundation of change but providing a biological history we've explored ever since.

Daniel Fairbanks said he wished that Darwin had, at that time, met with Gregor Mendel whose work with pea plants provided our knowledge of inheritance.

"Darwin's lack of understanding of inheritance is often overlooked or downplayed and I think it should be given greater attention," said Fairbanks, who did a fair amount of study concerning Mendel before he investigated Darwin.

Fairbanks' presentation handed between a science

See DARWIN on page 4

For Darwin's 200th, Daniel Fairbanks held a talk on the theorist's legacy.

CINEMARK®
The Best Seat In Town
Advance tickets & showtimes available online at cinemark.com
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. - 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp 1118#
EARLY BIRD SPECIAL M-F, 1ST MATINEE SHOWTIME $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 - STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)
$5 Tuesdays are back!! All shows all day are $5!!

◆ TYLER PERRY'S MADEA GOES TO JAIL [PG13] 120 430 710 940
◆ FIRED UP [PG13] 150 440 745 1005
◆ FRIDAY THE 13TH [R] 200 455 740 1030
◆ CONFESSIONS OF A SHOPAHOLIC [PG] 145 430 725 1000
◆ THE INTERNATIONAL [R] 105 405 715 1015
◆ HES JUST NOT THAT INTO YOU [PG13] 100 400 700 1010
◆ PINK PANTHER 2 [PG] 155 435 655 915
◆ CORALINE [PG] 140 420 650 920
◆ PUSH [PG13] 135 410 735 1025
◆ TAKEN [PG13] 110 425 730 1020
◆ PAUL BLART MALL COP [PG] 125 445 720 945
◆ GRAN TORINO [R] 115 415 705 955

Friday Night Rewind 3/6/09
TRAINSPOTTING
MET OPERA 3/18/09
MADAMA BUTTERFLY Encore 7PM
Senior Show 2/26/09 10am
TAKEN

CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Club juggles fun and anything else

By David Zugnoni
Spartan Daily (San Jose State U.)

An autopsy report states that San Jose State University student Gregory Johnson Jr. committed suicide, but his parents allege that the Santa Clara County Medical Examiner-Coroner and the University Police Department are covering up a homicide.

Johnson, who was a junior kinesiology major and a member of Sigma Chi fraternity, died on Nov. 22, the report states. He was 20.

"It's an unfortunate situation," said UPD Chief Andre Barnes. "We're doing an investigation, and we have not found anything to suggest it was anything but suicide."

Pat Lopes Harris, director of media relations at SJSU, said Wednesday that UPD intended to finish the investigation and release a report in about three weeks.

According to the autopsy report, UPD officers told Patra Albrecht, an investigator for the coroner's office, that a fraternity brother found Johnson hanging in the basement of the Sigma Chi fraternity house, 284 S. 10th St., about 2:45 p.m. on Saturday, Nov. 22.

"A fraternity brother went down into the basement and found the decedent hanging from a cord affixed to a ceiling water pipe," wrote Albrecht, who reportedly arrived at the scene at 5:10 p.m. "He took the decedent down and called for paramedics who pronounced death upon arrival."

Johnson's parents, Denise Johnson and Gregory Johnson Sr., said the manner in which their son reportedly hanged himself was almost impossible.

"I'm 5-feet-6, and I could touch the pipe," Denise Johnson said. "He was 6-foot-2, he weighed 220 pounds, and he was 220 pounds of muscle; he was in good shape. There's no way that he hung, and they said they found him in a seated position with his legs out in front of him."

In the autopsy report, Albrecht wrote that police officers measured approximately 70 inches (5 feet, 10 inches) from the floor to the bottom of the water pipe.

"The fraternity brother said the decedent's knees were bent and he was almost resting on the floor," she wrote. "The fraternity brother unwound the ligature cord and placed the decedent into a nearby chair."

Albrecht further noted that when she arrived, Johnson's body was "slumped back in an office chair" and an electrical cord was nearby.

The Johnsons said their son's neck showed no marks of hanging.

Denise Johnson has photographs she took at their home in Clearlake, Calif., after first viewing the body on Dec. 1, before cosmetics were applied, she said.

"They say he was hanging for an hour and a half," Denise Johnson said. "It would have been embedded deep in his neck."

Albrecht wrote in the autopsy report that two ligature furrows surrounded Johnson's neck.

"The width is comparable with the orange electrical cord found next to the decedent," she wrote. "At the front of the neck, the two ligature marks go horizontally. At the left and right sides of the decedent's neck, the ligature mark elevates toward the ears."

The Johnsons said they were denied a viewing of the body until Dec. 1 because it had already been identified by fraternity members and a driver's license, and they were upset that the coroner's office did not allow them to view it at an earlier time.

"Right from the beginning, it's like they were covering things up," Denise Johnson said. "I got the feeling they didn't want us down there."

According to the autopsy report, Johnson's body was "tentatively identified" on Nov. 22 by his driver's license and "his fraternity brothers with whom he lived for two years," and it was "positively identified visually" by his mother on Nov. 24.

Denise Johnson said she did not view the body in person and was shown a black-and-white photocopied picture of her son's body on Nov. 24.

"You can't see much in black and white," she said, "but you can see that there are no marks on his neck."

The coroner's office does not authorize the viewing of a body once it has been identified and that identification can be made by someone viewing a photograph, a spokesperson for the office said.

Denise Johnson said she was suspicious about the condition of her son's neck when the body was delivered to the family on Dec. 1.

She said her son's head was supported by a block, and when the block was removed, the head fell back.

"His neck was broken all the way through," she said.

After UPD releases an investigation report, the case will be turned over to the Santa Clara County District Attorney's office, said Nick Muyo, D.A. public information officer.

"We look at the evidence they present to us," Muyo said. "We look at the coroner's report. We do have the option to ask [UPD] to do some follow-up, to interview more people if that's what we think they need to do, or we can assign one of our investigators to do that."

No suicide note was found, according to the autopsy report and Lopes Harris.

Nick Wright, chapter president of Sigma Chi, said the fraternity would have no comment.

A happy birthday to evolution

DARWIN from page 3

lecture, a biographical adventure story and an ardent passion for sculpting, suggesting a Bob Ross-esque elation at times.

Sculpting worked as a conduit for Fairbanks to discuss his own life, work, and Darwin as a whole. He'd gotten to the bust's inner ear, twisting the instrument in crescent moon swipes and jabs, when he interjected a quote from his father, "Daniel, I've realized something. I will never die!" He explained that, enlightened in a realization from Darwin's observation of life's inner connectedness he would live on, his blood would continue in Daniel but also in the world.

There is more genetic difference between two individuals in a species of yeast than between humans and chimps. This was discovered just recently in the University of Gothenburg, Sweden.

As the bust went from an amorphous blob to a middle-aged Darwin and then into the brooding naturalist sage with the sea foam hair we all know from the jacket of various science texts, so did the mood also wane until it was appropriate to begin asking questions. A few deep-throated Darwinians posited questions about old vs. new editions of "The Origin of Species." Fairbanks, who was raised Mormon, has no disturbance of faith because of Darwin. He wants people to experience the profound interconnectedness with nature that he feels and not be stymied into ignorance by an exclusivist ideology.

A copy of the bust will be put on display in an exhibition in Morrill II at the back of the third floor, near the stairs.

Ian Edward Dethchon can be reached at idethch@student.umass.edu.

Club juggles fun and anything else

UMass RSO finds common ground in throwing things at one another

By Dinah Gorelik
Collegian Staff

From juggling torches to acrobatics to unicycles, the Juggling Club, meeting every Wednesday in the Boyden wrestling room at 6:30 p.m., offers an array of awing object-manipulation activities. Welcoming those looking to sharpen their skills or be introduced to the art, this registered student organization at the University of Massachusetts Amherst includes certified juggling teachers and an opportunity to learn something new.

The club's diverse membership is made up of high school students, undergraduates, graduates and post-docs. Even jugglers living in the nearby areas attend the meetings. Versatility in the activities include traditional ball juggling, club juggling, rings, contact juggling, poi (which involves balls on ropes being swung in circular patterns), staves, meteors, diabolos, yo-yos, devil sticks, acrobatics and the unicycle. What makes the experience even more enriching, however, is that fact that people can be in the company of others with similar interests.

One member of the club, Katherine Skipper, a junior at UMass remarked, "It is great to find a group of people as crazy as I am who enjoy the same things. Also, you find out that you have never learned everything."

Joshua Drolet, president of the club, said, "It's usually more fun to juggle with more people because you can learn from them and teach them."

Juggling, which is derived from the term jogelen, meaning to entertain by performing tricks, is the physical human skill involving the movement of one or more objects, usually through the air. Though popular in early civilizations, the sport became more popular after the fall of the Roman Empire. During the 19th century, the popularity of music hall theatre led to a demand in jugglers to entertain the audience during intermissions. Nowadays, it is viewed more as a hobby.

The International Jugglers Association was developed in the 1950s and now hosts regular conventions. The association's formation led to World Juggling Day, where juggling is recognized and jugglers are encouraged to celebrate everywhere. World Juggling Day is expected to take place this year on June 20, 2009.

Henry Lappen, a professional juggler for more than 25 years, not only teaches others in the club, but is also an active member of this International Jugglers Association.

The Juggling Information Service Committee on Numbers was created, which maintains the official numbers of juggling records. Because of this committee, those who are highly competitive and passionate can strive to someday beat the world record of juggling with a particular prop.

In the early 1980s, the International Juggling Convention, which previously took place at Hampshire College, moved to UMass, and the club has expanded and excelled under talented jugglers at the university.

Another member of the Juggling Club, Daniel Coyne, who is a marketing consultant said, "You learn ... because the moves are broken down to less intimidating ones."

More importantly, the idea behind the process of learning can be applied to any other discipline or activity.

Though the club usually performs at various UMass events, what many look forward to most is seeing the jugglers use torches and spin fire poi as well as fire staff. This type of entertainment normally takes place during the spring and summer near the campus pond.

Drolet also said, "The goal for the group is to introduce the jugglers of the Amherst area so they can practice their skills and become better. Another major goal, if not our most important, is to teach others who are new to juggling how to juggle."

Dinah Gorelik can be reached at dgorelik@student.umass.edu.

MATTHEW HARRIS/COLLEGIAN

Daily Collegian Reporter Dinah Gorelik tries not to move as pins fly about her head. This is not a hazing procedure, but the club does encourage newcomers to give juggling a try.

MATTHEW HARRIS/COLLEGIAN

Objects to juggle are not in short supply at the RSO's meetings, but the hands might be overwhelmed. Organizers suggest getting creative.

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Lost in translation? My ben rai

World Perspectives

Melissa Garber

It's 5 a.m. in Yasothorn, a province in the northeast, or Isaan region, of Thailand. I slept through my 4 a.m. rooster wake-up call. I slept through the all-night mosquito assault on my exposed limbs. It's my cell phone alarm that jolts me awake. My bed is a bamboo mat on a wooden floor. My pillow, a hard triangle made in the traditional Isaan style.

Same, my roommate at this particular homestay, and I have the entire day to spend with our host family. We make our way down the stairs of our house, a wooden structure on stilts. Our two host moms, meh Meow and meh Gaow, are perched around a fire.

"Sah-wat-dee-kah," we say in unison. A month of Thai boot camp provides me with the tools to introduce myself, ask who is in the family (even though it's near impossible to know who is related to whom) and if my family uses chemical fertilizers and mono-cropping or have made the switch to integrated agriculture and compost.

I imagine it's difficult for the family to reconcile the fact I don't know how to say "I want," in Thai, but can ask if they are in debt because of the chemical fertilizers they used on their mono-cropped fields before they made the switch to organic. To add to the confusion, my host family speaks Lao and the Isaan dialect. The Thai I learned is almost irrelevant.

Same and I are given the reins to complete breakfast. Our dad, pew Wan herds our 14 cows (woo-ah) and solitary buffalo (ka-wai – elongate it or it means male genitalia). No surprise, we burn the sticky rice (kaow nee-ow) dipped in egg mixture on the makeshift grill. The glutinous rice, native to the Isaan region, is black and unsightly and our host family laughs at us.

"My ben rai," meh Gaow says. It's the go-to phrase for Thais. Did you accidentally set loose a nest of red ants on the mango tree? (That was me). My ben rai. Mess up your tones and say dog vagina instead of snow? (Someone actually did that). My ben rai. Ruin breakfast? My ben rai.

Meh Meow then proceeded to parade Sarie and me around the village for a two-hour jaunt. A yai (a Thai grandmother that heeds no regard for social norms) offers me a betel nut. It's a mild narcotic that stains your teeth red.

> Ever taught English to a class of 30 nine-year-olds? Ever do it without instructions, or explanations why you were stranded for over an hour? I have.

Another couple yais grab my arms and admire my pale skin, my big nose, my brown hair. "Koon me fan mai," they ask. The yais want to know if I have a boyfriend. Or husband. I don't know, the word is the same. My ben rai. I am conveniently in the same age range as their grandson, lucky me.

Sarie and I suspect meh Meow told everyone we met we ruined breakfast. Every time I asked to help her after that, I was instructed to take a seat or take a shower (a process that involves a big tub of freezing water, and a bucket to dump it over your head).

On the walk home we pass a school. A hundred Thai elementary school students sit in rows as a teacher leads them in morning exercises. Sarie and I are ushered over to introduce ourselves, in English, to the students. After an awkward 10 minutes, we continue home, unsure of what just happened.

A series of mistranslated conversations occurs as we arrive at the house. Sarie and I want to herd cows. Our mehs have a separate plan. Armed with two child umbrellas, complete with purple frills and anime characters, Sarie and I are led back to the road by meh Gaow this time.

The scene is familiar. We are back at school. Sarie and I are brought to the doorway of a classroom. The teacher left without saying a word and we venture inside.

Ever taught English to a class of 30 9-year-olds? Ever do it without instructions, or explanations why you were stranded for over an hour? I have.

There were three English phrases on the chalkboard: "My name is," "raise your hand," "point to the window." We exhaust them quickly. We play number games, identify animals and lead them in a rousing chorus of "Heads, shoulders, knees and toes."

A bell rang after what felt like ages and it was lunch time. Sarie and I sit with the teachers in a circle and eat in the traditional Isaan style. No individual plates or utensils, just sticky rice to mold into a spoon and communal heaps of food.

We didn't ask why we were left to fend for ourselves. Or even why we were at the school in the first place. My ben rai. Later, when one of our Thai teachers (Ajaans) came to our homestay to translate a conversation with meh Meow, we asked if our teaching excursion was planned. It wasn't.

We left school after lunch. With umbrellas in tow (thanks meh Gaow) Sarie and I walk home. It's only 2 p.m.

Melissa Garber is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at mhgarber@student.umass.edu.

Backpacks: the newest threat to UMass

Eli Gottlieb

"Shaitan wants only to excite enmity between you with alcoholic drinks and gambling," thus says the first bit of verse 91 of the book Al-Ma'idah in the Qur'an. From what I saw at Berkshire Dining Commons last week, the University of Massachusetts Amherst has taken those words further to heart than most moderately observant Muslims.

I had just left Boyden Gym from karate and, finding that everyone else had gone without organizing dinner, I went over to Berkshire to eat. When I entered Berkshire, I encountered a plain-clothes employee and a sign notifying me that new DC rules say students must leave their backpacks in a pile near the entrance to the DC to enter. Why? Apparently, it is because students bring alcoholic drinks into Berkshire DC to drink and because students would take "large quantities of food" out of the dining commons in containers in these bags – a practice popularly known, for some bizarre reason, as theft.

Now let's examine these two social problems – obviously virulent ones if the University has made a rule to handle them.

The first problem is students bringing alcoholic beverages into dining commons from their places of residence and proceeding to drink them. While most UMass students are, of course, underage, Dining Services cannot and does not actually demand proof of drinking age to enter. It also cannot prove that any particular student is drinking underage on their premises without either violating the Fourth Amendment or finding a complete moron who openly takes shots in front of everyone.

I know I didn't have alcohol when I went to Berkshire DC – I just had a smelly karate gi. Still, the new rule forced me and everyone else to leave our belongings in plain view and at risk of theft just to prevent some morons downing vodka in their water-glasses. Obviously, the university desperately needs to enforce its rules against any and all consumption of alcohol on its dining premises. Allah forbid that students should drink mild intoxicants, after all.

As to the so-called "theft," I believe that most students take large quantities of food out of the DCs all the time – in our stomachs. We pay a large enough amount for our annoyingly mandatory meal plans and correspondingly mandatory on-campus housing that the university makes a profit. But apparently if we try to get our money's worth by taking some fresh fruit or some other food we like from the DC to our dorms for convenience's sake, that's theft.

> Apparently if we try to get our money's worth by taking some fresh fruit or some other food we like from the DC to our dorms for convenience's sake, that's theft.

Somehow, the University believes that when it fails to extract the sum of money it desires from us while we take advantage of the very contract it forced us to sign for food, we students are in the wrong and stealing.

Of course, I'd be willing to bet money that most students will simply put up with this new restriction on us. After all, why make trouble? Someone, though, should stand up for students here.

Perhaps nobody will stand up for the rights of students to drink in the dining commons – a rather silly practice. But someone ought to stand up for students' right to avoid placing our belongings at risk of theft. I actually wonder how long this policy will remain in place before someone does report a theft of their bag(s) from Berkshire, and how much more time afterwards it will take before Dining Services realizes just how stupid a rule it has made.

Until then, those of us wishing to either get drunk or get our money's worth from dining commons can continue eating at Hampshire, Worcester, Franklin and Hampden. For some bizarre reason, only Berkshire has entered into this idiocy. So, those of us forced by these things called "classes" or "activities" to carry around large sacks of books and computing equipment can bring our things in with us at the locations. We can even leave our bags at tables or booths in those places, or take bottles out of our backpacks in which to store milk if we don't want to buy it at the supermarket.

Some will undoubtedly take advantage of this to do their dinner alcohol drinking somewhere other than Berkshire. This will most likely prompt the University to start banning bringing bags anywhere. Fine.

Students need to learn not to put up with BS from this university on a practical level, rather than just allowing the Student Government Association to protest for more money without any real improvement in our lives.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at eligottlieb@gmail.com.

Peanut Corp. not in a smooth situation

Evan Haddad

You could say that the nut is out of the bag for Stewart Parnell, owner of Peanut Corporation of American, after traces of the deadly salmonella bacteria were linked back to products made in his company's factory in Blakely, Ga.

Peanut Corp. filed for Chapter 7 bankruptcy last Friday at the U.S. Bankruptcy Court for the Western District of Virginia amid a global salmonella outbreak and what is shaping up to be one of the largest food recalls in U.S. history. Peanut Corp. liaisons remarked that the cost of product recalls have been "extremely devastating" to the company, noting that nevertheless, they were doing their utmost to ensure a timely and efficient recall. It's a very warm gesture, considering that the investigation indicates Peanut Corp.'s chief executives continued shipping their products to unsuspecting customers once aware that they contained salmonella.

As of last week, Peanut Corporation of America stated that it held assets between $1 million and $10 million, a figure roughly coinciding with the amount of debt they are obliged to repay. Opposed to Chapter 11 bankruptcy, which allows a company room to reorganize and continue business, Chapter 7 mandates that a company liquidate its assets in order to repay creditors. In this case, I'm sure Peanut Corp.'s corporate executives are breathing a sigh of relief and snuggling extra close to their own wallets – after all it would be a shame if the top dogs had to bite the big one in this troubled market.

> They also found swarms of cockroaches – so for those of you not poisoned by salmonella, now you know what that big crunch in your smooth peanut butter was.

As expected, this past Wednesday, top executives of Peanut Corp. utilized their Fifth Amendment rights, refusing to testify during a congressional subcommittee hearing in Lynchburg, Va. A congressman at the hearing unveiled a series of incriminating inter-departmental e-mails taken from Peanut Corp. In the e-mails, owner Stewart Palmer confessed to a growing irritation at the loss of profits resulting from the FDA's investigation. He complained that holding shipments based on positive tests for salmonella were costing him – and his company – big bucks.

Apart from traces of salmonella, federal officials also found leaky roofs and unsanitary processing equipment in both the Blakely, Ga., and Plainview, Texas, plants. In a crawl space above a production area in the Texas plant, investigators allegedly found dead rodents, feces, and feathers. Thankfully, it has been shut down.

Apparently they also found swarms of cockroaches – so for those of you not poisoned by salmonella, now you know what that big crunch in your smooth peanut butter was. The government is also supplementing its investigation by compiling evidence and facts for a possible criminal case against Peanut Corp.'s chief execs.

Hopefully, food-safety lawyers suggest that despite Friday's bankruptcy hearing, victims will receive adequate compensation. But litigation against the company may, nevertheless, be postponed. Regardless, lawyers intend to push forward with civil suits. After being reached by reporters, Peanut Corp.'s owner, Stewart Parnell, declined to comment, saying that his legal representatives advised him not to talk.

"If I could do it, I would", said Peanut Corp.'s head-honcho. Apparently this Parnell would not wager much on his tongue. But filing for bankruptcy may lend a helping hand to the crippled corporation, some legal experts say. A professor of corporate and securities law at Emory College in Atlanta, Ga., implied that the provisions of Chapter 7 will protect Peanut Corp. from all creditors, including "tort creditors," that is, the unfortunate consumers who suffered from eating the poisoned peanut goods.

Although the fiscal blow to Peanut Corp. will be lessened through bankruptcy, it is sure that the un-felicific victims will not be so lucky. Particularly crippled are the many small businesses that relied upon Peanut Corp.'s products for their own and who now are caught in a disastrous pickle – or shall I say peanut. With over 1,800 products recalled since January, in addition to a nation increasingly aware of corporate schemers, consumers are just about fed up – and rightfully so. The irresponsibility of Stewart Parnell and his cronies does not just extend directly to Peanut Corp.'s customers, but to the nation at large. Food banks across the country have been throwing away thousands of pounds of much needed supplies due to the salmonella scare. And in a time where the belt on many Americans, including once well-off middle class consumers, tightens daily, the imprudence of companies like Peanut Corp. is maddening.

Federal officials estimate that 1,000 pounds of food feeds nearly 800 people. That equals about 270 families of three.

The ongoing salmonella outbreak which seems to have cracked the last nut of Peanut Corporation of America has sickened nearly 600 people, more than half of them children, and is believed to have left at least nine dead.

Evan Haddad is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehaddad@student.umass.edu.

Taking a step out of our way

Nicole Sobel

Girls of all classes and sizes all over the University of Massachusetts Amherst campus walk through each other like Demi Moore and Patrick Swayze in the movie "Ghost." Let's face it: This is an actual problem on campus.

Although some girls wish and pretend that their fellow female students are transparent and diaphanous like clouds, they aren't. It must be said that this trend of girls walking into other girls all around campus is juvenile and incontestably ridiculous.

Lately, I've been noticing, from my own experiences and hearing from many other female students, that girls refuse to take a second to move their foot a half an inch to get out of another girl's way. This sounds like something we wouldn't want to affirm; something so illogical and infantile that we wouldn't want to admit that we take part in this rude behavior or have had an acquaintance with it.

How much power are these girls really trying to gain from brushing by someone's shoulder like they're Gretchen from "Mean Girls"? I mean come on, seriously. They may conceptualize it in their heads by thinking that belittling another girl will make them feel better; but, it only makes them look like worse human beings in the end.

> How much power are these girls really trying to gain from brushing by someone's shoulder like they're Gretchen from Mean Girls?

I know sometimes a girl may have a bad day and be strolling by another girl and not care to look, and the girl ends up getting trampled down. But should this really be happening on a regular basis all around campus? No.

Girls should pride themselves on class, sophistication and intelligence, not immaturity and high school brush-bys while walking around campus. It's imperative that female students at UMass be represented in a good light. Being known for inconsideration around campus is not going to make other female students happy or excited about staying at this university.

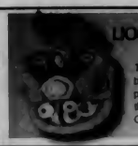
I know many girls feel this way because they've told me. They've told me that this is the type of thing that goes unnoticed and that it's an issue many girls think about, but don't say. So I'm saying it for them, and it needs to be resolved.

It's as disrespectful and hurtful to some girls as the middle finger or spitting in someone's face. Not feeling like you are even there, feeling like you don't even matter at all is one of the worst feelings in the world.

On campus, you want to feel like you're in a community, or at least feel respected and amongst girls who are in at least one way like you. Yet by walking right into each other, we're sending the wrong message. Of course, not all girls on campus do this, but there are enough girls doing it that it's made an impact; other female students are talking about it, and aren't happy at all.

No one is fond of an inconsiderate student. I speak from personal experience, as I'm sure most readers have had their fair share as well. As girls, we need to be strong together and unite to be there for one another in terms of friendship and representation of our gender.

It's horrible to see a female student's face after she was just knocked into without an apology. They feel like they don't exist, like not even another girl can notice them. It's hard enough realizing that as a girl, the guys you hope will notice you probably never do. But you at least expect other girls who understand the daily struggles would understand and at least go out of their way to not bump into another girl.



No girl is better than any other girl, if you think you are somehow, you are mistaken. And if you're one of those girls who is guilty of brushing by another girl daily without apology or concern for anyone but yourself, you should be ashamed because it's time to grow up. Do you truly think that adolescent behavior is going to fly when you graduate – if you ever do – and actually attain a real job, in the real world? No.

Come on girls, please be a better representation of the female population, and don't let your lack of consideration for girls other than yourself or your friends force you to trample over someone while walking to class. It takes two seconds, just step out of the way. I think we all learned that in kindergarten, but some of us must have forgotten.

Nicole Sobel is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at nsobel@student.umass.edu.

This could've been ad space, but we decided that we would be better off using it to tell you

ed/opaipyto

LION DANCING @ UMASS

The Vietnamese Student Association will bring lion dancing, a dance that is usually performed at traditional festivals, to campus this Saturday, Feb. 21, at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

PG. 10

Coffee shops in the spotlight

Downtown stops Rao's and Amherst Coffee offer it up

By Katherine Neubert
Collegian Staff

Looking for a cozy spot to study? Perhaps a tasty cup of joe? Maybe a nice spot to bring that cute girl you've been noticing in your Comm. class every Tuesday and Thursday from 11:15 to 12:20p.m.? As far as coffee shops go in Amherst, Rao's and Amherst Coffee are just the two that have what you're lookin' for.

Upon entering Rao's Coffee, located at 17 Kellogg St., you may feel yourself a little overwhelmed with the busy bodies rushing about. The tables are filled with chess players, cute couples on dates, old friends catching up, and more importantly, those hip young students from the five college area, typing away ferociously on their laptops. What ever could they be working on? They've only been here for five hours already, and have since ordered one large skinny iced chai (with light ice), a raspberry and lime Italian soda, and a sesame bagel toasted with cream cheese.

University of Massachusetts senior Amy Kent says in an average week she visits Rao's coffee once,, usually to get her homework done.

"I like that it has a lot of bathrooms, and the level of noise is OK to concentrate," Kent commented-said. Her drink of choice is a café mocha.

Not into the mocha flavored coffee drinks? No worries there; Rao's has a unique menu with about 20 different options for coffee lovers. And if you're not much of a coffee aficionado, Rao's also offers one extensive menu on different teas and another for food, serving Belgian waffles,, wraps,, pastries made in house, paninis, and more. They've got a nifty mix and match option for soups, salads and wraps as well.

Mount Holyoke alumna Aubrey Schomer says that she enjoys the atmosphere at Rao's, and went there a lot when she was a student.

"You can stay for as long as you want and no one will get on your ass about it," said Schomer.

Behind the counter, about four to five employees help to keep the constant flow of coffee goers at bay. Low, mellow music permeates the cafe. The baristas dress casually – no aprons, no hats, no dress code. The splotchy, marble-like yellow painted walls serve as a temporal location for local artists'' work. At certain times of the day, what seems like a stampede can be heard from above. "Jumanji" didn't just move in, that's just Amherst Yoga Center upstairs.

KATHERINE NEUBERT/COLLEGIAN

Amherst Coffee offers a less crowded and quainter atmosphere than most caffeine pedlars in town.

KATHERINE NEUBERT/COLLEGIAN

Downtown Amherst is home to several coffee houses, including popular spots Rao's and Amherst Coffee.

If that's not your style and you're looking for a less crowded, quainter setting to enjoy your caffeine jolt, try Amherst Coffee, down the street and around the corner from Rao's at 28 Amity St.

Amherst Coffee is a tad smaller, offering only one large room as compared to two rooms at Rao's, but their super high ceilings and very large windows make up for it. Not to mention that they have a bar that sells alcohol. Wait what? Aren't we talking about a coffee shop?

You can usually find UMass sophomore Martie McGowan there throughout the week. She is an employee there and yet says she still comes in on her days off to tackle some homework.

"I come here for the free coffee and aesthetic atmosphere," she said. "It's close to my house."

McGowan is a tea lover, and knows almost all of the people in there "the regulars."

The environment is peaceful and quiet, with large wooden tables, counter space at the bar and deep red brick walls. Their menu ios concise, with only about nine options and they only accept cash. Amherst baristas dress in dark, collared, button- down shirts that look freshly ironed.

UMass graduate student Matt Gifford says he can be found in Amherst Coffee about five times a week. He won't go anywhere else for his espresso.

"They have the best espresso in the area, and there is always a place to sit," Gifford says. He comes here primarily to do homework, much like a majoritymost of their customers.

The crowd seems slightly older than Rao's. Many strangers share the same space at the communical dining table in the center of the room. There is also a cushioned couch-like window seat,, if you're lucky enough to snag it. Jazz is the music of choice at Amherst Coffee;, the vibe is bit more refined, if you will.

While the ambience and style of these two java huts vary greatlydiffer, both are a great place to sit down and get to work.

Katherine Neubert can be reached at kneubert@student.umass.edu.

the source

PLANNING YOUR WEEKEND SO YOU DON'T HAVE TO.

SATURDAY

KAISERCARTEL

NEW YORK DUO COURTNEY KAISER & BENJAMIN CARTEL (KNOWN SIMPLY AS KAISERCARTEL) WILL PERFORM SATURDAY AT NORTHAMPTON'S IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL. THIS YEAR THEY RELEASED THEIR DEBUT ALBUM 'MARCH FORTH.'

VENUE: IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
DOORS: 10:00 PM
PRICE: A: $8.00 - D: $10.00

SUNDAY

MARTIN HAYES

INTERNATIONAL FIDDLE-PLAYER MARTIN HAYES WILL COLLABORATE WITH CHICAGO-BASED GUITARIST DENNIS CAHILL. THE DUO IS SURE TO APPEAL TO FOLK AND BLUES/JAZZ FANS ALIKE.

VENUE: IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
DOORS: 7:00 PM
PRICE: A: $17.50 - D: $20.00

Food For Thought to rant on 'Issues!'

COURTESY FACEBOOK

Food for Thought Books will host a rant workshop and open mic this Saturday beginning at 7 p.m. facilitated by active members of the We Got Issues! Institute. This will be the non-profit bookstore's third year hosting an event with the Institute.

By Isaac Simon
Collegian Correspondent

Writers and performance artists alike are invited this Saturday to a rant workshop and open mic at Food for Thought Books, hosted and facilitated by active members of the We Got Issues! Institute.

Jlove Calderon and Adeeba Rana will begin the event with a workshop on writing rants in the style of the We Got Issues! Institute. Following this will be an open mic to exhibit the results of the work shopping. Kibibi Dillon will facilitate and host it.

According to Tanya Karakashian, an employee of Food for Thought Books and the coordinator of the event, the event is intended to be an "intergenerational event."

"[The event will] help [women of all ages] inspire their voices as writers and performers about issues that are important to them," she said.

Because there is a wide demographic of women, said Karakashian, the "event is always relevant." The event, as well as the institute, hopes to show the intersectionality of race, class, and gender, in addition to working to empower women.

According to Karakashian, this event reflects the store's mission to give a voice to those whose voices are otherwise silenced from mainstream media. Traditionally, writers such as Calderon have been subject to this, and have "matched personal narrative with systemic oppression," said Karakashian.

Creator and co-producer of the We Got Issues! National Arts and Civic Engagement Tour and the We Got Issues! Leadership Institute for Young Women, JLove Calderon is an advocate for feminine-focused leadership. Her online biography describes her as "an author, educator, and activist who is dedicated to the struggle for human rights, the positive proliferation of youth and Hip-Hop culture, and the liberation of all people's bodies, minds, spirits and communities." She has also written two books, "We Got Issues!," published under Inner Ocean in 2006, and "That White Girl," from Atria in 2007.

According to Karakashian, Calderon has come to the bookstore before for poetry readings, and the store stocks both of her books, as well as other publications from the We Got Issues! Institute.

22-year-old Adeeba Afshan Rana, currently a student at the University of Massachusetts Amherst, explains herself as a "South Asian-American poetic activista with a lot on her mind." An avid supporter of social justice groups and an inspiration of voice in young people, Rana wonthe We Got Issues! Hottest rant contest in 2004 at the Apollo Theater.

Kibibi Dillon, a performer who has shared the stage with the Adults Playground Improv troupe and the Saturday Night Re-written sketch comedy troupe, is another member of the We Got Issues! Institute. She co-founded the LAUNCH World Wide production company and directed Jabrai Exum and Baye Harrell's "Read, White and Blue" at the Hip-Hop Theater Festival in 2007.

According to their website, wegotissues.org, the We Got Issues! Leadership Institute is a New York City-based arts and civil engagement project of the organization 1+1+1=One. Artists and activists working in this group, which also houses the The Hip Hop Mental Health Project and Eradicating Racism, are engaged in positively affecting social change and empowering people as individuals and a community.

"It's always inspirational to have them come," said Karakashian. This will be the store's third year hosting an event with the institute.

"I'm hoping it will be a really interactive event," she said. Food for Thought events draw a diverse, academic crowd; "We're excited to have younger folks who are growing up in this community," said Karakashian.

Co-sponsoring the event are The Women of Color Leadership Network, The Everywoman's Center, the Graduate School at UMass Amherst and Video Vanguards' Youth Action Coalition.

The writing workshop and open mic begin at 7 p.m. on Saturday, Feb. 21, with a reception. All portions of the event are free and open to students and the public.

Isaac Simon can be reached at Isimon@student.umass.edu.

Saturday's event is part of the We Got Issues! Civic Engagement Tour.

NEED EXPERIENCE?
Write For
The Daily Collegian
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT
Visit the Collegian Office
located in the Campus Center basement

Eating Disorder Treatment
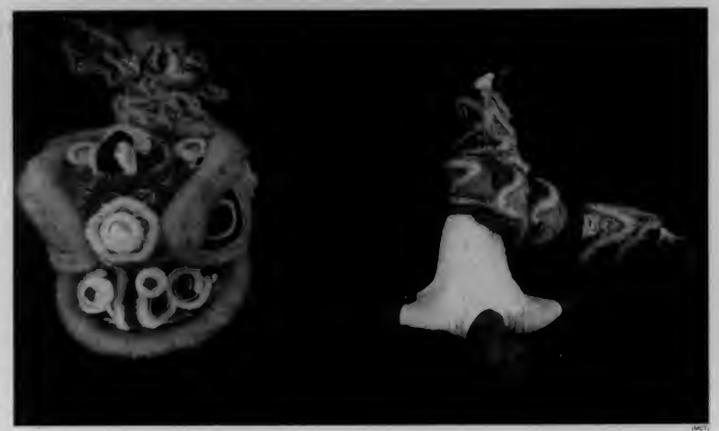
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa



Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Dancing & lions

Event set to include wide variety of acts

By Michelle Fredette
Collegian Staff

(MCT)

Lion dancing is a traditional of Vietnamese cultural ritual. Each dancer wears shaggy pants to act as the lion's legs; one dancer holds the heavy lion head while the other holds up the back end.

Most of us associate lion dancing with Chinese culture, expecting to see the fuzzy lion heads bobbing around in parades celebrating Chinese New Year.

However, lion dancing is also an integral part of Vietnamese culture, and has developed its own style in Vietnam.

The dance is often confused with dragon dancing, in which many dancers – often as many as 12 – hold up a cloth dragon with poles and wave it about.

In lion dancing, there are only two dancers, and they hold the lion costume up with their bodies instead of poles. Each dancer wears shaggy pants to act as the lion's legs; one dancer holds the heavy lion head while the other holds up the back end.

The lion dance was thought to ward off evil spirits.

Although the dance is usually performed at traditional festivals, including the festival of the Lunar new year and the Mid-Autumn Festival, the Vietnamese Student Association (VSA) will be lion dancing this Saturday, Feb. 21, in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

The VSA at the University of Massachusetts says, "We are a non-profit organization run by students for the students." The groups tries to live up to this statement by offering free events that celebrate Vietnamese culture for students across the UMass campus, whether they are Vietnamese or not.

The group's most recent offer is "Spring of Heritage," a celebration of Vietnamese culture that will include not only lion dancing, but also singing, skits and more.

The mixed styles of performance fit with the VSA's mission statement. It states, "The VSA aims to reflect the diverse, vibrant, and dynamic Vietnamese population on campus. ... The Vietnamese culture is promoted and examined through ... performing arts such as dancing, skits, martial art, while encouraging a multicultural medium."

The diversity in performance style that will be on display this Saturday reflects the diversity of the Vietnamese population.

Although the group is student-run, it has gone to great lengths to make the event special. It has managed to get the two most recent winners of Miss Vietnam Global to take part in the event: Donna Vo (Miss Vietnam Global 2008) and Jennifer Le (Miss Vietnam Global 2007).

According to the Miss Vietnam Global website, "The mission of Miss Vietnam Global is to welcome all beautiful and talented Vietnamese women from around the world and help them find what they were born to do by identifying and strengthening their knowledge, skills, talents, and abilities.

Indeed, this is a prestigious opportunity to a mind-broadening experience that welcomes all to learn breath-taking traditions and cultures embedded in the country and people of Vietnam, grow, and become a positive role model."

Both Vo and Le are from the U.S. Vo is a student from Anaheim, Calif., while Le hails from Washington. The two women will be taking part in "Spring of Heritage" to celebrate and teach others about Vietnamese culture.

The event will also feature Vinh Hua, a Vietnamese-American spoken word artist.

Hua is originally from Boston but now lives in New York City. According to his website, "Dorchester taught him [Hau] that love is love, loyalty is loyalty and there's beauty in even the ugliest situations. And of course how to run really really fast on short legs."

Hua is the Massachusetts Poetryoutloud Slam Champion and has performed in several large venues, including Madison Square Garden and Washington, D.C.'s Lincoln Theater.

With these different acts and types of performance, the VSA hopes to create an experience that delves into many facets of Vietnamese culture.

The Vietnamese Student Association's "Spring of Heritage" will be held at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall on Saturday, Feb. 21 from 7:30 p.m. to 10:30 p.m. Admission is free.

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredett@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY VINH HUA.COM

Vinh Hua, a Vietnamese-American spoken word artist originally from Boston, is one of several performers set to feature at the VSA's "Spring of Heritage."

(MCT)

Miss Vietnam Global 2008 Donna Vo will make an appearance at Saturday's event. Miss Vietnam Global 2007 Jennifer Le is also schedule to appear.

Four Top 10 teams on tap for UMass

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Third baseman Whitney Mollica led UMass offensively two weekends ago en route to a 4-1 start. The Minutewomen will face four Top 10 teams this weekend at the Cathedral City Classic.

The goal is the College World Series.

And this weekend's play by the Massachusetts softball team could show how likely accomplishing that goal is.

The No. 15 Minutewomen (4-1) will play the toughest stretch of their schedule when they face four Top 10 teams over the weekend in the Cathedral City Classic.

UMass last played two weeks ago when they finished off the FAU "Kickoff" Classic with an upset over then-No. 5 Michigan. The Minutewomen hope to carry that momentum into this weekend.

"It is the kind of competition we'd be looking at in a super regional or regional," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "It's like NCAA tournament time and they are prepared and have worked very hard to make adjustments since our first trip and I think they know what they can expect."

The weekend will start with what, according to the rankings, would be the easiest game for UMass when it opens up against North Carolina State at 1 p.m. on Friday. The Wolfpack are the only unranked opponent for the Minutewomen this weekend but are a team capable of an upset. NC State (3-1) opened its season with an upset over then-No. 7 Oklahoma.

The Wolfpack possess a potent offensive lineup that hit three home runs in their first three games of the season, but have a shaky defense. NC State has committed eight errors so far this season, including three against then-No. 14 Houston that led to five unearned runs in its 9-3 loss back on Feb. 14.

Immediately after facing NC State, UMass will take on No. 10 Tennessee at 3:30 p.m. The Volunteers (9-1) come into the tournament riding a seven-game winning streak and will face Loyola Marymount before squaring off with the Minutewomen on Friday. The lone loss suffered by Tennessee came at the hands of undefeated No. 3 Washington.

The Volunteers are another squad loaded with offensive firepower. As a team, they average over six runs per game, hit for a .326 average and have a .486 slugging percentage with eight home runs. Sophomore Tiffany Huff leads the offense with her .786 slugging percentage and 21 RBIs and is second on the team with a .464 batting average.

Saturday will only see one game from the Minutewomen as they square off against No. 6 UCLA at 8:30 p.m. The Bruins (8-2) fell last weekend to the same Michigan team that UMass upset at the beginning of the month.

The final day of the Cathedral City Classic, Sunday, will pose the biggest challenge on the diamond for the Minutewomen. First, UMass will play No. 4 Oklahoma (8-2) at 11 a.m., a team that has won its last four games. Following Oklahoma, the Minutewomen will play the defending national champions, No. 7 Arizona State (11-1).

While UMass' schedule appears to be enough of a problem for the team, Sortino is more worried about other things.

"I'm a little concerned about the turnaround time and the flight time," Sortino said. "Just getting our legs underneath us Friday and be able to be quick and explosive. It is going to be physically very challenging for us."

The Minutewomen had a long day of travel on Thursday to get to California. After waking up at 3 a.m. and leaving Amherst at 4 a.m., UMass departed Boston for Denver. They arrived in the Mile High City around 1 p.m. and then had to board another plane to arrive in California around 4 p.m. They had to bus another hour-and-a-half before arriving at their final destination.

Despite the travel and the tough competition, this weekend will prepare the Minutewomen for the postseason and with a couple of wins could help their seeding come the NCAA tournament.

"They just have to get out there and believe in what [they're] doing and that [they've] done the right things then we'll be a good team and be up to the challenge."

Jeffery R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

Teams set for A–10 Champ.

By Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano
Collegian Correspondent

This weekend in Kingston, R.I, the top men and women athletes from the Atlantic 10 will race, throw and jump for conference supremacy.

For members of the UMass men's and women's track teams, this weekend's A-10 Championship marks the first of three championship events to conclude what has been a promising season for both teams.

The event will kick off Friday at the University of Rhode Island's Mackal Field House and will carry over to Saturday morning when the champions are crowned at the medal ceremony. Both teams will look to upset the Charlotte 49ers, who flew past the competition in last year's championship to take the conference title.

The Minutemen are coming off one their best performances of the season at the Boston University Valentine Invitational last weekend. Men's coach Ken O'Brien thought there was solid effort across the board and hopes the meet will serve as a sparkplug for the team going into this weekend.

Freshman Phillip Weltman earned A-10 Rookie of the Week honors after posting the second-fastest 400 time in UMass history (48.45). Senior Pete Fortunato earned A-10 Performer of the Week accolades after finishing in 15th place out of 177 runners with a time of 4:11.48.

Last year, the Minutemen found themselves in the middle of the pack, placing fifth out of 12 teams in the conference. The top individual performance came from Brian Miller, who placed second in high jump with a height of 6-06.25. Miller, now a junior, will vie for the title this year in an event in which the Minutemen hope to pick up points. Nicolai Naranjo placed fourth in the 5,000 meter race last year with a time of 14:42.27 and should provide added stability to a strong distance team for the Minutemen.

The women's team hopes to fare better than their seventh-place finish last season in which they had strong individual performances but lacked consistency.

The top performance and lone first-place finish from either team came from Kristen Bakanowski in the pole vault competition. It was the third career gold for Bakanowski who figures to be among the favorites to win this year's competition. Gina Perno also scored points for the Minutewomen with a third-place finish in the 1000 meter run (2:56.69).

Both Perno and Bakanowski will compete in the distance medley team that took fourth in last year's conference championship. The women's team will look to prevent Charlotte from winning their record-breaking fourth-straight title.

This year marks the first time that the A-10 is testing out the two-day format for the meet rather than the usual single-day layout. Sophomore distance runner Scott VanderMolen believes the new format will benefit the outnumbered Minutemen.

"Since we have less guys, we have to put a lot of our athletes in double, triple events, and that can be brutal in single day," VanderMolen said. "So the two-day format should give us some rest."

VanderMolen will compete in the 1000 meter and distance medley races for UMass. After the conference championships this weekend, qualified athletes will go on to compete in New England and ICAA Regional events.

Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano can be reached at steinber@student.umass.edu.

Long road trip begins

By Jay Asser
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team will have to get comfortable being away from Amherst the next two weeks as all seven of its matchups are on the road.

Away from home, UMass coach Judy Dixon knows her team is in for a difficult stretch of matches.

"We play multiple road matches on weekends and during the week. It makes for a very difficult schedule, but our players knew this coming in," Dixon said.

Yet Dixon knows that there is one cure that can alleviate her team of road woes.

"When you have a bad patch of losses, then the long trips seem that much longer, but if you get good results, you can play through any difficulty," Dixon said.

First on the schedule for the Minutewomen is the Syracuse Tournament this weekend.

On Friday, UMass (4-1) will be matched up with a formidable Syracuse squad, which has won its first six matches of the season.

The Minutewomen will have little time to rest as they play Iowa State (2-2) early in the morning the very next day. Dixon, however, is confident her team will be unfazed by the quick turnaround in matches.

"We are going to be tired and beaten up, but our players will focus on what's at hand," Dixon said.

Before the Boston College match was postponed Wednesday, UMass played previously unbeaten Albany (8-1) on Sunday. The Minutewomen handed the Great Danes their first loss of the season, winning 5-2.

Syracuse, meanwhile, has not played since hosting Buffalo (1-3) on Friday. The Orange won decisively, coming out on top in two of three doubles and four of six singles matches to defeat the Bulls, 5-2.

The Orange are unlike any other team UMass has played this season. Syracuse's coach, Luke Jensen, implements a different style of coaching which Dixon knows all too well.

"With Syracuse, you have to get beyond the emotions of the match and the extraneous factors. Luke Jensen has a lot of team rules such as having his players give push-ups after every fault on a serve," Dixon said. "They are not all-wed to sit down on changeovers, they have to run to get every ball between points and they really cheer on their players."

Dixon feels that to have a chance of coming out with a victory, the Minutewomen will have to withstand the distractions the Orange want opponents to fixate on.

"If we get caught up in the extra factors, which is what Syracuse wants, then we're going to be in for a difficult match," Dixon said.

Whereas UMass is accustomed to Syracuse, it will be matching up with an unfamiliar Iowa State team for the first time in school history.

After beginning the season 2-0, Iowa State has struggled of late, dropping its last two matches.

This weekend, there will be changes coming for UMass in the starting lineup. Maude Lechyse, normally playing No. 3 singles, will be at the No. 4 singles spot against Syracuse, pushing Kaitlyn Carpenter to the No. 3 position. Against Iowa State, Lechyse will be moved further down to No. 5, giving Tanisha Hodgson an opportunity at No. 4. The rearrangement in the lineup is strictly to get the best matchups possible, Dixon said.

For the first time this year, Dixon feels that the squad has its full assortment of players.

"We haven't had our full roster playing yet this season," Dixon said. "This weekend, we can play all of our players at their proper positions and I'm excited to see how our team performs."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEPPER/COLLEGIAN

Tim Ballse scored three goals and assisted on two others in a 15-6 season-opening win over Sacred Heart last weekend. UMass takes on No. 14 Hofstra in a big road test Saturday.

BRIAN TEPPER/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Jackie Lyons and the Minutewomen lost a tough game to Holy Cross in the season opener. Things don't get easier for UMass, which faces No. 6 Maryland Saturday.

Minutemen, Pride renew rivalry in '09

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

Goalkeeper Doc Schneider and the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team face a big challenge this Saturday against rival Hofstra's talented and deep offensive attack.

UMass travels to No. 14 Hofstra this weekend, looking to build off of a strong 15-6 season-opening victory over Sacred Heart. For the Pride, it's the first game of the season, while it will be the Minutemen's second overall and first road game.

"They'll probably know more about us than we will about them," UMass coach Greg Cannella said before practice on Thursday. "They'll be fired up coming out of the gates. It's a seasoned veteran team they have so I don't think we'll have an advantage in that regard."

Last season, UMass hosted Hofstra in both teams' season openers. The Minutemen beat the Pride, 8-4 behind a stellar performance from Schneider (19 saves) and the rest of the defense. The UMass and Hofstra rivalry is well known throughout collegiate lacrosse – the teams have played once every season since 1992 and the rivalry will grow next season when UMass leaves the Eastern College Athletic Conference to join Hofstra in the Colonial Athletic Association.

UMass leads the all-time series against Hofstra 18-15, including taking seven of the last eight meetings. In the Minutemen's run to the NCAA National Championship game in 2006, they played Hofstra in the NCAA quarterfinal game. UMass was down five goals late in the fourth quarter and came back to win, 11-10, in overtime to advance to the semifinals.

"Anytime you have a rivalry, in my opinion, you have two really good teams that compete hard every time out and that's what creates that," Cannella said. "Obviously we play every year and we played in the NCAA tournament a few times, three times in my tenure. The more and more you play the more the rivalry grows because you are so familiar with the other school."

The Minutemen are coming off a successful season opener in their 15-6 win over Sacred Heart on Feb. 14. The Minutemen's offense had a strong showing – six players scored at least two goals in the win.

"You can always finish the ball a little bit better," Cannella said when looking back on the win. "We still shot under 30 percent even though we scored 15 goals. It's hard to complain, but we took 51 shots and we took a lot of shots that missed the cage or the goalie made decent saves. You always want to shoot at a higher percentage."

Hofstra is known for its strong offense. In the 2008 season, five players had more than 20 goals.

"They've got some middies that can really take it to the rack," Cannella said. "Their attack has two great scorers in [Tom] Dooley and [Jay] Card. [Dan] Stein is also a guy that handles the ball a little bit more."

To hold off the Pride's offense UMass will have to play as a group defensively to support Schneider.

"That's really going to be our focus, you can't just say you're going to stop this one guy because there is a bunch of them that can really hurt you," Cannella said.

The Minutemen hope to improve on last weekend's game against Sacred Heart by finishing better, making precise clears and playing better defense.

"We'd like to clear it a little bit better. Hofstra is going to bring a little bit of pressure to us, so we are going to want to try and clear it the best that we can," Cannella said. "And not give a team like Hofstra the second-chance opportunities that we gave to Sacred Heart last week. Hofstra will make us pay for it."

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com.

UMass faces nation's elite

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

There are two ways coaches typically set up an out-of-conference schedule.

The first is to start off facing several weaker teams in order to build a team's confidence. The other style, the one Massachusetts women's lacrosse coach Alexis Venechanos subscribes to, is to make the schedule as brutal as possible to make the players tougher.

The Minutewomen (0-1) will be up against one of the best teams in the country when they hit the road to face No. 6 Maryland this Saturday.

"We are excited to play a strong team like Maryland. Year in, year out they are one of the top teams in the country and we are looking forward to the challenge," Venechanos said.

Venechanos knows that better than most. She spent four years on the Terrapins as a goalkeeper and won two national championships including a 23-0 season in 2001, when she was the starting goalkeeper. Maryland has appeared in 20 consecutive NCAA Tournaments.

UMass knows that its defense, led by senior Jackie Rosenzweig, will have to carry the team against a powerful Maryland (1-0) offense that defeated Richmond, 17-6, in its opening game.

"I compare [the Terrapins] to a basketball team where everyone is looking to dunk," Venechanos said. "They have a lot of dodgers, they love to score goals and we're going to try to slow them down as best as we can."

Midfielders Amanda Spinnenweber and Caitlyn McFadden will be two of the Terrapins the UMass defense will have to focus on. Spinnenweber scored 18 goals and had three assists last year, while McFadden had 27 goals and 27 assists for a total of 54 points.

If the Terrapins are able to get past the Minutewomen's defense, it will be up to freshman goalkeeper Katie "Flo" Florence to make the stop. It is not an ideal situation to have a goalkeeper playing her second collegiate game against the No. 6 team in the nation, but Venechanos felt that Florence played well in her debut and has shown more leadership than most freshmen.

"Flo has been a tremendous contributor, she had a great first game, she kept us in the first half and we just want our goalie to put us in a situation where we can win the game," Venechanos said.

When the Minutewomen have the ball, they will try to implement a few new methods of attacking that they have spent the preseason working on. Last season, Kaytlin McCormick and Kathleen Typadis were the primary scorers for UMass. Neither player is on the team this year, so the Minutewomen will try to use a more balanced attack.

Previously unseen tactics such as playing behind the net and switching midfielders with attackers have forced the returning Minutewomen to have to learn a new system. Venechanos feels this will benefit the team in the long run as the variety of styles will make it harder to scout UMass.

The transition will be eased by the fact that UMass has 15 freshmen on the team who will not have to "unlearn" the older style of play.

"I think everyone right now is like lump of clay. Sometimes freshmen are the most moldable because they don't have bad habits, we are just trying to mold them into our new style of play," Venechanos said.

A major issue that appeared in UMass' first game against Holy Cross was losing draws. The Crusaders had a 14-6 advantage on the draw, which put the UMass defense on its heels throughout the game. The Minutewomen hope it was an aberration and not the beginning of a trend.

"I think we had an off day against Holy Cross, we had a rough time with draws, but we've been working on it and we're a tough team," midfielder Jackie Lyons said.

Venechanos has had the team spend extra time in practice working on draws to prevent a reoccurrence against the Terrapins.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

UMass, SJU ready for battle at Palestra

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

The better the opponent, the bigger the venue – the better the Massachusetts men's basketball team seems to play.

In that case, the Minutemen should like their chances Sunday when they take on Ahmad Nivins and Saint Joseph's at the famed Palestra in Philadelphia, Pa.

The struggling Minutemen (9-15, 4-7 Atlantic 10) sit in a tie for 10th place in the conference, but have beaten Dayton, Temple and Kansas and almost topped then- No. 10 Xavier this season. The win over then- No. 25 Kansas came at the Sprint Center. Last year, the Minutemen won two games at the Carrier Dome and one at Madison Square Garden.

The greater the game's magnitude, the better the results are for UMass. The Minutemen hope that trend will continue this weekend against the Hawks – a team they lost to in a heartbreaker, 68-64, on Feb. 8 at the Mullins Center earlier this season.

"They beat us at home, so it will obviously be a little tougher on the road," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said before Thursday's practice. "[Nivins] is tough; I think he's the best player in the conference. Luke Bonner did a good job defensively against him and everybody on the team helped out and he still got 21 points and 11 rebounds."

Both teams enter Sunday's game after disappointing losses on Wednesday. The Hawks (14-11, 7-4 A-10) dropped their third game in a row – all decided by seven points or less – against Saint Louis in a hard-fought 73-71 decision. The Minutemen dropped yet another close game in the final minutes, faltering down the stretch in a 71-59 loss to Rhode Island. UMass, which led by as many as 12 points, was tied with the Rams with under three minutes to play.

"I think it's as much mental with our team as physical," Kellogg said. "We've been pretty much in the game, ahead in the game or a bit behind in the last three minutes of every [conference game]. I'm hopeful that down in the stretch run we're going to pull a few of these games out."

With a 9-15 record, UMass has a lot of work to do if it wants to play in a postseason tournament. To be eligible to receive a bid to the National Invitation Tournament – which UMass has been to each of the last two seasons – the Minutemen have to get their record to at least .500.

To do that, UMass would have to win seven of its next eight games – with at least two coming in the Atlantic 10 Tournament and only five regular season games left on the schedule. UMass has lost its first game in the A-10 Tournament for six consecutive seasons.

To make the NCAA Tournament for the first time since the 1997-98 season, the Minutemen would have to win four games to capture the A-10 title for the automatic bid.

But first UMass needs to get on the right track, having lost three of its last four games and all but two of its last eight.

"I think right now I'm really worried about our team to make sure that we continue to play the way we've been playing for 35-37 minutes," Kellogg said, referring to his team's last-minute struggles. "I think the difference comes now at the end of the game to make sure we get good shots and lock up defensively."

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

UMass guard Ricky Harris struggled from the field in a 71-59 loss to Rhode Island Wednesday night. The Minutemen hope to regroup this weekend against Saint Joseph's.

The Minutemen did a solid job defensively in this year's previous meeting, holding the Hawks to under 70 points. But UMass had trouble on offense, shooting 38.1 percent from the floor and 33 percent (9-for-27) from 3-point range. Anthony Gurley and Ricky Harris each had 18 as the only Minutemen in double figures.

Point guard Chris Lowe, who needs just one more assist to set the all-time school record with 634, had nine assists against the Hawks, but shot just 3-for-13 from the field.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenw@dailycollegian.com.

Minutewomen look to end A–10 slide against URI

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The phrase "the stats don't lie" is as cliché a phrase as they come, but sometimes there's nothing else to be said.

Rhode Island (9-17, 2-9 Atlantic 10) is on a six-game losing streak and the team shows up at the bottom of the conference in most statistical categories. Individually, players aren't even so much as shown on the A-10 list in major statistical categories except for steals and rebounds.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team (10-16, 3-8 A-10) will host a Rams team that is 1-4 when facing conference opponents on the road.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Teya Wright, left, and the Minutewomen take on Rhode Island Sunday afternoon at the Mullins Center. UMass has dropped eight of its last 10 games in the Atlantic 10 this season.

The last time the two teams met, on Feb. 3, the Minutewomen earned a decisive 70-53 victory led by guard Sakera Young's 22 points. Sophomore forward Teya Wright backed up Young with 16 points and nine rebounds. Young's four steals led all UMass players, in one of her best games of the season.

The Minutewomen locked down Rhode Island's best scorer, Sierra Cooper, to the tune of six points, while she normally averages 11. Megan Shoniker, whose 10.5 points per game this season gives the Rams their only other double-digit scorer, had 14 points, including three scores from 3-point range.

The parallels between the two teams were striking – both sides had 19 turnovers, eight steals and each team's leading scorer had five turnovers and four steals.

Since that game, Young has been on a tear for UMass, averaging at least 10 points per game in all but one contest. Her production comes at a key time when the scoring from the guard position is crucial to the Minutewomen's success.

Young's emergence as a scoring threat gives UMass coach Marnie Dacko a fourth scoring option behind guard Stefanie Gerardot and forwards Kristina Danella and Wright.

Young is particularly important to Dacko's game plan because the Minutewomen run the dribble-drive motion offense and Gerardot has been the only consistent slasher for UMass. Gerardot is averaging 15.4 points per game and most of her points come from off-balance shots that result from her penetrating the defense and driving to the basket.

She does a great job of holding the ball until just before opposing defenses collapse upon her before she heaves up an under-handed layup that has deadly accuracy. She is also a dual-threat because of her 3-point shooting. Her 43 scores from beyond-the-arc are third on the team behind forward Cerie Mosgrove (45) and Danella (44).

Rhode Island is giving up a conference-worst 36 percent of opponents' shots from 3-point range and Gerardot, Mosgrove and Danella could have similar success. The outside game is as crucial to the dribble-drive as the inside. If the slasher can't penetrate and get past the defense inside then outside shooters should have an open look for a 3-pointer.

The Rams aren't doing well at getting their own 3-point shots to fall, either. Their 77 3-pointers are also a conference-worst.

With its inability to hit the outside shot and the lack of production from its bigger players the three leading scorers for the Rams are all under 6-foot-tall – the Minutewomen should look to pick apart the smaller Rhode Island team in many areas of the game.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

comics

JORNALISM AT ITS FINEST

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Survey Takers Needed: Make $5 - $25 per survey. Do it in your spare time. www.GetPaidToThink.com

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lake-front cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, lifeguarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders, & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.camp-mataponi.com

ANNOUNCMENT

Worship at Dwight Chapel on Sunday mornings at 9 or 11. For rides and information please call us at 256-8059 or visit www.dwightchapel.org

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblow-out.com, Montrealex-press.net. 781-979-9001/ 781-979-0076

ANNOUNCMENT

Spring Break 09
TRAVEL FREE
LOW LOW PRICES!!
WE HAVE IT ALL...
Sun Splash
BOOK NOW!!
1800-426-7710
www.sunsplashtours.com

FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for HUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstrealty com 253-7879/ 781-979-0076

Amherst 2, 3, & 4 Bedroom Apartments. Call for huge rent specials on both Immediate and Summer/ Fall rentals! Beautiful property on the bus line to Umass. Air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Free Heat! 2 BR $1200-$1250, 3 BR $1500-$1550, 4 BR $2250. www.MillValleyApts.com 413-253-7377 or stop by at 420 Riverglade Drive.

ACROSS
1 Bivouac beds
5 Gather
10 Elevator man?
14 On the apex of 15 Maui neighbor
16 Climatic region
17 Mets stadium
18 Gain time
19 Killer whale
20 Sawbuck
22 Agassi's game
24 Peruvian beast
25 Superlative suffix
28 Peachy!
29 Actor Wallach
30 "Sussudio" singer Phil
33 Bear's lair
34 Metal mender
36 John's Yoko
37 Puts down grass
38 Resourceful
41 Highland honey
44 Old gumshoe
45 Most recent
49 Knack
50 Scolds
52 Prevaricate
53 Old hat
55 Refrain syllable
58 Diver's acronym
59 Make a formal retraction
60 Votes for
62 Acorns, later on
63 Japanese port
66 Desperate
67 Champagne description
68 Acquire fresh vigor
69 Wicked
70 Catch sight of 71 Shifters
72 Bodies of water

DOWN
1 Fortified homes
2 He who "loved not wisely, but too well"
3 Pedicurist's target
4 Burst of energy
5 As well
6 Hasbro rival
7 Saints ___ winds
8 "My Gal ___"
9 Riverbed deposit
10 Ultraviolet filter
11 Circular wind
12 Provoked
13 Annual periods
21 Evidenced anxiety
23 Consonants in neon
26 Toy racer
27 Singer Turner
31 Give an address
32 Lordly
35 German article
37 Fixed
39 Chipper
40 Cowboy's rope
41 Battersea cathedral
42 Overdue debts
43 Armed robbery
46 Hard to describe
47 Place of Russian exile
48 Nap-making devices
50 Big London bell
51 Gridiron takedown
54 Delectable
57 Secret messages
59 Lacerated
61 "Airplane!" star Robert
64 ___ Paulo, Brazil
65 Molinaro and Michaels architect

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

www.dailycollegian.com

Continuing & UMassAmherst Outreach Professional Education

THINK AHEAD

Two 6-week summer sessions

Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net

Registration begins March 9

SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

follow the breadcrumbs

send in your comics to

COMICS @ DAILY COLLEGIAN DOT COM

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

CAUTION:

ENTERING REDUCED THOUGHT AREA

SOME NEVER RETURN

holla.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | 2 | | | | 7 | 1 |
| | | 6 | | | | | | 8 |
| | 2 | | | 1 | | 3 | 4 | |
| 2 | | | | 4 | 3 | 6 | | |
| | | | 9 | | 1 | | | |
| | | 3 | 8 | 6 | | | | 7 |
| | 7 | 5 | | 8 | | | 6 | |
| 4 | | | | | | 9 | | |
| 1 | 9 | | | | 4 | | | |

QUOTE OF THE WEEKEND

> I believe that professional wrestling is clean and everything else in the world is fixed.
>
> — Frank Deford

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Ask your landlord if he will accept "alternative" payments this month.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
That log in the toilet is a very detailed log of what you have eaten over the past 24 hours.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
When entering Barstow, watch out for the bats.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Turn that old recorder from third grade music class into a trendy new bong!

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Today your pubic hair will become infested with a nasty strain of Alaskan King Crabs.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Fall of the American Empire, Reason #98: More Denny's per capita than any developed nation, by far.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Where is global warming when we need it, dammit?!

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The economic depression will soon lead you to actual depression. Time for an alcoholic stimulus package.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You possess cat-like instincts, including the inclination to lick yourself constantly, and poop in a sandbox.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Traverse the less known: Go lefty tonight!

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
No one wants to listen to your podcast of the Verizon yellow pages.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
It's amazing that Obama can find time to sign bills, since he's been signing so many breasts.

LABRAT By Richard Martell

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 32 LOW: 16 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2009

Library plays host to center

Program to look more closely at life, work of namesake

By Jessica Kemp
Collegian Staff

Every day, thousands of students, faculty and staff walk by the W.E.B. Du Bois Library. Though it is the largest structure at the University of Massachusetts, as well as the largest academic library in the country, the real meaning behind the library typically goes unnoticed; W.E.B. Du Bois himself.

William Edward Burghardt Du Bois, a historian, sociologist, racial scholar and founder of many human rights organizations, including the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People (NAACP), fought for equality and social justice during a crucial period in U.S history.

With hopes of giving Du Bois more recognition, the UMass Faculty Senate voted on Feb. 13 to create the W.E.B. Du Bois Center to promote public engagement on issues of racial and social justice.

The intellectual center will primarily be associated with the Special Collections and University Archives Department on the 25th floor, and will bring together some of the assets here at UMass including papers of W.E.B. Du Bois, said Jay Schafer, director of libraries.

The main focus of the center will revolve around a fellowship program, consisting of doctoral and postdoctoral students, as well as community activists, the Du Bois home site in Great Barrington, a series of seminars, publications and colloquial and educational initiatives.

Working with faculty, fellows will spend nine months in resi-

See LIBRARY on page 3

Herpes spike reported

Shared cups cited in blame

By Kathryn Foley
Collegian Staff

Beer pong – or to some, Beirut – is no doubt one of the most popular drinking games known on the typical university campus. It is so prevalent that frequently, those interested in playing a round have to sign their name on a "next up" list in order to secure a place on the table. But the champions of the table may be signing up for more than Friday night glory.

For those self-proclaimed "beer pong champs," and for those who get in on the fun less frequently, beware. Studies show the less drunk from those red Solo cups, the better. According to the Center for Disease Control, unprotected

See BEER PONG on page 3

A recent study by the Center for Disease Control cited shared beer pong cups as a major risk in contracting sickness and diseases often transmitted through the swapping of saliva.

H.C. speaks on controversy

By Josh Walovitch
Collegian Staff

It was nationally reported that on Feb. 7, Hampshire College become the first institute of higher education to divest from companies that were involved in the Israeli occupation of Palestine.

In the past weeks, confusion has surrounded that validity of Hampshire College's divestment from the school's assets, which violated the college's standards for social responsibility.

The campus group that wrote the Feb. 7 press release, Students for Justice in Palestine, has worked for over two years in an effort to divest from six specific companies that currently are believed to be involved in the conflict. The companies are Caterpillar, United Technologies, General Electric, ITT Corporation, Motorola and Terex.

In addition to those six companies, another 196 were in the violation of the college's investment guidelines which include unfair labor policies, environmental abuse, military weapons manufacturing and unsafe workplace settings.

A recent statement sent by Hampshire College to the Jerusalem Post has acknowledged that the Students for Justice in Palestine complaint did influence the Board of Trustee's initial review of the college's funds.

"On Feb. 7, 2009, the Hampshire College board of trustees accepted the report of its investment committee, which earlier had voted without reference to any country or political movement, to transfer assets held in a State Street fund to another fund," stated by Sigmund Roos, chair of the Board of Trustees, Ralph Hexter, president and Aaron Berman, vice president and dean of faculty, regarding trustees' actions on college investments.

The review subsequently led to a revision and update of the school's socially responsible investment policy drafted in 1994.

The widespread media coverage has caught the attention of Harvard University law professor and well-known supporter of Israel, Alan M. Dershowitz.

Dershowitz's column in the Jerusalem Post has stirred up controversy because of his attempt to influence donors to divest from Hampshire College. Dershowitz hopes that others will halt their contributions to the college until Hampshire clears up the vagueness that surrounds the situation.

Dershowitz said he will end his efforts once the school issues a statement that it acknowledges students' claims as false and when the school rejects the divestment from Israel.

"Your influence in the public sphere of ideas has the power to cause great harm to our – or, indeed, any – institution's reputation. So our frustration stems from your decision to rely not on the official statements of the board of trustees and from us as individuals, but rather from the press releases of a student group, Students for Justice in Palestine," said President Hexter in a letter to Dershowitz. "Hampshire College has made a strenuous, good-faith effort to explain its decision to exit a problematic mutual fund. We make this effort again, without equivocation: Israel was not the cause for divestment from the State Street fund."

In addition to this campus' attempt to divest from an international conflict, Hampshire College was the first higher education institution to divest from the apartheid South Africa in 1979.

Josh Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu.

Study reveals fruit's sexy effects

By Jessica Kemp
Collegian Staff

A big piece of fresh, juicy watermelon can make the mouth water and cool down a person on a hot summer's day, but according to research, that's not the only value of the fruit.

Eating watermelon delivers Viagra-like effects on blood vessels throughout the body and may even increase libido, said Bhimu Patil, director of the Fruit and Vegetable Improvement Center at Texas A&M University.

One of the major nutrients contained in the fruit is citruline, an ingredient that is abundant in the flesh and rind of the watermelon.

When consumed in large quantities, citruline reacts with the body's enzymes and forms a compound called arginine, an amino acid that benefits the heart along with the immune and circulatory systems.

"Arginine boosts nitric acid, which relaxes blood vessels, the same basic effect that Viagra has to treat erectile dysfunction (ED) and maybe even prevent it," said Patil.

"I knew watermelon was full of nutrients, but I had no idea it acted similarly to Viagra," said Jeremy Burnam, a sophomore Hospitality and Tourism Management major at the University of Massachusetts.

Watermelon may seem like the perfect item to add some spark to a relationship. However, while Viagra is made specifically to treat ED, watermelon is not organ specific, Patil added.

Anyone taking Viagra should not expect to see the same result from watermelon, said Todd Wehner, a researcher in the department of Horticultural Science at North Carolina State University.

"It sounds like an effect that would be interesting but not a substitute for any medical treatment," he said.

Other research suggests that it would take at least six full cups of

See WATERMELON on page 3

UMass snaps losing streak

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — Same story, different ending.

And what a storybook finish it was for the Massachusetts men's basketball team – in what had to be some of the loudest final two seconds in the storied 82-year history of the Palestra, known as the "Cathedral of College Basketball."

As 6,522 hostile and screaming Saint Joseph's fans tried everything they could to distract the foul shooter and protect a 1-point lead, Chris Lowe calmly sank two free throws to give the Minutemen a thrilling 70-69 victory over the Hawks Sunday afternoon. Tony Gaffney knocked away the desperation in-bounds heave to seal the win.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 70 |
| St. Joe's | 69 |

"Three dribbles, deep breath, bend your legs and follow-through," Lowe said, describing how to block out all the pressure, noise and St. Joe's coach Phil Martelli's attempt to ice him. "And that's what I did."

It was the type of game that UMass (10-15, 5-7 Atlantic 10) has come to dread this season, having lost more times than they care to count in the final minutes. And with the way things unfolded over the final minutes, it seemed inevitable once again.

After both Gaffney and Ricky Harris missed late 1-and-1s, it was Lowe – who has had well-known problems with late free throws – that had to step to the line with the pressure.

"I just talked like he was making it – [I told them] 'When Chris makes this I'm going to call a timeout so don't even worry about the defense quite yet, we're going to knock it down, call a timeout and set up our defense," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said.

"That's what I went with. It's kind of a trick [former UMass coach John who coached Kellogg as a player] Calipari used to use with us. He'd never mention that there's ever a chance you'll miss."

With 6.4 seconds remaining it looked like Hawks guard Tasheed Carr – and not Lowe – was going to be the hero, after he also calmly hit both free throws to give the Hawks a 69-68 lead. But Gaffney's in-bounds pass went to Lowe, who raced down the floor and drove the lane to draw a foul on Ahmad Nivins.

The Minutemen looked to be in a great position a few different

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

Junior shooting guard Ricky Harris scored 11 points in the Minutemen's win over Saint Joseph's. The win ended a two-game losing streak for UMass and revenged a home loss to Saint Joe's several weeks earlier.

ARTS & LIVING
LEGACY OF DARWIN

Don't count him out. Schools are increasingly turning to Darwin for his contribution to the study of evolution.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
SWEEPING WINS

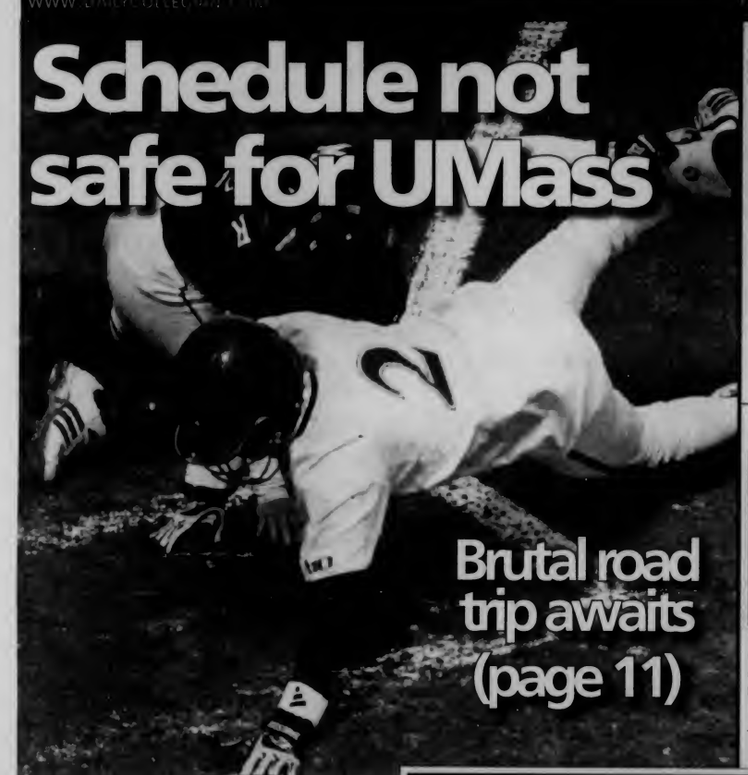
The Mass Attack swept a weekend series with Maine at the Mullins Center. UMass is now tied for sixth place in the Hockey East standings.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORAL & OPINION

COLUMNIST PAUL PAYER ARGUES THAT THE STIMULUS BILL HAS BEEN LOSING STEAM SINCE PASSING WITH LITTLE REPUBLICAN SUPPORT, BUT BOTH SIDES HAVE ANOTHER CHANCE TO GET IT RIGHT.



SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

INTRODUCING NEWSGARDEN: FOLLOW NEWS GEOGRAPHICALLY WITH DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM'S LATEST APPLICATION.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2009

Schedule not safe for UMass

Brutal road trip awaits (page 11)

MEN'S LACROSSE

After a convincing 15-6 season-opening win over Sacred Heart, UMass takes on rival, No. 14 Hofstra in a tough test for defense, goalkeeper Doc Schneider.

SEE PAGE 12

MEN'S BASKETBALL

With another last-minute loss against an Atlantic 10 rival on Wednesday, the Minutemen hope to bounce bounce back against St. Joseph's at the Palestra.

SEE PAGE 13

DAILY COLLEGIAN
sports
WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Feed your future

See the difference 100 PwC interns made in Belize

Begin at www.pwc.tv

PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

© 2009 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

your week ahead on Daily Collegian

INTRODUCING NEWSGARDEN

FOLLOW NEWS GEOGRAPHICALLY WITH DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM'S NEW APPLICATION

NEWS

Video: See more of what conservative radio talk show host Michael Graham had to say at UMass Tuesday night.

Slideshow: Catch the UMass Juggling Club in action.

Video: Wednesday Daily Collegian editors and reporters provide a wrap of the campus' budget crisis and Chancellor Holub's reaction to it in the "War Room."

Blog: This Week Read the latest in UMass research, politics and student life for the week on The Collegian's news blogs. News editor Will McGuinness tells of going under the knife for UMass kinesiology.

SPORTS

Slideshow: See the highlights of the UMass men's basketball game against URI through the lense of a Collegian photographer.

ARTS

Live Blogging: Read Academy Awards coverage from Daily Collegian film critic Kevin Koczwara who "tweeted" during last night's program.

Pong linked to rise in herpes

BEER PONG from page 1

beer pong play is nearly as dangerous as unprotected sex.

Little do many Beirut players know, or at least … think to consider once they've gotten their buzz, is that sharing these cups with partners and others can lead to the transmission of a number of different illnesses and viruses.

The well known and lingering, mononucleosis, the dreaded Influenza (the flu) and the bad guy herpes, are all possible to catch by playing a simple game of beer pong. All of these are transferable via saliva by sharing cups. Sure, the likelihood that it is caught is fairly slim, but it is not impossible.

The infectious mono is caused by the Epstein-Barr virus (EBV) and is distinguished by symptoms including lack of energy, inflamed lymph nodes, a severe sore throat and high fever. Many think that it is just a "kissing disease," but it is basically spread through any exchange of infected saliva. This type of illness is to want to avoid at all costs because it can leave the afflicted feeling weak and fatigued for weeks, sometimes even months.

As soon as one gets over mono, the symptoms will be gone for good but the virus that caused it will forever stay in the body. It can become active from time to time without the presence of symptoms but may still potentially be spread to others.

Unclean beer pong cups could carry disease.

Herpes Simplex Virus-1 is one of the most common viral infections in the world. It is also commonly referred to as cold sores, fever blisters or oral herpes, which are small, painful blisters that most often will appear on or around a person's lips or in their mouths. The virus comes into contact with broken skin or the lining of the mouth, and then tries to reproduce itself. Even though cells are infected, most people do not get symptoms. Many times, its replication process will destroy the cells it has infected triggering the formation of blisters or ulcers on the skin.

It is estimated that nine out of 10 people have been exposed to HSV-1 and do not even know it, and this is mostly because they are not experiencing any of the symptoms. It can be caught merely by coming into contact with an infected person, meaning the risk could be just as high as getting mono or the common cold.

The balls played with have already been in countless people's hands. It has also bounced all over the floor, gotten stuck under the couch and has been completely enveloped in dust bunnies and bacteria.

"My problem is that when I play beer pong, it's usually at guys' houses who probably have never, ever dusted or cleaned all the grime that is all over the place," freshman theatre major Simone Shenny said. "So when we throw the ball and miss the cup, it sometimes goes under the furniture and into disgusting corners.

"When we get it back, we'll clean it in the same 'clean water cup' over and over again so all that grime and dirt from the floor just goes into the water cup. So, when the balls are thrown into the beer cups, all that crap from the ball gets into the beer that you're drinking."

One effortless and logical way to avoid catching one of these nasty diseases is by simply playing with water cups instead of beer. The Center for Disease control said reports of the virus are up 230-percent from 2007 in people ages 17 to 21, and it's all from sharing cups. Filling the 10 cups with water is a suggested, but unpopular, solution.

"I hate playing with water cups because it takes away from the spirit of the game, but it probably is a lot healthier," commented sophomore communications major Zach Gordon.

Kathryn Foley can be reached at kfoley@student.umass.edu

Library center to examine Du Bois

LIBRARY from page 1

dence life on campus, while conducting research, participating in seminars, assisting the center will the annual Du Bois lecture, and publishing scholarly materials of Du Bois' legacy.

Along with the new center will come a completely digitized collection of Du Bois' works. Digitizing the collection will facilitate the process for scholars and researchers to access a multitude of documents.

"Significant effort will take at least two years to digitize the entire collection," Schafer said.

In order to create all that the center entails, a significant amount of support and fundraising must be present. The Randolph W. Bromery Library Endowment Fund, a fund that wishes to enhance the legacy of Du Bois, has already given its support to the center.

Other fundraising activities will be explored as well to support the project and the fellowships being offered, Schafer said.

In addition to the compliance of the new center, it is only coincidence that it fell during the same period of the centennial celebration of the founding of the NAACP, and Black History Month.

The date of completion has yet to be determined.

Jessica Kemp can be reached at jmkemp@student.umass.edu

Study: melon effects surprise

WATERMELON from page 1

watermelon to obtain enough arginine necessary for producing Viagra-like effects.

Side effects of eating this much watermelon at once though include cramping, diarrhea, and a potential increase of sugar levels in the blood stream.

"I don't know if it would be worth it to eat that much watermelon just for some extra blood flow," said Matthew Button, a sophomore and Criminal Justice major at Worcester State College. "I feel that if someone has ED they are better off seeking medical attention."

Despite the debate on whether watermelon really does increase sex drive, there is however some definite truth about the fruit's health benefits.

Watermelon contains a variety of nutrients that are all beneficial to the body, including lycopene, beta-carotene, potassium, vitamin C and vitamin A.

Ingredients in the fruit are proven to protect the heart and skin, and even lower the risk of prostate cancer.

Jessica Kemp can be reached at jmkemp@student.umass.edu

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 21

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Melora
Business Manager Alex Wanczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkee
Night Supervisor Kate Olson
Advertising Manager Dan Horley
Advertising Production Max Denner
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Copy Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor James Mathews
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenwaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Munroe
Photo Editor P.J. Stanley
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Carey
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kazwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Tuttman
Asst Editorial Leigh Greaves
Asst. Editorial Nick D'Mello
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Lamard
Assistant Photo Danielle Angers
Assistant Photo Ryan Jung
Assistant Photo Marilen Harrison
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Drew Ruths
Assistant Multimedia James Wehner

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
David Humphreys

PRODUCTION TEAM
Brandon Silvia

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Stimulus bill a rough draft

Paul Payer

Only a month into the new legislative term, Congress has run into quite a few problems – ranging from the lingering controversy over senate seats from Illinois and Minnesota to a publicized exercise in how not to practice bipartisanship. Now that the economic stimulus bill has passed both houses of Congress and the desk of the President, we can all add another problem to that list: Congressional illiteracy.

At 1,071 pages of appropriations and tax provisions amounting to $787 billion, the stimulus bill will undoubtedly go down in history as a landmark piece of legislation both in terms of scope and spending. Given the importance of this bill, one would think that the representatives in Congress entrusted with the responsibility to craft and revise the bill would hold its contents up to a standard of upmost scrutiny and review. Rather, not one member of Congress took the time to read the legislation in full, electing to instead bicker and argue as talking heads on cable news and Sunday morning talk shows.

If Democrats and Republicans in Congress are serious about following President Barack Obama's lead on bipartisanship, this was certainly not an effective opening effort. The house version of the bill was written entirely by Democrats, understandably angering many Republicans. Unfortunately, Republicans also wanted to play politics with the legislation, by successfully arguing for changes and revisions in the legislation but then refusing support it during both the Senate and House roll call on the legislation.

Neither political party properly vetted the contents of this legislation. Instead, both parties stuck to standard talking points to rally their base and score political points. The legislation was rushed along under the premise that something must be done and it must be done quickly, even though, according to the Congressional Budget Office, only 21 percent of the money appropriated in the legislation would be spent in fiscal year 2009.

That delay in spending has been a focal point of many critics, conservatives and liberals alike. But, it may be the bill's saving grace. The true measure of the legislation's efficiency will be determined by how Congress appropriates the large sums of money set aside for specific sectors of the economy.

Think of the economic stimulus bill as a term paper based on a set of assigned readings you haven't even looked at since checking out at the textbook annex. Although the paper you passed in for the deadline is filled with vague and general statements based off of what you read on Wikipedia, the professor has granted students the opportunity to make up the grade by gradually reworking and detailing individual sections of paper.

Americans must do more than drone out to Rush Limbaugh on their commute to work or shout catchy chants at political rallies in the student union.

Yes, that scenario would never actually occur in a college classroom; but, it would be clearly unfair to hold the United States Congress to the same standard as a bunch of lazy college students.

The effectiveness of this stimulus bill depends largely not on how Congress preformed on the first draft of the legislation, but how it decides to implement and appropriate the legislation's goals.

The White House has established www.recovery.gov to provide a transparent detail of stimulus spending. The concept is certainly commendable given the history of less than honest practices with federal appropriations, but will require an active and engaged citizenry to have any positive effect. Americans must do more than drown out to Rush Limbaugh on their commute to work or shout catchy chants at political rallies in the student union. Political engagement requires far more than absorbing the carefully crafted mantras of the Republican and Democrat parties.

The organizers and creators of ReadTheStimulus.org have embraced this philosophy, developing a community of citizen volunteers responsible for reading bits and pieces of the legislation to identify noteworthy passages and areas of concern. For decades, government watchdog groups have attempted to curb pork barrel spending in Washington. But now the internet may have the ability to enlist the largest watchdog group for the largest piece of spending in U.S. history.

In 2006, a freshman senator from Illinois co-sponsored a senate bill to establish the Federal Funding Accountability and Transparency Act. The act created an online database to track government contracts, grants and other spending. Now as President, that freshman senator must follow through on his ideals for transparency and efficiency.

Congress didn't do the best job introducing this stimulus bill. It must now prove that it is capable of spending nearly a trillion dollars in the midst of a national recession. Citizen oversight will provide some incentive, but ultimately the success of this bill and the American economy depends on sound rational policies from Washington and across the nation's state governments.

Paul Payer is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ppayer@student.umass.edu

Half a million is not poverty

Nick O'Malley

A recent New York Times article depicted how hard it is to live in the city of New York with a salary of only a half a million dollars. It was said that, with all the work it takes to stay in that sort of status in New York City, a $500,000 salary is not as much as it sounds like. Living in New York, the article argues, takes its financial toll quite quickly. From pricey nannies to high priced schools to raising rent costs, a half a million dollars isn't as much as you think it is.

The figure of a half a million dollars is prevalent because of the recent cap set on the salaries of bank executives as part of the bailout plan. The companies will receive money, but the executives' salaries will take a hit.

However, the banks' elite claim that their six-figure salaries may simply not be enough to cover the expenses of living in The City That Never Sleeps.

The article cites a number of ways a half million dollars can receive a major dent: $32,000 for a private school, $96,000 for the mortgage and co-op maintenance fee each and $45,000 for a nanny, all annually. The costs, as you can see, simply add up for a bank exec. But, there is one issue.

I can't even begin to describe how much I don't care.

If these people's lives were so bad, they'd lose their high-end fancy Wall Street jobs, take their kids out of the fancy schools and move into an area with affordable housing. That's too hard, though, because it's too much for these Wall Street executives to be stuck on the same level as the rest of us miserable people in this world.

These people aren't being put through any hardship; they're just experiencing the same crap most of the world has to put up with on a daily basis. Oh, their bonus is only going to be $50,000 this year. I guess Willard III will have to wait another year before he gets his third car. He'll be driving in two years, you know.

It's difficult, though, to put yourself in the position of someone who is simply cursed with the fact that their apartments with water fountains that run Hawaiian Punch cost more than most people's living conditions.

The high life isn't all it's perked up to be. Didn't you know? It may seem like fun to take a bath of $20 bills every time you get a paycheck. But what you didn't know is that you have to spend most of it on bills and stuff. And after that, they don't even have enough money to lease a new car every week.

Ok, it may be true that, after high mortgages and fees that there's not that much money left over. Fine, I can believe that. But to complain that all these costs, which do in fact lead to an elite-class lifestyle, simply make for impossible living is ridiculous.

These people say they have it so bad, but do they even put themselves in the shoes of the guy that parks their $100,000 BMW's for a living?

These people aren't being put through any hardship; they're just experiencing the same crap most of the world has to put up with on a daily basis.

The current unemployment rate is 7.6 percent. That means 7.6 percent of America doesn't have a job to hire a nanny and harely scrape hy on the mortgage if they're not living with their sister in-law. Why do you think we have the Federal School Lunch Program? There are families that can't even afford to give their children lunch money to go to a public school.

It only takes one look at Wall Street to see what's going on. These people are either inept and suck at their jobs or are smart enough to steal other people's money. So, when the government comes around to tell them to get their act together, the back executives either can't believed that they may have to go down to the level of the peons or know that they have enough pull and can prevent a change by complaining enough.

I have no aspirations of being rich – I'm a journalism major. But you know what I'm going to do? I'm going to go into a terrible job market with a degree in a dying field and get a job and scrap together enough money to make a living. And if I get laid off, the government's not going to come and bail me out, it's too busy holding the rich and privileged to its tit because the CEOs of the world didn't get their third condo.

The government has decided to take taxpayer money to help soothe the boo boo's of America's elite, who don't know how to live if they're not buying a ton of crap they don't need.

So if you're about to get laid off, don't worry. There are people who are in a much worse situation.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Lessons from a war child

Eric Magazu

Last Wednesday, the University Programming Council presented a talk featuring former Sudanese child soldier Emmanuel Jal. Jal, who is also a hip-hop artist, spoke in the Student Union Ballroom about a childhood spent training as a young soldier in the Sudan People's Liberation Army (SPLA).

He spoke of a new vision to heal the rift in the Sudan. However, in order to address the tragic human story of ethnic cleansing and genocide occurring in Darfur, an entirely new approach is needed.

A vicious civil war has been going on since 2003 in the Darfur region of Sudan. A sizable number of University of Massachusetts students care deeply about the situation in Darfur as it has been one of the major causes of our time. It is especially important in politically left and left-leaning circles and among all people who care deeply for others.

The question before us is this: what is the best way for students to get involved with the resolution of this conflict?

In one sense, UMass students could volunteer to join the militia of the side they favor. The government-backed militia known as the Janjaweed Is considered to be the perpetrator of the genocide against the Sudanese people represented by Emmanuel Jal. Students could inquire, consistent with United States law, about securing permission to join the resistance movement, the SPLA.

One major traditional approach is to bring awareness of the situation to the public and to petition the United Nations to intervene. This approach has not fared well in the past. Emmanuel Jal even intimated that the recent arrest warrant issued by the United Nations against complicit President Omar al-Bashir could even cause further division in the Sudan. This is due to the fact, Jal reasons, that President al-Bashir has succeeded thus far in implicitly supporting the ethnic cleansing because he retains support among many sectors of the Sudanese population. Securing an arrest warrant could further radicalize President al-Bashir's supporters.

The other major traditional approach is to engage in boycotts, promote divestment and to petition the United States and the United Nations Security Council for sanctions. However, these are only indirect actions that take years to affect changes. The government and the militia movements in the Sudan can stall until effective alternative trade routes are established. In the meantime, an unacceptable level of violence continues to occur.

The question before us is this. What is the best way for students to get involved with the resolution of this conflict?

Instead, Jal is seeking a mediated settlement between the parties. It is thought that this could lead to an everlasting peace. But history and reality show otherwise. Unless one side wins an overwhelming victory, long-term peace will become elusive. Jal's solution could prove unstable in this case.

The real potential rectification of the matter, which would require the support the American people, would be a rapid and intense invasion of all of the Sudan by the United States military. A swift and intense occupation of Khartoum, Al Fashir, Nyala, Sawakin, Kasala, Al Qadarif, Bor and Juba would be required. There are allegations that the Sudan received some of Iraq's missing weapons of mass destruction. These nuclear weapons would have to be quickly secured by the U.S. Armed Forces.

A federated commonwealth would then have to established, with extensive local rights for all populations. The rights of all Sudanese would be inviolate. The government could not promote a single identity at the expense of others. Identity and traditions would have to be handled on a local level.

Alternatively, the Sudan could be broken up into smaller nations, as long as the rights of all native population groups are maintained. To secure human rights, no transfer of populations or ethnic cleansing could be permitted.

Democratic institutions would then be resumed upon the careful watch of the international community and the United Nations. If far right political parties, or parties espousing a racist or exclusivist philosophy, were to attain power upon the restoration of democracy, international action would have to be swiftly taken.

It can be pointed out that Sudan is not within the national security interest sphere of the United States. American intervention would have to be effected strictly on moral and humanitarian grounds. If the American people consent to such a use of the U.S. Armed Forces, this would be a just and noble pursuit in which to engage.

Emmanuel Jal offers another solution, and this is one in which UMass students can choose to engage. While it would be difficult for students to volunteer to serve in the resistance movement, with the proper security measures, students can engage on the ground by rebuilding schools, hospitals, and other infrastructure in the Darfur region of the Sudan. Spring break service trips can be organized and students should join these trips. This would be a direct and effective way for students to serve to resolve the crisis in Darfur.

More than any indirect social, economic or political action in reference to Sudan, the friendships and goodwill developed on these trips will go all that much further to repair the breeches of human discord in Sudan.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

The bright side of the stimulus package

Alex Perry

I've been doing a lot of thinking about Barack Obama's stimulus package lately and I have officially changed my mind. I almost like the implications of this "stimulus" now.

Maybe my conservative instincts blinded me when I initially reacted to the $800 billion dollar stimulus package President Obama and the Democrats pushed through. Maybe that $45 million for the removal of fish passage barriers is really a big job creator. Maybe the nonpartisan Congressional Budget Office was wrong when it found that the Senate stimulus bill would have a "negligible" effect on jobs by 2011 and would hurt growth and prosperity in our economy over the next decade.

After all, although Obama was just a state senator four years ago and has virtually zero executive experiences, he knows what he's doing. The media told me so during the campaign.

Well, maybe not. What I actually like about the stimulus is not the potential economic implications – those are clearly horrid – but the potential political implications.

The creation of this bill is giving Republicans a great opportunity to get back to the fundamentals of conservatism and to regain the support of the American public. During the Bush era, Republicans lost their conservative roots and approved drastic increases in the size of government and government spending.

To give an idea of just how lost the party became, Bush and McCain actually approved of the $700 billion dollar bailout in the fall. It was tough for Republican candidates to run their campaigns on cutting spending when they oversaw a massive increase in spending during the Bush era. And, because of this lack of direction, Republicans lost the House, Senate and White House over the last four years.

But now, Obama's platform for change – mostly towards socialism – has seemingly brought hope not just to his adoring fans but also to an unlikely source, the GOP.

Republicans rallied against this stimulus bill and exposed it for what it mostly is, wasteful spending. As the days passed and Republicans exposed more and more of the "stimulus" the more American support disintegrated. Republicans are finally doing what McCain failed to do during the election, outline a clear difference in economic policy amongst liberals and conservatives. And, wouldn't you know it, but the message is resonating with the American public. According to CBS News polling, Amcrican support for the stimulus package has fallen approximately 12 points in the past month.

Although Obama was just a state senator four years ago and has virtually zero executive experiences, he knows what he's doing. The media told me so during the campaign.

Both Obama and the Democrats are taking a major risk endorsing this stimulus package with no support from Republicans and wavering support of the public. They know that if this stimulus package fails the American public will hold Democrats responsible. Its failure would undoubtedly equate to a one-term presidency.

But if there's one thing Obama knows how to do, its how to manipulate public opinion. Just think about how he's presented the economy so far. He has portrayed it as possibly the worst economic situation ever. He's compared it to the Great Depression so many times that most people can't tell whether or not we're currently living in the actual Great Depression.

Why does he do this? I have a couple obvious reasons. The first is to scare people into supporting his stimulus package. If he can convince the public that our situation is so dire that we need to do something massive, no one will question the details of it. The second reason he portrays the economy as he does is because he wants to drop the expectations bar for his presidency as low as possible. That way, if for some reason this stimulus actually has success to any degree, he will be hyped up as even more of a savior because he exceeded hope and expectations.

Just imagine if all Obama did was talk up the economy and the stimulus just ended up giving it a minor boost, would anyone care? But if everyone thinks the economy is the worst since the Great Depression and it manages a minor boost or even fully recovers? Wow, that's much more impressive.

What if the stimulus fails? Well, I already know that reaction too. That's Bush's fault. The mess he left for Obama was just too big to clean up in four years and that's why he needs to be re-elected in 2012.

It is clear that the worse Americans perceive the economy to be, is better off than Obama is letting on. That's why the president and the media have been doing their best to emphasize pessimism before this stimulus is put into action.

What's also clear is the inevitable failure of this "stimulus" is going to be the sole blame of the Democrats. Knowing that, Republicans are going to have a major opportunity to save this country from socialism and re-take power in 2010 and 2012. Like I said, I have rethought my position. I like the stimulus package.

Alex Perry Is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at amperry@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Don't count Darwin out just yet

The battle between Intelligent Design and evolution rages to this day, as the controversy is based on the discrepancies between science and religion. Recently some politicians and proponents of Intelligent Design have suggested that too much money is being spent of scientific research. Since neither theory can be proven, it is unlikely that this will cease being an argument in the near future.

Intelligent Design makes a move towards the classroom in hopes of teaching evolution

BY TED ROGERS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Something strange is happening in the United States. When a doctor tells the average American that he has cancer, the patient is inclined to agree. When your mechanic says you need a new serpentine belt, you take his word for it.

But yet, when a biologist states that humanity arose from monkeys millions of years ago, over 50 percent of Americans will look at him in puzzlement and disgust.

Why do people disagree with experts in this one area?

Most people will say religion. A literal interpretation of the Bible states that man and his surroundings were created only several thousand years ago. A better answer might be job security.

Biologists spend many years and thousands of dollars in universities and labs trying to better understand how life arose through evolution.

Holy men from every branch of religion try to help their flocks better understand God's word as they interpret it. If either the biologists or the religious clergy get proven wrong, they're out of work.

A long-standing controversy has been the teaching of evolutionism in high school classrooms. The scientific community states that it is the basic tenant of biology, while the clergy says it destroys faith in God.

The most recent battle over this was seen when members of school boards across the South and Midwest tried to include something called Intelligent Design in the curriculum for the past two decades.

For your benefit, I've written something that explains the newest battle between religion and science in a little more detail.

Picture a scene at the Museum of Oxford College, June 30th, 1860. A crowd has gathered to debate the premise of a new book, written by a Shropshire parson, Charles Darwin. The book, "Origin of the Species," states that life as we know it is ancient and has changed frequently. Thomas Henry Huxley, later called Darwin's Bulldog, was to defend the book. Meanwhile, Samuel "Soapy Sam" Wilberforce, an Anglican Bishop, was going to tell the masses that God had created every animal, mineral and vegetable in the Universe in seven days, several thousand years ago.

Although there were at least a thousand in attendance, there is no account of what was actually said.

The scene most brought up, however, goes like this: at one point, Wilberforce asked Huxley if he claimed a monkey as a descendant from his grandmother's or his grandfather's side. There are several accounts of what happened next. Huxley claimed he quietly uttered, "the Lord has delivered [Wilberforce] to my hands". Others claim he rose from his seat, trembling with anger. At any rate, Huxley retorted, "I would rather be descended from an ape than related to a man who uses his gifts of speech to pull the wool over the eyes of the public!"

The crowd went wild. The Vice-Admiral of the Royal Navy held a Bible over his head, crying, "The Book! The Book!" Fisticuffs broke out between members of the clergy and the scientific community. The point of the story: things haven't changed very much.

Students of American history will recognize the Monkey trial of 1925, Scopes v. Tennessee. In this case, a teacher, John Thomas Scopes, was tried for teaching Evolution in the classroom.

Most people remember this as the trial where Creationist and three-time Democratic presidential nominee William Jennings Bryan was roundly humiliated by Clarence Darrow, a leftist trial lawyer. This trial was captured in the delightfully melodramatic 1960 film, "Inherit the Wind."

What isn't recalled in the movie is that Scopes was convicted.

Darwin's theory still had a ways to go.

The newest assault on Evolution comes from a theory called Intelligent Design. Intelligent Design was created about 20 years ago, after Creationists realized the courts were ignoring them because of the separation of church and state. Percival Davis wrote "Of Pandas and People" in 1989 creating the Intelligent Design movement.

The idea of Intelligent Design as espoused in the book became huge over the next few years.

ID, as it is called in scientific jargon, states that life is simply too complex for the random and arcane workings of nature have created it. Instead, designers postulate life arose from a Creator that obviously knew what he was doing.

THE BIG WHERE:

If evolution were to be explained in a sentence, it would be, "Life changes, and it has been changing for a long, long time". Of course, this does not do Darwin's theory much justice.

Let's take a closer look at some of the bigger tenants of evolution.

The first idea is that evolution states there is a huge amount of variability in life. This isn't just between bacteria and birds, or dinosaurs and dogs. Even among the same species, there are large differences.

Think about it. I'm short and have blue eyes. You may have brown eyes or you may be tall. These differences are due to your genes, something that your biology textbook would call, "the building blocks of life." You owe them to your parents, and they determine everything from eye color to IQ. From generation to generation, genes are recombined. This is what causes the endless variations among life.

As it turns out, some genes can be beneficial. If one of these beneficial genes helps an organism reproduce just a little more, live a little longer, the gene will spread throughout the population. This process is called natural selection, the second idea of evolution. Of course, this takes a long time.

Imagine millions of years. You can't, the concept is tricky. If you were to go back in time, a second per year, it would take a minute to see the end of World War II, and a little over a half hour to see a man get kicked out of a small town in Palestine before being crucified. To get back to the time when the first multi-celled life comes into the fossil record, 650 million years, for those of you wondering, it would take more than 20 years.

See EVOLUTION on page 6

Try some new cuisine in the Pioneer Valley

BY REBECCA BABIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

When it comes to food, college students tend to stick to the familiar. Sometimes it's laziness, or the fear of unfamiliar dishes in the dining hall. Sometimes they don't want to waste the money when dining out. What if they tried this new thing and they ended up hating it?

Whatever the reasons, Amherst offers some good restaurants to break this habit. College is about experimentation, after all, and Amherst has restaurants ranging from Mexican to Polish and everything in between.

This week, try a new world of dining out (or ordering in if you prefer). Below is your launch pad. These restaurants are tried, tested and certifiably awesome.

You may have walked past Baku's, Amherst's Nigerian restaurant, and never gone in, but it's worth a stop. Owner, Pat Ononibaku, is as warm and inviting as her restaurant. The walls are a vibrant pink adorned with African murals, while African music sets a comfortable ambiance.

Pat opened the restaurant in 2005 because she wanted to provide authentic, quality food and serve as a community resource.

"In the media, people hear negative things about Africa ... AIDS and famine," said Pat. "I'm not saying those things don't exist, but I want to showcase the positive aspects of African culture. Good food, good music, warm, cozy, bright."

Pat says she serves strictly traditional Nigerian food, as opposed to Colonial style Nigerian cuisine, influenced strongly by the British. While the colonial style is heavily wheat based, Baku's Nigerian dishes are made gluten, lactose and sugar free.

"I wouldn't know what to do with it," Pat said when asked about using sugar in her cooking.

Although much of the food is high in starch, Nigerian food uses fresh ingredients, and is unprocessed.

The food served is as colorful as the walls, usually containing rice, meat, diced onions and a combination of up to 20 spices, ranging from curry to nutmeg.

Each dish is an explosion of flavor, with meats such as beef, lamb and goat mixed with grains and a carefully calculated blend of mellow and bold spices.

"There is a myth that all African food is very spicy," explains Pat. "Our food is very flavorful, but I cook it mildly and spice it according to customers' preferences."

If the food alone was not enough reason to try out Baku, Pat says, "The easiest way to experience other cultures, in my opinion, is to try their food. Without traveling there you have a sense of their culture."

The menu features items that range from $3 appetizers to $10 entrees. Baku's Is open from 12 p.m. – 8 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 12 p.m. – 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and 4 p.m. – 8 p.m. on Sunday.

See FOOD on page 6

Slow night at the FAC

VSA struggles to keep audience entertained

BY MICHELLE FREDETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Stepping into the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall Saturday night for the Vietnamese Student Association's "Spring of Heritage," only the first three sections of seats were filled. The audience was primarily Vietnamese students with a smattering of non-Asian students mixed in.

MC and VSA president Tristan Nguyen opened in Vietnamese, following with the English translation of his welcome. Nguyen and Miss Vietnam Global 2007, Jennifer Le, led the audience through the ancestral rites, lighting candles and bowing to obtain luck and support from the ancestors in the New Year.

The stage was set with a table that held fruit symbolic of the five elements in ancient Vietnamese culture: metal, wood, water, fire and earth. Nguyen explained that the symbolism of the fruits went further, however.

"The green bananas represent protection and support from our ancestors," he said.

"Spring of Heritage" was put on in celebration of the Vietnamese Lunar New year, Tet. The intentions of the event were good-natured – celebrating, preserving and teaching about Vietnamese culture – but the execution was lacking.

The first performance, the lion dance, was entertaining at first, with dancers controlling three different lions – one blue, one white and one gold. The dancers kicked up their feet and hopped around to give liveliness and personality to the dance. They performed acrobatic tricks and jumps, winking the lions' eyes and opening and closing their mouths.

However, the dance continued for too long and lost focus. The lions all ended up wandering through the audience. The initial excitement soon faded to boredom, made worse by the repetitive drum, gong and cymbal music that accompanied the dance.

Following the dance was a song, a fashion show of traditional Vietnamese clothing, a modern dance, and an interview-like piece between Nguyen and the two most recent Miss Vietnam Global winners, Jennifer Le and Donna Vo.

Like the lion dance, the fashion show had pacing issues.

The traditional outfits (ao dai) were beautiful – dresses with long slits in the sides going up to the hips, with silk-like pants underneath. Nguyen commented that the ao dai "covers everything but hides nothing." But since the girls came onstage only two at a time, the presentation moved slow and interest faded.

The interview between Nguyen and the two pageant winners was awkward. Nguyen jested that a good woman is one who knows how to cook and jokingly hit on the women. The jokes fell flat but Le and Vo were good sports and tried to smooth over Nguyen's failed banter.

Nguyen often tried jokes between acts, but he came off as grating rather than humorous, and his "funny" banter with Le was anything but.

While the VSA clearly worked hard to put the event together, the first several performances felt painfully like those of a high school talent show. In addition to the pacing issues, the modern dance was out of sync and the skit (in Vietnamese) had

See VSA on page 6

Denying evolution hurts science and reason

EVOLUTION from page 5

Over this scale of time, fascinating things can happen. Variability between individuals becomes so great that they do not even belong to the same species. Cells that were once used to detect light can adapt into the eyes you are using to read this. In short, evolution is nothing more than slight changes magnified by immense periods of time.

If Intelligent Design were to be summed up in a sentence, it would be, "This stuff is way too complicated." Well, sort of.

As stated earlier, the ID movement was started in the mid 1980s as a way of promoting creation-based theories without being charged of bringing religion into the classroom.

"Life is too complicated to be determined by random forces of nature, and therefore must have been designed" makes no overtures to a very specific creator, and wisely avoids mentioning the strongly implied time scale problems.

A proponent of ID would ask you to look at an eye. Your eye is made up of an optic nerve, a lens, and millions of little light detecting cells called rods and cones.

Designers would tell you this is an example of irreducible complexity, meaning it has too many vital components for the random events of evolution to form it. They say, "Suppose you find a watch on a beach. Do you think it came from the ocean, or do you think someone made it and left it there?"

The Proof:

Evolution and Intelligent Design have one commonality — you can't really prove either of them. We don't have the lifespan necessary to have seen monkeys slowly evolve into humans or to have heard a deep, booming voice say, "let there be light."

This does not mean, however, that evolution is just an idea that seems to make sense.

We have fossils, which show the progression of certain species over millions of years. The key is to look for fossil specimens that share common characteristics over long periods of time. While the fossil record is notoriously poor, the idea backs up the theory.

There is also race-based immunity. Diseases like smallpox nearly wiped out the Native American tribes when Europeans first set foot on the New World. The reason for this (as well as the reason why the Europeans weren't wiped out as well) has to do with natural selection. Smallpox had been common to the old world for as long as anyone could remember. Europeans whom had genes adept at avoiding smallpox infections were more likely to survive and have children with the same genes. Those who didn't died.

Across the pond, the genes responsible for smallpox immunity would have been useless, and therefore not as common. When Smallpox first hit America, as many as 50 million lives were lost. The few Native Americans that survived were likely carriers of a resistance gene.

When these examples — evidence of natural selection, evidence of previously existing, yet closely related species – are added together, it becomes clear; life changes frequently, and has been doing so for a long time.

While the theory of evolution revolves around establishing small facts as part of a larger picture, Intelligent Design's provenance rests on disproving evolution.

ID supporters say because the fossil record is scant, it must not show any proof of evolution. They say no one was around to witness some dinosaur species slowly grow feathers and begin to glide, so birds must have been created separately. Because the eye is complex, there is no way nature could have created it.

The interesting aspect of Intelligent Design is that it brings up the question: how intelligent is the designer? As hairless apes, you'd think we'd be designed for a world with a hunch of trees, warm temperatures and plenty of bananas.

And yet, we're found on every corner of the Earth. It's like we adapted to it, or something.

As humans, we have some fatal flaws. To think about it in a slightly detached way, we are nothing but factories that exist to produce more of ourselves. We can't get too hot and we can't get too cold. Even though we live on a planet that is 71% salt water, drinking a gallon of it will kill us. Wouldn't an intelligent, benevolent creator seek to address some of these complaints? Perhaps those in stained glass houses should not throw stones.

Why you should know this:

It should be noted that ID is a way of sneaking Creationism into the classroom. And while it is important to respect other's beliefs, the contempt that is shown towards evolution, and even biology in general can be a little astounding.

Towards the end of the 2008 presidential campaign, Republican Nominee for Vice President and Christian fundamentalist superstar Sarah Palin announced that we were spending too much on scientific research. She gave a speech mocking the government's investment in fruit fly research.

And while I can forgive Palin for not knowing that fruit flies make excellent subjects for researching chromosomal abnormalities (which could help scientists understand the mechanics of Downs Syndrome, something her youngest son was diagnosed with), she seems to be trashing science for a vote's sake. This is something you should question.

There is another reason why knowing this stuff is important. Science relies on curiosity, the need to find reasons for the way things are. When your answer becomes, "God did it for his own reasons" the curiosity factor diminishes.

While it is important to show a certain amount of respect to long held beliefs, there is no such thing as knowing too much. Besides, when has ignorance helped anyone?

Ted Rogers can be reached at trogers@student.umass.edu

Polish and Vietnamese foods are certainly worth a taste

FOOD from page 5

Miss Saigon is an authentic Vietnamese restaurant, that opened last September in downtown Amherst. Vincent Tin says it was his dream to open a restaurant. It has been a long road for Vincent, who moved from Vietnam to France and then to Boston to pursue his culinary education before arriving in Amherst.

"I love Amherst," he says, "I don't think I'll ever leave."

The restaurant has a Vietnamese feng shui, with deep crimson walls, paintings of Vietnamese women and flowers adorning the walls, and bamboo place mats on every table.

While you will recognize many of the vegetables and meats on the menu from your experiences with Chinese food, Vincent explains that the differences lie in the Vietnamese's use of fish sauce, little use of MSG, spices such as curry and far less soy sauce and oil.

"Vietnamese is more flavorful and more healthy," he said.

The Vietnamese are famous for their hearty soups and noodle bowls, using choy, a type of Vietnamese cabbage, cubed meats such as beef or chicken, egg or pho rice noodles, an assortment of vegetables including broccoli, bamboo, peas and carrots, as well as cilantro, scallions, onions and curry for flavor.

Vietnamese is the definite choice for vegetarians with impressive use of vegetables and tofu in many of their menu options.

The menu has infinite options and is moderately priced with a hearty noodle bowl for just under $10. Open from 10 a.m. – 10:30 p.m. daily, it is the perfect stop for lunch, dinner or a late night snack.

Just down Route 9 on Railroad Street there is a Polish Deli/Restaurant that will leave you stuffed to your ears and planning your next visit. Sofia's, named after owner Kristina Beudey's Polish mother, opened in May 2007 to serve Hadley's large Polish community.

Kristina and her son Matt spend every day in their kitchen cooking pierogis of different varieties, golumkis and kielbasa among many other dishes from scratch and from memory.

"I learned how to cook from my mother," says Kristina, "but she never wrote anything down."

"It's like a pierogi sweatshop," says Matt who is constantly experimenting with his cooking to create new recipes.

Polish cooking uses ingredients such as cabbage, cheeses, potatoes, rice and hamburger. Pierogis, which Kristina and Matt say are their biggest sellers, contain no meat and are the perfect choice for a vegetarian meal.

"It's important to try new foods. It gets your taste buds going," says Kristina.

"You're definitely full when you leave here," says Matt. "It's good, home-style cooking for three or four bucks."

The deli style of the restaurant leaves a relaxed and open feeling. With the bike trail running right through Sofia's backyard, they say people who are curious about Polish food wander in all time and aren't afraid to eat by themselves.

Sofia's is open Tuesday-Friday, 10 a.m. – 6 p.m. for lunch and dinner and weekends from 8 a.m. – 5 p.m. for breakfast, lunch and dinner.

These are just a few of the numerous ethnic cuisines available in this area. It's a good start on this path of food exploration. Take a chance on something new. Become a seasoned, eclectic and wise food connoisseur.

Rebecca Babin can be reached at rbabin@student.umass.edu

NEED EXPERIENCE?
Write For
The Daily Collegian
ARTS & ENTERTAINMENT
Visit the Collegian Office
located in the Campus Center basement

Are you a photographer?
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
is hiring photographers
Build your resume and get your photos published for over 10,000 people to see each day!
Send an email to photo@dailycollegian.com for more information

Hiccups in performance and pacing hurt feel of celebration

VSA from page 5

technical difficulties with the English translations projected onto the screen, leading to forgotten lines and uncomfortable pauses.

The second half made up for some of the problems of the first half. The traditional fan dance, while not perfect, was performed gracefully and was kept short enough to hold one's attention. The girls waved the feathery red fans through the air with elegance.

The University of Connecticut's VSA performed a skit spoofing the story of Cinderella. Silly rhymes and the use of part of a Soulja Boy song elicited laughs from the audience that were louder than any heard earlier in the evening.

Spoken word artist Vinh Hua roused the audience with his poetry. He recited serious poems dedicated to strong Vietnamese women and strong Vietnamese men, but also joked about the various jobs he's had over the years.

"I once wore a giant sock to advertise clothing. I s you not, I was a giant sock. I looked like a condom," he said.

Following Hua were the two best performances of the evening: break dancing and a fashion show of modern clothing.

The four break dancers flipped about the stage with infectious energy, each taking a turn to show off his skills while the others hung back.

For the modern fashion show, the girls modeled dresses made out of tissue paper. The creativity of the outfits and the upbeat song the girls walked demanded attention. Donna Vo and Jennifer Le were the last to model, with Vo wearing an impressively well-made short pink dress with a sweetheart neckline and short train in the back.

The night was mixed with successes and failures, but the VSA's "Spring of Heritage" nevertheless achieved its goal of celebrating and preserving Vietnamese culture.

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredett@student.umass.edu

To fall asleep: rest the mind, feel better when you wake

By Fauzia Arain
Chicago Tribune

If you're lucky, you're still sleeping when it's "time to make the doughnuts."

We asked Joni Caputa, a pastry chef of two years at Bittersweet Pastry Shop in Chicago's Lakeview neighborhood, how she manages to kick the sandman to the curb at 4:15 every morning.

"I don't let myself set a snooze on my alarm, and I put my alarm across the room," Caputa said.

Once she's vertical, "I have coffee immediately from an automatic coffee maker, and I need a glass of cold water to wake up."

Whether you suffer from insomnia or are just having an off night, the solution is mostly mind over matter.

No gadgets, no pills, no hypnotism, just some sound advice from Northwestern Memorial Hospital's Dr. Lisa Woofe, a physician who specializes in sleep medicine.

Set your internal clock.

"Have stringent times for getting into and out of bed," Woofe said. "Your body has a clock that helps regulate your brain when you're awake and asleep, and your body will autostart the sleep process accordingly."

Get steamed. "Before bed, take a hot shower and then enter a relatively cool bedroom," Woofe recommended as a way to copy the natural effects of a warming sun setting.

"Imagine an ancient man living out on a prairie. When the sun goes up, you get up, when the sun sets, you sleep ... and when the sun goes down it gets cooler. In modern society, we regulate lights and the body gets disconnected from the environment."

Let there not be light.

"Get both bright light, like sunlight, in the morning and avoid bright lights in the evening," Woofe said.

"And for shift workers, if you're a third-shift person and you leave work at 10 a.m., put sunglasses on when you go outside."

Work it out. "During daytime, make sure you get exercise. It helps sleep at night, especially for those over the age of 60, for whom staying asleep is a big issue," said Woofe, who cited studies done at Northwestern's sleep center by her colleague Dr. Phyllis Zee. "Research has shown that exercise during the day is better than a sleeping pill." Woofe also says to complete all activity two hours before sleep time.

Put the brakes on your brain. "Keep a worry diary in your bedroom, so when you're thinking, 'I can't forget to get that fax at the office' or 'I have to remember to go to the post office,' write that in the diary and put it next to your bed," says Woofe.

Another way to distract a restless mind is to fill it with peaceful pictures.

"With imagery therapy, you come up with a pleasurable image, such as a beautiful vacation on the beach, and you concentrate on how the sun feels on your face, the sand on your toes, the cute guy bringing you drinks," she said.

Woofe warned not to sleep in to make up for the lost hours at night. "Keep a fixed wake-up time, and get up and go about your day.

It's an investment in good sleep," she said. "The next night you should be tired enough to fall asleep on time. A little bit of pain today means good sleep for tomorrow."

Sleep well at night to avoid falling asleep at the wheel on your way to work or school. Have a routine set for yourself so that waking up and going to bed become natural rather than forced.

UMass barely escapes Hawks

M. BASKETBALL from page 1

times during the final minute.

Luke Bonner hit a 3-pointer with 48 seconds left to give the Minutemen a 66-65 lead. After Carr turned it over trying to pass it inside to Nivins – who was knocked to the ground by Bonner – Bonner made two free throws to put UMass ahead 68-65 with 17 seconds left.

But two free throws by Garrett Williamson, a careless turnover by Gaffney on the inbounds pass and Carr's two foul shots quickly and shockingly gave the Hawks the lead and UMass was seemingly headed to another last-minute loss.

Not this time.

"It's hard to describe, it's like the weight of the world has been lifted off of us," Gaffney said, reflecting on what has been a difficult past few weeks for the Minutemen.

"We were desperate for a win – we were like homeless people who beg – we were begging for a win," Lowe added, who became UMass' all-time leader in career assists, passing Carl Smith with 634 on his first assist of the game.

The Hawks (14-12, 7-5 A-10), who lost for the fourth straight game, shot 0-for-7 from 3-point range, ending a 495-game streak of making at least one 3-pointer. It also marked the nine-year anniversary since the last time a UMass opponent went a full game without one, which was Feb. 22, 2000 against Rhode Island.

UMass got contributions from just about everyone, as seven of the eight players who saw action scored at least five points. Gaffney led the way for the Minutemen with 17 points and 10 rebounds, while Lowe (13 points, seven assists) and Harris (11 points) also scored in double figures.

Nivins had 21 points and 11 rebounds to pace the Hawks. He had almost the exact performance (21 points, 12 rebounds) in SJU's 68-64 win over the Minutemen on Feb. 8 at the Mullins Center.

After finally breaking through, Gaffney sees this game as a turning point for the Minutemen, who sit in a tie for ninth place with La Salle in the conference standings.

"It's too bad that it has to be come this late in the season, but I think that our guys will feed off this and I think that we're finally ready to make a run in the conference," Gaffney said.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com

Chris Lowe scored 13 points this Sunday vs. Saint Joseph's, including two clutch free throws that gave UMass a 70-69 lead with two seconds left.

Mass Attack gets win in OT

HOCKEY from page 10

second goal UMass' top defenders were in the penalty box with 10-minute game misconducts – Nolet and Justin Braun. Alex Berry (10-minute misconduct) and Langeraap (five minute contact to the head roughing) were also in the box.

Brian Flynn tallied his second goal of the game (14:53) with a shot from the low slot past Dainton (31 saves) to put the score at 4-3.

Before the third period, though, UMass' offense was creating plays and crashing to the net. The Minutemen's first goal came at 2:15 in the first period when Berry crashed the net and Cory Quirk found the puck and stuffed it past Scott Darling (23 saves).

At 8:31 in the first, UMass (14-15-3, 9-11-3 Hockey East) tallied its second goal from Topher Bevis. Bevis, at the left point, received a cross-ice pass from Berry who was positioned in the right corner. Bevis took a hard wrist shot that went high past Darling.

James Marcou made the game 3-0 after receiving a pass from Casey Wellman in the slot and one-timing it past Darling at 3:59 in the second. At 9:00 in the second, T.J. Syner picked up a rebound in the low slot to score UMass' game-winning goal making the score 4-0.

"When you are up 4-0 you don't ever think the fourth goal is going to be a game winner," Syner said. "The penalties started to come our way and then we eventually had to kill penalties, which gets us out of the rhythm of things."

On Friday, the Minutemen chased Maine the entire game. Maine scored first at 1:17 in the first, and the teams traded goals for the remainder of the game. At 16:34 in the third, Langeraap tied the game at three apiece with a power-play goal to send the game into overtime.

Only 11 seconds into the overtime period Brian Keane scored the game-winning goal.

"We got in the neutral zone and [Brett] Watson made a nice [saucer] pass to [Jordan] Virtue and I was just flying, going to the net and redirected it five-hole," Keane said. "I think everyone should be able to do that once, I can't even describe it, it was great."

UMass' next time out is a home-and-home series with No. 1 Boston University starting Friday Feb. 27 at the Mullins Center (7:30 p.m.).

Game notes

James Marcou has had nine points in the last four games, including two in Saturday's game and three assists on Friday ... Bevis' goal was his first since UMass' 3-2 win over North Dakota on Oct. 11.

Before this weekend UMass and Maine were tied for seventh in Hockey East. The Minutemen are now tied for sixth in the Hockey East standings with Boston College at 21 points.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com

James Wellman – File Photo

A scrum breaks out in front of the Black Bears net during UMass' 4-3 victory on Saturday. The Minutemen held a 4-0 advantage entering the third period, then allowed three unanswered goals, but held on late to secure their third straight win.

Blum, Pedrick and Reale each score twice

M. LACROSSE from page 10

and made a great play. Card is an excellent player. He got real low to the ground and we had somebody sliding to him, but he got under us and as he was falling down he made the shot. Pretty unbelievable individual play there."

UMass started the game off strong, netting two goals in the first six minutes of the game. The Minutemen led the first quarter 3-2, but by halftime UMass had a 7-3 lead over the Pride.

The end of the first half was exciting; three goals were scored in 23 seconds. The Minutemen's fifth goal of the game came with 2:24 left in the half when Ryan Hantverk bounced the ball past Danny Orlando (five saves). Joe Reale won the faceoff, and sprinted down the field to score UMass' sixth goal just eight seconds later. But the Pride didn't let the two quick goals get the best of them; Stephen DeNapoli tallied a goal for the Pride 15 seconds later.

Hofstra dominated the start of the second half, scoring the only two goals in the third quarter and two more at the start of the fourth. The four unanswered goals tied the game at seven apiece – Hofstra's first tie of the game.

UMass took the lead again with 11 minutes remaining with a goal from Joe Reale, but less than two minutes later Hofstra tied it at eight. UMass saw two more goals from Even Blum and Rory Pedrick to take the lead again, 10-8.

With 2:44 remaining in the game, Hofstra's Michael Colleluori netted the Pride's ninth goal, and at 1:12 and 0:04 Jay Card scored the game-tying and game-winning goals.

The Minutemen (1-1) saw goals from seven players, including two-goal games by Blum, Pedrick and Reale. The Minutemen were hoping to finish better on Saturday than they had the week before against Sacred Heart (15-6 win). The Minutemen took 31 shots and scored 10 goals, scoring on 33 percent of their shots, an improvement from the week before.

"We had 21 shots in the first half and 10 shots in the second half. If you can't generate shots you aren't going to score goals and we weren't able to do that in the second half," Canella said.

Game notes

The loss to Hofstra was the first loss for UMass when scoring 10 or more goals since 2004, the Minutemen were 29-0 previously in scoring 10 or more ... UMass' goalkeeper Doc Schneider made eight saves in the loss ... Minutemen were outshot 31-56, they had 23 groundballs compared to Hofstra's 32 and they were slightly above 50 percent on faceoffs going 12-for-23.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com.

Lowe's career memorable

ROSENSWAIKE from page 10

throw heroics and his career as a Minuteman, let's take a look at some of his defining moments, best games, career achievements and other nifty tidbits.

Top 5 moments

Feb. 22, 2009: Lowe hits both free throws with two seconds remaining to give the Minutemen a thrilling 1-point win over the Hawks at the Palestra.

And oh yeah, he broke some record or something too.

It was classic C-Lowe, who penetrated and kicked it out for the 3-pointer, which Matt Glass swished through the net less than two minutes into Sunday's game – giving him his 634th assist to pass Carl Smith for the school record.

"It means a lot," Lowe said after Sunday's win. "Coach [Derek] Kellogg, Carmelo Travieso, Edgar Padilla, Carl Smith – there's been a lot of great point guards to come out of UMass. Records are made to be broken and hopefully someday someone will come in and break mine."

March 13, 2007: Lowe hits game-winner with less than two seconds remaining against Alabama at the Mullins Center in the first round of the 2007 NIT.

(Bonus points for not prematurely jumping into the stands to celebrate a la Rashaun Freeman.)

Feb. 5, 2008: Lowe registers career-highs in both assists (14) and rebounds (10) in only career triple-double (sixth in school history) against LaSalle in a blowout win.

(No phantom triple-double in that game ... can the same be said about all of Stephane Lasme's?)

Feb. 4, 2009: Lowe becomes 41st player in school history to score 1,000 career points in home win over Richmond.

(And the man in charge of coaching him only mustered up 712. Weak.)

Jan. 18, 2006: Lowe scores season-high 14 points, hands out seven assists and only turns the ball over two times in win over Fordham in first-career start as freshman.

Top 5 random thoughts

1. If Lowe surpasses Charlotte's DiJuan Harris for the A-10 lead in assists, he'll become the first player in conference history to lead the league in assists for three seasons. That's pretty cool, not to mention a tremendous accomplishment.

2. If UMass were to retire jersey number 14, whose would it be – Lowe's or Kellogg's? Can we decide now or should we wait until whenever Kellogg's UMass coaching tenure ends?

"Probably ... Chris Lowe's," answered Kellogg, with a chuckle.

3. What is it like to play for one coach for three years (Travis Ford), then switch to a new offensive system under a new coach for your senior season (Kellogg)?

4. It's a shame Lowe didn't make any of the three all-conference teams last season. The A-10 had a lot of very good players in 07-08, but he was certainly deserving of a spot somewhere. He did lead the league in assists and finish fourth in steals.

5. Lowe is the only player in school history – and just seventh in Atlantic 10 history – to register 1,000 points and 600 assists. Impressive.

Top tidbits (part I)

Sixth in A-10 history in assists (16 more to move into top 5) ... Had 26 assists and just six turnovers in final three games of 2008 NIT ... Thirteen double-digit assist games overall and seven this season. UMass records are 15 overall and eight in one season ... Can crack the UMass top 10 in steals (needs 10 more for 135), games played (needs two for 121) and minutes played (needs 96 more for 3,609) ... Has made "SportsCenter" top Plays three times in career (always Top 3).

Top tidbits (part II)

Will lead team in assists all four years ... Led team in minutes per game (31.0) as a freshman ... Set career highs in both minutes (42) and steals (five) in addition to hitting game-winner against Alabama in NIT ... Career-high in points is 23, which he did in wins over Marist and Rhode Island in 07-08 season.

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com

Returning Dainton key to UM success

STREAK from page 10

UMass received some help from New Hampshire this weekend, UNH swept its weekend series with the Eagles.

Dainton

This weekend Paul Dainton started both games in net for the Minutemen. Freshly recovered from a recent flu spell, the sophomore showed no sign of lingering effects. Dainton stopped 21 shots Friday and 31 shots Saturday in one of his best back-to-back performances of the year.

The sophomore looked confident throughout the weekend, skating outside his crease to challenge Black Bear attackers. The net minder controlled the rebounds, giving his opposition minimal second-chance opportunities.

"I thought he played extremely well," Cahoon said. "He made some critical saves, he looked like he was seeing the puck real well. I was disappointed for him in the sense that I would have liked to see him get a little bit more help from the team as a whole."

Dainton has posted a goals-against average of 2.54, a .914 save percentage and a 10-10-1 record on the season.

Power play

For the two-game set against Maine, the Minutemen went 3-for-8 on the power play. On Friday night, UMass scored three times with the man advantage, going 3-for-6, carrying the Minutemen into overtime.

"We were moving the puck around really well," Casey Wellman said. "Our main goal right now is to just try and get the puck to the net. Earlier we were trying to make some fancy plays and then we got back to the basics and we've just had a lot of good point shots and just been working around the net."

The power play looked as good as it has all season. The line acted swiftly but cautiously. With Wellman's and Marcou's shiftiness and stick-handling the Minutemen were able to weave their way around defenders and set up scoring lanes.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Need An Apartment?
Pufton Village
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Disappointing A-10's

Track teams earn 6th, 7th place finishes in championship meet

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams finished seventh and sixth at the Atlantic-10 championships as Charlotte cruised to claim both crowns.

In the men's division, the 49ers soared past Rhode Island 218-152. Sophomore Darius Law led the way with wins in the 400 meter dash (48.78 seconds) and the 200 meter dash (21.77) en route to being named the A-10 Men's Track Performer of the Year. Teammate Sam Jordan earned Rookie of the Year honors after finishing first in the 55-meter dash with a time of 6.35. 49ers coach Bob Olesen was named Coach of the Year.

For the Minutemen, the top performances of the weekend came from sophomore Daniel Schwartz and freshman Philip Weltman. Schwartz ranked third in the heptathlon and earned six of UMass' 51 points. He took first in the 1000 meter run (2:43.13), as well as third in both the shot put (13 feet, 2.5 inches) and pole vault (12-03.50). Weltman, who has emerged as a strong contributor for the Minutemen, finished third in the 400 meters with a time of 50.08.

"I am a little disappointed," said UMass coach Ken O'Brien. "I thought we'd fight for fourth or fifth. The effort was there, but some things just didn't work out."

Junior Ryan DiOrio and sophomore Sean Duncan each finished in the top five in the 800-meter run. DiOrio claimed fourth place by finishing in 1:56.95, while Duncan finished right behind him with a time of 1:57.86. In the mile, sophomore Zachary Gordon finished fifth (4:20.28) while senior Josh Boone finished eighth (4:21.77).

In the short events, notable performances came from sophomore Darius Velez and junior Tyler Cotto. Velez finished the 55 meter dash in 6.51 for a fifth place finish. Cotto ranked seventh in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 7.82.

The Charlotte women's team overcame early struggles to earn their fourth-consecutive A-10 crown, a conference record. After slipping to fourth after the meet's first six events, the 49ers rebounded and finished with 175 points, 36 ahead of second place Dayton. Senior Lamarra Currie paced the 49ers with a first place finish in the 55 meter dash (6.99).

However, the most impressive performance of the day came from the Dayton trio of sophomore Johnna Zaccari, junior Molly McCarthy and Mallory Barnes. Zaccari finished first in the shot put by breaking her own school record with a throw of 45-11.25.

UMass sophomores Stephanie Aguguo and Ida Okkonen jumped their way into the school's record books with their performances in the triple jump. Aguguo finished fourth and qualified for the ECAC's with a jump of 38-6.00, the third-farthest jump in UMass history. Okkonen's jump of 36-10 was good enough for fifth place on the UMass all-time list and eighth overall at the A-10's.

In the track events, freshman Claire Petit and sophomore Liz Fisk recorded season-best times for the Minutewomen. Petit scored four points by finishing fifth in the 800 meter run with a time of 2:15.46. Fisk finished 13th in the mile by recording a time of 5:12.14. Holly Heinricher stayed consistent with a sixth place finish in the 200 meters (25.82). Redshirt sophomore Shiyi Zan (3000 meters) and junior Brittany Bakanowski (500 meter) each placed eighth in their respective events.

The UMass men's and women's team return to action Friday afternoon for the New England Championships at Boston University.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu

The Massachusetts men's track and field team huddles up before the start of a meet. The Minutemen were somewhat disappointed with their seventh-place finish in the Atlantic 10 Championships this weekend.

Minutewomen lock up tournament berth

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Even without its biggest post presence for most of the game, freshman forward Kristina Danella recorded her first career double-double and grabbed a career-high 12 rebounds, as the Massachusetts women's basketball team clinched a spot in the Atlantic 10 tournament with a 58-52 victory over Rhode Island Sunday afternoon.

"When you look at it, it was an ugly game," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "We struggled to find the bottom of the bucket, we struggled with rebounding in the first half, but we got to the foul line."

The Minutewomen (11-16, 4-8 A-10) were 6-of-8 from the line in the first half, with the Rams (9-18, 2-10 A-10) not even attempting a free-throw attempt.

Sophomore forward Teya Wright suffered a head injury near the end of the first half and did not return to the game.

"They said she had a concussion, I think they were more concerned with her head and me not playing her and playing it safe," Dacko said.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 58 |
| URI | 52 |

UMass responded, as Danella grabbed 10 defensive rebounds and senior guard Stefanie Gerardot added a team-high 13 points including shooting 8-for-9 from the free throw line.

The second half effort helped UMass get its first sweep of URI since the 1999-2000 campaign.

"It's nice to get them twice because we really struggle with Rhode Island on the second go around," Dacko said.

The Minutewomen had trouble finding their shot early, shooting 25 percent from the field in the first half and just 4-of-13 from three-point range.

The Rams also were looking for answers offensively, with just two players hitting more than one free throw in a first half characterized by four ties and six lead changes.

UMass coach Marnie Dacko and the Minutewomen officially clinched a berth in the Atlantic 10 Tournament with a 58-52 win over URI.

UMass started the game on a 5-0 run and took a one point lead at halftime (21-22) with a three-pointer by sophomore forward Cerie Mosgrove with just under two minutes to play in the first half.

Mosgrove, who has come off the bench as of late for Danella, broke out of a scoring slump and added nine points, going 3-for-6 from beyond the arc.

"We came in the second half and persevered and stuck with it and worked really hard on the floor without a post presence in Teya Wright," Dacko said.

URI opened the second half with an 8-2 run, building its largest advantage of the afternoon with a 29-24 lead.

UMass responded with eight straight points to pull ahead, and never lost the lead in part to a number of clutch 3-pointers by Danella.

With just over 12 minutes left in regulation, she hit back-to-back shots and then gave the Minutewomen a four point lead.

A pair of free throws narrowed the lead to three points with 52 seconds remaining, but again Danella stepped up and hit another 3-pointer with 26 seconds left to seal the victory for UMass.

Senior guard Sakera Young had eight points along with four assists and three steals while redshirt sophomore Diatemia Hill had four assists and two steals in the win.

The Minutewomen kept the Rams under their points per game average (53) and allowed just one URI player to reach double figures.

Guard Lindsay Harris had a game high 15 points along with six rebounds, three assists and three steals.

Guard Meghan Shoniker added nine points, two assists and two steals and forward Sierra Cooper had a team-high eight rebounds and five points.

Wright's status is still unknown for Wednesday's game, when the Minutewomen travel to Saint Joseph's in its final road game of the season. Tipoff is slated for 8 p.m.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Wright injured as Avebe, Lawrence step up for UMass

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

With sophomore forward Teya Wright leaving the game late in the first half with an apparent concussion, the Massachusetts women's basketball team was forced to play the majority of the game with their best post presence sitting on the bench.

Instead of adjusting their game and allowing Rhode Island to control the game inside, UMass got major contributions from its bench in the form of sophomores Valerie Avebe and Stephanie Lawrence.

No contribution was bigger, though, than that of freshman Kristina Danella who, after a series of off games, came back in a big way with her first career double-double with 11 points and 12 rebounds.

While it took her until the second half to hit her stride, Danella showed that she was on the mark by once again becoming a major threat from behind the arc while incorporating post play that had been absent from her repertoire for most of the season.

The re-emergence was complete when, with 26 seconds left, Danella knocked down a 3-pointer to give UMass a 56-50 lead, sealing the game.

Even with Danella returning to form shooting-wise, UMass still needed someone to make up for Wright's absence in the post. So it fell to Danella and Lawrence to be a presence inside and stop URI from ramming the ball down low.

Lawrence, who had seen limited minutes in recent games, logged 19 minutes on the floor and was given the assignment of defending the Rams' post player. So while she was limited to only three points and three rebounds, Lawrence's presence inside was felt on the defensive side of the ball where Wright is usually the pillar.

Shooting droughts

At one point in the first half, both teams were shooting a pedestrian 20 percent from the field in a first half that amounted to both teams combining for 43 points.

Not only were both UMass and URI taking bad looks from the field and missing on the initial shot, but both teams were shooting just as poorly on second chance shots.

UMass' shot selection heavily contributed to their poor shooting performance as it settled for mostly jump shots rather than driving inside. The Minutewomen scored only four points in the paint during the first half.

The overload of jump shots was caused, in part, by Wright's absence. With no post player on the Minutewomen able to consistently attack the interior defense for the Rams, the team's perimeter shooters took over. On the night, the Minutewomen attempt 30 3-pointers, connecting on 10 of them.

Not-so-free throws

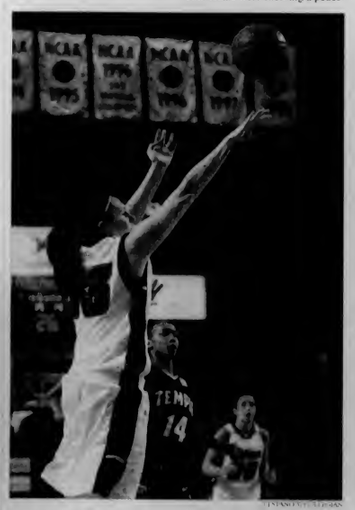
Normally one of the most consistent free throw shooters on the team, senior guard Sakera Young started off the Minutewomen's day from the charity stripe by missing the team's first two free throws and making only 1-of-4 for the game.

Young's performance, however, was a stark contrast to the rest of the team's performance from the line as UMass beat out URI from the free throw line by going 14-of-19 compared to the Rams' 10-of-12.



The Minutewomen made six shots during the first half, four of them behind the arc. Fortunately for them, though, they also hit six free throws, the only area in which UMass rose above the offensive mire that was the first half. Rhode Island, incidentally, was 9-of-35 from the first half but didn't score from the free throw line.

However small, that edge was enough to give the Minutewomen the lead going into the second half – something that they've struggled to do all season.

It was not until 6 minutes and 28 seconds into the second half that the Rams attempted their first free throw. Although it started late, URI ended up hitting 10 free throws on the night and used that to stay in the game late, when the Minutewomen got hot shooting.

Free throws are a vital aspect of the UMass offense as UMass Coach Marnie Dacko relies heavily on her smaller guards to slash inside for layups and to draw fouls.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Freshman Kristina Danella had her first career double-double with 11 points and 12 boards to lead the Minutewomen past the Rams.

GET AHEAD
EARN COLLEGE CREDIT
ON A SUMMER SCHEDULE

ENJOY THE FLEXIBILITY, CONVENIENCE, AND REWARDS OF SUMMER

Summer Session at Northeastern University's College of Professional Studies offers a wide range of courses that meets your needs — whether you want to earn transfer credits or enroll in a graduate or undergraduate program. You'll find just the course you need while taking advantage of the educational resources of Northeastern University.

FEATURING

- Graduate and Undergraduate Programs
- 4-week, 6-week, and 8-week flexible course formats
- Courses offered in Boston, Burlington, and online
- A full sequence of science courses that can be completed in 12 weeks
- Financial options available for both degree and non-degree students

SUMMER SESSION CLASSES START JUNE 1ST, JULY 6TH, AND AUGUST 3RD

To register and for more information visit:
www.northeastern.edu/cps/summersession | 1.877.668.7727

Northeastern University College of Professional Studies

ISN'T FREE.

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | 2 | | | 7 | 1 |
| | | 6 | | | | | 8 |
| | 2 | | | 1 | | 3 | 4 |
| 2 | | | 4 | 3 | 6 | | |
| | | | 9 | | 1 | | |
| | | 3 | 8 | 6 | | | 7 |
| | 7 | 5 | | 8 | | 6 | |
| 4 | | | | | 9 | | |
| 1 | 9 | | | 4 | | | |

ACROSS
1 Ghana's capital
6 U.N.S. subject
9 Sufficient
14 Trademark yarn
15 Horror film street
16 Apple discards
17 Hang loosely
18 Recliners and rockers
20 Spanky's pal
22 WSW opposite
23 One of the Stooges
24 Mach+ jets
25 Prevaricators
27 Blood line
28 Yiddish aggravation
30 On a roll
31 Make up for 34 Give additional sops
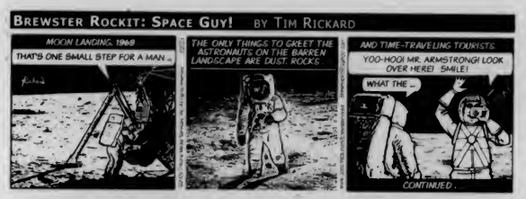
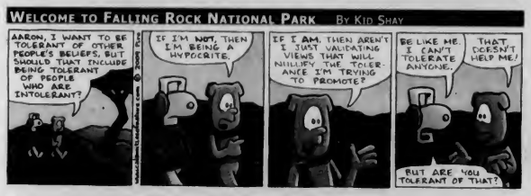
38 Tavern brew
39 Dwells
41 Marsh or West
42 Yom Kippur prayer
44 Trims to a point
46 Harass for payment
47 Small landmasses
49 Prana
51 Change to fit
52 Wyatt of the Old West
56 High mount
57 Director Lupino
58 One who pretends
60 Leveling device
63 "A Bell for ___"
64 Torch jobs
65 Writer Kesey
66 Snooped
67 Analyze chemically
68 Pacino and Kaline
69 Curvy letters

DOWN
1 Robert and Alan
2 Ringlets
3 Vessel
4 Meals
5 Lipinski leap
6 Sputter's inhalations
7 Calculator key abbr.
8 Enveloped completely
9 Dull pain
10 Bygone bird
11 '76-11 on TV
12 "Slave Ship" author Jones
13 Ruhr Valley city
19 Spinal cord, etc.
21 Like some columns
26 Most open to the breeze
27 Type of sch.
29 Old World inch
30 Attacks
31 Sturdy tree
32 Mr. Ziegfeld
33 Group of minerals
35 ___ out (dwindles)
36 Distant
37 Alternative
40 Island nation
43 Wacko
45 Phones
48 Gains knowledge
49 Tel Aviv-___
50 Perry of fashion
51 Citrus drink
53 Gather
54 "Chicago" star Zellweger
55 Goads
57 Teeny
59 Of sound mind
61 Pekoe, e.g.
62 Slippery one

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!



WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



Continuing & Professional Education
UMass Amherst Outreach
THINK AHEAD
Two 6-week summer sessions
Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net
Registration begins March 9
SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

Quote of the Day

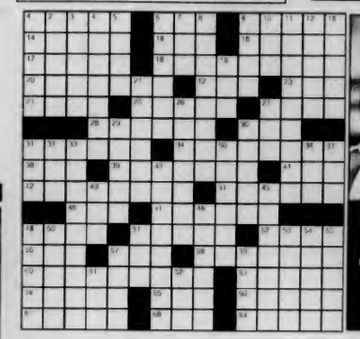
"Fall not in love, therefore; it will stick to your face."

— National Lampoon, "Deteriorata"



Are you a photographer?
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN is hiring photographers
Build your resume and get your photos published for over 10,000 people to see each day!
Send an email to photo@dailycollegian.com for more information

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Tonight you'll finally catch the person who has been breaking into your house at night to use your very fine toilet apparatus.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Area 51: Now featuring bumper boats and miniature golf, only two miles off I-90 (take a right at the Denny's)!

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You are as brilliant as Lil' Wayne in the midst of a rap battle with himself in the shower.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You are the best thing that ever happened to those around you. Constantly mention it, so they don't forget.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
When starting your cult, remember that it can be helpful to take tips from the 2001 self-help book "I Am God: Hear Me Roar."

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Despite the deadly mine collapse in China, you are able to enjoy your snacks from the McDonald's Value Menu with peace of mind.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Did you like watch the Oscars last nite?! Like OMG, I can't believe she was wearing that!

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The nutritional value of sawdust is minimal, yet it is quite filling. Your previous business ventures have failed, but this is promising.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
This is a fine evening for renting the Will Smith film "Wild Wild West" and drinking a French wine of the same vintage.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Even though today you will be tragically cut down in a horrible sequence of events, you yourself will do nothing wrong. Gold star.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will boycott Kellogg's products, but not because of Michael Phelps ... It will be because you found nails in your Corn Pops.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You will be able to find the information you need at www.webmd.com/inflammatory_bowel_disease.

Classifieds

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Survey Takers Needed: Make $5 - $25 per survey. Do it in your spare time. www.GetPaidToThink.com

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lake-front cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, lifeguarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders, & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

Announcement

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076. Sign up at Campus Center Feb. 20

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-2337

For Rent

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room eat in kitchen, pantry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 miles to campus! www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Amherst 2, 3, & 4 Bedroom Apartments. Call for huge rent specials on both Immediate and Summer/Fall rentals! Beautiful property on the bus line to Umass. Air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Free Heat! 2 BR $1200-$1250, 3 BR $1500-$1550, 4 BR $2250. www.MillValleyApts.com 413-253-7377 or stop by at 420 Riverglade Drive.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Streaking at the right time

UMass forward Casey Wellman collides with Maine goaltender Scott Darling. Wellman totaled four points in the Minutemen's two-game homestand against the Black Bears. He had one goal and three assists.

Senior forward Alex Berry notched assists on both of UMass' first period goals in the Minutemen's second 4–3 victory over Maine in as many nights. Berry has 10 goals and 15 assists so far this season.

Minutemen notch two straight 4–3 victories over Black Bears

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This weekend the Massachusetts hockey team hosted Maine in a two-game series, winning both games, 4-3, but in completely different ways.

On Saturday night the Minutemen went into the third period leading 4-0. The offense was creating plays and the defense was stopping them with little hesitation. But come the third period, UMass did what it has been known to do – get into some sort of penalty trouble.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 4 |
| Maine | 3 |

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 4 |
| Maine | 3 |

The first sign of danger came with a third-period penalty at three minutes, 54 seconds by Chase Langeraap, but the one that kicked off Maine's scoring spree was Martin Nolet's tripping and 10-minute misconduct call. In the third period alone UMass had 53 penalty minutes, while Maine had 26.

"We were goaded into it I believe to some extend," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "That was a good way to change the completion of the game, the rhythm of the game. We took the bait and put ourselves in a real bad situation."

Maine (12-16-4, 7-13-3 Hockey East) scored its first goal at 8:33 while it was on a 5-on-3 advantage when Nolet and Michael Lecomte were sitting in the box.

The next two goals came from 4-on-4 situations. At 12:40 in the third, Jeff Dimmen took a wrist shot that glided through Dainton's legs from the right faceoff circle. For the

See HOCKEY on page 7

Mass Attack makes late surge as regular season winds down

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It took four months and 11 days, but the Massachusetts hockey team finally has a winning streak of more than two games going, thankfully for them, it's come at the most critical time of season.

The Minutemen swept the Maine Black Bears this past weekend at the Mullins Center with a 4-3 win Friday night in overtime. UMass also won by the same score Saturday night, nearly surrendering its four-goal lead.

"We'll take the four points and be very happy to move on," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "How we got the four points will be what we really need to address."

UMass had a four-goal lead heading into the third period. The Black Bears stormed back to pull to 4-3 with only minutes to go. Emotions ran high in the third period and the Minutemen lost control of their actions, as well as their words.

"We were goaded into it I believe to some extent," Cahoon said of the Maine's overzealous physicality. "That was a good way to change the rhythm of the game and we took the bait and put ourselves in a real bad situation. We then got a few undisciplined reactions with the referees, which created a situation where I have a couple of guys sitting off the ice for long stretches."

"The penalties started to come our way and we eventually had to kill penalties, which got us out of the rhythm of things, which we don't like," freshman forward T.J. Syner said. "It just throws everything off."

This weekend's games gave UMass fans a reason to be optimistic, but also a reason to have doubts. With four games left, the Minutemen are tied for sixth place with Boston College.

See STREAK on page 7

UMass loses in final seconds

Second half struggles lead to road loss against Hofstra

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's lacrosse team dominated the first half of Saturday afternoon's game against Hofstra, but the team struggled during the second half on both ends of the field.

"It was a very exciting game obviously, a tale of two halves," UMass coach Greg Canella said. "The first half we played very well on the offensive end and the defensive end. We struggled both ways in the second half, particularly on the offensive end where we didn't do a good job of handling the ball and making good decisions on the ball in the second half."

UMass led Hofstra the entire game, but with four seconds remaining and the score tied at 10 apiece, the Pride notched their 11th goal, giving them their first lead of the game, and the 11-10 win.

Hofstra had been controlling the ball for the last minute of the game in UMass' defensive end when Jay Card scored the game-winning goal.

| | |
|---|---|
| Hofstra | 11 |
| UMass | 10 |

"They were going for sort of a last shot, they were holding the ball and holding the ball waiting for the last shot and we were hoping we could come up with a stop, make a save and go into overtime," Canella said. "I think they were out of an invert set and they moved the ball a couple times

See M. LACROSSE on page 7

The Minutemen lost in heartbreaking fashion Saturday, as the Pride scored the game-winning goal with four seconds left in regulation.

Lowe greatest point guard in UM history

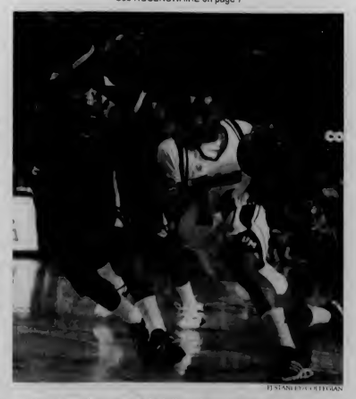
Eli Rosenswaike

PHILADELPHIA — Move over Derek Kellogg, you're not even the best point guard on your own team.

I'll give you some credit for the really sweet hair, the four NCAA Tournament appearances as a player and being named the head coach of your alma mater, but your statistics say you're not even the best UMass point guard to wear jersey number 14.



That honor goes to current floor general Chris Lowe.

Statistical superiority and genuine ability don't necessarily go hand-in-hand, but one thing is for certain: no player that has ever put on a UMass jersey has more assists than Lowe – who passed Carl Smith Sunday for the school record with 640 helpers.

Like any player, Lowe has had some ups and downs – on and off the court – in his four years at UMass, but they've been mostly good, mostly positive and often entertaining. Perhaps none more so than the final two seconds of Sunday's game, when Lowe hit two of the most clutch free throws in one of the toughest environments that a player could ever face to defeat Saint Joseph's 70-69.

In honor of Lowe's career-assist accomplishment, his late free-

See ROSENSWAIKE on page 7

Chris Lowe, shown against La Salle on Jan. 24, broke the all-time assist record Sunday against Saint Joseph's. Lowe now has 640 career assists.

A tough stretch out west

No. 15 Minutewomen go 2–3 overall, defeat No. 7 ASU

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This weekend the No. 15 Massachusetts softball team traveled to Cathedral City, Calif. to participate in the Cathedral City Classic against some of the toughest competition in the nation. UMass won two of its five games, falling to three teams ranked nationally in the top 10.

Sunday afternoon the Minutewomen (6-4) had one of their toughest tests of this early season in No. 7 Arizona State, yet still managed to earn a 1-0 victory. After pitching four innings just hours ago in their previous game against Oklahoma, Brandice Balschmiter pitched a complete game shutout – striking out eight and only surrendering two hits.

The Minutewomen's lone run was scored by production in the bottom of the lineup. Davina Hernandez doubled with one out in the inning and Kyllie Magill followed up with a RBI single that drove in Hernandez.

Balschmiter, who had a no-hitter through the seventh, ran into a bit of trouble closing out the game. After an ASU player hit a single with one out, catcher Jessica Serio helped out her counterpart by throwing out the runner on an attempted steal. The next hitter singled and the next two followed with walks. Balschmiter, no novice to dramatics, calmed down and struck out the next batter for the final out of the game.

UMass 14, N.C. State 0

The team's opening game on Friday against North Carolina State was over shortly after it started. UMass won 14-0 led by superb pitching by Brandice Balschmiter and a four RBI day from Kyllie Magill. Balschmiter pitched six innings striking out four and only allowing three hits. Magill cleared the bases, hitting a bases-loaded triple to push the Minutewomen to a 7-0 advantage.

Shortstop Whitney Williams also had an impressive day at the plate. The junior went 3-for-4 with three doubles, starting the first inning rally.

No. 9 Tenn. 6, UMass 1

The second game of the day didn't go so smoothly for the Minutewomen on Friday. UMass lost, 6-1, and was held to only four hits and struck out seven times. In the first inning the Minutewomen went down early, 2-0. UT's lead-off hitter Jessica Spignor led off the inning with a double. Spignor wasn't on base long – Shelby Burchell hit a two-run homerun to right field.

UT would score another run before the side was retired.

Minutewomen Bailey Sanders and Sara Plourde both pitched three innings apiece in the loss. Sanders finished the game allowing three hits, four runs and walking one. Plourde allowed three hits, two runs, walked three and struck out four.

No. 6 UCLA 4, UMass 2

The second day of the Cathedral City Classic didn't start any better for the Minutewomen. UMass lost to the Bruins in a hard-fought game, 4-2. Balschmiter pitched six innings giving up six hits, four earned runs while striking out five.

Michelle Libby had two hits and an RBI for the Minutewomen and Samantha Salato blasted a homerun in the only offensive production for UMass all game.

No. 4 Okla. 5, UMass 3

UMass' losing streak reached three games on Sunday as the Sooners beat the Minutewomen, 5-3. Salato was the star offensively for UMass, knocking in two runs on two hits.

Balschmiter pitched four innings giving up five runs on five hits. Plourde finished the game, pitching three hitless innings.

Hernandez knocked in UMass' second run.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HI: 31 LO: 20 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 2009

Ridebuzz joins with Dean's

BY MATT ROCHELEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Dozens of students lined up to get the world's first taste of a new flavor of coffee as two local companies announced their partnership during a marketing class at the University of Massachusetts on Monday afternoon.

In Mahar Auditorium, Ridebuzz.org founder Jeffrey D. Brown and Dean's Beans founder Dean Cycon unveiled the new "Community Supporting Ridebuzz Coffee" before the Isenberg School of Management's Introduction to Marketing course, taught by professor Doron Goldman.

Ridebuzz, based out of Amherst, is a non-profit organization that helps residents in the Pioneer Valley, including students at the Five Colleges, carpool by providing them with a free ridesharing website, ridebuzz.org, where people can connect in a format similar to online social networking.

Dean's Beans, of Orange, Mass., is a fair-trade and organic coffee roasting company that supports the farmers from whom they get their coffee beans through People-Centered Development projects.

All profits from the sale of Ridebuzz Coffee will be donated to support its rideshare program.

Some of the students in Goldman's class, and all 30 from his Sales and Distribution Strategy class, will work with

See COFFEE on page 2

The new "Ridebuzz Coffee" is both fair-trade and organic. The brand is a partnership between Ridebuzz.org and Dean's Beans Coffee.

A march to action

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In an attempt to bring attention and spur action against the vote to increase fees next semester, several University of Massachusetts graduate students have decided to take a walk – all the way from Amherst to Dartmouth, Mass.

The group is protesting the proposal that would raise undergraduate fees at UMass by $1,500 and graduate fees by $1,020 for next fiscal year. The proposal is being voted on this Friday, Feb. 27, in Dartmouth by the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees.

"We are walking 107 miles in four days," said Scott Salus, vice president of the Graduate Student Senate (GSS). "We will get there by Friday morning. Our hope is to get the attention of the trustees. [The walk] is a physical representation of the struggle that they are putting the graduate students and undergraduates through."

Composed of five graduate student senators and officers, the group, who have entitled their expedition "Ready to Walk Against the Fee Increase" departed on Monday from the Haigis Mall at 9 a.m. They plan to stay over at different locations each night.

"There are five of us, with people joining along the way. We are also trying to get as many people on the bus as possible," said Salus.

Group members will also update their blogs, Facebook accounts and Twitter each night let others know about their trip and about the protest.

In addition, the GSS, along with the Student Government Association (SGA), Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) and other organizations are providing a free bus ride for students to take to Dartmouth to protest the proposal at the Board of Trustees meeting on Friday.

The bus will leave from the Haigis Mall at 5 a.m., and will include free coffee and doughnuts.

Nabir Otono Garcia, president of the GSS, explained that she is walking in protest of fee hikes that could potentially stop students from being able to afford to attend UMass, a public university whose tuition and fees are designed to be more accessible to those with financial difficulties.

"I am walking to support graduate and undergraduate students, to avoid the rise in fees. For people like me, international students, who can't get a second job, and are not eligible for more financial aid. We are the working poor," said Otano Garcia.

Antonia Carcelen, another walker, criticized the administration's chance to vote on raising fees, adding "[the trustees] are just looking for easy decisions. They are not willing to give up anything from an administrative point of view."

For Salus, the most important aspect of the walk is to gain the attention of all UMass students, both graduate and undergraduate.

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebenedictis@dailycollegian.com.

The "Ready to Walk: Against the Fee Increases" graduate student group began its four-day journey to Dartmouth, Mass., yesterday. The distance is approximately 107 miles.

CRC holds protest against Kellogg Co.

Phelps' firing encites rally

BY ADRIENNE WICKHAM-GOBERT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Cannabis Reform Coalition (CRC), a registered student organization at the University of Massachusetts, gathered with other students outside the Student Union Monday in protest of Kellogg Cereal Company's decision to fire Michael Phelps after a picture of the Olympic gold medalist swimmer smoking marijuana while using a bong surfaced in a British tabloid.

The photo resulted in his suspension from USA Swimming for three months. In addition, the national governing body of swimming cut off its financial support for the same three-month period.

Kellogg Co. announced it would not be renewing its sponsorship contract with Phelps, saying his behavior is "not consistent with the image of Kellogg." The swimmer has appeared on the company's cereal boxes since his success at the 2008 Beijing Olympics last summer.

UMass' CRC argues that this is hypocritical as Kellogg's never took issue with, and still willingly endorsed Phelps, after he was arrested for drunken driving in 2004, an action that could have harmed or killed somebody.

Terry Franklin, a liaison to the campus from an off-campus legalization movement group, made a brief speech the Student Union steps.

"The disturbing thing is that [Kellogg's] belief and attitude is tied with the law ... believe what you want but don't use force and violence against those who believe differently, for that is what you authorize when you make it a matter of criminal law," said Franklin.

He was joined by activists that chanted, "Buy dime bags, not cereal", "Kellogg's hates stoners!", "Buy generic" and "Say no to Pop Tarts" among others. Many held up signs that

See CRC RALLY on page 3

Lincoln remembered on his 200th

To honor the 200th anniversary of President Abrahan Lincoln's birth, Harvard professor John Stauffer, above, spoke at the University of Massachusetts on Monday in Memorial Hall. His lecture was entitled "Remembering Lincoln in the Time of Obama." Stauffer joined UMass professors Manisha Sinha and John Bracey in the celebration of Lincoln. Stauffer's book, Rebel Giants, which featured the life of Lincoln along with Frederick Douglass, has gained recent media attention from a blog entry by President Barack Obama.

– Lisa DeBenedictis, Collegian Staff

ARTS & LIVING

CELTIC BEATLES

UMass alumnus, Brian Hebert and friends join together to create a Beatles tribute album with their own creative flare.

SEE PAGE

SPORTS

HARSH LESSONS

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team suffered a 16-4 loss, but gained valuable experience after facing No. 6 Maryland on Saturday.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION

UMASS SOCIOLOGY PROFESSOR DAN CLAWSON OFFERS A DIFFERENT APPROACH TO THE UNIVERSITY'S PROPOSALS TO SAVE SOME CASH.

SEE PAGE 4

EDITORAL & OPINION

GREG COLLINS – IF IRAQIS HAD LISTENED TO AMERICAN POLITICIANS AND PUNDITS THEY MAY HAVE NEVER REALIZED THEIR OWN CAPABILITY AND THE TRUE POWER OF DEMOCRACY

SEE PAGE 4

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 21

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Wosiezuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olwin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor James Matthews
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenwaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor P.J. Stanley
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnszer
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Koczwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Tartimen
Asst. Editorial Leigh Greaney
Asst. Editorial Nick O'Malley
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo Ryan Fung
Assistant Photo Matthew Harrison
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Wellver

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Daily Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1998. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Joe Meloni

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION TEAM
Dan Centola

Campus Perspectives
What is your opinion on this matter?

By Alyssa Creamer, Collegian Staff

The UMass administration has set the tentative student fee increase to $1,500 for next fiscal year. The Graduate Student Senate, who is also seeing a $1,020 increase in fees, began a four day walk to Dartmouth to protest this increase. Do you think that students should accept this fee increase as an inevitable result of the economic crisis, or should students press the administration to pursue alternate methods to save money?

freshman
Anthropology major

"Administration should pursue an alternate method even with the economic crisis, because people need to go back to school so they can get better jobs. It seems irrational to have that much of an increase, because if people can't afford to go to school, then they can't get better jobs. And that is not going to help the economy."

Ryanne Beaulieu

sophomore
Biology major

"I think the administration had been clear on their attempts to save money by looking at all options. I believe that Chancellor Holub has made it very clear that he is exploring all possible ways to get money, and that he recognizes that these are hard times for students. I have faith in him that this increase is only so the school can save enough money."

Patrick Savickas

junior
History major

"I think students should accept the fee. I'm all for student protests, but I think there is little they can do. I've participated in other student protests and the outcome is never favorable."

Mike Thacker

junior Theater major

"I think students should just accept it. It's not the school trying to take money—it's the result of economy issues."

Courtney McCarthy

Coffee brand formed for non-profit group

COFFEE from page 1

Ridebuzz during the spring semester to help the carpooling company and give the students some real-world experience.

"Students will be honing their environmentally and socially responsible business skills while working with Ridebuzz," said a statement from Ridebuzz.

Following the coffee's introduction and announcing the two companies joining together, Cycon gave a presentation on what Dean's Beans does to help coffee growers.

Cycon said he started out as a lawyer because he wanted to use the profession as his way of bringing justice to the world, but found that being a lawyer was not for him.

"I realized nothing in the planet would ever change unless business changed the way it operates," Cycon said.

The coffee comes in two flavors, dark roasted Nicaraguan, and a medium roasted Colombian.

Students poured cups of the new coffee and commented on its debut.

"If I pictured coffee in my head, this is what it would taste like," said junior Chris Perruzzi, an accounting major.

"This coffee is exceptional," agreed Robert Doane, a junior majoring in finance.

Others felt the fresh brew was not bad, but not up to par with well-known brands like Dunkin' Donuts and Starbucks.

"I think it needs to be fine tuned a bit," said junior management major Ron Aylward.

Ridebuzz Coffee will be carried by local businesses, River Valley Market in Northampton will the first to offer it.

The beverage can be purchased online at www.ridebuzz.org/coffee.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

Interning a challenge

By Melissa Lobwinger
The Daily Princetonian

Operations research and financial engineering (ORFE) majors lined up with English majors and pre-meds Friday to hand their resumes to recruiters from the pharmaceutical organization Merck, one of the 46 companies represented at the annual Career Services internship fair.

In the crowded Frist Multipurpose Room, more than 150 students engaged in what Jessica Westerman '12 called "the frantic search for jobs" that has emerged this year.

In the continually shrinking job market, students who once would have sought internships in specific, specialized industries are broadening their searches, Westerman added.

"There are a lot of people out there looking for something, just throwing their applications out," she said.

Students looking for summer internships in organizations in the financial industry are facing even stiffer competition than usual this year, employers said. As several of these companies scale back their internship programs, many prospective interns are choosing to branch out and apply for summer jobs in other industries.

Small companies with little name recognition, many of which offer only unpaid internships, are also experiencing higher demand for their limited positions, recruiters said.

The internship shortage has been good news for some employers, though, as the shrinking number of jobs in the big banking and finance firms is forcing many students to explore other options.

"In terms of highly qualified candidates, there are more today as opposed to even last year," said Michael Doyle, managing director and recruiter from Novahill Partners, a small boutique investment bank based in Princeton. "I think it's supply and demand. There are fewer jobs out there."

According to a new Jobfox poll, 76 percent of the 200 recruiters polled said that the recession is an opportunity to bring in higher quality job candidates.

"[The economic situation] certainly has changed," said Alan Barnes '08, a recruiter for the financial news and data company Bloomberg. "You see guys that had jobs, and suddenly they didn't have jobs ... There's a lot more people who are like, 'Jobs? Jobs?'"

Economics major Randy Wang '10 said he was having trouble finding jobs in finance. "There are just fewer opportunities, because so many of the big banks that were once here are now gone," he said.

"I'm looking more into investment banking, and there's only one investment bank here, and it's a boutique firm."

ORFE major Teck Hsien Ho '10 agreed that it's been difficult to find a job that fits his career goals this year. "Maybe [that's] because of the recession, maybe because of some other factors, but definitely it's been a challenge so far," Ho said.

your week ahead on Daily Collegian

INTRODUCING NEWSGARDEN

Follow news geographically with dailycollegian.com's new application

NEWS

Video: See more of what conservative radio talk show host Michael Graham had to say at UMass Tuesday night

Slideshow: Catch the UMass Juggling Club in action.

Video: Wednesday Daily Collegian editors and reporters provide a wrap of the campus' budget crisis and Chancellor Holub's reaction to it in the "War Room."

Blog: This Week Read the latest in UMass research, politics and student life for the week on The Collegian's news blogs. News editor Will McGuinness tells of going under the knee for UMass kinesiology

SPORTS

Slideshow: See the highlights of the UMass Min's basketball game against URI through the lense of a Collegian photographer.

ARTS

Live Blogging: Read Academy Awards coverage from Daily Collegian film critic Kevin Koczwara who "tweeted" during last night's program.

2X Tuesday
Domino's Pizza
Buy any large pizza, get second one FREE
413-256-8911

Interested in writing for News?
Contact Will McGuinness at news@dailycollegian.com

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

UMass, state schools remain under 'stigma'

By Elizabeth Wahlman
Collegian Correspondent

With the economy in a crisis, the dilemma of paying for college has grown even greater, and loans are becoming more difficult to obtain. Many students choose to attend state schools to help defray the cost, or simply because they like the school and the programs it offers.

In fact, many of the state schools across the country boast an impressive reputation. Many public universities, including the University of Massachusetts, are considered to be state-of-the-art research facilities, with excellent faculty members and famous alumni.

Despite this, many students ignore these cheaper institutions for fear it won't look as good on a résumé. Many students are looked down upon by their private school peers. They can face questioning looks, and faces of disappointment from other students and teachers.

At a recent ice hockey game in which the Massachusetts Minutemen faced the Boston University Terriers, BU fans could be heard chanting: "If you can't get into college, go to state! [Clap, clap]." This chant implied that state colleges and their students are somehow less deserving and less intelligent than their private college peers.It's UMass is located in the quieter and more agricultural, western Massachusetts. In the surrounding area are other state schools such as Westfield State College, Elms College in Springfield, and Fitchburg State College. In the eastern area, closer to Boston, there's Boston University, Boston College, Harvard University, the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Tufts University, Wellesley College, Wheaton College and the Worcester Polytechnic Institute, among others. With the wealth of famous and prestigious private colleges in Massachusetts, the merits of public institutions such as UMass can be overlooked.

"In Massachusetts, everyone is like 'Oh, UMass,'" said New York native and UMass-Amherst sophomore Nara Allan. "But in New York, everyone is like 'Oh! UMass! It's very different."

Indeed a state school, even an institute as respected as UMass-Amherst, doesn't always have as much respect as an Ivy League or private school.

"I spent seven years in a prep school having Ivies and New Ivies shoved down my throat," said UMass Amherst junior and classics major, Elizabeth Goldberg. "When I was applying to UMass, the headmaster asked me where I was applying, and when I told him, he said 'Oh, OK.' and left. He didn't wish me luck, and was just sincerely disappointed because I was one of the 'smart' ones. I was tired of not fitting in because of not having as much money as the other students."

The sentiment of "fitting in" is a common theme among many UMass students, especially when it comes to issues of social class and finances. Being the poorer student in a wealthier private college could make one feel less important and less intelligent than their peers. However, there are quite a few students who can make this trend backfire.

Beth McGoldrick of Acton, Mass., recently wrote a letter to the editor of The Boston Globe about this situation.

"If you don't want to go to University of Massachusetts at Amherst because you've 'never been into going' there, or it 'wouldn't look as good' on your résumé ... by all means do not enroll at UMass Amherst," she said. "You'll be a pain in the neck to the talented, enthusiastic kids who have the good sense to know how lucky they are to go there - the ones who quietly grasp that the answers on the biology test are the same at UMass as they are at Harvard," said McGoldrick.

With the United States economy in a terrible state, many college applicants are facing the difficult choice of applying to their expensive dream schools, or attending a cheaper state school. As these applicants face the reality of a higher education's financial burden, they also face the reality that many state schools are actually very good schools with some distinguished alumni. Having received his doctorate in education from UMass, comedian Bill Cosby is one of the University's most famous alumni of UMass.

UMass is one of the most widely respected universities and research facilities in the United States. It offers a variety of majors and is well known for many of its departments, such as anthropology and linguistics. Yet the stigma against state schools refuses to die.

"I think the stigma is present and completely undeserved. My mother went to UMass-Boston, and ... she's got a degree the same as anyone who went to any overpriced private school," said Wagner College sophomore and theater major, Kevin Daly. "Many state schools, UMass-Amherst included, are good places to be and they don't deserve the less-than reputation they tend to get. The only reason I never wanted to go to a state school was that I did not want to remain in my home state."

In an effort to combat the declining amount of applications, various private colleges have started offering financial incentives to students of lower-income families.

According to various documents and reports released by the National Association of Independent Schools and Colleges, private universities have started to replace loans with grants, match state school tuition prices, or even eliminate tuition all together in an attempt to bring back interest in their schools. These schools run on donations and their high tuition prices.

The College of the Holy Cross in Worcester, Mass., will offer free tuition to Worcester students whose families earn less than $50,000 per year. Amherst College will swap loans with scholarships in its financial aid packages. The policy will eliminate loans for all students and will affect all incoming students, entitled Housing fees are also being reduced or even eliminated at some schools. Baker College of Flint, Mich., is offering free housing to students with a GPA of 3.5 or higher. The California Lutheran University in Thousand Oaks has agreed to match tuition prices for some students with that of the University of California, Los Angeles. As the offers and incentives keep coming, the college search is starting to look more like an after-Christmas sale at Wal-Mart.

While some students with an upper-class economic background maintain an interest in these schools, many more are starting to put state colleges on their radars. Parents are beginning to give their children a reality check and inform them that their wish list of colleges is not entirely possible.

With the economy in its poor state, the focus is on how to pay for school, not which one will look best on a resumé. Students and parents alike are reaching the same conclusion: the education one receives does not increase in value with tuition prices.

Elizabeth Wahlman can be reached at ewahlman@student.umass.edu.

Phelps in dispute over marijuana use

CRC PROTEST from page 1

wrote, "Kellogg's is pro-drunk driving?" and "Be a cannabis hero, buy generic!"

Additionally, informed members of the group handed out fliers about the Kellogg's Boycott while answering students' questions.

Local music group "Infinite Beaver" made an appearance at the protest, jamming on the didgeridoo and congos, spurring energy from the crowd.

The actions of the Kellogg cereal company have spawned a mass outcry from many.

Hundreds of video responses to the recent events can be found on YouTube, the links to which are on the CRC's event page on Facebook.

Some questions surrounding the controversy revolve around the fact that the incident happened after the Olympics were over.

Also, Phelps has never failed a drug test in his career. In fact, he was one of several American athletes who volunteered to undergo additional testing to dispel any suggestions that he might be benefiting from performance-enhancing drugs.

The World Anti-Doping Agency, the agency that oversees Olympic and international drug testing, classifies marijuana as a banned substance while "in-competition."

It was predicted that Phelps would be unlikely to face any punishment or suspension.

A publicist for the Colorado-Springs based federation stated, "This is not a situation where any anti-doping rule was violated, but we decided to send a strong message to Michael because he disappointed so many people, particularly the hundreds of thousands of USA Swimming member kids who look up to him as a role model and a hero."

Student Clara St. Pierre advocates for the boycott of Kellogg's products after the company fired Phelps for smoking marijuana.

Even marketing experts have predicted that the incident should have minimal effect on Phelps' multimillion-dollar sponsorships because of his quick apology released by Octagon, his management firm, in which he stated the following, "I engaged in behavior which was regreitable and demonstrated bad judgment. I'm 23 years old, and despite the successes I have had in the pool, I acted in a youthful and inappropriate way, not in a manner that people have come to expect from me. For this, I am sorry. I promise my fans and the public – it will not happen again."

Adrienne Wickham-Gubert can be reached at amwickha@student.umass.edu

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Praising Iraqi bravery

Greg Collins

Thank God Iraqis don't listen to American politicians.

During his presidential campaign, President Barack Obama proclaimed on his website: "The surge is not working," before changing it.

On April 16, 2007, Democratic Senate Majority Leader Harry Reid said: "This war is lost, the surge is not accomplishing anything." In May 2007, libertarian-leaning Republican, and 2008 presidential candidate, Ron Paul voted to withdraw American troops from Iraq in 90 days.

On May 29, 2007, Al Gore said the Iraq war was a big mistake.

On June 25, 2005, Chuck Hagel, then a Republican senator, said: "Iraq could be worse than Vietnam."

On Saturday, Jan. 31, 2009, Iraq held peaceful elections for 14,000 candidates running for 440 positions in 14 out of the country's 18 provinces. In an area of the world where autocracy, corruption, bribery, voter fraud, voter intimidation, graft and malfeasance runs rampant, Iraqi officials reported few major problems at the voting booth or during the provincial campaigns.

In an area of the world where campaigns, elections and political expression frequently produce mass bloodshed, Iraqis remarked to BBC that it was one of the most tranquil days they could remember since the start of the war in 2003.

In an area of the world where political minorities are threatened – with their lives – for voting, Sunnis who had refused to participate in the 2005 elections voted for the first time in large numbers.

So perhaps instead of listening to whomever we read in newspapers or on television, we should listen to the people who are actually affected by what is going on – Iraqis themselves.

Like Alaa Gadban, from Baji: "I think we are optimistic because this election comes at a time of relative stability, in contrast to the chaos of previous times."

Like Jamal Abdullah, from Baghdad: "The area I live in, al-Jihad district, was controlled by the (radical Shiite group) Sadrists but their grip has weakened and so there is fierce competition for votes."

Like Faisal Hamadi, from Basra: "Al-Maliki ended the militiamen's reign of terror. For this he deserves our vote."

Prime Minister Nouri Al-Maliki was the most conspicuous target among Iraqis by American politicians, determined to end the war as quickly as possible. Labeled as incompetent, corrupt and ineffective a few years ago by congressmen and senators, al-Maliki is now widely credited by Iraqis for reducing violence in southern Iraq, which was previously controlled by radical Shia militias and terrorists.

If Iraqi families abided by the thinking of Barack Obama or Chuck Hagel, they quite conceivably could be living in a cauldron of terror right now.

By no means were these elections perfect. Eight candidates were killed leading up to the day of the election. Some voters struggled to find their preferred candidates on the large ballot sheets in Baghdad, and turnout was lower than expected.

However, the point is that Al-Maliki, Gadban, Abdullah, Hamadi and countless other Iraqis were able to achieve so much during America's occupation in spite of – not because of – the incessant condemnation from "war critics" in Congress.

The underlying assumptions of such condemnation directly apply to our own lives. Imagine if you were responsible for writing a 100-page thesis and that you had an enormous amount of pressure on you to finish the project.

Imagine that while you were busy accumulating the necessary materials, resources, information and literature to provide the foundation to start writing the thesis, countless television cameras and talking heads followed and talked about your every move every single instant of your life.

How would you feel if these talking heads told national and international media, day after day, "You are incapable of completing your task"?

How would you feel if these talking heads told national and international media, day after day, "You should not even be in a position to write a thesis because you lack the resources and support?"

How would you feel if these talking heads told national and international media, day after day, "You are a victim of the oppressive American education system"?

What would you do?

What would you do if Whitmore officials, your professors and student public opinion polls on campus suggested you were incapable of finishing your thesis because you just did not have what it takes to complete it?

You know what you would do.

You wouldn't listen to these people with political and personal agendas to advance. Instead, you would continue to go about your business in collecting sources, researching in the library and writing your rough draft. You wouldn't buckle under pressure.

Despite many bumps in the road, those courageous Iraqis who voted recently did the exact same thing. If Iraqi mothers abided by the thinking of Harry Reid, they wouldn't have had the chance to vote. If Iraqi families abided by the thinking of Barack Obama or Chuck Hagel, they quite conceivably could be living in a cauldron of terror right now.

So, no, it was – and still is – not unpatriotic to criticize the Iraq war.

But yes, it was, and still, is unpatriotic to recognize the heroic efforts of innocent Iraqis, who braved and survived bombs, explosions, rockets-propelled-grenades, insurgents, al-Qaida and Iranian militias to participate in the most important and freest elections in the history of Iraq.

Thank God Iraqis don't listen to American politicians or public opinion polls.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

A professor with a plan

More than once, the University of Massachusetts administration has amazed and angered me. This time is the worst I can remember. If they screw up the future of UMass for its own agenda, it will be unforgivable.

Administrators never seem to care about getting government money; their focus is always on big donors and student fees, their true loves.

Chancellor Robert C. Holub reports that the campus faces a $46 million deficit. (I won't even go into what gets included in those "necessary" expenditures; that's another story.) Holub and UMass President Jack Wilson plan to address that with a big increase in student fees – $1,500 per student – and, apparently, some layoffs (along with asking faculty whether we'd be willing to have our salaries cut).

Dan Clawson

Wilson wrote the trustees that the stimulus bill contains "very little good news in terms of operating money or salary money. There may be a little money for operating (this means salaries), but no one expects this to have any major effect on restoring the $102 million cut from our operating budget."

I don't know what Wilson is thinking, but that statement is about as wrong as it can be.

The stimulus bill (President Barack Obama's American Recovery and Reinvestment Act) identifies three primary ways in which states should use the money. One of the three ways is to make up for funding cut from public higher education since fiscal year 2008.

If the UMass budget were restored to last year's level, we would be better off than we are this year with no fee increase and no layoffs needed.

After this year's mid-year budget cuts we have less money than last year.

If the UMass budget were restored to last year's level, we would be better off than we are this year with no fee increase and no layoffs needed.

The stimulus bill contains almost exactly the amount of money needed to fulfill all three of the specified ways the money should be spent. The bill provides the money and it specifies that it should be spent to restore public higher education budgets.

If the legislation is followed, UMass is all right for the next two years.

I know legislation is complicated and there may be battles to be fought to make this happen, even if the legislation calls for it. But you have to be in another dimension, – or be an administrator – to write that "no one expects this to have any major effect on restoring the $102 million cut from our operating budget."

I sure as hell expect it. Obama expects it. Congress expects it. The Massachusetts Budget and Policy Center expects it. Just about the only ones who don't seem to expect it, and apparently aren't willing to fight for it, are the UMass administration and trustees.

Why aren't they out front fighting for our share of the stimulus money?

The best guess I can make (besides incompetence, always to be considered as an option) is that this is a version of Naomi Klein's "the shock doctrine" – you never want to waste a crisis. The administration wants to jack up student fees because that is money the administration will have forever, whereas in two years the stimulus money will (or at least might) end.

In ordinary times, the trustees and administration couldn't get away with a $1,500 fee increase, but during the worst economic crisis of our lifetimes, it might pass with little opposition.

Is the administration planning to forego the stimulus money, which is a lot more than the fee increase would bring in?

Are they planning to both raise fees and take the stimulus money? Will the stimulus money go into new buildings or a slush fund? i don't know.

Is it possible that I have something wrong, that the legislation doesn't mean what it says it means, that the highly regarded Massachusetts Budget and Policy Center doesn't understand the legislation as well as Wilson does, that "no one" thinks it is worthwhile getting out there and fighting for our share of the stimulus money?

Well yes, it is. But if you believe Jack Wilson's claim, by all means write me (toothfairy@sucker.com).

But if instead you believe the stimulus bill and not Wilson, it is crucial that you be prepared, when the Student Government Association or your union calls, to fight for our share of the stimulus money. As Clemenceau said, "The stimulus money is too important to be left to the administrators" (or words to that effect).

Dan Clawson is a professor of sociology at the University of Massachusetts. He can be reached at clawson@sadri@umass.edu.

Have a little faith in having a little faith

Eric Tripoli

The existence of truth is an interesting thing. Truth and opinion represent the deeper requirements of emotional nutrition. "I want your opinion" versus "I need the truth." The difference is that maintaining one's opinion provides a sense of solid foundation, feeling that what one thinks is validated by another, and thusly, is probably the truth.

The need for truth requires the individual to throw out that addiction to personal validation and admit that the real truth may not be inline with one's own personal beliefs.

This ability to compartmentalize these two distinctions is difficult because we often base our truth via interpretation of one's personal faith. Things like guilt and innocence are not measured singularly by either opinion or evidence.

We must be equipped to find and recover the evidence beyond all the opinions in order to successfully find the truth. Transparency within one's own mind is the first step in understanding the differences and similarities between belief and truth.

The matter that is simply the idea of "faith" is as tangible and provable as the smell and taste of an orange. Some may have faith in God, Neter-khertet (or the underworld in Egyptian mythology), Buddha, marijuana, human sacrifice, human rights or only in oneself.

The need to have faith in something is, I believe, an inherent part of the internal wiring of our souls. Faith does not operate only when we are in moments of weakness but in moments of strength, certainty and uncertainty. A person without faith is missing something integral.

The need to have faith in something is, I believe, an inherent part of the internal wiring of our souls.

We all need to feel in control, but when that control is gone – what does one do? How can one acknowledge one's limitations if one doesn't ask for help, seek an answer or understand one's purpose? It is through faith that it is possible to jump-start one's engine and continue on.

The point is that having faith is the opposite of what it means to be a human, in control of one's own life, choices and destiny – whatever. It's the counterweight to keep us balanced in all times, good or bad.

But I feel the smartest people in the world would have the strongest hold in what they believe in. Whether it is found in a specific religious context or simply a faith in humanity one way or another, it can help shape choices and questions and acts as a lens for the mind's eye through which the world is perceived.

One must have faith, also, in order to find truth.

Truth can have as many facets as there are faiths.

A person without faith is blind to both truth and right and wrong.

Since ethics and morals are normally tied to or inspired by faith of some sort, one would have less of a practical ethical gauge within one's mind.

The obvious consequence of faith's individualistic nature is conflict. Historically, the worst offenders have been religious and political faith. I would never want to trivialize the acts and effects of the legions of wars and conquests that have ravaged civilization. Nor would I want to ignore the gravity of the amount of blood spilled on the soil because of such things.

War always gets a bad rap.

The violence and sorrow are typically more focused on than the philosophy behind it. Conflict represents a challenge in faith, when truth goes head-to-head with itself in battle. We always have two choices in this: stick to our guns or step back for a moment. Violence erupts when one chooses the former.

The old, hackneyed saying goes something like, "One man's terrorist is another man's hero." George Washington is said to be the father of our country. I'm sure England didn't think of him anything more than a glorified cop killer. He believed in freedom, while the Crown saw him as a radical murderer.

Some may say Jesus Christ was a Communist because of his views on social equality. The point is that every situation presents itself with an opportunity to fight or to learn. Too often do we tend to outright refuse to learn and opt for conflict.

I think that we feel defeated or failure if we do not automatically "stand up" for what we believe in. Being challenged does not mean that at all. It should be seen as an opportunity to re-examine why one believes this or that.

Every ideology needs reinforcement from time to time. If that solidification comes at the cost of faith, truth or both, then the purpose of it all is void because the need to be "right" can be a poisonous thing.

Eric Tripoli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at etripoli@student.umass.edu.

Racism: not a scapegoat for political and social irrationalities

Jon Peterson

There are very few things that arouse more angst in discussions than race. If you oppose any of the myriad social or political stances, then it becomes fair game to call you a racist.

Any points of disagreement can easily be countered with accusations about personal beliefs and biases, and it is because of this that discussions about race have become more or less impossible to have in any rational manner.

Only a few months ago, when there was a great, almost necessary, sense of urgency pervaded us through the many people urging us to vote – without account of whom or for what causes or beliefs we would do so for – there was the general consensus that the election would lead to a real, tangible proof that anyone, regardless of gender or color, could grow to do anything in the United States of America.

The "Man's" influence would be all but gone.

Though most of the African-Americans living in America today are descended from people whose grandparents who had never seen Africa and during a time when the American Revolution formed our country – a heritage older than most European-Americans roots – it has still been a unique opportunity to symbolically show that an African-American could achieve the same as anyone else. The opportunity symbolizes that the "Man" was not holding them down – given President Barack Obama's being a first-generation American.

But has the line truly been crossed? Has the symbolism finally been put aside? Can we finally start taking things a bit less seriously?

There have always been those people in our country, and in every society, who have held prejudiced and racist views.

However, synchronous with the inauguration of our new president, it is time for the United States to put its past behind and move forth into an era where not every little dispute is called out as "racism."

Greater attention is given in the news to a New York Post cartoon about the recent stimulus bill that screams, "This package is so stupid it must have been written by a drugged-up chimp," than to the actual content of the bill, the writing of which Obama threw at Nancy Pelosi and Harry Reid. The NAACP has notably called for the Post's editor and the cartoonist to be fired, saying that the cartoon is an "invitation to an assassination" of President Obama.

The Rev. Al Sharpton, the leader of the black civil rights group the National Action Network, who was reported by the Post as having made public threats to dozens of large companies with race-based boycotts (all of which passed to the wayside after they placed him on salaried positions on "diversity council boards" and donated tens of thousands of dollars to his organization), has called for the Federal Communications Commission to investigate News Corp and the Post while organizing protests against them.

Although racism is an important issue that needs to be addressed, over-analyzing every little political or social issue as racial stereotypes can be a little bit redundant.

More coverage has been given to new Attorney General Eric Holder's calling America a "nation of cowards" on racial matters than the hypocrisy of the matter that he was put in office by our president, who was largely elected on a platform which held race so highly.

Less attention went to the early polling that showed Secretary of State Hillary Clinton, who had strong ties with the black community, having had great support from black voters as well as many other groups and eventually losing out to Obama for the nomination due to an overwhelming shift in no small part to the overwhelming shift in black voting blocs.

While he was not thought of as a real contender before the beginning of the primaries, his early wins prompted mass conversions in many states, with him tallying the votes of 92 percent of the black vote in North Carolina, 90 percent in Indiana, 85 percent in Pennsylvania according to CNN's primary results and similar numbers for many other states.

And when he had only 40 percent of the Caucasian vote in Indiana to Clinton's 60 percent, NPR could be heard daily saying how racism in these states could cost him the nomination and eventually the presidency.

In a race where the two candidates received a great amount of coverage about how their positions were so similar on all the major issues that they might as well have been the same person, it would seem irrational to think other that less tangible qualities wouldn't come into play and that racial baiting by prominent people like Sharpton, Holder and the Rev. Jeremiah Wright wouldn't influence large parts of the population.

When given the chance to confront and do away with racism and prejudice, these people choose only to reinforce it.

UMass' own Justice for Jason student organization now gives strength to former student Jason Vassell, an African-American who some feel is at the whim of a biased legal system. While their case largely does not follow with how his defense attorney is appealing his case, they do make the case for his victimization.

Although racism is an important issue that needs to be addressed, over-analyzing every little political or social issue as racial stereotypes can be a little bit redundant. History is composed of things of the past. It should be not forgotten, as much can be learned from it. However, even as we are celebrating Black History Month, there are enough claims of racism by these leaders to choke a horse.

Cries of victimization are the last thing we need – or deserve – right now. The last thing we can use is more people who think it "remained necessary to prove which side you were on, to show your loyalty to the black masses, to strike out and name names." (Barack Obama, "Dreams of my Father" Page 101).

Jon Petersen is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpeterse@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Band gains new fame

Blitzen Trapper to perform at Pearl Street

By Peter Rizzo
Collegian Staff

It's been three months since Blitzen Trapper last came to Northampton as the opening act for indie rock darlings Iron & Wine, but since then there's been a change.

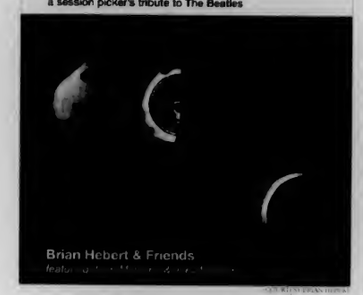
Wednesday, when the six-piece experimental band returns to Pearl Street, will mark another notch on the proverbial height chart for the young act. No longer will they be the young hopefuls attempting to warm up the crowd, instead Blitzen Trapper is the venue's main event.

The journey hasn't been one of overnight success and instant stardom, but rather a slow build for a determined troop of musicians. Blitzen Trapper, from Portland, Ore., began their uphill climb by self-releasing three albums through Lidkercow Ltd., an eponymous debut in 2003, Blitzen Trapper's sophomore follow-up "Field Rexx," and last year's breakthrough "Wild Mountain Nation." The latter spread from word of mouth and blog buzz, and slowly infiltrated the margins of the mainstream music press.

"A lot of people come out to see us at shows and mention they saw us on Pitchfork [in the Best New Music category]. That's a nice, direct result," drummer and backing vocalist Brian Koch said in an interview with Tiny Mix Tapes Features this March about the changes that band has noticed.

However, Blitzen Trapper's members are quick to point out the fickle nature of this aspect of the music industry, choosing instead to focus on the enjoyment of the fans that come for the music rather than those that come for the hype.

"I feel like definitely there's buzz heads who come out after reading the latest buzz and come to a show," keyboardist Drew Laughery said. "They decide for themselves if they're going to hang with it for a while or if they're going to move on. People rely heavily on blogs to tell them what's cool."



Love it or hate it, with the success brought on

See BLITZEN TRAPPER on page 6

Blitzen Trapper will perform at Pearl Street Wednesday for the second time in three months, but this time the band will be headlining the show due to its recent success in the music industry.

any time at all
a session picker's tribute to The Beatles

Brian Hebert & Friends "Any Time At All" album cover is a knock-off of the Beatles first record.

Celtic spin on Beatles' classic

UM alumnus and friends join together on tribute album

By Heather Waxman
Collegian Staff

Just when we thought we had heard every possible Beatles cover, Brian Hebert & Friends came along to enlighten us.

The University of Massachusetts alumnus recently unleashed a rebirth of Beatles tunes in an unexpected, traditional Celtic format.

Hebert, who graduated with a degree in geography, put his bluegrass roots to use with the release of "Any Time At All: A Session Pickers Tribute to The Beatles."

Computer programmer by day and traditional Celtic musician by night, one can often find Hebert performing at The Harp, Amherst's own Irish pub, for a traditional Irish session every Friday night.

While he has played guitar since he was 8 years old, after hearing The Beatles' notorious 1964 performance on "The Ed Sullivan Show," Hebert's passion for Celtic music didn't surface for another decade.

"I saw a band in Wolftrappe Farm, Va, called the Boys of the Loch. At the time, I was playing a five-string Appalachian banjo and [these guys] really put me over the moon, so I started to play that stuff," said Hebert.

But it wasn't until three years ago, after his 15th birthday, that Hebert rekindled his passion for The Beatles' music.

"I started getting very nostalgic for the kind of music I heard as a child, and I was really smitten by The Beatles like everyone else was," said Hebert.

The remedy? A week-long journey to Liverpool, England, to visit the famous foursome's original stomping grounds.

"I went out and bought all their CDs and decided to go on a pilgrimage. I went to Liverpool in 2006 and spent a week there, traveled around, and saw all the places where they went to school and played, like The Cavern, and a lot of the pubs, like The Grapes," said Hebert.

Hebert returned to the states with a chord book of Beatles tunes and began fooling around with the progressions.

Two months in, he had a musical epiphany in realizing that he had transposed an entire collection of Beatles-gone-Celtic tunes.

Hebert called upon Berklee professor and champion mandolin player John McGann, bodhrans player Joey Sullivan, and Irish pipe player Pelham Norville for further musical assistance and two years later, the trio released "Any Time at All."

Hebert, who plays an octave mandolin, a tenor guitar, a tenor banjo, an acoustic bass and a

See BEATLES on page 6

Lyrics lack in album

Fake Problems' new release falls way short

By Ellie Rulon-Miller
Collegian Staff

Imagine for a moment that you are at a show. The band comes out and begins to play. For a few seconds, your head is nodding to some decent music and the rest of the show seems to have potential to be a good one.

Suddenly, the voice of a 20-something male with horrible emphysema forces its way over the PA system. Suddenly, you become physically uncomfortable and are plagued by the most heinous migraine you have ever experienced. Don't worry, you're probably not dying. Odds are you're just at a Fake Problems show.

Fake Problems would likely be the next big fad band if they had a different singer, which isn't to say that he is untalented; his voice simply does not complement the rest of the band.

His rough and raspy voice would be better suited in a different kind of group; Fake Problems' music cries for a more melodic vocalist. His voice overpowers almost every song on the album. He sounds like a bad version of Al Barr, the lead singer of Dropkick Murphys.

Despite some of the worst lyrics and vocals ever recorded, each song on the band's latest release, "It's Great To Be Alive" has its own up and down sides.

The intro to the track, "1234," is solid and the song is promising until you hear the horrendous vocals. One of the most irritating things about this song is the singer's inability to properly pronounce the word "chord."

"The Dream Team" has poor chosen lyrics, "I want to be the American dream, but I need you right next to me if I'm ever gonna feel free." What kind of free is that? If you ignore the words, this is a half-decent song.

The track, "You're A Serpent, You're A She-Snake," dabbles in electro-pop with the addition of a few synthesizers. It shakes things up with the same distorted guitar that you've heard on the previous two songs. The breakdown at the end almost makes you forget about the awful singing and the song's completely idiotic title.

"Don't Worry Baby" makes things slightly more ska-oriented with the use of a horn section and a tiny amount of upstroke guitar. The vocals

See FAKE PROBLEMS on page 6

Fake Problems newest album, "It's Great To Be Alive," has mediocre lyrics that overshadow the band's instrumental talents. The album was released on Feb. 17 by Side One Dummy Records.

Dresses up, delivers love songs

By Rashod D. Ollison
The Baltimore Sun

Ne-Yo looked backward as he moved forward on his most recent new album, "Year of the Gentleman." Considering the bleak state of mainstream urban music these days, where lyrical chivalry seems to have gone the way of the 8-track, the R&B-pop star wanted to bring romance back. He wanted to croon openhearted tunes of fidelity and down-on-your-knees songs of vulnerability.

He also wanted to look natty while doing it.

"There were a couple of statements I wanted to make with this record," says Ne-Yo. "First point, I wanted to let people know I'm more than an R&B guy. I wanted to test my fans and see if they would let me do different things. ... Second point, I wanted to bring class and style back, the way Sammy Davis Jr. and Frank Sinatra did it back in the day. When did it become popular to look like a slob?"

But the gentlemanly approach in sound and image isn't exactly a major shift for the artist. His yearning songs, reminiscent of "Off the Wall"- era Michael Jackson, and his sharp sartorial taste have been in place since his debut, 2006's platinum-selling "In My Own Words."

Since then, Ne-Yo, 29, has become one of the most successful male acts in today's urban-pop realm. Beyond his own two platinum albums (the other, 2007's "Because of You," won a Grammy last year), the Arkansas-native born Shaffer Smith has become one of the most sought-after songwriters in the industry. His recent hits for others have been ubiquitous, including Beyonce's "Irreplaceable," Rihanna's "Take a Bow" and Jennifer Hudson's "Spotlight." Like a new-millennium Babyface, Ne-Yo seems to have a knack for writing keen love songs, particularly from the perspective of brokenhearted women.

"Ne-Yo's songs are appealing because they are relatable," says Billy Johnson Jr., senior program director of urban music at Yahoo! Music. "Instead of just writing what I call a simple love song,' one that basically conveys the writer's love for the object of their affection, Ne-Yo's songs tell stories. ... (His songs) are not too urban that pop fans can't digest them, and they're not too pop that urban fans dismiss them."

The artist works that middle ground well on "Year of the Gentleman" as he fattens his once-spare, keyboard - driven sound with slick, throbbing beats. The heavily programmed music, which is only cautiously progressive, underscores lyrics that celebrate the power and beauty of women. With the new album, Ne-Yo positions himself as the consummate man of taste.

On the cover, he dons a pin-striped slate-gray suit and tie. His face is obscured as he bows his head to place a cream fedora on top of it. Since the album's release in June, the response has been strong: The CD quickly went gold, spurred by the sleek hits "Miss Independent" and "Closer." It also earned multiple Grammy nominations, including a nod for album of the year.

When he wasn't tweaking his sound and writing songs for "Year of the Gentleman," the Las Vegas-raised performer was in the studio with Chrisette Michele Michelle. He wrote and produced six tracks on the R&B star's sophomore album, "Epiphany," which is due out late next month.

"I have to work with Ne-Yo on another record. What we created this time was so monstrous," says Michele Michelle, who also won a Grammy for her will.i.am-assisted hit "Be OK."

She and Ne-Yo are on the same label, Def Jam Records, which made hooking up in the studio a little easier.

"He's very silly in the studio," Michele Michelle says. "He talks in these funny accents when giving you directions. He's very fun, and he's very humble. I would sit with Ne-Yo and his production team for hours in the studio. They allowed me to be hands-on, which I've always been. If I didn't think something worked, they listened."

Sleep is rare these days with the demands of being a hot international performer, producer and songwriter. But Ne-Yo doesn't seem to mind the pace.

"Work is governed by how much you love to do it," he says. "I can't call it work. My job is play. I've always loved to write."

Songwriting was Ne-Yo's break into the industry. In 2004, he wrote a lilting ballad called "Let Me Love You" for R&B singer Mario. Early the next year, the song became a monster, staying atop Billboard's pop charts for nine weeks and prompting an informal meeting between Ne-Yo and Def Jam Records. The artist was immediately signed to a contract, but it wasn't his first crack at a recording career.

In 2000, he was signed to Columbia Records. But the relationship was fruitless; the company dropped him and never released his album. Ne-Yo paid the bills and quickly built his reputation in the industry by writing songs for others, including Mary J. Blige, B2K and Faith Evans.

But it was the Mario smash, sweetly melodic and strongly influenced by vintage Michael Jackson, Ne-Yo wanted to bring romance back to his music in his newest album, "Year of the Gentleman," and prove he was more than an R&B artist.

See NE-YO on page 6

Change to Sub Pop label propels band

BLITZEN TRAPPER from page 5

by "Wild Mountain Nation," the band was forced to grow. Finally capitulating to the pressures of self-production, Blitzen Trapper abandoned their homemade label and eventually signed with a major record distributer. Changing over to Seattle's famed Sub Pop, a label responsible for launching bands as diverse as Nirvana and The Shins.

It was no surprise then that the move has paid off well for a band that seems to be finding itself in the right place at the right time. Gaining momentum just as the Northwestern indie scene has birthed a healthy majority of the buzz bands that have surfaced in the past year is Fleet Foxes – a band that provided Blitzen Trapper with an opening act earlier in their careers.

Blitzen Trapper's sound focuses on varying its musical styles into a complex blend of influences that ranges from gentle folk to 1970s pop confections with lead songwriter Eric Earley drawing from several influences from Pavement to Bob Dylan.

Hot on the heels of a slew of praise from top music magazines, Blitzen Trapper has charted high on many Best Song and Best Album lists for last year's quirky genre-bending LP "Furr."

Blitzen Trapper is now taking its show on the road well through the end of the summer. The ongoing tour has sold out shows in New York and has added important stops at major festivals that so far include Washington's Sasquatch and California staple Coachella.

You can catch the band, along with opening act Aleta Diane, this Wednesday. Tickets for the event are still available through the Northampton Box Office and can be purchased at advance prices for $10 or at the door for $13.

Peter Rizza can be reached for comment at prizza@student.umass.edu.

Blitzen Trapper will perform at Pearl Street in Northampton on Wednesday for the second time in three months.

Vocals ruin instrumentals

FAKE PROBLEMS from page 5

on this track are actually hearable and almost complement the music. This may be the best song on the album, except for its ending, which doesn't flow with the track's progression.

"The Heaven & Hell Cotillion" is difficult to accurately describe. If you can get through the first half, listen to the entire thing; it gets a little better.

Fake Problems' newest album lacks talented vocals and intriguing lyrics. "It's Great To Be Alive" was released on Feb. 17.

Apparently there is nothing more rock 'n' roll than writing a song about the devil and disobeying your mother. In the song "Level With The Devil" the chorus has very little flow. However, like "The Heaven & Hell Cotillion," it has a better ending than beginning.

If all of Fake Problem's songs sounded like the last minute of this one, the world would be a much happier, less nauseated place.

"Diamond Rings" opens up sounding like a carbon copy of a Franz Ferdinand song instrumentally. This is not a completely horrible song and is more dance-y than the others. The overlapping guitar parts and backup vocals make more interesting than the others songs on the album.

There are not many words to describe how irritating the track "Tabernacle Song" is by describing we're-poor-and-we-live-in-squalor-but-it's-home circumstance. It comes off as nothing but pretentious while meaning to sound punk.

"Alligator Assassinator" seems as if it's supposed to be a story in a song. Is it a metaphor for something? Or is it just insipid and awful?

"There Are Times" is the most emo song on the album. It opens with a steady kick-drum beat, organs and "Why don't you love me?" lyrics. The most painful part is that it's not meant to be satirical.

"Too Cold Too Hold" is another poorly named title for yet another mediocre song. The plus side is that Fake Problems successfully experiments with a banjo for a few brief segments. Unfortunately, this happens only sparingly for a few moments at a time. The downside is that there are some of the most poorly concocted lyrics ever sung.

"Heart BPM" is another example of when decent musicianship is completely overshadowed by dull, whiny lyrics.

If you feel saucy enough to pick up this album, try your absolute hardest to focus on the instrumentals and ignore the vocals. If not, you may be in for the worst headache you have ever had.

Fake Problem's album "It's Great To Be Alive" was released on Feb. 17 on Side One Dummy Records

Ellie Rulon-Miller can be reached at erulonmi@student.umass.edu

Variations in album appeal to listeners

BEATLES from page 5

bodhran, had a clear vision for the album. He sought a compilation of three elements that would translate seamlessly to an array of listeners.

"I wanted to make sure there was variety so that I would appeal to people. So, I tried to balance it," he said.

"In a way, there are three components to it. There's obviously a Beatles component to it, which is one of the major things, and then there's a Celtic or traditional Irish component, and that's kind of my mainstay. And then there's another element called Americana. There's kind of a bluegrass accent to it," said Hebert.

The fusion of these three elements acquired praise from a host of critics, including a review from the "Liverpool Echo" newspaper which called the record "a radical reinvention ... that brings a whole new dimension to something we thought we already knew everything there was to know about."

The album managed to inch its way to the top-sellers page at independent online record store, CD Baby.com, despite its low-budget recording in the comfort of Hebert's home.

"On 'I Don't Want to Spoil the Party,' you can hear birds outside of my window," said Hebert. "[The man] who mixed it, Stephen Webber, also from Berklee, did a wonderful job. He heard these birds on the bass track and he left them in there."

And while the chirping may be a bit of a strain to hear, listeners will find many of the tunes on "Any Time at All" easily identifiable.

"The other thing about the morphing process is you'll hear that some of the tunes are very recognizable," said Hebert. "For example, on 'Eleanor Rigby,' John McGann actually plays just about the whole quartet and I'm just playing a few harmonies. So, sometimes the nicest stuff is the simplest."

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

Ne-Yo uses old sound in new way

NE-YO from page 5

that set the template for Ne-Yo's re-emergence as a recording artist.

"I don't mind people saying who I sound like or who I'm influenced by," says the Atlanta-based performer. "When I was coming up, my mom was into Teddy Pendergrass and Gerald Levert, (singers) with these deep, growling voices. I didn't sound like that. My growl is more like a kitten purr. My mom gave me Michael Jackson and Stevie Wonder records to listen to, because my tone fit theirs."

Ne-Yo's ingratiating songs and fluid high tenor may recall a sweeter time in R&B, but his approach is thoroughly modern. He isn't as precious as John Legend or as lascivious as Usher. Ne-Yo is somewhere in the middle. Aside from being charged with reckless driving and driving without a license in Georgia early last year, the singer has an image that's largely untarnished. But even with healthy album sales and an impressive track record of hits for others, Ne-Yo says he has still felt overlooked in the urban-pop world.

"You haven't seen me on the cover of Vibe or Rolling Stone or any magazines," Ne-Yo says. "You get attention from being on drugs or sleeping with 17 different celebrities. What, I got to knock somebody over the head with a champagne bottle in a club to get attention?"

But this year's Grammy nominations and two wins provided were enough validation.

And there probably won't be any drastic changes to his image any time soon. Ne-Yo remains a gentleman.

"If it has anything to do with music, I'm there," he says. "But I always have to have some class with it."

Ne-Yo's nearly pure image makes him feel overlooked by the urban-pop world, although he won two Grammys this year.

apply
For Loans ONLINE
Now you can apply for all of these great loans online. It's faster and easier!
Auto
Consumer
Mortgage
Home Equity
Home Improvement
SPF 30
EBOnline
Anytime Banking
bankesb.com
Easthampton Savings Bank | 413.527.4111
Member FDIC
Member DIF

Mix up your morning and take a breakfast break on us!
It's back: MORNING MIXER in Memorial Hall
Start your day off right with complimentary bagels, fruit, coffee, assorted juices and a free 5-minute chair massage by A Healing Place.
Mark your calendar now for the spring Morning Mixers - 8:30 - 10:30 a.m.
WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25
TUESDAY, APRIL 14
Stop by for your chance to be entered into a drawing for a FREE UMass Amherst duffle bag of goodies!
ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
STUDENT Alumni Ambassadors
BRUEGGER'S
Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association and Bruegger's Bagels of Amherst.
UMassAlumni.com • You were. You are. UMASS.

Senior captain Nate Bromage has been a top performer for the Minutemen throughout the year. He earned his a first-place finish in the Atlantic 10 100-yard Butterfly, finishing the race in 49.21 seconds.

The Minutemen dominated the competition with 720.5 total points, easily defeating second-place St. Bonaventure, which scored 546 points, to once again capture the Atlantic 10 Championship.

Dominant dynasty

SWIMMING & DIVING from page 10

Next was the men's 500-yard freestyle. Sbordon, an outstanding swimmer during the regular season, claimed fourth (4:31.92) earning UMass 15 points. Brad Sloan took seventh (4:37.57).

Justin Brooks also earned a few points for the Minutemen by winning the consolation race. His time of 4:36.33, would have placed him in sixth place, above Sloan, if he had qualified for the finals. Dan Backler finished seventh in the consolation race.

The women's team was up next but the 200-yard individual medley was another heartbreak for the Minutewomen. Potter was the only points scorer, she came in seventh in the consolation race.

The men's swimmers had two points-scorers in the 200-yard individual medley. Andrew Willbrant squeezed by for a third-place finish (1:51.77), while Butler (1:52.67) won the consolation race, which would have been good for fifth place in the finals.

Event 10, the women's 50-yard freestyle, was a better race for the Minutewomen as three out of four competitors earned points. Chalikis placed sixth (23.68) in the finals, while Corriveau and Celia Jenkins competed in the consolation, placing third and fifth, respectively.

On the men's side, Moliere couldn't repeat as 50-yard freestyle champion. Moliere fell to fourth (20.81) this year, while Chris Howard finished eighth in the finals.

The big happening of the second day was the men's 1-meter diving competition. Freshman standout Jason Cook took first in his A-10 Championship debut, with a score of 325.10.

His two teammates, Byron Johnson and John Clark rounded out the top three, respectively, for UMass, while Adam Duffield finished sixth and Zach Lichter finished 11th. The 1-meter dive was dominated by the Minutemen as they notched 72 points in the event.

The last two events of the second day consisted of the men's and women's 200-freestyle relay. The women's team faired better than the men in this, they took third (1:35.39), while the men finished fourth (1:22.80).

Day 3 started with the 400-yard individual medleys as the Minutewomen qualified two swimmers in the points bracket. Downing finished third (4:30.47) in the consolation race, while Jackie Porter finished seventh (4:35.00).

The men's team also struggled a bit in the 400-yard individual medley. Schmidt was the only UMass swimmer to qualify for the finals. His time though, 4:09.11, left him in last. Brad Sloan also qualified for points, but finished sixth (4:09.92) in the consolation.

Following the 400 individual medley was the women's 100-yard butterfly. Narus was the top finisher for UMass, placing third (56.37) in the championship race. Chalikis finished eighth (56.84).

The men's team, had a strong 100-yard fly. Bromage had a first-place finish (49.21) for the Minutemen, defending the cotitle he won in last year's championships. Berthaume finished fourth (49.76) while Tim Smith gathered some points by winning the consolation race (50.64).

As both teams entered the 200-yard freestyle race, the women's team had difficulty. Narus was the only Minutewoman to compete in the finals race, finishing fifth (1:52.65). Walsh, the only other UMass swimmer to enter the event, finished fourth (1:53.67) in the consolation race.

Sbordon climbed to the fifth spot in the men's 200-freestyle finals with a time of (1:40.39). Sbordon was the only UMass swimmer to make the final race. However, two others, Partridge and Brooks, competed and finished second and fifth, respectively, in the consolation.

The next event of the day was the 100-yard breaststroke. The UMass women entered four swimmers in this event. Meghan Nowak, Eryn Brewer, Potter and Jenkins. Nowak and Potter qualified for points, finishing seventh and eighth, respectively, in the consolation race.

The men's team, however, had two competitors in the top race. Schmidt took third (56.64) and Backler finished seventh (57.75).

Willbrant defended his A-10 title in 100-yard backstroke and finished first with a time of 49.61. Nipping at Willbrant's heels was Butler, who finished second (49.82). Jennings also scored some points by taking seventh (53.17) in the consolation race.

Upperco gave a boost to the women's team by defending her 1-meter diving title. Also the winner of the 3-meter, Upperco dominated the event with a score of 292.15. The closest competitor scored a 249.70. Rounding out the finals for UMass was Horstmann in third (244.30), and Swift in eighth (197.10).

The final events of day three were the two 400-yard medley relays. The Minutewomen finished in sixth (3:53.77). The Minutemen team, consisting of Willbrant, Schmidt Bromage and Moliere, claimed first (3:19.34) and set a new Atlantic 10 record.

For the end of Day 3, the men's team sat at the top with 453.5 points as the women climbed to third with 301.5.

The starting event of the final was the women's 1650-yard freestyle. Downing and Papish qualified for points, finishing seventh and eighth, respectively, in the consolation race.

Brooks earned a first-place (15:46.39) finish for Minutemen. It was Brooks' third consecutive A-10 title in the 1650-freestyle. Sbordon came in second (15:49.15) while Sloan took fourth (16:01.61).

The men's team stayed consistent and notched a few high finishes in the 200-yard breaststroke. Willbrant claimed second (1:48.13) for the Minutemen, and Butler finished close behind for third (1:48.49). Kyle Jennings also finished fifth (1:53.91) in the consolation race.

In the women's 100-yard freestyle, Chalikis was the only UMass swimmer in the championship race. Corriveau also gained some points for finishing fifth (52.66) in the consolation.

Moliere won his second 100-yard freestyle in three years, finishing in 45.33. Sophomore Chris Howard finished sixth (46.08).

Three Minutewomen would race in the consolation 200-yard breaststroke. Porter won the consolation race (2:20.81), with Staroselec coming in sixth (2:25.93) and Nowak in seventh (2:26.28).

For the men's 200-yard breaststroke, Backler finished third (2:04.40) in the championship race for the Minutemen. Schmidt followed him with a second-place finish (2:06.46) in the consolation race.

Next was the women's 200-yard butterfly. Narus scored a third-place finish (2:04.88) in the championship race.

Smith and Berthaume competed in the consolation of the 200-yard butterfly and finished second (1:54.75) and third (1:54.79), respectively.

Cook competed strong once again in the men's 3-meter dive as he won his second event of the A-10 Championships. Cook won with a dominating 343.95. Johnson placed fourth (280.00), Duffield in fifth (273.40) and Clark in sixth (260.05).

The final events of the 2009 A-10 Championships were the 400-yard freestyle relay races. The women's team made up Narus, Walsh, Corriveau and Chalikis raced for a fourth-place finish (3:28.22). The men's team, Howard, Bromage, Butler and Moliere, also finished the relay with a fourth-place finish.

At the end of the final day, the UMass men accrued 720.5 points to win its third consecutive A-10 Championship, while the women slipped to fourth place to close out the competition.

The championship win marked the 11th time in 14 years that the men won the A-10 title.

Kyle Predki can be reached at kpredki@student.umass.edu

Men's Swimming and Diving since 1995

Team Accomplishments

| Coach of the Year | A-10 Title | Year |
|---|---|---|
| Yes | Yes | 95-96 |
| No | Yes | 96-97 |
| No | Yes | 97-98 |
| No | No | 98-99 |
| Yes | No | 99-00 |
| Yes | Yes | 00-01 |
| Yes | Yes | 01-02 |
| Yes | Yes | 02-03 |
| Yes | Yes | 03-04 |
| Yes | Yes | 04-05 |
| No | No | 05-06 |
| Yes | Yes | 06-07 |
| Yes | Yes | 07-08 |
| Yes | Yes | 08-09 |

Records Set

| A-10 Records | Athlete | Time/Score | Year |
|---|---|---|---|
| 50 Freestyle | Chris Arsenault | 1:38.41 | 2000 |
| 50 Freestyle | Ryan Fisher | 20.29 | 2001 |
| 200 Breast | Billy Brown | 1:58.66 | 2001 |
| 100 Fly | Chris Arsenault | 48.21 | 2001 |
| 200 Back | Evan Swisher | 1:46.69 | 2007 |
| 1-meter Dive | Jason Cook | 636.90 | 2009 |
| 3-meter Dive | Jason Cook | 680.75 | 2009 |
| 100 Back | Andrew Willbrant | 48.61 | 2009 |

MEAD ART MUSEUM | AMHERST COLLEGE
A Public Conversation with Will Barnet
Tuesday, February 24
At 4:30 p.m.

HEY LADIES!
Want a new experience? Interested in making friends, getting in shape and having FUN?!
COME JOIN THE UMASS WOMEN'S RUGBY CLUB!
Practices are every Tuesday and Thursday on the 3rd floor of Boyden from 9PM-11PM
For more information e-mail Kelsie at kwhitney@student.umass.edu

Xavier still atop A-10

Dayton not far behind, earns No. 25 ranking

BY NOAH STEINBERG-DI STEFANO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

With the Atlantic 10 Tournament fewer than three weeks away, Xavier and Dayton continue to distance themselves in a conference steeped in mediocrity. For the first time this season, both squads are ranked in the Associated Press top 25 poll, with the Musketeers coming in at No. 16 and Dayton at No. 25.

Barring a collapse, Temple and Rhode Island will join Dayton and Xavier atop the conference standings and earn the right to sit out the first round of competition with a bye. Elsewhere in the conference, teams will gear up for a final regular season push to secure a higher seed and build momentum going into the postseason, where anything can happen.

A-10 Basketball

PLAYERS OF THE WEEK

Kevin Anderson – Richmond.

In a 2-0 week for Richmond, the sophomore guard averaged 23.5 points and five rebounds a game, propelling his team to victories over La Salle and Charlotte. In a 62-53 win over La Salle on Feb. 18, Anderson scored a career-high 28 points on 12-of-16 shooting, adding four boards and dishing out three assists. This is his first career A-10 player of the Week honor.

Rob Diggs – George Washington.

In George Washington's lone game of the week, the senior forward nearly posted a double-double, netting a season-high 26 points and pulling down eight boards in a 90-62 romp over St. Bonaventure. This is the second time Diggs was named A-10 player of the Week.

UPSET SPECIALIST

Despite their disappointing spot in the basement of the A-10 standings, the Charlotte 49ers have proven they can win against upper-tier competition. After their Feb. 19 upset of Xavier, Charlotte became the only team in the conference this year to win against both Dayton and Xavier. As one of the bottom seeds going into the tourney, they should have all the confidence they need to play the role of spoiler.

RECORD BOOKS

With seven assists in UMass' one-point win over Saint Joseph's on Sunday, point guard Chris Lowe passed Carl Smith as the Minutemen's all-time team leader in assists. After breaking the record in the opening minutes of the first half, Lowe knocked down two free throws with two seconds remaining to secure a dramatic win for the Minutemen.

Also in the game against Saint Joseph's, UMass forward Tony Gaffney added four blocks in the game to give him 104 on the season, passing Marcus Camby's 103 in 1994-95 for fifth on the single-season list. Gaffney also added a steal in the game to give him 49 for the season. When he gets 50, he will become the first player since Shelden Williams of Duke in 2005 to have 100 blocks and 50 steals in the same season.

Rhode Island senior Jimmy Baron moved into first place in program history and second in A-10 history with 333 career 3-pointers. This week, he passed Monty Mack of UMass and now trails only Darnell Harris of La Salle for first on the all-time list.

A-10 TOURNAMENT PREVIEW

The beginning of March often exudes new hope for teams all over college basketball. For many, it is the last chance to salvage its season and punch its ticket to the big dance. Xavier and Dayton are the only teams in the conference who have secured at-large bids to the NCAA tournament.

Rhode Island and last year's champion, Temple, appear to be two teams on the bubble that will have to make a run in the A-10 Tournament if they hope to prolong their season.

Most teams in the conference have between three and five games remaining to improve their seeding before the tournament kicks off on March 11 in Atlantic City, N.J. Fordham and George Washington have already been eliminated from tournament contention.

As witnessed last year with Georgia coming out of the Southeastern Conference, tournaments can turn a disappointing season into a Cinderella story overnight.

Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano can be reached at steinber@student.umass.edu

Musketeers rally late

BY MIKE MASTONE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Xavier women's basketball team (24-4, 12-0 Atlantic-10) overcame a five-point halftime deficit on Saturday to defeat Saint Louis 70-67 and extend its winning streak to 15 games.

Theresa Lisch, the A-10's leading scorer, hit a 3-pointer with 2 minutes, 4 seconds left to give the Billikens (11-16, 5-7) a 64-61 lead. Xavier then went on a 7-0 run, center Ta'Shia Phillips delivered the dagger by tipping in a missed free throw to give the Musketeers a 68-64 lead with 18.5 seconds on the clock.

The Musketeers have used their recent momentum to climb to No. 16 in the ESPN/USA Today poll and No. 13 in the Associated Press poll. They have not lost a game since they were blown out by Arizona State (20-6, 12-2 Pac-10) on Dec. 21. The trio of Phillips, Tudy Reed and Jerri Taylor account for 35 of the team's 66.8 points per game. Phillips, who averages a double-double (13.5 ppg, 11.5 rpg), is a strong candidate for A-10 Player of the Year.

A-10 Basketball

Xavier has two games remaining on its schedule before the A-10 Tournament. Tomorrow the Musketeers will travel to Philadelphia to take on a formidable Temple (18-8, 9-3) offense. The Owls average 67.7 points per game and have four players averaging in double figures.

Xavier's season concludes three days later when the Musketeers host lowly Fordham (8-19, 1-11). The Rams have lost four games in a row and 13 of their last 14. Their lone conference win of the season came against fellow A-10 cellar-dweller La Salle (10-17, 1-11) on Feb. 7.

A-10 PICTURE UNCLEAR

With the Atlantic 10 Tournament just more than a week away, there are a few teams still jockeying for position.

Sitting at the top of the conference, Xavier is the only team to have a lock on their current position. There are ties for third, sixth, eighth and 10th. Temple, George Washington (17-10, 9-3) and Saint Bonaventure (19-8, 8-4) are all fighting for the final two spots in the top four, which would give them a first-round bye in the tournament. Temple and George Washington are currently tied for third, with St. Bonaventure a game behind.

The only way the Bonnies can secure a bye is if they win their final two games (which will be a challenge, as they end the season against second-place Charlotte) and either Temple or George Washington loses its final two games.

There is also a fight at the bottom of the standings for the final spot in the tournament. Rhode Island boasts a 2-10 conference record, while both La Salle and Fordham only have one conference win apiece. Fordham has the toughest remaining schedule, as the Rams would have to defeat Richmond (19-8, 7-5) and first-place Xavier to have any shot at the tournament. The Rams also have a formidable schedule against Duquesne and Dayton, while the Explorers will take on Duquesne and Massachusetts.

PLAYERS OF THE WEEK

For the fourth time this season, Xavier sophomore Ta'Shia Phillips earned Atlantic 10 Player of the Week honors. She averaged 18 points, 9.5 rebounds and 2.5 blocks in victories over George Washington and Dayton. Phillips was a force on both sides of the ball against the Colonials, tallying 17 points, seven rebounds and three blocked shots. Three days later she posted her 13th double-double of the season against the Flyers by pouring in 18 points and grabbing 12 rebounds.

Sharing this week's honors with Phillips is senior guard Kristi Little of Duquesne. Against UMass and Saint Louis, she posted averages of 15.5 points, nine assists, four rebounds and 3.5 steals. On Feb. 11 she scored a game-high 17 points and chipped in seven assists in a victory over the Billikens. Three days later she propelled the Dukes past the Minutewomen by posting her first double-double of the season. Little scored 14 points and tied a career high in assists, with 11.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu

UMass, BC tied for 6th place

HOCKEY EAST from page 10

pairs as well, first against UMass-Lowell before closing the season against Boston College.

BC LOSES EDGE

Until New Hampshire swept Boston College this weekend, the defending Hockey East and national champion had a legitimate chance to earn home ice in the first round of the conference tournament.

The Eagles lost many solid players from last year's team, but returned a solid core and got senior Brock Bradford back from injury. Bradford leads the Eagles 19 goals and 33 points, but they have not received much else from their established upperclassmen – especially on the blue line.

Sophomore John Muse hasn't performed to the level of last season – pin that on the guys in front of him. The lone BC blue liner with a positive plus/minus rating is sophomore Nick Petrecki (plus-4). Not much of a surprise that Petrecki has maintained a great level of play – along with BU's Gilroy and UMass' Justin Braun, Petrecki is among the nation's best defensemen.

The Eagles are 4-7-3 in since Jan. 1, including 0-3-1 in their last four games, and have allowed three or more goals 11 times. With Nathan Gerbe patrolling the wings last season, the Eagles could erase a deficit without any qualms. That's has not been the case this season.

The Eagles are tied with UMass for sixth place in the conference with 21 points, but own both the head-to-head and conference wins tiebreaker. With 26 points, UMass-Lowell is ahead of both teams in the standings. The River Hawks won the season series with the Eagles with two wins and a tie; if not for a game-tying goal from Bradford with 3:19 left in regulation on Valentine's Day, UML may have swept the season series from the Eagles.

ICE SHAVINGS

UMass winger James Marcou earned the Reebok Player of the Week award for his five-point weekend against Maine. Marcou's performance helped the Minutemen secure a spot in the Hockey East Tournament. With four games remaining, Marcou is one point behind BU's Colin Wilson in the race for the league scoring title ... Merrimack's Joe Cannata won the league's defensive player of the week award with 72 saves in two games against Providence ... BU maintained its spot atop the USCHO/CBS Sports Division 1 men's poll. NU stayed at No. 4 as well. Vermont dipped to No. 9 after being swept by UMass-Lowell who earned the No. 20 spot in the poll. BC is unranked for the first time this season.

Material from personal interviews, other beat writers and league and team sources was used in this report.

Joe Meloni can be reached at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com.

After two 4-3 wins over Maine, the Minutemen are tied with Boston College for the sixth seed in the Hockey East standings with 21 points, although the Eagles currently hold a tiebreaker edge.

Maryland defeats inexperienced UM

LACROSSE from page 10

Minutewomen wouldn't leave without a fight. It took a little underclassmen boost to stop the second-half bleeding, when sophomore Smith scored with 6:29 remaining. Smith was assisted by goalie Katie Florence (16 GA, 6 saves) before Brigandi rounded out the Minutewomen's scoring efforts with a little more than a minute remaining.

UMD captain McFadden and her Maryland teammates then decided they still had 107 seconds to give UMass a proper tour of College Park, and McFadden scored twice more before the final whistle.

In the weeks to come, fans will have to hope second-half collapses aren't becoming a trend for the Minutewomen., UMass coach Alexis Venechanos's squad has surrendered 62 percent of its total goals-against in the second half so far this season.

The away game experience at Maryland, however sour, should serve as an appropriate tune-up for an upcoming two-game stint in Boston.

Through March, Venechanos' squad is set to play road games at No. 10 Boston University and No. 14 New Hampshire before taking on the nation's top team, No. 1 ranked Northwestern, under the lights at McGuirk Alumni Stadium on March 25.

In a preseason interview, Venechanos indicated the Minutewomen would not back down.

"Hopefully this year we're able to sort of knock off those ranked teams out of conference," she said. "We're looking forward to playing the competition and knocking them off."

Holly J. Galvin can be reached at hgalvin@student.umass.edu

The Minutewomen were competitive early and went into halftime down 4-2 against the Terrapins, but were outscored 12-2 the rest of the way.

NEED AN APARTMENT?
PUFFTON VILLAGE
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

INTERES
WRIT
FOR SPO
CONTACT ELI RO
SPORTS@DAILYCO

Call Steve with questions.

| | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1 | | 6 | | 9 |
| | | 7 | | 4 | 1 |
| 8 | 4 | | 5 | 2 | |
| 8 | | | | 2 | |
| | 4 | 8 | 3 | 9 | |
| | 9 | | | | 3 |
| | | 8 | 3 | 7 | 1 |
| 1 | | 5 | 8 | | |
| 4 | | 2 | | 3 | |

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Money is better than poverty, if only for financial reasons."

— Woody Allen

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY KID SHAY

CHEAP CITY BY MICHAEL CAPOZZOLA

Are you a photographer?
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN is hiring photographers
Build your resume and get your photos published for over 10,000 people to see each day!
Send an email to photo@dailycollegian.com for more information

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Soon you will find yourself under investigation for possible crimes against hygiene.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You are a rising star in the porn industry, but sadly fate has it that you will reach your peak far too quickly.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Attach a high-powered laser beam to the hood of your car so that you never have to deal with pesky pedestrians ever again.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Someone had to be the first person fired from Stop and Shop for groping the melons, so why not you?

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Go streaking.
Right now.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Even though you will die today, take comfort in the fact that someone else will get promoted to your job.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Stop just standing there waving your arms around, and do something about the flesh-eating bacteria devouring your skin.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't act surprised when your degree from Unicorn College doesn't get you instant job placement.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Remember the wise words of Abraham Lincoln: "Rubinoff sucks."

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Putting a strobe light above your shower has brought a whole new level of energy into your morning routine.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
The 2003 motion picture "Flyin' Ryan" is loosely based upon your life. Look into this.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Dorks like you never amount to anything. This is because pathetic losers such as yourself have such low self-esteem.

tasty crackers!
free pizza & hot cocoa!*
www.dailycollegian.com/comics
*none of this is true

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Survey Takers Needed: Make $5 - $25 per survey. Do it in your spare time. www.GetPaidToThink.com

ANNOUNCEMENT

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblow-out.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-2337

FOR RENT

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms, hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Amherst 2, 3, & 4 Bedroom Apartments. Call for huge rent specials on both Immediate and Summer/Fall rentals! Beautiful property on the bus line to Umass. Air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Free Heat! 2 BR $1200-$1250, 3 BR $1500-$1550, 4 BR $2250. www.MillValleyApts.com 413-253-7377 or stop by at 420 Riverglade Drive.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 24, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Champions once again

Minutemen capture 3rd consecutive title

BY KYLE PREDKI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's swimming and diving team did it again.

For the third straight year the men's swimming team has won the Atlantic 10 Championship. The Minutewomen, however, walked away with fourth.

The first event of the A-10 Championships, and first of five on Wednesday, was the women's 200-yard medley relay. The team, consisting of Jennifer Corriveau, Christa Narus, Jessica Starosielec and Kathryne Chalikis finished in eighth place with a time of 1:45.98.

Following the women, the men competed in 200-yard medley relay. Max Butler, Mike Berthaume, Brian Schmidt and Juan Moliere were the four racers for the Minutemen and placed second (1:31.42) to a strong St. Bonaventure relay team.

The divers for the Minutewomen then competed in the 1-meter dive. Karen Upperco took first place (270.70) for Massachusetts for the third time in four years. Sarah Horstmann (260.55) and Hannah Swift (246.90) completed the sweep by finishing second and third, respectively.

The fourth event in Wednesday's competition was the women's 800-yard freestyle relay.

Narus swam the first leg of the race. She was followed by Chelsea Downing, Tavis Potter and Elizabeth Walsh. The team came in third (7:32.43) behind Richmond (7:27.63) in second and Fordham (7.24.25) in first.

The last event on Wednesday was the men's side of the 800-yard freestyle relay. The UMass team of Nate Bromage, Julian McKean, Tristan Partridge and Joey Sbordon had the lowest seed time of the teams, but the Minutemen finished third (6:47.33) behind Duquesne (6:44.46) and Xavier (6:40.53).

At the end of the first day, the UMass women ranked first in points, with 107. Fordham was second (99), and the A-10 women's powerhouse Richmond was third (74).

The first day for the men's competition consisted of two races, as opposed to the women's three events. After these two, Xavier led the pack with 69 points as UMass trailed closely behind with 66.

The first event of the second day, the 500-yard freestyle, was a tough one for the UMass women's swimming team, as there was strong competition. Two UMass swimmers, Molly Papish and Downing, competed in the race, but neither scored points.

See SWIMMING & DIVING on page 7

UMass coach Russ Yarworth, shown in 2007, was once again honored at the Atlantic 10 Championship. Yarworth was named A-10 Coach of the Year for leading his alma mater to a third stright conference title.

Second half powers Terps

Minutewomen falter in 2nd half, lose to No. 6 Terrapins

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The heavy underdog Massachusetts women's lacrosse team had little to lose on its trip through Title Town, but it better have taken notes after rubbing elbows with the sport's most storied Division I program.

Friday in College Park, a strong defensive first half by the Minutewomen wasn't enough to slow down undefeated No. 6 Maryland in a 16-4 loss.

During a game in which UMass (0-2) controlled possession for most of the opening play, halftime might've been the Minutewomen's worst enemy.

Finishing with an overall deficit of two draw controls (11-9) and trailing the Lady Terrapins (2-0) by two goals at the half, the Minutewomen gave up seven unanswered goals immediately after the break.

| | |
|---|---|
| Maryland | 16 |
| UMass | 4 |

Senior captain Holly Drown gave UMass a spark when she tied the score, 1-1, with an unassisted blast during the first 15 minutes of play. However, goals by Drown (one goal, one assist), Merritt Cosgrove, Haley Smith and Brittany Brigandi were not enough offensive muscle to overcome a top-10 team.

The eight-time national champion Terrapins outshot UMass 27-10. Junior Maryland attacker Caitlyn McFadden nearly outshot the entire Minutewomen squad and scored almost half of the Lady Terps' 16 goals. The junior captain finished with nine shots, putting seven in the back of the net.

In fact it was McFadden, a 2008 second team All-American, who kick-started the blowout when she scored back-to-back goals shortly after Drown's first-half equalizer. It was smooth sailing from there for Maryland, who lost just once in College Park last season.

Despite UMass veteran Cosgrove capitalizing on a free position shot with 22 seconds remaining in the opening period to tighten the score at 4-2, the Terps came out of the locker room outscored UMass 12-2.

Maryland's late onslaught showcased the current offensive gap between the nation's elite and the young UMass attack, which has notched fewer goals in two full games (11) than the amount Maryland scored in the second half of Friday's contest.

Nevertheless, the overmatched

See LACROSSE on page 8

Merritt Cosgrove and the Minutewomen had a difficult time against the No. 6 Terrapins on Saturday. Maryland defeated UMass, 16-4, and outshot the less experienced Minutewomen 27-10 overall.

UMass headed to nationals in Colo.

BY ADAM MCGILLEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Minutewomen ski team earned an invitation to the USCSA National Championships in Winter Park, Colo., after it finished fifth overall at the ECSC regional competition at Waterville Valley Ski Resort in New Hampshire over the weekend.

Only the top five teams advance to the National Championships. On the men's side, Alex Zahoruiko's seventh-place finishes in both events, earning an individual invitation to the National Championships. But a dismal first day prevented the Minutemen from reaching their goal. As they finished sixth.

UMass coach Skip Fox had hoped the men could repeat last year's first-place finish, but placing ninth in the slalom detracted from a much stronger second-place performance on the giant slalom.

Fox indicated last week that a top-five finish for the women was about all he could ask for. The Minutewomen are without their captain for the remainder of the season as Ashley Hawes sustained an ACL injury on Jan. 25.

The Minutewomen finished fifth and fourth in the slalom and giant slalom respectively, with three athletes in the top 15 of both events.

Abby Nolan posted a combined time of 2:19.76 on the giant slalom, the top individual performance for the UMass women. Junior Emily Shilletto, co-captain, finished ninth in the slalom and 10th in the giant slalom. Amy Gifford and Heidi Skinner placed in the top 15 of both events.

For the Minutewomen, a rough Saturday performance on the slalom was too much for their stellar performance on Sunday to overcome.

Andrew Hawes, co-captain for the Minutemen, lost his ski in his first run, an incident that ended his day. Matt Small also lost a ski on his first run, resulting in disqualification. During Saturday's second runs, the Minutemen tried to play it conservatively, but nothing seemed to go the Minutemen's way.

Fox said Stefan Ogle only needed to finish.

"Fifteen gates into the course something that never happens, happened. Stefan's rear binding literally broke in half. He would have finished the 54-gate course on one leg and one ski, but that is against the rules," Fox said in an e-mailed statement.

Team scores are calculated by combining the three best individual runs. Because Ogle did not finish, a ghost time was substituted, equivalent to the day's worst recorded time plus 10 percent.

On Sunday, three Minutemen finished in the top 10 of the giant slalom, led by junior Travis Hopkins. Hopkins placed fifth with a combined time of 2:13.26, followed by Zahoruiko in seventh (2:13.60) and Smalls in ninth (2:15.24).

They were second only to Colby-Sawyer College on Sunday.

The Minutewomen and Zahoruiko will head to Winter Park, Colo., next weekend for the USCSA National Championships, which take place March 3-7.

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu.

Instant replay debated

Top-ranked BU, Northeastern battle to pair of ties in Boston

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Call it sour grapes if you want, but Maine coach Tim Whitehead made a pretty compelling argument for video replay in Hockey East after Saturday's 4-3 loss to Massachusetts.

UMass senior Alex Berry knocked Maine goaltender Scott Darling down, which allowed Cory Quirk to knock the puck into the net, giving UMass a 1-0 lead f minute, 15 seconds into the game.

Whitehead doesn't have the best relationship with league officials, but Quirk's goal gave UMass an early lead, which quickly turned into a 4-0 deficit.

"The negative on the first goal was that if we had video replay, it would've been disallowed, but the positive is that it's more evidence for the league to move in that direction," Whitehead said following the loss to UMass.

"[Hockey East Commissioner] Joe Bertagna was here, so I think as a former goalie, he saw that one. That's a real good positive. The evidence is overwhelming for it, and I know it's a move Joe is in favor of. There's no reason why schools can't use it if they have the capacity."

Most Hockey East schools could make the appropriate accommodations if the league mandated. UMass coach Don Cahoon's only issue was a financial one.

"Replay, I think, is a positive thing," Cahoon said. "The most important thing is to get it right. As long as we have competent people managing it, I agree with it wholeheartedly. It's an expensive proposition; with the economy the way it is right now whether everyone is going to be able to afford to get that in. You're looking for about $20,000 per program to get it in place."

In 2006-07, the Western Collegiate Hockey Association experimented with replay. After a successful season, the conference's members voted to stay with the system and have used it since. But most WCHA games are broadcast on television, so there is working video at those games anyway.

Like Cahoon said, the most important thing is getting the calls right. If the WCHA, a conference in which media and fan scrutiny is as tough as it is anywhere in the country, then every conference should follow suit.

Hockey East

NO CHANGE AT THE TOP

With No. 4 Northeastern, the leader in Hockey East, and No. 1 Boston University, the league's second-place team, pitted against each other in a home-and-home pair last weekend, Hockey East critics and fans alike hoped to know definitively who the league's best team was.

No dice.

The Terriers and Huskies played to consecutive ties, maintaining the one-point differential between them. BU shut out the Huskies in November, so while the Terriers won the season series, it's impossible to declare either team the frontrunner in the league. Of course, the Terriers did rout the Huskies in The Beanpot Championship game, 5-2, on Feb. 9.

Saturday night, the game stood scoreless until 7 minutes, 39 seconds of the third period when BU captain/the best defenseman in college hockey Matt Gilroy scored a shorthanded goal. The Terriers looked certain to assume the top spot in Hockey East, but NU freshman Steve Quailer knotted the game at one at 17:38.

JAMES WETHERBEE/COLLEGIAN

UMass coach Don Cahoon answers questions about whether he feels instant replay should be instituted in Hockey East following a controversial goal in the Minutemen's 4-3 victory over Maine on Saturday.

"[Saturday's] game was a terrific college hockey game," BU coach Jack Parker told the Boston Globe following the game. "Both teams played real hard with real emotion. It was a real gritty effort by us and by them. We each get two points. Probably both of us would have settled for that before it started if we'd each gotten a [win], but to get two ties is really unusual."

With two weekends remaining before the postseason begins, neither team can afford to veer from the level of play they've sustained throughout the season. The Terriers head to Amherst on Friday night before hosting the Minutemen the following evening in Boston – a home and home with Providence awaits next weekend to close out the season. Meanwhile, Northeastern has consecutive home-and-home

See HOCKEY EAST on page 8

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

PARTLY CLOUDY HI: 40 LO: 24 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2009

Faculty, staff freeze salaries

Contract agreement after a year of negotiations

BY SAM BUTTERFIELD
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Two of the University of Massachusetts campuses' faculty, Amherst and Boston, agreed to freeze their wages for the current academic year on the same day the University announced a salary freeze for employees earning $120,000 or more a year, excluding faculty and unionized staff.

After 56 weeks of negotiations, the Massachusetts Society of Professors (MSP), a union of faculty and library staff, reached a settlement on Friday with the University administration.

The new contract will increase salaries by 1.5 percent in the 2009-2010 academic year and 3.5 percent the year after and is dependent on the University meeting set revenue thresholds.

The agreement is planned to go before the MSP Executive Board for a recommendation this week and will be voted on shortly after.

At UMass Amherst, average full-time professors earned $112,945 in 2007.

UMass President Jack M. Wilson also announced Friday a salary freeze for employees earning $120,000 or more a year, excluding faculty and unionized staff.

"The five campus chancellors and I are taking this step recognizing that people at our University and throughout society are being asked to make sacrifices at this time," Wilson said in a statement.

Within UMass' financial offices, employees were tight-lipped about the motivations behind or the implications of Wilson's move.

William Shea, director of the Office of Financial and Cost Analysis, said he had referred calls to the budget office and that he would comment no further.

At the budget office, Budget Director David Murphy referred calls to the UMass news office, while Senior Budget Analyst Lynn McKenna said she would provide data through the news office but no comment.

The freeze goes into effect immediately and will run through-

See SALARIES on page 3

University of Massachusetts President Jack M. Wilson.

Protest against Noho B.I.D.

City project ignites criticism

BY KAT MANSER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Against a backdrop of freezing drizzle, rush-hour traffic and the bustle of students, tourists and residents, a group of around 20 protesters gathered on the steps of city hall in Northampton on Thursday evening to protest a hotly-contested Business Improvement District (BID).

If approved by the city council, the BID would transform Northampton's downtown. The protest preceded a town meeting, at which both proponents and opponents of the legislation spoke their piece during the public hearing.

The signs wielded by many of the protesters proclaimed slogans such as, "Money for jobs and education, not for classist gentrification," and "Stop the BID. No private police. Don't hide the homeless and poor."

Opponents of the BID plan fear that it will raise the price of downtown rent, increase taxes unnecessarily, push out the homeless and sterilize what one 27-year resident, J.M Sorrel, calls a "vibrant, diverse downtown."

The BID Steering Committee published literature that claims these fears are false.

"The BID is an example of people working together. The goal is to make the city a cleaner, brighter, more vibrant place. The end result will improve the experience of all people who come to our downtown."

BID opponents claim that the BID is legislation that rests on a dubious foundation, as there are concerns as to the authenticity of the certification process of the signatures on the BID agreement, as well as the role Smith College has played in approving the BID.

Smith currently makes up a large portion of the necessary assets needed to be in agreement to get the BID approved, but Smith signed onto the BID in January, when many of the students were away from the campus.

"Essentially, the BID is an area of land including mostly commercial property, but the way this BID was drawn was to include a lot of nonprofit property, namely Smith College," said Smith student Gerilyn Hubbe, who is also a member of the Poverty is Not a Crime organization. "Smith College represents a very large portion of the BID, and part of the reason for this is for political reasons so that the BID could get passed very quickly because we have a lot of property value.

"The way the law is written, in order for the BID to pass through city council; 51 percent of the assets in the area have to agree to the BID," Hubbe added. "Smith represents 95 percent of the 51

See NOHO BID on page 2

Seniors vote on juicy class gift

BY ALYSSA CREAMER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This past November, Senior Campaign Committee co-chairs Meira Wainstein and Erin Sullivan announced on Senior Night at the Grad Lounge that the Class of 2009 had voted to create a juice bar and lounge in the University of Massachusetts' new recreation center as its class gift.

A record-breaking amount of votes for the class gift were cast as about 700 more seniors voted this year compared to last year. Over 1,700 seniors are estimated to have voted for one of three options: the juice bar and lounge in the new recreation center, a need and merit-based scholarship or aiding in building a "tech suite" in the library.

"I'm absolutely happy about the decision the class made," said Wainstein. "While all the gift options were going to benefit the University, something the juice bar does for the class that the others didn't was give everyone something to come back to. It's something that's always going to be here that we can come back to, show off and be proud of."

"The juice bar is going to provide a relaxing space for students to wind down from their hectic

See JUICE BAR on page 2

Members of the Senior Campaign Steering Committee hand out T-shirts to their classmates as they vote on the Class of 2009 gift.

UM prof. receives Guggenheim grant

Former sociology professor Anthony Harris received a two-year grant to study race differences in homicidal outcomes from criminal injury.

Race differences to be studied

BY EMILY REYNOLDS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Emeritus professor Anthony R. Harris, formerly of the Sociology Department at the University of Massachusetts, has received a two-year Harry Frank Guggenheim Foundation Grant.

Harris will be studying race differences in homicidal outcomes from criminal injury.

"There is a huge race difference in homicides," said Harris. "Adjusted for population size, the black homicide rate is seven times higher than the white rate."

Harris will look at a number of different databases to find out where along the line from criminal assault to possible death race differences are created that lead to more black homicides, whether in the original action or other places along the line between the original action and the actual death that creates the staggering statistical difference.

"I expect the differences do not have as much to do with murderous intent, but as with what interventions come afterwards," said Harris. "If you see the process in slow motion, you can see ways of looking at race differences in homicide from a different perspective."

In his research, Harris will be looking at multiple questions and different viewpoints to find his answer.

"Are witnesses calling 9-1-1 more likely to be involved in white homicides than black ones?" Harris asked. "Is it the

See GUGGENHEIM on page 2

Legal questions over hacking

BY KATHRYN FOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Jailbreaking, a hack that allows iPhone and iPod Touch users access to areas of their merchandise that they aren't intended to touch, has raised questions of legality.

Typically, this particular hack entails unlocking the handset in order to use it with another cellular network, or installing new third-party programs that are not available through the official channel the Apple Store. Apple claims that the only applications that are to be allowed on this popular smart phone are those that fall under its name.

Once a phone is "jailbroken," users may do many things with their iPhone that they could not have down under the eyes of Apple and the carrier, AT&T.

Among the various options are: downloading customization applications in order to personalize (ex. adding new themes, changing the text on things like "slide to power off," adding wallpapers and icons, etc.), programming it as a 3G modem for a laptop, installing new games and software and a multitude of other things.

Users may even switch to a different network instead of staying with the required AT&T wireless carrier.

Although jailbreaking is legal, it does violate the terms and conditions that the buyer agrees to when he or she purchases the iPhone.

If someone jailbreaks and is caught, Apple is permitted to void their warranty because the company has declared that the applications that are not endorsed breach upon the Digital Millennium Copyright Act.

The illegal part, though, would be to send in a formerly jailbroken iPhone for repair. Although jailbreaking presumably would have nothing to do with whatever is or was wrong with the iPhone, by doing so, one would have already voided their warranty. Meaning, sending it in when something goes wrong is the owner's own fault and is considered warranty fraud and consequently illegal.

Apple said that if they were to authorize jailbreaking, they would basically be supporting "copyright intringement, potential damage to the device and other potential harmful physical effects, adverse effects on the functioning of the device, and breach of contract."

Apple has no obligation to support hardware that has been backed, while those who jailbreak their devices must assume the risks if something goes wrong.

Some consumers believe that Apple is unfair in prohibiting jailbreaking, and companies like Skype and Firefox publisher Mozilla do as well. They have joined the fight with the Electronic Frontier Foundation (EFF) – a company focused on the freedoms of the networked world – in working to loosen the DMCA's constraints on iPhone jailbreaking, in order to make things less controlling and more fair for iPhone and iPod Touch owners.

On two separate occasions, these two conglomerates argued to the US Copyright Office that the DMCA should be modified in order to allow mobile phone users the autonomy to alter their hardware for services such as third-party applications that are not accepted by the original manufacturer.

Kathryn Foley can be reached at kfoley@student.umass.edu

Hacking into the iPhone or iPod Touch, commonly called jailbreaking, can benefit users as well as make them legally responsible.

ARTS & LIVING

CUBAN DOCUMENTARY

The Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival will continue this week with the showing of Cuban documentary, "The Sugar Curtain" directed by Camila Guzmán Urzúa .

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

BALSCHMITER DRAFTED

It's any athlete's dream to play professionally, and for UMass' Brandice Balschmiter it could come true. The senior was drafted No. 5 last Wednesday.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION

CHRIS RUSSELL REDEFINES WHAT PATRIOTISM MEANS FOR TODAY'S AMERICAN CITIZENS.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

INTRODUCING NEWSGARDEN: FOLLOW NEWS GEOGRAPHICALLY WITH DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM'S LATEST APPLICATION.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 22

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3693 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Mirlenti
Business Manager Alex Wamesuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Dermer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor James Mathews
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenzweig
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor P.J. Stanley
Web Editor Victor Jack
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kuczwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Tiertsnen
Asst. Editorial Leigh Greasley
Asst. Editorial Nick O'Malley
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo Ruan Fung
Assistant Photo Matthew Harrison
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Wehver

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been incorporated since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION TEAM
Nick Guarino

your week ahead on
Daily Collegian

INTRODUCING NEWSGARDEN

Follow news geogrpahically with dailycollegian.com's new application.

NEWS

Video: See more of what conservative radio talk show host Michael Graham had to say at UMass Tuesday night.

Slideshow: Catch the UMass Juggling Club in action.

Video: Wednesday Daily Collegian editors and reporters provide a wrap of the campus' budget crisis and Chancellor Holub's reaction to it in the "War Room."

Blog: This Week Read the latest in UMass research, politics and student life for the week on The Collegian's news blogs. News editor Will McGuinness tells of going under the knife for UMass kinesiology.

SPORTS

Slideshow: See the highlights of the UMass Men's basketball game against URI through the lense of a Collegian photographer.

ARTS

Live Blogging: Read Academy Awards coverage from Daily Collegian film critic Kevin Koczwara who "tweeted" during last night's program

Editor's Note:

Herpes link a media mistake

William McGuinness

In an article published in Monday's issue, a Collegian reporter looked into an alleged link between diseases transmitted via saliva and beer pong. It was a popular story online – over 15,000 hits – and students reacted strongly to it.

But it isn't true.

Many warn that people shouldn't believe everything heard, read or seen. As the news editor here at The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, I always hoped the content we provide would not be preceded by that statement, but I suppose things happen.

Granted, we were not the only news outlet to fall for the elaborate ruse, but this information isn't offered as an excuse. At our weekly news meeting, our reporters pitch stories to us, and we assign our ideas to the interested or available. Both the reporter and I were interested in the herpes story. It was relevant to our readership and reported a pseudo-epidemic avoidable by simply changing habit.

It featured a seemingly credible source from the Center for Disease Control linking – though indirectly – a national spike in herpes, mononucleosis and flu to the popular weekend activity. Its coverage from other papers and online led to Arizona State University's president, Michael M. Crow, telling Campus magazine that his staff would distribute free Solo cups to encourage more cleanly beer pong practices.

I called the Center for Disease Control, and their nationally-cited spokesperson, Dr. Cole Desorio, does not work for them. I'm sure he doesn't exist. I know – "Dr. Cole Desorio" sounds awfully similar to "Cold Sore," but he wasn't referenced in our story only others'. The obvious didn't register with me, the reporter or anyone else who read or reported on the piece throughout the country.

Nikki Kay, an actual spokesperson from the CDC – you'll have to take my word for it or else ask me for her telephone number – said the report cited by media outlets does not exist.

Coed Magazine, The Lantern from The Ohio State University, Current.com and many other student newspapers and websites in the blogosphere reported similar information at the time we did. Many similar hoaxes are aimed to expose the credulity the media or other institutions. "Gullible" is not written on any part of The Collegian's ceiling down here in the depths of the campus center, but the hoax essentially worked in proving that the reporters and editors here are human.

Journalism lecturer Steve Fox, who teaches multimedia journalism among other courses, said falling for the hoaxes circulating online and in the realm of public discourse happens in professional newsrooms and student ones alike.

We like to think of ourselves as student journalists rather than journalism students. This lesson, however, is the type that sticks with editors and reporters as they leave campus publications and head into whatever is next. The lesson might have come up in class; but unless faced with it – and officially apologizing for it – the moral is a tricky one to absorb otherwise.

Fox said information cannot be trusted and added that digging a little more – finding studies' funders, looking for the story behind the story – helps to expose the tricks for what they are.

It's like my old boss always said: "If your mom tells you it's true, check it out."

We did our digging, but it was yesterday. Today, we can only kick ourselves.

William McGuinness is the news editor of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian. He can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu

Crime Log Feb. 16 – 22

The crime on campus this semester continues to be minor offenses with no severe occurrences as of yet. "There have been no serious accidents or drug-related instances; it's continued to be quiet, basic stuff," said UMPD Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald.

Monday

Anthony Robinson, 20, of 47 East Main St. Brockton, Mass., was arrested in Cance dormitory at 11:27 p.m. and charged with violating an abuse prevention order.

Tuesday

Matthew F. Thornton, 22, of 61 Gray St. Unit #2 Amherst, was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on North Pleasant St. at 9:11 p.m. and charged with operating a motor vehicle with a suspended license, no inspection sticker and failure to stop/yield.

Wednesday

Peter John Cronin, 23, of 63 Russell St. Melrose, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Commonwealth Ave. at 1:24 a.m. and charged with OUI liquor, failure to stop/yield, two counts of marked lanes violation and reckless operation of a motor vehicle. "At 1:24 a.m. officers conducted a traffic stop on Commonwealth Ave. for several motor vehicle infractions and upon approach the operator was seen to have glossy, blood-shot eyes and slurred speech," said UMPD Deputy Chief Archbald. Cronin was asked to perform a number of field sobriety tests which he did. "He was unable to pass any tests to the officer's satisfaction and was placed under arrest," Archbald added. Alleged erratic driving alerted officers to Mr. Cronin and caused the car to be stopped. "As the vehicle approached the flashing red light at the intersection of University Drive and Mass. Ave. it failed to stop and took a wide-radius right turn going eastbound into the westbound oncoming lane – he was traveling on the incorrect side of the road going towards the officer's car," said Archbald.

Thursday

Jillian Coppola, 20, of 1540 West Mountain Rd. Westfield, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on University Drive at 9:28 p.m. and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

Friday

Stephanie Eileen Staples, 27, of 422 Belchertown Rd. Amherst, was arrested after an alleged domestic disturbance at the W.E.B. Dubois Library at 6:28 p.m. and charged with assault and battery – domestic. "We got a call from a male party who said he got in a verbal altercation outside the library with his girlfriend, he left and went to the bus stop where she confronted him again and elbowed him in the mouth," said Archbald. "This is unusual because we wound up arresting the female," he added. The victim took a bus from Wal-Mart to the UMPD where a cut on his lip was visible.

Saturday

Yusil Marina Soriano-Urena, 20, of 308 Cummins Highway. Apt #1 Roslindale, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Governors Dr. at 12:07 a.m. and charged with OUI liquor, marked lanes violation and a number plate violation.

Matthew Levy Medney, 20, of 11 Tanglewood Rd. Scarsdale, N.Y., was arrested after an alleged domestic disturbance at John Quincy Adams dormitory at 1:40 a.m. and charged with assault and battery with a dangerous weapon (shod foot), intimidating a witness and larceny over $250. "The reporting party stated that she was struck by her boyfriend and held in a headlock which made it difficult for her to breath," said Archbald. "Prior to our arrival dorm staff had separated the two because of a heated argument in which Medney also pinned her to the bed in the room," he added. Medney allegedly prevented the victim from calling the police constituting the intimidating a witness charge. "He removed the battery of the cell phone," said Archbald. The victim also stated that he left the area with her iPod Touch.

Sunday

Lauren Spano, 18, of 31 Sherman Rd. Enfield, C.T., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Clark Hill Rd. at 1:52 a.m. and charged with OUI liquor, speeding in violation of special regulation, marked lanes violation and having no license in possession. "An officer affected a stop on Van Meter Access Road because of speeding and marked lanes which had occurred on North Pleasant St., Infirmary Way and Clark Hill Road," said Archbald. Spano allegedly smelled liked she had been drinking. "As soon as officers began to speak with Lauren Spano they detected a strong odor of alcohol beverage from her breath and the vehicle," he added. Field sobriety tests were performed which registered a blood alcohol level of .13.

Brian Douglas Irving, 20, of 3 Kenwood St. Chelmsford, Mass., was arrested after an alleged domestic disturbance at Dickinson dormitory at 10:57 p.m. and charged with assault and battery – domestic and intimidating a witness.

—Compiled by Adam P Coulter, Collegian Staff. He can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu

Around 20 city residents rally over downtown BID proposal

NOHO BID from page 1

percent so our voice is huge in this, but our voice was also not asked for. This piece of legislation is not for the community. It is for business interests and the privatization of downtown for the purpose of making downtown more competitive with malls."

Many residents are not in favor of a downtown that they say mirrors a bland, commercial nature of most malls.

Sorrel said that people are attracted to the town because "[Northampton] is quirky and diverse and because we have characters on the street." She, along with others against the BID believe it is a "smoke-screen for gentrification."

Other concerns surrounding the BID center around the possibilities of much higher taxes, as well as higher rents, which small, independent businesses may not be able to afford.

In a statement distributed at the protest, the Poverty Is Not a Crime group also expressed that it is apprehensive. "The BID plan strongly implies it will exploit the homeless as a free labor pool to supplement the 'CLEAN team.' In a time of reduced funding for social services and a homelessness crisis, the BID would have court-ordered community service participants and work-release prisoners [the 'CLEAN team'] employed cleaning for businesses as opposed to true community service such as working for a shelter or serving at a soup kitchen."

In the same statement, the group spoke out against budget allotments in the BID that will secure "private security or off-duty cops with no oversight or constitutional restraint to drive away Northampton's homeless and panhandling."

One of the student leaders of the protest, David Beyer of Hampshire College, explained that he was expecting 60 more people than the 20 present to assemble.

Community organizer Ira McKinley believed the rain was a factor that kept many people away, pointing to the approximately 70-person attendance at a September 2008 event in the same vein – a protest against a panhandling ordinance that was originally included in the BID but was tabled; Beyer points out that the BID still contains language geared towards pushing out the panhandlers.

McKinley, who is a part of Poverty is Not a Crime as well as Social Change in Mind, an active organizer of events to benefit the homeless, and has a documentary coming out, delved deeper into the panhandling issue.

He addressed desperation and said "Many of these people have given up on life. Let's give them hope. They're just trying to survive. It's low-paying jobs or jail, a Catch-22. The system is not made for them to advance."

He mirrored a sentiment echoed by many BID opponents throughout the night; that the focus should be on addressing the roots of poverty, rather than creating a guise to make the area more attractive to affluent tourists.

The town hall meeting concluded with a closing of the public hearing, which means that the city council has 45 days to vote on the issue. In the mean time, opponents of the BID will wait anxiously, but not quietly, echoing Sorrell's statement, "We are different and unique, and to gentrify would tamper with the soul of our community."

Kat Manser can be reached at kmanser@student.umass.edu.

Juice bar plan for rec. center

JUICE BAR from page 1

class schedules," she continued. "We had a record number of votes this year, which is wonderful. The majority definitely were leaning towards the juice bar. During the times when we were collecting votes in the library, you could really see how many people were genuinely excited about the juice bar. It was an obvious winner from the start."

Now that the class had selected the juice bar, the next step is financing these plans. The Senior Campaign Committee hopes to raise around $32,000 in pledges towards the class gift.

"Our main goal is to let people know what we do," said Wainstein. "The more we get the word out, hopefully, the more people will want to get involved. We have a wonderful annual fund at the University that really devotes itself to helping UMass improve, and the excitement buzzing around this project is making our jobs much more rewarding."

To help raise money toward its goal, the Senior Campaign Committee will be holding a Trivia Night in March for seniors. Also, the seniors will plant a tree honoring their class on Arbor Day, Apr. 24 – a tradition that dates back to 1867 at UMass.

"I think giving a gift to the place that is going to provide us with a better future is hands down something we must do," said Wainstein. "I am more than happy and willing to give my part."

"This is a tradition that classes before us have all taken part in, and now, as we say farewell, it's our last parting venture," she added. "And the class gift isn't just a gift to the University. It is also a gift to the students that follow us. Just think, the class of '55 gave us all the benches outside the library, and we all use those all the time. The juice bar is our library bench."

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

Grant study may produce book

GUGGENHEIM from page 1

case that ambulances take longer to arrive in black homicides? Are there more medical procedures provided to whites in the ambulances? Are blacks likely to receive less high quality medical care in the hospital? If so, do these differences have anything to do with medical insurance?"

The new study that Harris is working on has some overlap with a piece he helped write in 2002 when he was still a professor at UMass. Harris received international attention along with three other co-authors, Stephen Thomas, Gene Fisher and David Hirsch, for their study "Murder and Medicine: The Lethality of Criminal Assault 1960-1999."

In that study, there was not a focus on race, but on how the death rate went down in overall assaults due to better emergency medical care and new medical technology.

"We are blinded to the amount of violence around because hospitals are saving people who would have died 20 years ago," said Harris. "If it weren't for emergency medical care, the death rate would be three to five times higher."

In his new research, he will be exploring if emergency medical care is different based on race.

"The biggest problem with studying this is that there is no one database, so you have to look at a lot of different ones," said Harris.

He will be looking at the National Crime Victimization Surveys in which there is information reported by the victim that may not have been reported to the police.

The National Incident Based Reporting System has more details about crimes, including victim, offender, nature of crime and weapon and if there is any property damage or personal damage. The National Violent Death Reporting System adds more information about witnesses, injury location, weapons used and ambulance arrival.

Harris will also be looking at the National EMS Information System for criminal injuries that involve transportation by ambulance to the hospital, where he will find answers to his questions about the time it takes to get to the crime scene and then to the hospital, treatment in the ambulance and other pertinent information about the hospital stay.

"For a long time, when people thought about homicides, they thought about dramatic actions with deadly intent," said Harris. "With modern medicine, you can see that many if not most homicides are not instantaneous. It could take hours, days or months for aggravated assault to become homicide."

While he is set to start this year to do his research, the data will probably be a few years old. "It is likely that the most recent data I will have will be from 2006," said Harris. "There is almost always a lag in social data you can get your hands on."

Harris is hoping to write a few reports and articles during his study, and possibly a book after all of his research is done, but is unsure at this time.

"The process always takes a long time," said Harris.

Harris worked at UMass from 1973 until 2006, and directed the sociology department's residential criminal justice program from 1998 to his retirement in 2004, and the joint sociology department/continuing education online criminal justice program from 2001 to 2006.

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu.

Arrest imminent in '01 Levy murder case

By Michael Doyle
McClatchy Newspapers

WASHINGTON — An arrest is imminent in the 2001 slaying of former federal intern Chandra Levy, police officials have told the California woman's parents.

In two unexpected telephone calls Friday night, Washington, D.C., Police Chief Cathy Lanier and a police lieutenant advised the Modesto, Calif., residents that "substantial evidence" enabled investigators to request an arrest warrant in the long-unsolved killing of their daughter.

"It's more bitter than sweet," Susan Levy said in an interview Saturday morning. "This still leaves a hole in my stomach."

Levy said Lanier did not identify the suspect by name in the telephone conversations, which occurred about 7 p.m. PST Friday.

"She just wanted us to know that this was really big, and that they believed they caught the murderer," Levy said. "She felt excited that they were able to put the pieces together."

In a statement issued Saturday, Lanier said simply that the investigation was ongoing.

"The Metropolitan Police Department has no information available for release in this ongoing investigation. This case generated bits of information, which we continued to follow up on," Lanier said in her statement.

Previous news reports have noted investigators' interest in Ingmar Guandique, an illegal immigrant from El Salvador now in federal prison in the Victorville, Calif., on charges related to attacks on two women in Washington's Rock Creek Park. Levy's skeletal remains were found in Rock Creek Park in May 2002, a year after she disappeared.

Levy's remains were put to rest in May 2003 at the Lakewood Memorial Park Cemetery in Hughson, Calif., near Modesto. The mystery of what happened to her has continued to unsettle family members and loved ones.

Cold case break

Events in the eight-year-old disappearance and murder of Washington, D.C. intern Chandra Levy:

2000
Sept. Levy moves to Washington, D.C., for U.S. Bureau of Prisons internship
Oct. First visit to office of Rep. Gary Condit, D-Calif.

2001
April 30 Last seen alive
May 7 Condit tells police Levy might be missing
May 10 Parents report Levy missing after she doesn't return home for college graduation
July 5 Aunt says Levy had secret sexual affair with Condit

2002
March 5 Condit loses Democratic primary, partly due to publicity surrounding Levy disappearance
April 12 Condit appears before federal grand jury
May 22 Bones found in D.C. park; identified as Levy's

2009
Feb. Law enforcement officials seek arrest warrant for inmate serving time for assaulting two women in Rock Creek Park in 2001

Source: AP, Washington Metropolitan Police, Congressional Quarterly Moments, Rec. U.S. National Park Service, U.S. Park Police

© 2009 MCT

"We have a life warrant, of sadness and loneliness," Levy said Saturday.

Raised in Modesto, Levy arrived in Washington as a Bureau of Prisons intern and University of Southern California graduate student. She was last seen publicly on April 30, 2001.

Levy's disappearance at age 24 rocketed to national attention after reports began quickly surfacing about an ostensible relationship with then-Rep. Gary Condit of Ceres, Calif., who represented her home district. Condit does not dispute reports that he eventually told investigators he was having an affair with Levy, though he consistently denied the relationship was "romantic."

The relationship between the former intern — her internship had come to an end shortly before her disappearance, just as she was preparing to return to California — and the much-older congressman, a member of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, prompted fevered speculation and intense media coverage.

Police never named Condit a suspect, and Condit's staffers at the time consistently said the public attention to the congressman was distracting police from the investigation.

The controversy led directly to Condit losing his congressional seat, in a 2002 primary election won by Rep. Dennis Cardoza. Condit and his family now live in Arizona, where they ran two Baskin-Robbins ice cream stores for a while. Condit has also filed multiple defamation lawsuits as a result of tabloid coverage of the Levy case, the suits have since either been settled or dismissed.

More cuts may come

SALARIES from page 1

out fiscal year 2010, which begins July 1. The new policy formalizes a loosely adopted wage-freeze that has been in effect throughout this fiscal year.

The move comes shortly after a two-week furlough for highly compensated UMass system employees aimed at cutting costs, as well as layoffs and other budget actions. Wilson's decision also came while the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees Committee on Administration and Finance met in Boston last week.

"Regretfully, it may be necessary for further furloughs, layoffs and budget actions as we move through the year," President Wilson said in the statement, highlighting the fact that experts believe the economy will continue to struggle in the coming months.

"We are living at a time when few people are seeing their financial circumstances improve and most are happy to preserve what they have as we ride out the current fiscal and economic storm. These steps are designed to preserve quality and maintain stability," Wilson said. "We are working very hard to make sure that UMass remains the high-quality, affordable option for the sons and daughters of the Commonwealth."

University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski said President Wilson's move is aimed at freeing up funding and that it could save UMass Amherst more than $100,000 in fiscal year 2010.

"Based on our current planning assumptions of a zero percent salary increase in fiscal year 2009 and a 1.5 percent salary increase in fiscal year '10, the savings to the UMass Amherst campus would be $147,000," he said.

Vice President for Communications for the president of the University Robert P. Connolly said that President Wilson's move was in accordance with a state funding reduction, which is causing UMass to reconsider its spending in many areas.

"President Wilson and the five chancellors decided to go forward with the salary freeze in deference to the state funding reduction that is requiring the University to go forward with an array of budget-tightening measures," he said.

Connolly said the move reflects a policy which has already been in effect but not formally ordered for some time.

"This initiative, which would result in a freeze through June 30, 2010, really codifies a freeze that has already been in effect for many employees for a year or more. This freeze affects 315 non-faculty, non-union employees," Connolly said, while emphasizing that salaries will probably not be going up for anyone given current economic conditions.

"I think it is safe to say that very few University employees of any description are seeing salary increases this year," he stated.

Matt Rocheleau also contributed to this article.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sjb09@hampshire.edu

New Jersey Senate approves medical marijuana legislation

By Mary Jo Layton
McClatchy Newspapers

HACKENSACK, N.J. — Patients suffering from cancer, AIDS and other chronic or debilitating illnesses could use marijuana medicinally under a bill passed by the state Senate on Monday.

New Jersey would become the 14th state to have a medical marijuana law, which would allow patients to keep six marijuana plants and 1 ounce for personal use.

State Sen. Nicholas Scutari, D-Union, said the legislation he sponsored was as "an avenue of last resort" for patients suffering from nausea, chronic pain, wasting syndrome, seizures and other ailments.

"This is not the legalization of marijuana for recreational use," said Scutari, a lawyer and municipal prosecutor. "We're not talking about thrill-seekers and drug addicts here."

Under the proposed measure, patients would have to be diagnosed by their physicians as having a debilitating medical condition. The patient would then obtain a photo registry card issued by the state Department of Health and Senior Services so they could obtain marijuana from an alternative medicine center without fear of arrest or prosecution.

Supporters of the bill, including Sen. Bill Baroni, R-Mercer, offered passionate testimony about suffering patients, including a 37-year-old man, the father of three young children, plagued by multiple sclerosis who found relief from medical marijuana, not Oxycontin, sleeping aids or other prescription painkillers.

State Sen. Gerald Cardinale, R-Cresskill, was among several Republicans who opposed the bill, claiming it was written too broadly. Cardinale said he didn't object to the concept, but said that "a very small percentage" of users in states that allow medical marijuana are patients the law is intended to aid.

Cardinale cited an analysis of medical marijuana patient records reviewed by the San Diego County, Calif., district attorney, which revealed that less than 3 percent of patients were suffering from AIDS, glaucoma or cancer. Additionally, more than half of those permitted to use medical marijuana were under age 30 and research indicates the substance is harmful.

"Moderate use of marijuana causes brain cells to die," Cardinale said. "That's why the federal government made marijuana forbidden."

Opponents of the measure, including John Tomicki, executive director of the League of the American Families, vowed to fight the proposal when it is considered in the Assembly.

Each member would be polled by his organization to determine their vote prior to the election, he said. "They are going to be called and asked 'yes' or 'no,'" he said.

David Evans, executive director of the Drug Free Schools Coalition, cited the lack of scientific evidence on marijuana use and noted that several law enforcement organizations and anti-drug groups, including the National Council on Alcoholism and Drug Dependence of New Jersey, oppose the bill.

THE BRYANT GRADUATE PROGRAMS

The Bryant MBA
- A rigorous program that can be completed in one or two years.
- Complete the program with a class of other professionals.

The Bryant MPAc
- The two semester, full-time MPAc program meets the 150-hour requirement for CPA licensure.
- More than 40 top regional and international firms recruit at Bryant each year.

The Bryant MST
- This highly specialized program builds an expertise in taxation.
- The 10-course program can be completed on a part-time basis.

To learn more about these programs and upcoming information sessions:

Contact us at (401) 232-6230 or GRADPROG@BRYANT.EDU

Bryant University
Graduate School of Business
Smithfield, Rhode Island
www.bryant.edu | (401) 232-6230

Blueberry EXTRAVAGANZA

- Fresh Blueberries with Herb Tuna Salad
- Zesty Blueberry Barbecue Sauce with Grilled Chicken
- Blueberry Corn Pancakes
- Chilled Blueberry Soup
- Chicken Breast with Blueberry Chutney
- Blueberry Jam (local)
- And More...

FEBRUARY 25–28 ALL DCs

Blueberries are ranked #1 in Antioxidants and are high in Vitamin C and Fiber

Ivy Restaurants & Institutions
Dining Services UMassAmherst
Blueberries U.S. Highbush Blueberry Council
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Redefining patriotism

Chris Russell

Socrates was unjustly convicted for "corrupting the youth of Athens" and sentenced to death. He refused to escape into exile though because it would break Athenian law. During this time, Athens was under constant threat of attack, making Socrates believe that to maintain public order – essential for defending the city – the laws must be enforced.

Socrates died for Athens because he believed it was the right thing to do. In "The Trial and Death of Socrates," Plato wrote that Socrates said "your country is to be honored more than your mother, your father and all your ancestors…you must worship it, yield to it and placate its anger more than your father's."

Socrates' patriotism was not about flag waving, chants of "Athens" or national holidays. It was a matter of life and death. Without Socrates-esque patriotic zeal, Athens could not survive.

Today, many people have the same feelings about America as Socrates did toward Athens. In a Dec. 26, 2008 column for the Los Angeles Times, Joel Stein discussed how an episode of Sean Hannity's "Hannity's America" was titled "The Greatest Nation on Earth." In the episode, Hannity said several times, "the U.S. is the greatest, best country God has ever given man on the face of the Earth."

Socrates would approve of such unbridled patriotism because it was necessary for America – or Athens – to survive. Yet, is such patriotism healthy for America now? After all, neighboring city-states and marauding foreign armies do not currently threaten America with invasion.

Many claim patriotism is a good thing, even if we don't need it for self preservation like Athens did because it makes people happy. Loving America provides people with a sense of community; it makes them feel part of something larger than themselves and gives life value and meaning.

Patriotism has a dark side, though. To be considered "patriotic" in the definition conservatives use, one must support America in wartime. This made sense to Socrates because Athens was fighting for its survival. Now, America fights wars not for survival but to achieve foreign policy objectives. Does that deserve patriotism?

The Iraq war, for example, had nothing to do with America's survival. It was meant to achieve foreign policy goals – spreading democracy and increasing American influence in the Middle East. To garner support for the war, Bush cherry-picked intelligence that made Saddam Hussein seem like a threat and ignored intelligence that said Iraq posed no danger to America.

> America fights wars not for survival but to achieve foreign policy objectives. Does that deserve patriotism?

Bush made people patriotic because they feared their country, home and life was threatened by a madman armed to the teeth with WMDs. Without this patriotism, Bush had no war. People were not going to put American lives at risk to achieve neo- conservative foreign policy objectives.

Peter Zimmerman, scientific advisor to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee during the Bush administration, discussed how this political climate caused many to support the President's quest for war in an interview for the book "Hubris."

"There was an election coming up. The Democrats were afraid of being seen as soft on Saddam or on terrorism," Zimmerman said.

Calling someone "soft" on national security implies they will not do enough to keep America safe. It also implies they are "unpatriotic." A "patriotic" person would not endanger America. Democrats didn't want to be vulnerable to such attacks come election day, causing many to support the war.

An unchallenged war is not healthy for America.

Before America goes to war, there should be a full and open debate concerning which actions to take. If this had been the case with Iraq, maybe more would have realized there was also intelligence saying Hussein had no WMDs, or ties to terrorism.

Maybe the war could have been averted, and innocent lives saved. Instead, Bush used patriotism to pull the wool over America's eyes so he could bring democracy to the Middle East, along with more permanent American bases.

Patriotism also clouds the issues related to the "War on Terror." According to Bush, this "war" was to protect America from terrorists who attack us because they hate our values and freedoms. Patriotic Americans could not question this logic, as America was at "war."

Yet, what if it was American policy that caused terrorists to want to attack us in the first place? That would make the "War on Terror" seem more like a campaign to maintain American influence in the Middle East than a war to protect America. This question was rarely asked though, which gave Bush the freedom to prosecute the "War on Terror" as he saw fit.

What is patriotism good for now? Manipulating the public to support wars they believe will protect them, but which really serve political objectives. Does that make you feel patriotic?

Chris Russell is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at crussell@student.umass.edu.

Obama keeping his promise

Barack Hussein Obama is making good on a promise.

"America has to talk to its enemies," he said during his Presidential campaign, and recently a delegation was sent to the Middle East to do just that. Comprising our own Senator Kerry, Rep. Brian Baird of Washington and Rep. Keith Ellison of Minnesota, the delegation toured Gaza and then held talks with the government of Syria, a nation deemed a "supporter of terrorism" by the Bush regime.

Zamil Akhtar

This comes after Obama signaled he wanted "direct engagement" with Iran, one of the countries included in the infamous "axis of evil" by the Bush regime. Iranian President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad responded positively, saying his country welcomes talks with the U.S. "in a fair atmosphere with mutual respect."

And that's what it is all about – fairness and mutual respect. The first television interview Obama gave after becoming President did not go to CNN or FOX, but to Al-Arabiya, a Saudi-run news channel. During that interview, he spoke of a fundamental shift in policy by his administration toward the Muslim world, saying the "United States has a stake in the well-being of the Muslim world" and "that the language we use has to be a language of respect. I have Muslim members of my family. I have lived in Muslim countries."

The notion that the U.S. government actually cares about the well being of Muslims is indeed something new. During Israel's invasion of Gaza last month, while Bush was still president, 1,300 Palestinians were killed as opposed to 13 Israelis. And yet, U.S. congressmen in televised interviews across the country were almost completely unwilling to sympathize at all with the Palestinian dead, reducing all the murdered children to "war collateral." This language is also used to reduce the humanity of those killed in Afghanistan, Iraq and Pakistan – and Muslims are increasingly feeling ire from the fact that their lives are valued so cheaply.

> The first television interview Obama gave after becoming president did not go to CNN or FOX but to Al-Arabiya, a Saudi-run news channel.

Contrast that with what Rep. Baird said during his recent tour of Gaza.

Baird said that he was shocked by "the level of destruction, the scope of it, specifically the civilian targets – schools, hospitals, industry" and that Israel "apparently willfully destroyed any capacity of the Palestinians to rebuild their own infrastructure…if our colleagues had seen what we have seen, I think their understanding of the situation would be significantly impacted. They would care about what happened to the Palestinians."

Coming from a U.S. congressman, this recognition is cherished.

Obama has also expressed his views on the sanctity of all life.

"What I want to communicate is the fact that in all my travels throughout the Muslim world, what I've come to understand is that regardless of your faith – and America is a country of Muslims, Jews, Christians, non-believers – people all have certain common hopes and common dreams," Obama said during the Al-Arabiya interview.

Though these are just words at the moment, they carry with it the hope Obama promised to the American people all the way across the Muslim world. In the process of ripping apart Afghanistan and Iraq, Bush's "War on Terror" sparked a new generation of distrust and resentment between Americans and Muslims.

Most Muslims do not align with Al-Qaeda or Iran, but the antagonism of Muslims under Bush and the one-sidedness of his mediation in the Israel-Palestine issue pushed many in the Muslim world to view fierce critics of America, like Ahmadinejad, as defiant heroes opposing an imperialist bully.

Obama always said he wanted to bring change.

"My job is to communicate to the American people that the Muslim world is filled with extraordinary people who simply want to live their lives and see their children live better lives. My job to the Muslim world is to communicate that the Americans are not your enemy. We sometimes make mistakes. We have not been perfect," he said.

The importance of this sentiment, and the action taken in support of it, will go a long way in securing peace between the world's 1.5 billion Muslims and the world's only superpower. Many predicted a "clash of civilizations" between the western and Muslim worlds, but that prediction was built on the assumption that Muslims and westerners have dissimilar values and dissimilar goals, and that both desire to dominate the other.

The reality, though, is much simpler. Muslims, like everyone else, desire self-determination. Only when the U.S. becomes an obstacle to that self-determination will there be enmity between the two. Case in point: In 1953, U.S. spies aided in the overthrow of the democratically-elected Iranian government, installing the oppressive Shah in its place. For years, the U.S. supported the Shah against the will of the Iranian people – all because the Shah gave the U.S. more access to Iranian oil. This is at the root of Iranian resentment toward the U.S., it is not because they "hate our freedoms."

Obama, unlike his predecessor, seems to understand why it is harmful for the well-being of Americans to pursue policies that makes the world hate them. As Americans, we have to support Obama in this initiative, because military might can never replace mutual trust and friendship as a foundation for our safety.

Zamil Akhtar is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at zakhtar@student.umass.edu.

Balancing freedom and privacy

Matt Kushi

Checks and balances. Freedom and privacy. These are words that we all know well. We have seen time and time again in history books to describe various parts of the United States government.

However, they have another significance. If you look again, you will see that the United States of America is built upon them.

The morals that the United States is founded upon are the rights to freedom and privacy and are among the many unalienable rights that have been granted to us.

When we were teenagers enjoying the freedom of our youth, one thing that we all demanded was the freedom from the ever-watching eyes of our parents. But with the right to freedom, there is the right to privacy.

Although we demanded to be the sole decision-makers in our lives, our parents were watching over us – and with good reason. That is because freedom and privacy cannot exist without a system of checks and balances.

The four words are so simple yet so powerful. How did we build a society upon the concepts of these words?

It is a question that we still ask today – one that reflects the very society that we live in. It is a question being asked in Andover, Mass., after the death of a 16-year-old girl that occurred following an unsupervised teen party.

Elizabeth Mun died after falling into a frozen pond after leaving a party at which alcohol may have been present.

Mun's death was an unnecessary one. It could have been prevented.

Several questions must be asked. Why was the party unsupervised? Was there alcohol? Why didn't a friend take her home or, at the very least, prevent her from leaving the party alone? Was Mun's death a freaky and tragic accident in which she just happened to fall into a body of water?

In this case, it looks like there was an excess of freedom and privacy and a shortage in checks and balances.

So the question must be asked, where do you draw the line between freedom and privacy? Is there a clear cut answer to that question?

I am not one who claims to know the answer, but I do know that we must be more aware of our surroundings in order to maintain human life.

> The four words are so simple yet so powerful. How did we build a society upon the concepts of these words?

We have a tendency to complain that there are too many rules in this world. However most of the world's wrongs and crimes occur due to the fact that the rules have not been enforced.

Though crime and neglectful tragedies are inevitable, I believe that by providing a lax system for our youth, we are ultimately sacrificing our ability to care for others.

We rightfully grant teenagers a degree of freedom by allowing them to make their own decisions. However we neglect the fact that they are only teenagers and are not mature adults with years of decision-making experience under their belts.

That being said, the system of checks and balances is one that must be used by all. It is not a system that is only to be used by worried parents but instead by all in society.

This tragedy is only a small reflection of problems that society has as a whole.

Thousands die too young every year by unnecessary causes. This is reflected in the statistics put out each year documenting deaths caused by drunk driving, parties involving massive amounts of alcohol and crime in general.

These problems are a result of the fact that there was not someone there to watch over them. They were either not cared about enough or given too much freedom.

Too often we excuse this problem. We hide it behind the rationale of that these are the brutal facts of life. What many fail to see is that these things can be changed. The world lives on the fresh air of change. If we change, so will those around us.

What we need to do is to be able to care about one another without sacrificing our freedom. This does not involve a high-wire act of tracking someone with a GPS system. Rather, this simply involves taking care of each other, such as driving a friend home if they have had one too many drinks. That alone would save many lives.

So this brings us back to the tragic story of Elizabeth Mun. Should there have been parental supervision? I think there should have been.

Should there be more checks and balances within human society? Where is this fine line between the concepts of freedom and privacy?

After you read this article, think about how valuable a human life is. Is one person's life worth the cost of change? Think on it and make your own decision.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

Civility: all it takes is a step

I cannot tell you how many columns and articles I have read calling for an end to racism, sexism and other "isms" during my time at the University of Massachusetts. Not to mention the number of protests that always seem to shut down whatever part of campus that I need to get to at that time.

Ben Rudnick

Over the past several months, I have come to the realization that, at least at UMass, none of these "isms" are likely to ever be eradicated. How can we possibly combat all of these heinous attitudes that we see in the people around us if we can't even acknowledge that they have a right to share the planet with us? How can you convince someone to love his fellow humans if, by your own behavior, you yourself exude contempt or – far worse – indifference for their very presence in your vicinity?

Ralph Waldo Emerson once said, "Life is not so short but that there is always time enough for courtesy."

What he really meant was that it really takes but a moment to consider the rest of the people in your environment. It takes almost no effort to accommodate them in so many miniscule, yet momentous, ways. I think it is time that we all remember this simple way to show the people around us that we have at least some appreciation that they exist.

Imagine yourself talking with a classmate while walking down a hallway barely wide enough for the two of you. A stranger is walking towards you down the hall. What do you do? What about the same situation on a snow-choked sidewalk? How many of you think to go single file so that the other person is not pushed into the wall, or forced to step in the snow/slush/ice?

I am not talking about going more than a step or two out of your way, or putting yourself out to be nice to others. I merely note that way too many people around here seem to be completely oblivious to the fact that they are not the only beings on Earth. There are over 25,000 students on this campus, and that does not include the faculty, the staff or the many visitors who come on a daily basis. With all these people walking, running or biking from place to place, it would amaze you to see how far a little common courtesy, spread liberally throughout the population, can go.

> I think it is time that we all remember this simple way to show the people around us that we have at least some appreciation that they exist.

For example, UMass undoubtedly spent some ridiculous amount of money painting a clear two-lane bike path between Whitmore and the library plaza, funds which they may be wishing they could recoup right about now. But how many people actually pay attention to it? Never mind the fact that ignoring it guarantees that that money has been wasted, but what is so hard about letting the people who ride have a clear path in which to do so? The distance is the same for you whether you walk in or out of the path, so why not leave it for the cyclists?

Who knows, maybe by showing a little courtesy to the people in your vicinity you might actually enhance the civility of our tragically fractious society. I don't mean to say that courtesy is somehow the one missing element that will fix all the ills of our community, but does anyone deny that it would be nice if we could all be a bit more civil to each other? And wouldn't civility be enhanced if we were not all bumping into each other constantly?

A moment's thought spent on keeping ourselves out of each other's way could be like our own personal "butterfly effect," bringing just a little bit more peace to our campus, town, state or world.

Think of it this way – we've all heard the saying "think globally, act locally," right? Well, isn't the foundation of that very popular aphorism the idea that we can create big changes in the world by taking small actions in our daily lives at home? So while you are thinking about recycling, carpooling or performing community service, how about taking the time to think about being just a bit more considerate of others? After all, if you don't think these small things add up to big benefits for humanity, then why do any of that stuff at all?

In 1938, F. Scott Fitzgerald came to a realization that I believe is just as appropriate for our tough times as it was for his. "My generation of radicals and breakers-down never found anything to take the place of the old virtues of work and courage and the old graces of courtesy and politeness."

It is telling that he saw fit to place courtesy and politeness on the same high pedestal as work and courage. Now that it has been brought to your attention, will you make any effort to follow F. Scott and Ralph Waldo's examples?

Ben Rudnick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at brudnick@student.umass.edu.

PITY, WE PROVIDE A PLETHORA OF PALPABLY
PLAYFUL PARSNIPS PLYING
PLAYFULLY AT PRUDENTLY
PRIM PIRANHA PLANTS
PRUDENTLY POSING AS PACIFISTS POTENTIALLY PUFFING PUERILE PLAQUE
PROPOSED BY PUNCTUAL
PERSIAN POLO PLAYERS
PUNCTURING PROFUSELY
PATRIOTIC PIGEONS.

PITIFUL PEA PROVERB

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Cuba focus of film

Festival continues with film on 'Golden Age'

By Nora Crocker
Collegian Correspondent

Each year, the Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival, sponsored by the Interdepartmental Program in Film Studies at the University of Massachusetts, offers students, faculty and other movie-lovers from the surrounding Five College Area a chance to view cutting-edge films from around the globe. The festival will continue this week with its theme, "Beyond Walls," with the showing of Cuban documentary "The Sugar Curtain," directed by Camila Guzmán Urzúa.

In her autobiographical debut film, director Camila Guzmán Urzúa reflects on growing up during the "Golden Age" of the Cuban Revolution. Through visits to her elementary school and other memorable places from her childhood, Guzmán Urzúa recalls a time when Cuba provided education, healthcare, work and housing a time when Cuba was like a paradise.

The film "[offers] a provocative historical perspective on the Cuban Revolution," said festival curator Catherine Portuges.

Guzmán Urzúa was born in Santiago de Chile in 1971 but left with her family in 1973 after a coup. She spent her childhood and adolescent years in Havana and left in 1991, shortly before the collapse of the Soviet Union.

The collapse of the Soviet Union found Cuba in economic crisis, one in which food rations and illegal jobs were necessary for survival – a world different from the one Guzmán Urzúa grew up in and remembers.

Guzmán Urzúa was shocked by the state of Cuba when she returned in 1994, and it was this visit that inspired her to make "The Sugar Curtain."

"And it was then when I started to have this kind of need of recuperating the country of my childhood that wasn't there anymore and had been real. And people were beginning to forget about it, in a way," said Guzmán Urzúa.

She decided to make the film in 1999 she "realized that Cuba had completely changed."

Guzmán Urzúa currently lives in Argentina. She studied film in Paris at Les Ateliers Varan and in London at the London College of Printing and Distributive Trades. She has worked on a number of films since 1996, which include Amalia Escriva's "Pablo Neruda," Carmen Castillo's "Maria Felix, la Doña," Patricio Guzmán's "The Pinochet Case" and Ricardo Larrain's "El Entusiasmo."

She wrote and directed the documentary, "La Voie de Thomas," with Les Ateliers Varan in Paris in 2002. "The Sugar Curtain" is her first full-length feature film.

Released in 2005, "The Sugar Curtain" has been showcased in festivals around the world. The film was shown in the 2007 Havana International Festival of New Latin American Cinema, the 2007 San Francisco International Film Festival, the 2007 Tribeca Film Festival, the 2007 Cinéma du Réel, the 2007 Berlin International Film Festival, the 2006 Toronto International Film Festival and the Buenos Aires International Festival of Independent Cinema.

The film was chosen Best Documentary at the 2007 Havana International Festival of New Latin American Cinema and was awarded the FIPRESCI Award at the Buenos Aires International Festival of Independent Cinema. The FIPRESCI Award is given out to reward what the International Federation of Film Critics see as enterprising filmmaking.

"The Sugar Curtain" was made in an effort to hold onto the happy memories of a place that is now stricken with disease, violence and corruption.

"Everybody was surprised when I used to say that I was happy when I was in Cuba, and I had a happy childhood. For me, it was important to keep that in a little box, somewhere in my heart. I had this kind of necessity. My country disappeared, and it was important not to forget it," said Guzmán Urzúa.

"The Sugar Curtain" is playing free of charge tonight, Feb. 25, at 7:30 p.m. in room 137 at the Isenberg School of Management. It is a part of the ongoing Multicultural Film Festival, which is in its 16th year. This year, the theme is titled "Beyond Walls," filmmakers who explore the post-socialist era through their work.

Nora Crocker can be reached at ncrocker@student.umass.edu.

"The Sugar Curtain" brings the impact of the fall of the Soviet Union closer to the U.S. in the Multicultural Film Festival's series "Beyond Walls" with an in-depth look at Cuba.

Extreme cosmetic colors this Spring

By Jennifer Turner
Collegian Staff

Winter is slowly but surely melting away and spring is on the horizon. The best cure for those cold weather blues is grabbing the best and brightest in cosmetics. Get some color in your life with this season's new makeup trends.

This season is all about extreme colors.

Urban Decay's spring line, full of bright colors and shimmer, is reminiscent of 80s glam. You will feel like a true rock star in the "Heavy Metal Glitter Eyeliner," but the new can't-miss product is the "24/7 Glide-On Eye Pencil." It's the smoothest, boldest eyeliner I have ever tried, and I highly recommend grabbing one in every color. For an even more intense style, layer two colors together.

Urban Decay is definitely the best way to go for the perfect pop of pizzazz in your life. Urban Decay Cosmetics can be found at Sephora or at UrbanDecay.com.

Now we all know that Spring Break is just around the corner, but sadly, most of us look like we haven't seen the sun in years. Want an easy way to fake a healthy glow without visiting the tanning booth?

Benefit Cosmetics' "Hoola" bronzer remains one of their most popular products and for good reason. It delivers a wonderful warmness without looking too heavy.

For those with very fair skin, my favorite bronzer is Too Faced's "Pink Leopard Bronzing Powder." It blends pinks and neutrals with the light bronzer to help create a soft glow on delicate, porcelain skin. Benefit Cosmetics and Too Faced can both be purchased at Sephora.

As for lips this season, it's all about bright pinks, corals and deep reds. Lips will stand out this spring. Of course, it's also important to soothe and condition lips after the cold winter winds have done their damage.

My favorite lip fix? Clinique's "Superbalm" in raspberry. It's a moisturizing and protective balm with a light tint of pink. It is beautiful paired with a darker lipstick, like Clinique's "Long Last Lipstick" in Chianti. Beauty and comfort – what more can you ask for? Clinique products can be found at Macy's, Sephora and online at Clinique.com.

Finally, it may be time to switch to a lighter fragrance. Benefit Cosmetics has a delightful option in their famous "Maybe, Baby" perfume. It blends peach, apricot, ginger and water blossoms to create a soft, flirty scent.

Prefer less fruity and a bit more floral? Try Clinique's "Happy in Bloom." It has a sweet, floral fragrance, and is available at all Clinique counters. A small, limited edition 1-ounce travel size is available only at Sephora.com.

So, get ready for spring with some new colors and most importantly – have fun with it and try something new.

Jennifer Turner can be reached at jturner@student.umass.edu.

Chic looks during recession

Designers search for consumer pleasing looks in wardrobe

By Robin Givhan
The Washington Post

NEW YORK — The standards of success and contentment have been greatly lowered since the last time the fashion establishment gathered here for the seasonal unveiling of really expensive clothes. When one offered that most mundane greeting – Hi, how are you? – around midtown's Bryant Park last week, no small number of well-dressed folks who six months ago indulged in existential angst over a pair of shoes, now respond with a simple word: employed.

That alone is reason enough to rejoice. But it's not enough of an excuse to shop.

The decline in our consumer culture has caused a significant amount of stress in the fashion industry, and that, in turn, has caused it to cleave in two. There are designers who respond to the dire state of the financial system by doing some of their best or most creative work. The crisis serves as a challenge, daring them to make themselves more relevant and irresistible to consumers than ever. But another group of designers seems to be cracking under the pressure. Their indulgences appear even more narcissistic and out-of-touch than ever.

Designers such as Derek Lam and the two sisters behind the Rodarte label showed collections that were articulate and clear, and in the case of Rodarte, more refined than in the past.

Lam's collection was grown-up and sexy, a fact underscored by the jazz soundtrack that accompanied his Tuesday show. His jersey dresses hugged the body and honored its curves, and his coats, trimmed in fur, struck the perfect tone between opulence and luxury.

Laura and Kate Mulleavy of Rodarte continue to create clothes that are more intricate art projects than workaday garments. But the fall collection of marble-printed fabric and leather dresses moved them closer to balancing their flights of fantasy with the mundane reality that a dress ought not be something more suitable for framing than wearing to a dinner party.

But no designer was more direct in his mission to reassure customers and to move the merchandise than Ralph Lauren. He made no bones about presenting a collection Friday morning that looked like 100 previous Ralph Lauren collections – this time in ivory. It was horsy and glamorous, East Coast tweed meets Western patchwork and shearling. The designer swaggered out in fringed leather pants and a tweed vest to take his bows.

Designers like Lauren know precisely what it is that they want to say. And they just get on with it.

Designers such as Michael Kors, Francisco Costa at Calvin Klein, Vera Wang, Narciso Rodriguez and the duo behind the Proenza Schouler label worked hard to provide consumers with a sense of optimism during these roundly depressing times. In some cases, they eased off the aesthetic experimentation and focused on the silhouettes and construction techniques that first aroused passion among shoppers. In other instances, they simply realized that editing and restraint are more important to the success of a collection than all the beads, rhinestones and sequins in the world.

At the Calvin Klein show on Thursday, Costa underscored his interest in texture and proportion with a collection that relied on a color palette that was almost solely charcoal and dove gray. His fabrics looked weighted to the eye and his kimono sleeves and jagged hemlines added to the effect of heft. But the design was mostly spare, the intricate seams made one want to move closer and the clothes had a sense of intimacy that was both reassuring and calming.

Wang presented her collection Thursday in her new SoHo store with its white walls and bare floor. Her collection was inspired by Peggy Guggenheim and her life in Venice, and it featured that city's deep and moody colors. Wang combined luxurious fabrics like velvet with neoprene – the stuff of wet suits. The results were balloon-shaped skirts with both structure and volume, paired with sequined tank tops and paperweight cardigans. The result was a collection that would make a woman look in control rather than buffeted by circumstances.

Jack McCollough and Lazaro Hernandez, the Proenza Schouler designers, returned to more structured shapes and more tailored details. Gone were the gold-sequined jumpsuits from spring – shall we all do a jig of joy? – as well as the flashy bravado that it symbolized. Instead, their collection, with its low-slung skirts with scalloped hemlines and embroidered dresses, was more welcoming and accessible. It no longer read like the efforts of the coolest kids in class but rather like the smartest ones.

For all of the brainy design on display, the season here in New York has not been marked by collections that have left an audience speechless – at least not for the right reasons. Instead, the best clothes on the runway have been those that are desirable but also real. In the delicate balance between fantasy and pragmatism, designers with the most enticing collections have weighted the scale toward the latter.

See FASHION on page 6

Do the research on your bags

Seven tips: how to determine the luggage that works for you

By Tania Anderson
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — I'm going on vacation in a few weeks and it looks like my husband and I and our two daughters will be stuffing all our clothes into one small suitcase. We recently threw away a large bag that fell apart after many years of trips, and so far I've resisted luggage shopping because it's hard to stomach paying a few hundred dollars for something that'll get manhandled the second we set foot in the airport.

Lisa Lee Freeman, editor of ShopSmart magazine, gave me some tips on making the right purchase:

Tip #1: Don't go the cheap route when buying luggage. This is one of a handful of items in your life where it really does make sense to shell out the big bucks for a good quality item. "If you cheap out, you may not be saving money because they rip and fall apart if they're not well made," Freeman says. "Buy a decent quality bag so you don't have to keep replacing it."

Tip#2: Don't assume that those hard shell suitcases are the most durable. ShopSmart, which is a sister publication of Consumer Reports, discovered that the toughest pieces of luggage were the bags made of heavy duty fabric. Their top picks for 22-inch carry-on bags were the Tumi Alpha, the Victorinox Mobilizer NXT 4.0 and the Hartman Stratum.

Tip #3: Take a spin around the store. You'll want to see what it's like to pull the luggage behind you for a few laps around the store. This little test will tell you if the bag tips over easily or bumps your heels as you walk. Also see if it'll stand up on its own without falling over. Unzip the bag to get a sense of how roomy it is.

Tip #4: If you're looking for a carry-on, make sure the bag you're buying fits the dimensions required by the airline you're flying. Freeman says their research revealed that many bags that advertised themselves as carry-ons were far bigger than what was generally allowed by the airlines.

Tip #5: Mix and match. If you're not picky about having a set of matching bags, look for sales and buy separate pieces. Marshalls and Tuesday Morning sell separate pieces at pretty good prices.

Tip #6: Go for the odd color. You might get a better deal on a bag depending on the color you choose. Amazon.com's prices on the same bag varied about $10 between the black one and the blue one.

Tip #7: Shop around. The same bag had a wide range of prices online, from $148.90 to $167.

Tania Anderson writes the Shop to It blog for Washingtonpost.com, from which this article is adapted.

Luggage is an essential tool for travel, so don't skimp out on the cheap bag if you travel often. This spring break be prepared for that flight with a bag that does it all to your specifications.

A redesigned Hertz

After creating a kitchen island out of a beat-up old seed cabinet, Pam Hartz has discovered her knack for creating new furniture out of old furniture and started an interior design company with the same philosophy.

Create a new look around the home by reusing objects that have seen better days

BY NANCY SCHOEFFLER
THE HARTFORD COURANT

Pam Hartz Miller says her family made fun of her when she took an old seed cabinet from the family hardware store that her father ran in Deposit, N.Y. The store, Ed Hartz and Sons, has been in the family for five generations, and the seed cabinet was a wreck.

"The backs of the drawers were chewed up from mice, and it was painted a mustard gold," she says.

Hartz Miller and her husband, Jim Miller, transformed the oak cabinet, with its slanted bank of windowed drawers, into a distinctive kitchen island.

Her family isn't teasing her anymore.

"Now they all want it!"

Hartz Miller, who once designed window displays at the hardware store, sees new identities hidden in castoff items, flea market buys and roadside finds – second careers for old furniture.

She created an unusual settee from an old bed with a spool-style headboard.

"It really wasn't that sturdy as a bed," Hartz Miller says.

Her husband transformed another spool bed into a desk for their sons' bedroom.

Jim Miller remembers his grandmother making cookies at the old Hoosier baking cabinet that's now in their kitchen in Middletown, Conn. It has a built-in flour sifter, original instructions on weights and measures and a deep bread drawer. But these days, the cupboard is a wine cabinet.

In the same vein, an old typesetters' drawer serves as a coffee table, and Hartz Miller transformed a CD rack made from dowels into a hand-stenciled display rack for the quilts she makes.

Hartz Miller has woven pillows from neckties, framed a mirror with a Victrola cover and turned discarded wooden shutters plus the arm rests of a broken rocking chair into a one-of-a-kind headboard. The base of an unusual table lamp she and her husband made is encircled with antique thread bobbins.

Sometimes Jim has to "temper me," Hartz Miller says. "He'll say, 'This is something you found by the side of the road. Why are you putting so much time into it?'"

She smiles. It's her nature. An old chamber pot works for a houseplant. An antique shoe form makes a charming candleholder.

The creative way Hartz Miller uses things in her home echoes the work she does in her part-time business as an interior "redesigner" – bringing a fresh eye to clients' homes and finding new uses and contexts for the things they have.

"I love this kind of decorating because I think it's less intimidating. I'm not going to judge their stuff. They have collections, and that's what makes their home personal," she says. "It's their style. I just find ways it can be arranged better, so that it functions better. And they didn't have to buy anything new."

Hartz Miller, who started her Hartz & Homes room-styling business about six years ago, previously worked as a graphic designer. She realized she was always shifting her own furniture around and helping friends decorate for parties. She studied at New York School of Interior Design and launched a traditional interior-design business.

"I hated it," she says. "I hated picking custom wallpapers and window treatments for thousands of dollars. I thought, this isn't the way I decorate."

A book she read by interior redesign pioneer Lauri Ward of Use What You Have Interiors struck a chord. Hartz Miller trained with JoAnne Lenart-Weary, who popularized "one-day decorating."

After a redesign, which runs $300 (consultations are $75 an hour), Hartz Miller says she will leave clients with a list of what they might want to get – almost always a lamp.

"Most people need more light," she says.

And she's a big proponent of grouping a collection rather than scattering it around the house, piecemeal.

"For me, I think you see it better when it's all together."

Hartz Miller recently launched a new service, Mantel in a Box, to help people assemble attractive mantel displays of collectibles for each season.

"I change my mantels once a month," Hartz Miller says. "We live in an area with four distinct seasons, so you ought to at least change it four times.

"It's good to change," she adds. "It gives you a little lift to change things around."

Kors and Jacobs go glamorous and loud in their collections

FASHION from page 5

Rodriguez's collection shown on Tuesday night was focused on sharp tailoring, bodice accents, dresses that allowed for curves and the kind of distinctive coats – like one in silver with a zip front – that would make a woman wish for a long, cold winter. Jason Wu presented a pretty collection of feminine suits and joyful dresses. He sees himself as the next generation's Oscar de la Renta. But de la Renta presented a collection of confidently lovely clothes that seemed to say, "Not so fast, young man." The original Oscar still has the capacity to reach across generations, with dignified suits that might appeal to a 60-something woman and sexy little hot-pink cocktail dresses that could make a 20-ish woman dip into her trust fund, because in de la Renta's world, trust funds are still flush.

There's no recession in Kors' world either. Cashmere and fur dominate in a collection of power dressing. He focused on slim skirts and belted jackets and boardroom dresses. Perhaps it's a form of denial. Maybe his is the only way to stave off the desire to crawl under a blanket and hide until things are looking better. Kors' collection suggests that even if you're headed to an office that has long since lost its mojo, make an effort. Look polished. You'll feel better.

And then with a nod and a wink he sent out a neon yellow fur. And hot pink fur trapper hats. There was a bit of pure silliness, a hint of reckless abandon. If the boat is sinking, at least go down looking fabulous.

Zac Posen mounted what is arguably the most elaborate show of the season under the big tent in Bryant Park. The collection, with bell sleeves, pagoda shoulders, dramatic gathers, enormous swags, dizzying prints and blinding metallics, overflowed onto the runway like an eruption in the costume closet at the Met. Everything was grand and exaggerated. And that would have been fine had it been pretty. But there was simply too much of everything.

Posen is a romantic designer and romance is about the quiet moments. It's not about shouting. That was best left to designers such as Alexander Wang, who presented his collection in Roseland Ballroom, the midtown concert hall, and sent out models in studded leggings to the beat of "Thriller." Phillip Lim had a live rock band and male models in baggy knit sweatpants. Elise Overland's hipster girls posed in leather leggings and slinky dresses.

Marc Jacobs reveled in the 1980s with a collection of big shoulder tops, high-waist jeans, ratted-up hair, neon leggings, stirrup pants and metallic coats. Jacobs' collection makes a loud and provocative statement, but that doesn't necessarily speak to the issue at hand. Will these clothes – so kitschy and fun – make people want to shop when folks are holding on to their money? Will someone want a pair of hot-pink stirrup pants for fall? In fashion they say that if a person was around for the first incarnation of a trend, she should sit it out the next time the trend shows up. It would seem that the folks who could afford Jacobs' new-fangled '80s style would serve their dignity best by avoiding it.

It might be that his collection will unleash a more aggressive and nihilistic sensibility in the fashion industry. If so, then this collection will have been deemed important and influential. But that doesn't mean that it should be declared good to top it off...

Vera Wang and other designers are dealing with the economic crisis in different ways with designs. Some, like Wang, are trying to embrace looks that leave out a lot of flash and exuberance for more structure.

There's always something new at ZANNA.

ZANNA

downtown Amherst www.zanna.com

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

UMass faces another test against No. 10 BU

Look to rebound after loss to No. 6 Maryland

BY HOLLY J. GALVIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At the beginning of a two-game road stint in Boston, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will face its second Top 10 opponent in as many games. Following a 16-4 loss to No. 6 Maryland this past weekend, defending NCAA quarterfinalist No. 10 Boston University awaits what looks to be an emotionally charged 2009 season opener for the Terriers.

The last time UMass stepped off of Boston's Nickerson Field was in 2007, when the Minutewomen played spoiler to both the Terriers' home opener and a 22-game BU home winning streak that had dated back to April of 2004.

A late-game offensive surge in Amherst helped BU get revenge early last season, when BU came away with an 11-7 victory at McGuirk Field. The Minutewomen hold a 10-6 all-time advantage over their Eastern rivals, though only two of those 10 wins have come since 1997.

This time around, UMass (0-2) will need a pristine defensive performance if it hopes to contain a BU (0-0) offense. The Terriers averaged 14.3 goals per game in 2008, a year in which they won their fourth-straight America East championship and were two games away from an NCAA title.

The Minutewomen, on the other hand, enter the third game of their season-opening road trip having been outscored at a combined total 27-11.

Third-year coach Alexis Venechanos has said she's hoping to grow a balanced attack, and that's been the case thus far. Coming off Friday's loss at Venechanos' powerhouse alma mater, UMass has seen scoring from seven different players.

Depending on perspective, BU enters the game either rested or rusty. The Terriers last took the field over a week ago, Feb. 15 at the Princeton Tournament in Princeton, N.J. Nevertheless, last year's battle-tested Terrier core remains intact, as only two seniors graduated.

In fact, 2009 could mark the collegiate pinnacle for two seasoned Terrier veterans.

BU is captained by US National team prospect Sarah Dalton, who lead her team in total goals (71), points (84), shot percentage (.602) and draw controls (49). The versatile midfielder scored in every game she played last season.

In net, Terrier veteran Rachael Klein returns. Klein, another team captain, led America East and was ranked In the top 10 nationwide in save percentage (.513/No. 7 nationally) and goals-against (8.32/No. 9 nationally) in 2008. The second-team All-Region junior was able to keep BU's hopes alive throughout much of last year's NCAA quarterfinals against then No. 1 ranked Penn, landing 13 saves.

For UMass, freshman goalie Katy Florence could have a breakout game after adjusting to the top-tier play seen at Maryland last Friday. Thus far, Florence has posted a 13.5 goals-against average through two contests.

Minutewomen captain Holly Drown will look to build off of the goal and assist she notched against the Terrapins last week. Drown scored twice in last year's contest versus BU in Amherst, at which time BU was also ranked amongst the nation's elite.

Holly J. Galvin can be reached at hgalvin@student.umass.edu

Junior Merritt Cosgrove avoids a defender in a game last year at McGuirk Stadium. The midfielder is tied for the team lead with three goals and leads the team with 10 shots through its first two games.

Senior to pitch with gold medalist Finch

BALSCHMITER from page 10

watched the UMass standout for some time prior to the draft and had her at the top of their draft board. While Chicago was also eying Iowa's Brittany Weil, who was drafted with the second pick of the second round and seventh overall, it knew it could not wait around if they wanted to get Balschmiter.

"I knew [Balschmiter] had to go in the first round because she was definitely sought after by others," Sokolis said.

Due to NCAA regulations, an active college senior athlete is not allowed to sign with the team she was drafted for until the end of the season, but Sokolis is not worried about what Balschmiter's decision will be.

"I feel like she is all ready on board and just waiting to finish," Sokolis said.

Sokolis also added that he expects Balschmiter to immediately help the defending champions and jump right into the Bandits' rotation.

"Our rotation is a four-pitcher staff, and if you look at the schedule, we have a pretty grueling schedule with some five game series so each one will get to pitch," Sokolis said. "So she'll get definitely her share of the pitching."

Balschmiter will be pitching alongside a legend in the softball community, Jennie Finch. Finch, who won a gold medal in the 2004 Olympic Games and a Silver in the 2008 Olympic Games for the United States, anchors the potent Chicago pitching rotation.

"Jenny Finch is on their pitching staff – one of the best pitchers in the world," Balschmiter said of her potential new teammate. "And to be able to play with elite players and to learn from them, I'm really excited about it."

But by looking at Balschmiter's career statistics, she may not have too much to learn. The winner of the first two A-10 Pitcher of the Week awards for 2009 and nine consecutive dating back to last year, has put up astonishing numbers so far in her career.

So far this season Balschmiter has posted a 5-2 record with six complete games and four shutouts. She has also posted a 1.91 ERA and struck out 40 batters in 44 innings pitched. Even more impressive, Balschmiter has put up those numbers while facing four of the nation's top 10 teams.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

Brandice Balschmiter has started her senior campaign going 5-2 with a 1.91 ERA while facing four of the nation's top 10 teams.

UM hopes to halt road skid

Freshman Ploch moved to No. 1 doubles with Lecluyse

BY JAY ASSER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the midst of a tough road stretch, the Massachusetts tennis team will travel to Hanover, N.H., to take on Dartmouth on Wednesday after dropping its last two matches.

The Minutewomen spent the past weekend in New York, where they faced tough opponents, Syracuse and Iowa State.

Against the Orange (7-0), UMass was unable to halt Syracuse's perfect season, failing to knock off an undefeated team for the second straight match. The Minutewomen (4-3) were swept in doubles play and lost five of six singles matches, falling 6-1 to the Orange.

Less than a day after, an impressive Iowa State squad overwhelmed UMass. Though the Minutewomen were close in many of their matches, taking three to tiebreakers, the Cyclones (4-2) didn't allow a point on the day, dominating 7-0.

UMass coach Judy Dixon felt her team wasn't up to the task, citing their attitudes.

"We've had some big team discussions and talks, and I'm hoping to see a change of attitude in some of our players," Dixon said.

After having early success at home in their first two matches of the spring season, the Minutewomen have since lost three of four, all away from Amherst.

Dartmouth, meanwhile, has yet to win a match on the season.

The Big Green (0-4) have had over two weeks in between opponents, last playing on Feb. 8 against Boston College. Dartmouth was able to pull off victories in first singles and first doubles but fell at every other position, losing 6-1 to the Eagles (3-2).

Dixon knows that the extended time off for Dartmouth gives UMass an advantage.

"That helps us in a way because we've been playing more matches recently. We need to use this past weekend to our advantage," Dixon said. "If we don't use the weekend as an example, Wednesday won't be pretty."

Wednesday will be the 13th occasion UMass and Dartmouth will match up against one another. The Minutewomen are 3-9 all time against the Big Green, with their last match coming nearly a year ago.

Last season, Dartmouth gave UMass its first loss, and the Minutewomen failed to score a point. The Big Green swept all doubles and singles matches on their way to routing the Minutewomen, 7-0.

Though Dartmouth hasn't fared well this season, Dixon senses her team is in for a challenge.

"Dartmouth is typically a very strong Ivy League school, usually ranked in the top 100, but this year they're struggling. They can be beaten, but we would need to change our mental attitude for this match in order to win."

For the match, the starting lineup will be shifted slightly. The consistent duo of Candynce Boney and Maude Lecluyse at No. 1 doubles will be broken up. Playing alongside Lecluyse will be freshman standout Magdalena Ploch. Boney will be moved down to pair with Kaitlyn Carpenter at the No. 3 position.

However, Dixon feels the entire team will have to step up to earn a victory on Wednesday, regardless of position.

"I expect they're No. 1 singles and doubles player, Molly Scott, to show up," Dixon said. "She's quite good, so this match will need to be won from the bottom up instead of the top down."

With another back-to-back scenario staring at the Minutewomen this weekend, Dixon expects her team to focus on the task at hand.

"We have big matches facing us this upcoming weekend, but first we have to concentrate on Wednesday," Dixon said. "I expect the kids to respond to talks we've been having and come out and compete because I didn't feel we competed well this weekend."

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu

Magdalena Ploch has gone 5-3 in both singles and doubles play so far on the season. The freshman will start with Maude Lecluyse in the No. 1 doubles when the Minutewomen travel to Dartmouth.

ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
UMassAlumni.com/students
You were. You are. UMASS.
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
GOT JOB?
Networking, Self-Marketing & Interviewing Skills
Campus to Career - Alumni Panel
Tuesday, March 3 • 5:30 p.m. - RSVP Today!
Memorial Hall (between Herter Hall and the Old Chapel)
PANELISTS INCLUDE:
Mr. James Boudreau '00 . . Clough Harbour & Associates, LLP
Ms. Lauren Evans '07 . . . Clear Channel Radio
Mrs. Jessica Nokes '05 . . Bullhorn
Mr. Anthony Ong '95 . . . Public Consulting Group, Inc.
FREE REFRESHMENTS
Thanks to the support of Cape Cod Chips and Kraft/Nabisco
Attend to enter the drawings!
Movie passes • $20 UStore gift card • Seniors only: $1,000 cash prize

Team effort helps propel UM to victory over Saint Joseph's

GLASS from page 10

into the starting lineup for Anthony Gurley – and it doesn't appear that is about to change anytime soon.

"I think it's good that [Gurley] is coming off the bench because now he's bringing us some more scoring off the bench, and ironically, Matt Glass is playing better starting – so we'll see how that goes for a little while," Kellogg said.

But Gurley hasn't yet provided that lift off the bench in two opportunities. In Sunday's win, he scored seven points – but in 14 second-half minutes, the only place he showed up in the box score was in the turnover column. He had no points, no rebounds, no assists, steals, blocks or shots attempted. It was reminiscent of his 15 minutes off the bench against Rhode Island on Feb. 18, where his box score only had three missed shots and two fouls.

Glass has fared a bit better, averaging 5.5 points and 4.5 rebounds per game as a starter. He got involved down-low in the first half against the Hawks and hit both of his 3-point attempts.

Kellogg talked about the importance of getting more size (Glass is 6-foot-7, four inches taller than Gurley) in the starting lineup.

"I feel like we have to get bigger out there a little bit. To get killed on the boards and just not be physical out there is not what I want to do," Kellogg said.

In another lineup move by Kellogg, reserve point guard Gary Correia did not play for the first time all season in Sunday's game. The sophomore guard, who averages 10.3 minutes per game, has struggled this season. He hasn't shot the ball well, going 12-for-42 (28.6 percent) overall and 5-for-26 from 3-point range (19.2 percent). He averages 1.7 points and 1.1 assists per game.

Freshman David Gibbs, who averages 17 minutes per game, played the role of backup point guard against St. Joe's. He had five points in 11 minutes.

ALL HANDS ON DECK

Talk about a team effort.

All eight players that saw action against the Hawks played a key role in the win. That is best displayed in the scoring column, with seven different Minutemen scoring at least five points. Tyrell Lynch (two points) made his impact felt in the post with three rebounds, two assists and a steal.

Luke Bonner, who had missed his first four 3-pointers, hit one of the biggest shots of the game with 47 seconds to go to give UMass a one-point lead. He finished with seven points and six rebounds. Gaffney had a double-double with 17 points and 10 rebounds, and both Ricky Harris (13) and Chris Lowe (11) scored in double figures.

"To have everybody contribute – on the bench, in the starting lineup, it just means a lot to everybody," Gaffney said.

HIGH-LOWE

In addition to hitting two free throws with two seconds left to give the Minutemen the win Sunday, Lowe had seven assists – the first of which set the UMass school record in career assists, passing Carl Smith with 634.

He now sits with 640, good for sixth all-time in the A-10. He needs 16 more to move into the Top 5.

"It means a lot, [UMass is a] great program with a lot of great point guards like Coach Kellogg, Carmelo Travieso, Edgar Padilla and Carl Smith. I'm just glad to have the record and hopefully one day someone will come in here and break it."

NO. 3 FOR YOU!

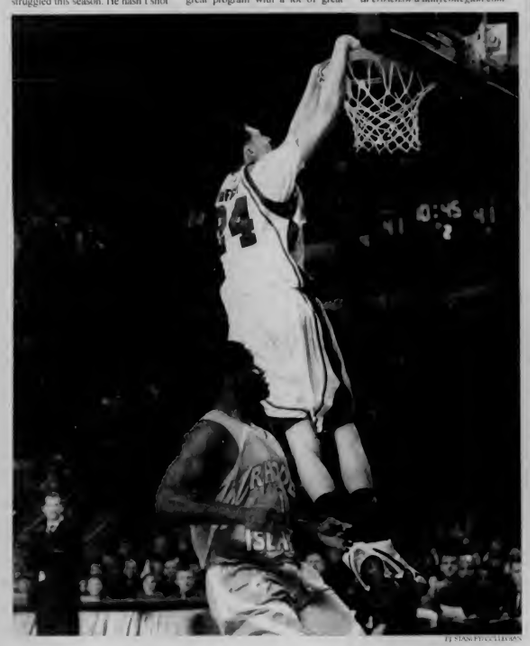
If the Hawks could have made a miracle 3-pointer in the final two seconds, not only would they have won, but they would have kept a pretty impressive streak alive.

St. Joe's streak of 435 consecutive games with at least one 3-pointer came to an end, after the Hawks went 0-for-7 from long range against the Minutemen. The last time they had gone without one was on March 13, 1998 in a first-round NIT loss to Southwest Missouri State.



The lack of a 3-pointer also ended a streak for UMass, which had gone exactly nine years to the day since last playing a team that didn't make a 3-pointer. That was against Rhode Island on Feb. 22, 2000.

RARE TERRITORY

Gaffney needs just one more steal this season to become the first player in three years to block 100 shots and get 50 steals in the same season. The last to do it was Duke's Shelden Williams in the 2005-06 season. Only five players have accomplished the feat since 1996-97.

Gaffney has 104 blocks (his 4.16 blocks per game ranks third in the nation) and 49 steals this season. He appeared to get steal No. 50 on St. Joe's desperation heave to midcourt in the final seconds, but the pass that he tipped went to Glass, who got credit for the steal.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com

BY STAN PITCAITHLY/MASS

Senior Tony Gaffney dunks over a Rhode Island defender last week at the Mullins Center. The forward is just one steal away from becoming the first player since Duke's Sheldon Williams to record 100 blocks and 50 steals in a season.

Minutewomen may be without Wright

Forward's status up in the air with concussion

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With five minutes and 30 seconds remaining in the first half of Sunday's game against Rhode Island, the referees suddenly blew the play dead. The cause was one of the most frightening sights possible for the Massachusetts women's basketball team: sophomore Teya Wright lying on the court in pain.

Since then, Wright – the team's predominant post presence– has not seen the court or participated in practice as part of cautionary measures for her injury, a concussion. With a birth in the Atlantic 10 Tournament clinched and only two games until then, UMass coach Marnie Dacko is taking no chances with Wright's injury.

"Hopefully she'll be ready," Dacko said of Wright's chances of playing in Wednesday's game against Saint Joseph's. "But you know what, we'll have to be ready with somebody else if she's not ready."

The Minutewomen (11-16, 4-8 A-10) were able to beat the Rams without Wright for the majority of the game but will be hard pressed to do it again in an vital conference matchup against Saint Joseph's (12-14, 4-8 A-10) at the Palestra.

UMass is a better team when Wright is in the game, providing an inside option on offense and acting as the team's leading rebounder on defense, and her teammates know it.

"She's the biggest kid we have, she's very physical inside, and she rebounds the heck out of the ball," freshman Kristina Danella said. "We just need her back."

If Wright is not able to play, however, Dacko will be looking to her bench to make up for the absence of their inside threat.

"I think you have to look at Valerie [Avebe]," Dacko said, who will be seeing more of the court if Wright cannot play. "She's very athletic, she goes against Teya everyday [in practice]. And she did a good job against Rhode Island. She's in very good shape, so she'll probably be the one to get the nod."

Avebe, a sophomore, was one of three players called upon to stop the ship from sinking when Wright went down against URI. Danella is known more for her scoring, but she and sophomore Stephanie Lawrence both made a major impact inside, particularly in the second half.

Although she had limited herself to perimeter shooting for much of the season, Danella stepped up when she was needed, grabbing 12 rebounds, en route to her first career double-double. Lawrence, meanwhile, did not put her name all over the score sheet but helped UMass stay ahead of the Rams by defending the post.

Regardless of who starts the game inside for the Minutewomen, it will be a tough matchup as it will include the assignment of defending the Owls' leading scorer, junior forward Brittany Ford. Ford, who averages five rebounds and 12.4 points per game, is SJU's biggest threat in terms of scoring and one of its best rebounders.

When Wright is not on the court, the Minutewomen are a different team. With a strong post player, UMass is able to feed Wright, penetrate with the guards and pick apart teams from the perimeter. However, when Wright is sidelined like she was against URI, the Minutewomen rely on their perimeter shooting and turn into the team that attempted 30 3-pointers against the Rams. UMass is currently ranked second in the A-10 in 3-pointers per game with an average of 6.56.

Although it was successful against the Rams, an offense that relies on shooting from behind the arc lacks the stability of the balanced game that Wright brings.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Forward Teya Wright suffered a concussion in Sunday's victory over Rhode Island, and her status is unknown for tonight's game against the Hawks. If the sophomore can't go, sophomore Valerie Avebe will likely get the nod.

A-10 seedings still up for grab

W. BASKETBALL from page 10

SJU to fall to Dayton March 1 to face the Dukes.

With a win over the Minutewomen, SJU would guarantee at least 10th place, but could jump as high as eighth with a victory over the Flyers and two consecutive losses by Saint Louis.

A loss to UMass would keep the Hawks in 11th place and would need a win on Sunday and help from around the league in order to move up.

If a tiebreaker is necessary, UMass could play Saint Bonaventure, a team that started hot against the Minutewomen and never looked back en route to a 67-44 victory.

UMass lost to the Dukes earlier this month at home, 75-61, as senior guard Stefanie Gerardot notched her sixth 20-point game of the season.

UMass clinched an A-10 Tournament bid last weekend after defeating Rhode Island behind freshman forward Kristina Danella's first career double-double, including a career high in rebounds (12).

Along with Danella, Gerardot recorded a team-high 13 points in UMass' season sweep of the Rams last Sunday.

Sophomore forward Teya Wright suffered a concussion late in the first half of Sunday's game and did not return.

Dacko sounded unsure if Wright, the team's leading rebounder and biggest post presence, would face the Hawks.

If she is not available, sophomore forward Valerie Avebe would start in Wright's place.

Avebe has played in 26 games this season and has seen her minutes increase throughout the season.

UMass has a chance to dominate an SJU team that is ranked at the bottom of the A-10 in both offensive and defensive rebounding.

Forward Brittany Ford (12.4 points per game) leads an explosive SJU offensive attack that likes to run, and is ninth in the A-10 in scoring (63.1 ppg), right ahead of the Minutewomen (63.0 ppg).

The Hawks are also proficient from the free throw line, hitting 318 of 447 free throws for fifth in the A-10.

The Minutewomen cannot allow them to get to the charity stripe and must play a complete game in order to be successful.

Guard Mary Kate McDade (5.4 assists per game), the leader of the backcourt for SJU, will look to get the ball to Ford and forward Ashley Logue, who leads the team in rebounding (5.7 rebounds per game).

"I think we match up very well top to bottom; we just have to come out and execute," Dacko said.

Last season, the Hawks used a 10-0 second half run to erase an 11-point Minutewomen lead on its way to a 72-66 victory at the Mullins Center.

Forward Kate Mills recorded her fifth double-double while guard Pam Rosario added 19 points.

SJU leads the all-time series, 41-7 with the last Minutewomen victory coming in 2006.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

NATIONAL SECURITY AGENCY
Virtual Career Fair

It's Online, it's Interactive, and it's Free to Attend!

The National Security Agency (NSA) is hosting a special Virtual Career Fair for students at the National Centers of Academic Excellence. We have many exciting opportunities available in Information Assurance, Engineering, and Computer Science.

From the comfort of your computer you can:
- Explore opportunities with NSA
- Chat with NSA recruiters
- Apply to open positions

Register today at www.meetNSA.com.

Event Date: Thursday, March 5
Time: 3 p.m. - 8 p.m. EST

For more information about NSA, visit www.NSA.gov/Careers.

WHERE INTELLIGENCE GOES TO WORK®

U.S. citizenship is required. NSA is an Equal Opportunity Employer

20 wins no longer a magic number to earn NCAA berth

Big 10 full of teams who may fall short of reaching big dance

BY MYRON P. MEDCALF
STAR TRIBUNE (MINNEAPOLIS)

MINNEAPOLIS — Gophers men's basketball coach Tubby Smith talked about the urgency his team faces in its final three games following Sunday's victory over Northwestern. That game was a personal milestone for Smith, giving him 16 consecutive 20-win seasons.

But winning 20 games means less today than it did in years past. Once considered a magic number for landing an NCAA tournament bid, an upset or two in conference tournaments can significantly reduce the importance of that victory total.

Although coaches often say they are not focused on what their teams have to do to shore up an invite to March Madness, they know better.

Illinois' Bruce Weber said Monday that he believes his team, which plays host to the Gophers on Thursday, has to win 24 games to feel secure, while Michigan's John Beilein said any more losses could be devastating for his squad. Smith said he is not thinking about a magic number for his team to get in, but he knows the Gophers have work to do.

"It used to be if you got to 20 wins, you had a good chance to get into (the NCAA tournament), but not anymore," Smith said during Monday's Big Ten media teleconference. "Expansion of conferences, the addition of schools, it kind of makes it a little bit tougher. And then you want to be at least above .500 in your conference play if you're going to get to the NCAAs...but it's good to get the 20th win, and we know that we've got to get a few more as we go along here."

Few doubt that Michigan State (21-5, 11-3 Big Ten), Purdue (21-6, 10-4) and Illinois (22-6, 10-5) can do anything to disrupt their status as virtual locks for the NCAA tournament. Minnesota (20-7, 8-7), Wisconsin (17-10, 8-7), Penn State (19-8, 8-6), Michigan (17-11, 7-8) and Ohio State (17-7, 7-7) have more complicated situations that will require strong finishes to receive an invitation.

But Weber said he is not allowing his team to get complacent.

"If you win, you stay up in the top; if not, now you're in the middle of the pack with a lot of teams fighting for position for the Big Ten tournament and also for the NCAA tournament," he said about the pressure his team faced before its victory at Ohio State on Sunday.

The Big Ten has had more parity this season than in recent years. No one knows better than Beilein, whose Wolverines beat two top-five opponents, Duke and UCLA, in the nonconference schedule but are below .500 in league play.

The Wolverines beat the Gophers at home on Thursday but lost in overtime at Iowa on Sunday.

"Every player at our level, they're not stupid," Beilein said. "They know you can't keep losing. But is there a magic number to win? No. ... If you keep losing and losing, then you're not on that bubble and then you've got to win that (conference) tournament."

comics@dailycollegian.com

Box 'o Numbers.

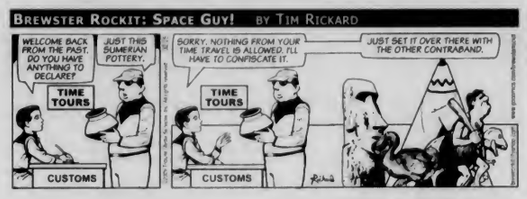
| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | | | | | 4 |
| | | 1 | 8 | 5 | 2 | | |
| | 9 | | | 3 | 5 | 1 | |
| | | 2 | 8 | | 3 | | |
| 7 | 1 | | | | | 2 | 5 |
| | | 6 | | 7 | 9 | | |
| | 4 | 1 | 3 | | | 9 | |
| | | 9 | 2 | 5 | 1 | | |
| 8 | | | | | | | |

ACROSS
1 Keats or Yeats
5 Betty with million-dollar legs
11 Bilk the gust
14 Actress Teri
15 Ceremonial
16 Circulars
17 Good-bye Guido
19 Slangy okay
20 Blubber
21 February 29th
23 Texas river
26 Bikini top
28 Big ___ CA
29 In plain view
30 Seance sounds
32 Catch one's breath
36 Cheese choice
37 Charge with gas
39 Gator tail?
40 Color bands
42 POW possibly
43 TV controller
45 Do holders
47 Trampled (on)
48 Architect of St. Paul's
50 Canine malady
51 Neighbor of Seed
53 Snaky shape
54 Uneasy feeling
55 Fricative
58 "Silver" author Levin
59 Oolong or Earl Grey
60 Amy Tan novel with "The"
66 Squirmy catch
67 Have high hopes
68 Simplicity
69 "___ Miniver"
70 Charley and Martin
71 On the Aegean

DOWN
1 Org. of Duval and O'Meara
2 Rower's need
3 Make a mistake
4 Having a triple character
5 Pluck
6 Make free (of)
7 Noshed
8 Sack material
9 Fancy cloth
10 Inventor Howe
11 Woolgathering
12 Concept
13 Spot in a crowd
18 Most extensive
22 Sound of a well-tuned engine
23 Warhol's movement
24 Dodger
25 Formal events
26 Burmese hillside
27 Western spreads
31 Jaipur attire
33 Wasp wounds
34 Afternoon china
36 Gush out
38 Preselect
41 Shades of brown
44 Olfactory stimulator
46 Cure all
49 Key in again
52 Indian rulers
55 Flower support
56 Gaze
57 Light meal
58 Cools down
61 Perjure
62 Beverage dispenser
63 ___ Vegas
64 Employ
65 Benedict or Arthur

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach
THINK AHEAD
Two 6-week summer sessions
Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net
Registration begins March 9
SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

QUOTE OF THE DAY

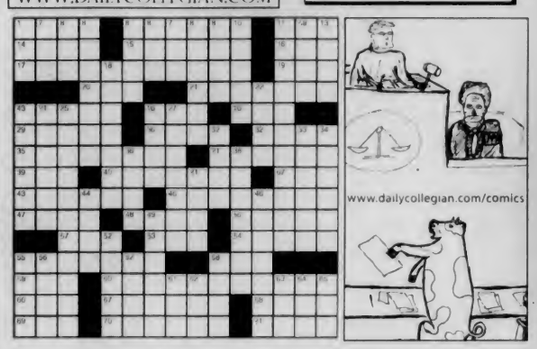
"Give a man a fish, and you'll feed him for a day. Teach a man to fish, and he'll buy a funny hat. Talk to a hungry man about fish, and you're a consultant."

— Scott Adams

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD



WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY KID SHAY

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

www.dailycollegian.com/comics

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Why get her flowers when you can buy her a weekend getaway to Universal Studios?

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Somehow you managed to add a fourth "S" to the morning routine of "S--t, Shower and Shave" ... "Salsa."

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Young men and young women sometimes like to enjoy the act of watching television together (coitally).

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
A degree from Isenberg will prepare you well for managing your "green" business.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
There is only one option left for you: Deny everything about the Ukrainian prostitute, and board the next flight to Argentina.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Fall of the American Empire, #47:
American flag rolling papers, made in Spain.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You have put a whole new meaning into the phrase "fire in the hole."

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Today you will stumble into the perfect way to quit smoking cigarettes: Eating cigarettes.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Stop letting your fear of yarn guide your actions, and instead let your love of knitting show you the way.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You have a definite future in producing children's programming, unfortunately for children.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Arson is not the answer.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You are not in love. In fact, that feeling is just the result of sticky brain chemicals exploding all over your full-frontal lobe.

tasty crackers!
free pizza & hot cocoa!*
www.dailycollegian.com/comics
*none of this is true

Are you a photographer?
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN is hiring photographers
Build your resume and get your photos published for over 10,000 people to see each day!
Send an email to photo@dailycollegian.com for more information

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO exp necs. Training pro 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Survey Takers Needed. Make $5 - $25 per survey. Do it in your spare time. www.GetPaidToThink.com

ANNOUNCEMENT

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-2337

Spring Break 09 TRAVEL FREE LOW LOW PRICES!! WE HAVE IT ALL... Sun Splash BOOK NOW!! 1800-426-7710 www.sunsplashtours.com

FOR RENT

Center of town. 1,2,3 bed- ood floors. ING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Amherst 2, 3, & 4 Bedroom Apartments. Call for huge rent specials on both Immediate and Summer/ Fall rentals! Beautiful property on the bus line to Umass. Air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Free Heat! 2 BR $1200-$1250, 3 BR $1500-$1550, 4 BR $2250. www.MillValleyApts.com 413-253-7377 or stop by at 420 Riverglade Drive.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Balschmiter drafted No. 5

All-American taken in first round by Chicago of NPF

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It has always been her dream. Now it's a reality.

"It has always been a dream to play pro ball, and you hear wind that people are maybe interested, and it's exciting in itself," Massachusetts softball pitcher Brandice Balschmiter said. "And to actually be drafted is a completely different level."

Last Wednesday night, to be exact, was when the three-time Easton All-American's dream became a reality, when she was drafted in the first round with the fifth overall pick by Chicago of the National Pro Fastpitch.

The No. 17 Minutewomen's star pitcher had hopes of getting drafted but did not expect to go as high as she did. From the second she was drafted though, it was nothing but pure excitement for the three-time Atlantic 10 Player of the Year.

"A bunch of us were over at one of the apartments with the team, and we were watching it," Balschmiter said. "To go in the first round is awesome. I was just hoping to go. And then to be the fifth overall pick was just a great feeling."

The excitement of Balschmiter being drafted wasn't just in the apartment where she and her teammates watched the draft, it was also pouring out of Chicago's principal owner Bill Sokolis.

"When it came to my turn and Brandice was still available, I jumped right on it," Sokolis said of the draft choice. "We're real excited here."

Sokolis and the Bandits have

See BALSCHMITER on page 7

Three-time Easton All-American Brandice Balschmiter was drafted last Wednesday by the Chicago Bandits of the National Pro Fastpitch. The senior was taken with the final pick of the first round and fifth overall in the five-team professional softball league.

Guard Chris Lowe drives past a Rhode Island defender last week at the Mullins Center. On Sunday, the senior become the all-time assists leader in UMass history when he passed Carla Smith's record of 633.

Minutemen hope to feed off win over SJU

Glass adds size as a starter over Gurley

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

PHILADELPHIA — Tony Gaffney knows better than to get caught up in one win – especially in the midst of a 10-15 season — but the senior forward views the Massachusetts men's basketball team's last-second win over Saint Joseph's as the start of something.

"Obviously we're not a team to get content because we haven't got a lot to be content about, but I think this is a great start for us," Gaffney said after the 70-69 victory over the Hawks at the Palestra. "It's too bad it's gotta come this late in the season, but I think our guys will feed off this, and I think we're finally ready to make a run."

The win came at the perfect time for the Minutemen (10-15, 5-7 Atlantic 10), which had lost two straight and six of its last eight in the conference. UMass, still in a tie for eighth place in the A-10, has really struggled in late-game situations this season, losing more than a handful of games in the final minutes.

Because of the continuous lapses at the end of games, doubt began to creep into the Minutemen. Sunday's breakthrough did a lot for the team's collective psyche.

"We [didn't doubt] ourselves, but we doubted the team," Gaffney said. "That's going to happen when you've had a tough season, haven't had many signature wins and you're flirting in the middle to the bottom of the A-10.

"But I think this is going to do a lot for our confidence, and I think it will let guys believe we have as good a team as anybody in our league."

Having lost so many times in the last four minutes of close games, UMass coach Derek Kellogg focused the last two weeks of practice on late-game situations. Now that it's paid noticeable dividends, he views that as something the team needed moving forward.

"It's nice that you can close out a game in the last four minutes, and now the guys believe on some of the things we're doing. It adds credence to a lot of the things that I'm teaching," Kellogg said.

UMass Basketball

REPLACEMENT GLASS

It's been two games since Kellogg inserted Matt Glass

See GLASS on page 8

UM hosts Hawks as A-10s approach

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's basketball team has a number of things in common with Saint Joseph's.

Both teams clinched a spot in the Atlantic 10 Tournament, both have identical conference records and both will look to gain momentum moving into the final week of A-10 play when they tip off tonight at 8 p.m.

"They're an up-and-down team," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said.

"You watch them, and they show signs of brilliance, and then other times they fall apart and shoot 15 percent."

The Minutewomen (11-16, 4-8 A-10) and Hawks (12-15, 4-8 A-10) sit in 10th place respectively in the A-90, and will play each other at the historic Palestra gym.

SJU is 7-5 in home contests this season in games played at the Palestra, the Gallagher Center and the Daskalakis Center as their facility, the Alumni Memorial Fieldhouse, is completing renovations.

Tonight's game is important for both teams as the A-10 Tournament approaches. With a win against the Hawks this Wednesday and another over La Salle on Sunday, the Minutewomen have a good chance of facing Duquesne in the first round of the A-10 Tournament but will need

See W. BASKETBALLon page 8

The Minutewomen clinched an A-10 Tournament berth last Sunday when they defeated Rhode Island, 58-52.

UMass looks for momentum

Face Duquesne at Mullins, looking for a run before A-10s

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After what seemed like a never-ending series of heartbreaking losses, the Massachusetts men's basketball team pulled off a close game.

With the pressure off the Minutemen's shoulders, they can get back to preparing for what really matters – the Atlantic 10 Tournament on March 11.

Until then, UMass will try to build some momentum off its 70-69 win over Saint Joseph's. The Minutemen will have their first opportunity when they face Duquesne at the Mullins Center Wednesday night at 7 p.m.

The A-10 season has been difficult so far for UMass. Before Sunday's win over St. Joe's, the Minutemen (10-15, 5-7 A-10) had lost four conference games after leading at the end of halftime. But as UMass coach Derek Kellogg noted, there is a silver lining to playing so many tough games.

"It's been a great learning experience for me as a first year head coach to have a lot of diversity thrown at us in a lot of games where we've been in tight situations," Kellogg said in his weekly A-10 teleconference. "So hopefully I'm improving as a head coach, and we'll be better in the long run for that."

Kellogg also praised his seniors for remaining focused during a rough patch, saying he is proud of how they held the team together through adversity.

Wednesday's matchup against the Dukes (16-9, 7-5 A-10) will give the Minutemen a chance to prove that the close win over St. Joe's was a turning point – not an aberration.

This will not be an easy game for UMass. Duquesne scores more points per game (78.8-70), makes a higher percentage of its shots (.454-.43) and proved it can hang with the best team in the conference after beating No. 16 Xavier 72-68 earlier this season.

However, recent history and a home court advantage favors the Minutemen, who are 7-0 against the Dukes in the Mullins Center. Also, the fact that UMass has improved on its late-game free-throw shooting could help them should they wind up in another close contest.

"In practice, we've zeroed in on things that are going to help us at the end of games; more along the lines of what we're going to do in certain situations on offense and defense," Kellogg said in his weekly A-10 teleconference on Monday. "And we made free throws yesterday down the stretch, and we hadn't done that in three or four of our losses. We had missed some one-and-ones and some two-shot free throws at the end of the game."

A focal point of the game will be the matchup of the point guards, both of who are coming off huge games. UMass' Chris Lowe scored 13 points and dished seven assists to become the all-time UMass assist leader with 640 and sank two free-throws with 2 seconds left in Sunday's win. Lowe will face off with Dukes senior Aaron Jackson who had a 25-point, eight-assist game of his own in Duquesne's last game (a 79-68 win over La Salle).

One recent tweak that Kellogg made in the last two was starting 3-point specialist Matt Glass and bringing usual starting guard Anthony Gurley off the bench. The Minutemen are 5-2 this season when Glass is in the starting lineup, so it will be interesting to see whether Kellogg decides to continue using this strategy.

UMass forward Tony Gaffney has been the only constant in a season of inconsistency. He has averaged a double-double this season with 12.2 points and 10.4 rebounds per game and ranks third in the NCAA with 4.9 blocks per game. Gaffney currently has 104 blocks and 49 steals this season, with one steal against Duquesne. He will become the first player the NCAA to have 100 blocks and 50 steals since Duke University's Shelden Williams did it in the 2005-06 season.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Derek Kellogg reacts to a call made in last week's game against the Rams. The Minutemen will host Duquesne tonight at 7 p.m. at the Mullins Center.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HI: 47 LO: 32 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, FEBUARY 26, 2009

Holub, students clash over fees

Chancellor attempts to clear up confusion

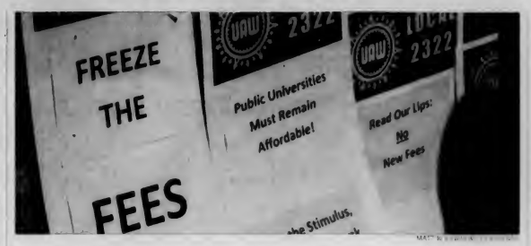
BY MATT ROCHELEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the midst of several, student-run events this week protesting a proposed $1,500 increase to student fees next semester, Chancellor Robert Holub sent a campus-wide e-mail Wednesday intended to clarify confusion over the fee increase and other budget-related issues.

University of Massachusetts spokesman Ed Blaguszewski said the e-mail "[had] been in the works for a couple of days," and is not in direct response to the on-going student demonstrations.

Holub expressed a hopeful, yet sobering message that detailed how the potential fee increases will impact students, how the University is taking the federal stimulus package into account and reiterated his plans to work with the Budget Planning Task Force as UMass' future fiscal issues unfold.

"There has been speculation and assertions made about the budget plans that, frankly, aren't accurate," began Holub's e-mail.



Outlining how undergraduate students will be affected, Holub said the fee increase will also come with about $7 million of additional financial-aid funding, and roughly one-third of the money raised by the increased fees will go directly back to students.

Most graduate students will not see their mandatory fees or tuition rise, he said. About 90 percent will not have to pay the proposed $520 per year increase in curriculum fees for full-time, in-state graduate students, or $1,020, for full-time, out-of-state graduate students.

"No one likes raising fees, I certainly don't, but our current fiscal realities, and our commitment to maintaining the quality of a UMass Amherst education, make this unavoidable," wrote Holub.

"Opponents of the fee increase aren't taking into

See HOULB on page 2

The proposed fee increase has caused a serious dispute between students and the administration. A number of protests, including one yesterday, precede the Board of Trustees official vote tomorrow.

Trustees to vote on Friday

BY ADAM MCGILLEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees will vote Friday on a fee increase of $1,500 for in-state undergraduate students for the 2009-2010 academic year.

Depending on the amount of federal aid the University receives in the American Recovery and Reinvestment Plan, some or all of the fee increase could return to students in the form of a rebate.

Unsure of exactly how much money the University will receive, the Board of Trustees Committee on Administration and Finance approved the fee increase last week, which would raise $50 million in new revenue from students. Before the increase becomes official, a majority of the full Board will need to approve it on Friday.

Robert Connolly, associate vice president for University Relations and Communications, said that when the university receives funds from the stimulus bill, it would disperse rebates equally among in-state students, effectively reducing the amount of the increase or possibly negating it entirely.

As Gov. Deval Patrick's administration determines just how much money can be set aside for UMass, university administrators are feeling pressure to act now in order to bridge the financial gap.

UMass currently stands to lose $102 million in funding from the state for the next fiscal year, a result of the current global economic crisis. The possible $50 million injection from a fee increase would cut that loss in half, with the remainder coming from reductions in spending. Under the state fiscal stabilization fund outlined in the stimulus bill, funds allocated for institutions of higher education should "mitigate the need to raise tuition and fees for in-state students."

"It's terrible, and it's unnecessary," said Ferd Wulkan, coordinator for the

See VOTE on page 2

Protests continue over proposed increase

BY MATT ROCHELEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A coalition of undergraduate and graduate students continued a series of protests yesterday speaking out against a proposed $1,500 fee increase for students at the University of Massachusetts next semester.

The protests are part of an effort to convince the University's Board of Trustees to hold off on voting on the fee increase until funds from the federal stimulus package are allocated to higher education.

The Board of Trustees will vote on the fee increase this Friday at UMass-Dartmouth.

Dozens of members of the UMass Student Action group, composed of members from the Graduate Employee Organization (GEO), the Student Government Association (SGA), and the Graduate Student Senate (GSS) gathered in protest on the steps of Machmer Hall on Wednesday.

The group held signs, chanted, and gave speeches through megaphones while passing out flyers to the hundreds passing through the busy area between the W.E.B. Du Bois library and the Student Union.

Boone Shear, a member of the GEO, said the coalition hopes "to get word out and get the University to admit that there is money out there is the stimulus package."

"We feel it is a false promise that the University has no choice but to raise fees," he said.

"We want the [Board of] Trustees to postpone the vote until the governor knows how much money he can give the University," said Student Trustee and senior, anthropology major Lindsay McCluskey.

Christopher Sweetapple, a graduate student and department steward for the anthropology department organized the event and had originally only planned for it to be anthropology faculty and students.

"It started as a small gathering, then mushroomed

See PROTEST on page 3

'Tap it' movement aims to ban bottles

BY VINCENT CAPOINE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Washington University in St. Louis, which became the first institute of higher education in the world to ban the sale of bottled water, is making strides to spread the movement around the country.

Under the university's ban, bottled water cannot be sold in vending machines or at school venues, asking students and staff instead to drink tap water.

The movement, nicknamed "Tap it," was started by WUSTL junior Kady McFadden, who hopes to spread its influence to other universities across America and around the world.

"Bottled water is harmful in many different ways," McFadden said in a recent interview with WUSTL's news and information office. "Water is heavy, and shipping bottled water to campus releases large amounts of carbon dioxide into the atmosphere.

McFadden began the movement because she believed that bottled water presents significant waste and energy issues. She said that great amounts of energy go into the production of bottled water and that as school campuses ship large quantities of water bottles each week, large amounts of carbon dioxide are released into the air.

Furthermore, the amount of plastic bottles is excessive and even when recycled they can only be made into lower-grade plastic which is not as widely used.

McFadden praised the stu-

See WATER on page 2

The "'Tap it" movement believes bottled water is contributing unnecessarily to waste and energy problems.

Smith provides new tips on catching 'Zs'

BY GARY TARANTINO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For many, college consists of spending hours studying for exams, pulling all-nighters to finish papers, partying through the weekend and forming relationships with one another. All these activities can be stressful, time consuming and can leave no opportunity to get the proper amount of sleep.

Sleep studies find that sleep quantity is closely related to students' academic performance and capacity to learn. Smith College's education wellness director Emily Nagoski is trying to counter bad behaviors by promoting healthy sleep habits in forums for students.

Nagoski provides some tips for healthy sleep.

"Remember the Big 3: cool, dark, and quiet," she advises. By this she means that the ideal sleep environment is a little on the cool side, as dark as you can make it, and quiet.

If light can't be blocked out, Nagoski suggests using an eye mask. If there is noise that can't be controlled, Nagoski advises to give earplugs a try.

It might take a little time to get used to these things, claimed Nagoski, but they could help in the long run.

The second is tip is to "learn your circadian peaks."

Peaks come in the morning and another in the late afternoon or early evening periods. Make the most of these times by scheduling your schoolwork into them, Nagoski said. Midday dips in energy and the middle of the night are not ideal times for producing brilliant work, she said.

College students tend to have later circadian cycles than children or older

See SLEEP on page 3

According to Emily Nagoski, taking naps shorter than 40 minutes or longer than an hour and half is key to waking up refreshed.

W.E.B. Du Bois library to honor namesake

BY DINAH GORELIK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The W.E.B. Du Bois library is in its 15th year of presenting distinguished speakers to honor the library's namesake. This year, the speaker will be Howard Dodson, Jr., chief of the Schomburg Center for Research in Black Culture, the leading center for materials and artifacts on black cultural life at the New York Public Library.

Howard Dodson, Jr., chief of the Schomburg Center.

Dodson will present the 15th annual Du Bois lecture, sponsored by the Libraries' Special Collections and University Archives Department.

As a historian and educator, Dodson has specialized in the culture of African and African American people. His focus has been on retrieval, preservation, and interpretation of documentation of African diaspora and African history and culture.

Dodson holds a masters degree in both history and political science, and an "A.B.D.," or all but dissertation in black history and relations. Dodson was the director of the Institute of the Black World from 1974 to 1979 which is the research center of Martin Luther King Junior Center for Nonviolent Change in Atlanta.

In addition to winning several honorary awards from various universities, Dodson has published numerous books including "Becoming American: The African American Journey," "In Motion: The African-American Migration Experience," and "The Black New Yorkers: Four Hundred Years of African American History."

Because of Dodson's interest in the history of black people throughout the Western Hemisphere, he decided to go to South Africa with the Peace Corps in the 1960s. His plans changed, however, following the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr. in 1968.

According to an interview done with Contemporary Black Biography, Dr. King's death led Dodson to the realization that he had no clear path to travel. His solution to this sense of de-centering was to return to history for new bases for assessing this particular moment in time. Dodson told CBB that he felt he needed to connect with the best of moral and ethical traditions, which he later found in his extensive studies of black history and literature.

One of Dodson's goals is not only to educate others on the history of the black people, but to encourage more research on African and African-American culture in his role at the Schomburg Center.

The lecture will take place Thursday, Feb. 26 at 6:30 p.m. in the Special Collections Reading room on the 25th floor of the Du Bois library.

Dinah Gorelik can be reached at dgorelik@student.umass.edu.

ARTS & LIVING

OSCAR FASHION

Top designers and stars show off their stuff on the Oscars' red carpet. What was in and what was out?

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS

BRING ON NO. 1

Mass Attack takes on No. 1 Boston University in a two-game set this weekend. As postseason nears UMass needs wins.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORAL & OPINION

COLUMN | S.P. TAKES ON HIGHER FEES

Check out S.P. Sullivan's points on the proposed fee $1,500 fee increase, or 107, 30-rack decrease, depending on how you look at it.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BLOG| MEET THE EXECUTIVE BOARD

Check out a new blog link on DailyCollegian.com for a view into the lives of the seven who get paid the big bucks at The Collegian.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 23

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasenuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COMICS EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR James Mathews
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenzweig
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrew Murray
PHOTO EDITOR P.J. Stanley
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Koczwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Tortunen
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL Nick O'Malley
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO Ryan Fung
ASSISTANT PHOTO Matthew Harrison
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, HOME OF COLLEGE SCENES IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAY-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kate Olesin

COPY EDITOR
Shayna Murphy

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michelle Abbasciano

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

INTRODUCING NEWSGARDEN

FOLLOW NEWS GEOGRAPHICALLY WITH DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM'S NEW APPLICATION

NEWS

VIDEO:
SEE MORE OF WHAT CONSERVATIVE RADIO TALK SHOW HOST MICHAEL GRAHAM HAD TO SAY AT UMASS TUESDAY NIGHT.

SLIDESHOW:
SEE HOW STUDENTS ARE PROTESTING POSSIBLE FEE INCREASES ALL ACROSS CAMPUS AND THE STATE.

VIDEO: WEDNESDAY
DAILY COLLEGIAN EDITORS AND REPORTERS PROVIDE A WRAP OF THE CAMPUS' BUDGET CRISIS AND CHANCELLOR HOLUB'S REACTION TO IT IN THE "WAR ROOM."

BLOG: THIS WEEK
READ THE LATEST IN UMASS RESEARCH, POLITICS AND STUDENT LIFE FOR THE WEEK ON THE COLLEGIAN'S NEWS BLOGS. NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS TELLS OF GOING UNDER THE KNIFE FOR UMASS KINESIOLOGY.

SPORTS

SLIDESHOW:
SEE THE HIGHLIGHTS OF THE UMASS MEN'S BASKETBALL GAME AGAINST URI THROUGH THE LENSE OF A COLLEGIAN PHOTOGRAPHER.

ARTS

LIVE BLOGGING:
READ ACADEMY AWARDS COVERAGE FROM DAILY COLLEGIAN FILM CRITIC KEVIN KOCZWARA WHO "TWEETED" DURING LAST NIGHT'S PROGRAM.

Salary freeze put in place

VOTE from page 1

Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM). "They should simply wait until it is crystal clear what the University will be getting from the federal stimulus money."

Wulkan indicated that waiting as little as a week could bring into focus just how much federal funding UMass will receive, and possibly eliminate the need for any fee increase.

The university has also enacted a freeze on salaries over $120,000 and Chancellor Robert C. Holub's task force on reorganization continues to pursue alternatives, including the possibility of creating a College of Arts and Sciences, which may help to reduce the cost of sustaining the university.

If the fee increase passes, it will largely fall upon the Budget Task Force to close the remainder of the budgetary gap on the Amherst campus.

"We are trying to chart a path for the future, mindful of a very serious economic crisis but also aware that we want to be positioned to come out of the crisis with our capacity for excellence in research and teaching not only intact but ready to take on and lead in finding solutions to the challenges that lie ahead," task force chairwoman Jane Fountain said in a statement.

Since Jack M. Wilson became president in 2003, the university system has maintained a policy of restraining student fee increases to levels at or below the rate of inflation. Revenue from fees stays within the university, while tuition payments go directly to the state.

In a press release dated Feb. 20, President Wilson emphasized the university's "obligation to protect quality, access and affordability," even during tough economic times like this.

Fee increases may help to protect the university's quality by keeping professors employed rather than making cuts in faculty and staff, but it runs the risk of scaring off applicants who look to UMass as a more affordable alternative.

Many campus organizations have mounted initiatives to speak out against the fee increase.

On Monday, a group of graduate students set out on a four-day, 107-mile walk to Dartmouth, Mass., where the Board of Trustees will make its final decision on Friday.

PHENOM is organizing a call-in day for Thursday, Feb. 26 to express to Gov. Patrick a need to allocate properly the federal stimulus funds outlined for institutions like UMass.

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu

Opinions differ on possible bottle ban

WATER from page 1

dents and Dining Services of Washington University for their support. In order to get others to be more aware of the impact of bottled water, McFadden and "Tap it" educated students about the harms of bottled water and the benefits of tap water, including campus-wide taste tests and educational tables.

As a result of WUSTL's actions, other universities have begun moving towards a future bottled water ban, including Brandeis University and Ohio Wesleyan University and Leeds University in the United Kingdom successfully voted on a ban last December.

As of today, the University of Massachusetts has not made any steps towards a possible bottled water ban.

Some students are skeptical of the idea of banning bottled water on the UMass campus, stressing that this is not the most pressing issue. Amid outcries of raising fees and excessive salaries given to UMass employees, banning bottled water does not rank as a high priority.

"I feel as though there are more pressing environmental issues at UMass, such as the mass amount of food waste that goes on at the DC," said senior Katie Wilson.

"They can ban selling it on campus, but people are still going to buy bottled water elsewhere," said senior Courtney Marenna. "I recycle all my bottles though, and I know a lot of people don't. So maybe they should work on more recycling programs instead."

Amid the skepticism there are many who feel that as helping the environment becomes a more central part of our daily life, banning bottled water is a necessary move.

"I don't think it will make an earth-shattering impact, but it will definitely be a big step in the right direction," said senior Sarah Madden.

"Even if sales do decrease, this is something we need to do, for the greater good," said senior Barbara Booras. "I would definitely support the ban of plastic water bottles. I've heard that most plastic bottles end up as landfill waste. With such a large student population at UMass, the waste adds up. I think this is a great way to become a greener campus and help our planet."

However, there is one obstacle that some schools may not be able to overcome. If the quality of the local community's tap water is rendered undrinkable, a move towards a ban could be stopped in its tracks.

"I have lived in this area for ten years, and we have not had any problems with the water thus far," said junior Uriel Rodriguez. "I have heard of a potential threat last year in the water, but it turned out to be null and void. I think that students should invest in a Brita if they are really scared about quality, since it would be cheaper and less costly to the environment."

"I think this movement has good intentions, but they're doing it in the wrong order," said Wilson. "They need to clean up the tap water around the country before moving towards banning bottled water. Not all cities have high tap water quality like we have in Massachusetts."

Another concern is that if a bottled water ban is implemented, soft drink sales will rise as students turn to other drink choices. At WUSTL however, soft drink sales have actually fallen since the ban was implemented.

Vincent Capone can be reached at vcapone@student.umass.edu.

'Soul Café' hits home with food, entertainment, tradition

The 'Soul Café' event, hosted by residence life staff, CCEMBS and the Women of Color Leadership Network at the Malcolm X center, provided food and entertainment in the tradition of Sunday dinners in the black community.

BY GISEL SAILLANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMass became a home away from home for some this past Sunday as the event, "Soul Café," celebrated family unity and the tradition of Sunday dinner in the black community.

This event which started several years ago amongst residence life staff has evolved to include the Committee for the Collegiate Education of Black and other Minority Students,(CCEMBS) and the Women of Color Leadership Network. It was hosted at the Malcolm X center and featured home-cooked meals prepared by contributors.

The food included fried chicken, collard greens, baked macaroni and cheese and cornbread. As the attendees filled the tables, they were introduced to the purpose of the "Soul Café" by Willie Pope, assistant director of the CCEMBS program and Michael Gary, assistant resident director of John Adams Hall.

Pope said that Sunday dinner has different meaning to everyone and that those experiences are what "Soul Café" is about. He said to him, Sunday dinner was like having Thanksgiving dinner weekly. After church and Sunday school his family would meet at a relative's house for dinner.

"How many people had Sunday dinner at grandma's house?" Gary asked the attendees.

Gary alternated weeks between his parent's, and relatives' houses every Sunday. Food, and especially the cake preparation was of special interest to Gary, since his grandmother would prepare the cake Sunday night and let him and his cousins lick the bowl and the spoon.

The attendees were encouraged to share their definitions, but were reluctant until UMass senior Kenisha Jackson, was asked to share her college version of Sunday dinner. Kenisha said everyone's schedule is full with academics, work and community service, but having a Sunday dinner allows people to share and reflect on their past actions.

"The food was excellent and providing the perfect atmosphere for relaxing, socializing and unwinding from the stress of school," said Cornelius Taabazuing, senior biochemistry and molecular biology major. "I was also excited to see what different prizes they had. I was even more excited to hear my name called because I never win anything. The event was a success."

Senior Sakeena Kazmi, performed a song. She wrote the lyrics, and the music was composed by Gary.

"At first, I thought I would be judged," she said. "But when I understood that people were here to gather and celebrate the rich culture within releasing one's self, I felt able to go up and do what I love to do – sing."

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu

No 'viable alternative' to fee increase, states Chancellor

HOLUB from page 1

account the fiscal realities," he continued. "We're still facing serious budget cuts even with the fee increase, and disastrous cuts if we don't see this increase."

The University is hoping that stimulus funding can ease budget cuts.

"We are also very closely monitoring the federal stimulus package, and have worked very hard with our federal delegation and now with state officials to ensure that UMass Amherst receives as much support from the stimulus plan as possible," said Holub.

For now, however, 50 faculty positions, 30 lecturers, and 150 teaching assistants will likely be cut in the next fiscal year even with the fee increase, he said.

"These cuts would come with painful reductions in everything from student life programs to maintenance," said Holub "Without the fee increase, things will be even bleaker."

To those who oppose fee increases, he said, "I understand that view, and join these people in not wanting to raise the costs of an education. But where we part company is in what we are willing to do to achieve that goal."

"I stand with those students, faculty, and staff who have urged me to do all I can to defend and protect the quality of the education that we offer," he continued. "I agree with them that doing grave damage to our institution in this time of great economic uncertainty is the wrong answer now, and the wrong answer for students and for our future."

Those in opposition of the fee increase, he said, have offered no "viable alternative," other than demanding for state funding – a strategy Holub said is not likely to become a reality with the current state of the economy.

But, he said, "I encourage those of you who love UMass Amherst and value your education to get in touch with your state and federal representatives and urge them to support UMass. And I encourage you to talk to others on campus that oppose the fee increase, and urge them to take a more reasoned approach to the reality we face."

Holub said he has continued to work closely with the Budget Planning Task Force and expects the group to provide him with further recommendations soon, which will be announced to the campus in addition to any decisions made concerning the budget.

"Personally, I do not want to see a large increase in fees; I agree philosophically that the University is a public good and should be better supported by the citizens of the Commonwealth," said Holub. "But I also have to face the reality of our economic crisis, while at the same time trying to preserve the quality educational experience that our students want and deserve."

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.

Correction

Last Tuesday, Feb. 17, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian ran a photo of Solomon Black which was incorrectly cited as a photo of VASMA treasurer Andrew Masciola. The Collegian apologizes for any confusion caused by our error.

Domino's Pizza
Domino's
The Pizza Delivery Experts
This week only:
Buy any large pizza
get free cheesy bread
or
10 Buffalo wings
not good with any other offer
413-256-8911

NEED AN APARTMENT?
PUFFTON VILLAGE
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Students need sleep

SLEEP from page 1

adults, so many will find that 10 p.m. is a great time for work, whereas 8 a.m. can be disastrous.

It doesn't matter what time works best – what matters is using those best times most effectively, she said.

Nagoski's third tip is: "If you don't fall asleep within 30 minutes, get up and do something relaxing."

Healthy sleepers take about 10 to 20 minutes to fall asleep. Most often, not being able to fall asleep is a product of worry. Lying there tossing and turning will only make a person anxious and prevent them from falling asleep, said Nagoski. If someone is specifically afraid of something that will be forgotten the following day, she suggests to turn on a light and write it down. Then, read the note in the morning.

If a person has general worry, Nagoski said to get up and read something for fun, watch a little mind-numbing TV, meditate, fantasize about lying on a beach or other relaxing place, and generally let the brain drift quietly for 10 to 20 minutes.

The fourth piece of advice is: "Keep naps either brief or long."

A brief nap is usually less than 40 minutes and a long nap is typically one and a half to three hours.

A sleep cycle is about an hour and a half long, so if a person wakes up after 40 minutes, they have to drag themselves up out of the deepest phase of the sleep cycle, which can leave them feeling groggy.

A 20-minute refresher nap is ideal, or else go "whole hog" with a full sleep cycle – or even two, if one really sleep deprived, said Nagoski.

The fifth and final tip is: "Stop drinking coffee five hours before bedtime."

A lot of college students think they have a high tolerance for caffeine, Nagoski said, but they might be surprised at how much more soundly they can sleep if they avoid caffeine before bed.

"If you're low on sleep, it's going to slow down the way your brain works, it's going to make your decision making bad, and it's going to make your mood really grumpy," said Nagoski.

"Reversing the prioritization that people learn early on in life, through our culture, from the time students enroll into universities to the time that they leave, ideally they will at least have begun to question whether or not prioritizing a thing like sleep above their job is the way that they should manage their lives," she continued.

Gary Tarantino can be reached at gtaranti@student.umass.edu.

Facebook reinstates old terms after strong user opposition

BY EMILY E. SMITH
OREGON DAILY EMERALD

EUGENE, O.R. — Facebook recently updated its terms of service, the contract between the Facebook Inc. and its members, but reinstated its original terms of service Wednesday after members loudly and adamantly voiced disapproval for the new terms.

In its new terms, Facebook retained rights to user content even after users deactivated their accounts – a change that sparked dissent among many users.

For many, agreeing to Facebook's or any other Web site's terms of use is as simple as "just hitting accept," University of Oregon sophomore Mikaylee Tevlin said.

"I don't want Facebook to own any of my stuff," she said. "I don't know why they need control over it."

The original terms don't stray far from the updated terms with stipulations such as, "By posting User Content to any part of the Site, you automatically grant ... the Company an irrevocable, perpetual, non-exclusive, transferable, fully paid, worldwide license" to use, display, reformat, excerpt and distribute the content "for any purpose."

The updated terms, which were published earlier this month and revoked Wednesday, spelled out the same agreement more explicitly but changed one part of the contract. In the original terms, Facebook's "worldwide license" over a user's content expires when an account is deactivated; the updated terms lifted the expiration and claimed permanent rights to content, even after a user leaves Facebook.

Junior Melissa Greeneaf said these are not terms she would be comfortable with.

"If somebody deleted their Facebook, everything on it should be deleted," she said

On that point, she's not alone. After tens of thousands of members joined Facebook groups and some users terminated their accounts to protest the new terms, Facebook officials created a group to involve users in the process of drafting new terms of use.

As of Thursday, nearly 74,000 members had joined the group, "Facebook Bill of Rights and Responsibilities." There, Facebook officials deny ownership of user information, "even though that's what it seems like to many people."

Graduate student Devika Gates said she understands users' negative reactions to the updated terms, which "came as sort of a shock to people."

Facebook's control of user information may seem like a violation of privacy, but Gates said users should also see Facebook for what it is.

"It is a business," she said. "I understand they have to be strict about certain things."

Gates said communicating Facebook's terms of use more clearly to future and existing members, so that they know exactly what they are agreeing to, should be a priority.

Greeneaf and Tevlin said they now question what they originally agreed to when complying with Facebook's terms of use.

"For all I know, they own my soul because I have a Facebook," Tevlin said.

To read Facebook's original and current terms of use, go to www.facebook.com/terms.php.

Protests stretch across entire week, state against increase

PROTEST from page 1

into this," he said

Chancellor Robert Holub sent a campus-wide e-mail intended to clarify confusion over the fee increase and other budget-related concerns.

However, the e-mail was not directly in response to yesterday's protest, according to University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski, who said the idea for the e-mail began several days ago.

The rally was not only intended to make other students aware of the fee increases, but also to rally support for events planned for the rest of the week.

UMass Student Action is teaming up with the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM) for a "statewide call-in day" from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. today in the Cape Cod Lounge of the Student Union.

Students will be calling Gov. Deval Patrick to demand stimulus funding be given to the UMass to prevent layoffs and fee increases.

On Friday, the group is offering free bus rides to Dartmouth to protest the board of trustees' meeting in person. Buses will leave at 5 a.m. from the Haigis Mall, where free coffee and donuts will be provided.

The cost of the trip is being split by the three Registered Student Organizations (RSO) that make up UMass Student Action – the GEO, SGA and the GSS, said GEO Vice President Tim Sutton.

Protesters hope to assemble in the hundreds at Dartmouth with representatives from each of the five campuses, including at least 100 from Amherst, said McCluskey.

Those traveling by bus will meet up with five GSS students who left Amherst on Monday are walking the 107 miles from Amherst to Dartmouth, which kicked off this week's events protesting the fee increase.

"UMass Student Action formed on the UMass-Amherst campus this month in response to the proposal to hike student fees, general trend of dwindling state and federal support for public higher education, and privatization of the University," said a statement from the coalition.

The group has been working with students from the other University campuses in hopes of creating a statewide coalition.

For more information on the bus rides to Dartmouth, call the GEO at 413-545-0705 or e-mail them at departmental@geoumass.org, or visit www.umassstudentaction.org.

Matt Rocheleau can reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.

Are you a photographer?
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
is hiring photographers
Build your resume and get your photos published for over 10,000 people to see each day!
Send an email to photo@dailycollegian.com for more information

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms 3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40 Dance House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
BRING YOUR COLLEGE ID FOR COVER DISCOUNT!!!
SKYPLEX is NOW HIRING:
Doors open at 9 to party until 2 a.m.!
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

to top it off...
There's always something new at ZANNA.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com

Blueberry EXTRAVAGANZA
• Fresh Blueberries with Herb Tuna Salad
• Zesty Blueberry Barbecue Sauce with Grilled Chicken
• Blueberry Corn Pancakes
• Chilled Blueberry Soup
• Chicken Breast with Blueberry Chutney
• Blueberry Jam (local)
• And More...
Blueberries are ranked #1 in Antioxidants and are high in Vitamin C and Fiber
FEBRUARY 25–28
ALL DCs
Ivy
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Blueberries U.S. HIGHBUSH BLUEBERRY COUNCIL
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2009

"I THINK I CAN. I THINK I CAN. I THINK I CAN. I THINK I CAN."
- THE LITTLE ENGINE THAT COULD

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

February '09: we've got the disease

Four journalists question whether or not they have come down with something

The Centers For Disease Control and Prevention released a report

The Four

Wednesday warning Americans and those troublesome college kids of the dangers of contracting herpes from reading newspaper articles.

The CDC's press release confirmed what many have thought possible for years: reading any sort of newspaper articles can lead to the life-long disease.

"It was once said that reading newspaper articles could only lead to an educated mind and ink stains on your fingertips," said Dr. Val Trex from the CDC. "Now, it can lead to infected naughty bits and embarrassing conversations before the magic happens."

Many avid readers assumed that there is such a thing as "safe reading" and resorted to reading online articles. However, articles online still pose a risk of contracting herpes, according to researchers.

"Just the act of touching a computer keyboard can expose you to the herpes simplex virus," said CDC spokesperson Dr. Nye Eve Attey. "The risk is relatively smaller than when reading print editions, but it should still be a concern for Americans. Over the next 20 years, we project over three billion Americans will contract the virus this way. We could be on our way to a major pandemic unless immediate action is taken."

It is recommended that you stop reading this immediately, and take a bath in Clorox bleach.

In an attempt to avoid any undue infection, editors at many newspapers have started wearing latex gloves around the office. Repeated hand washing is encouraged, but this has contributed to a small rise in the rate of obsessive-compulsive disorder cases on campus.

Following up its recent, absolutely truthful, report suggesting that there was a link between the widely-played drinking game "beer pong" and the spread of herpes, the CDC report has come as a major shock to many college students, especially those who are currently reading newspapers.

Americans, it has been reported will believe that almost anything will spread herpes as long as it says it in print, the report states.

"It's amazing really," one CDC representative said, through the grapevine. "We just release this stuff and people will stop doing the most random of things because they really don't want herpes ... I mean this one time, Tim from accounting forwarded an e-mail that said you could get irritable bowel syndrome from using public bathroom and Steve from IT drove home everyday during lunch to use his own toilet."

CDC researcher Dr. Ree L. Doctor has studied the recent trend of Americans, particularly college students, believing nearly anything will cause the spread of herpes as well as athlete's foot, the clap, the common cold, scarlet fever, yellow fever and a recently discovered ailment known as glerpes.

Glerpes, a sexually-transmitted infection that is composed of craft glitter and venereal diseases, has emerged as the most dangerous new disorders in the world. Craft stores nationwide have issued a recall for the shiny substance that never comes off, no matter how hard you scrub your skin in the shower.

It has also been reported that college students have a tendency to search for the word "gullible" on ceilings. This information's source has not been confirmed, but anonymous source, CDC executive Mike Rotch, has confidentially attributed that the widespread usage of the internet and miscellaneous blog posts.

Since it has been confirmed that newspapers, computers and most other things that you can touch will cause herpes, it is recommended that you stop reading this immediately, and take a bath in Clorox bleach.

Nick Bush, Nesrin Sengul, Elizabeth Wahlman and Nick O'Malley are the four horsemen/women of the ed/opalypse. They can be found on campus.

Stimulating campus protest

S.P. Sullivan

Before you stock up for this weekend's party, dear reader, consider this: The University of Massachusetts board of trustees will be voting tomorrow, Feb. 27 on the matter of a proposed fee increase, about $1,500 for undergraduates, for the coming semester.

That's approximately 107 30-racks – of the cheap stuff – per semester.

A modest group of graduate and undergraduate students rallied outside Machmer Hall yesterday to protest the proposed fee increase, which will most like pass in Dartmouth, Mass. tomorrow. Student organizers are sending a busload of students to Dartmouth to protest, because $1,500 is enough to make a lot of people pissed.

Five graduate students also set out on foot yesterday, as some sort of form of protest, and hopefully they'll get there by Friday. Though I hardly think you've got yourself a formidable political movement when you can take attendance by holding up your right hand and saying, "This many."

Not surprisingly, another e-mail update on the budget situation, and the fee increase, arrived in inboxes across campus just shortly after the rally. Chancellor Robert C. Holub, in a message that cost each of us roughly $1.55 a word, said this: Hey, not so fast.

"There has been speculation and assertions made about the budget plans that, frankly, aren't accurate," he wrote. Holub said that there is little choice in matter of the budget until federal and state monies are made available through the stimulus package.

"Our goal is to use this funding to mitigate as much as possible the impact of our budget crisis on fees and to do all we can to avoid layoffs in our faculty and staff ranks," he wrote.

Don't worry. We'll pay you back. Maybe.

"This we feel is an unnecessary fee increase because we know that money is coming in from the federal stimulus package that will hopefully alleviate UMass' operating budget," Student Government Association [SGA] Student Trustee Lindsay McCluskey said at the rally.

Yet system President Jack Wilson has said that students will see a rebate as long as state funding for the University is replaced with stimulus aid.

In an e-mail recently, SGA President Malcolm Chu called the statement "a farce."

"Why charge ahead with a fee increase that further places the burden of funding the University on students and sends a clear message to the governor that he can spend the stimulus money elsewhere because we're already covered?" he said.

Now, I don't know what to make of this federal stimulus package. I'm not an economics or finance major, so I can't figure out the numbers, and I'm not a Democrat or a Republican, so nobody's told me what to think yet.

Nothing personal, UMass. I'm sure you're good for it.

But if Wall Street gets a bailout and AIG executives get a fancy bailout-money retreat and administrators put a cap on salaries right after The Boston Globe does a story about how they're are among the highest paid employees in the state, I think the University can hold out 'til the stimulus package before it borrows $1,500 bucks from me.

Nothing personal, UMass. I'm sure you're good for it.

While it is suspect that the bulk of the budget shortfall is being absorbed right out of students' pockets, though, it's frustrating to see protesters who aren't just fighting a premature fee increase, but are looking for more money.

"I had an e-mail exchange with Chancellor Holub early this week – he said some pretty discouraging things," graduate student Ari Feld told the crowd at the rally. "He said that increasing funding for graduate students was a priority that we couldn't get to this year, or next year or the following year. That doesn't sound like a priority to me. That sounds like something that's on the backburner."

Dude, undergraduates are looking at $1,500 a pop in fees and you want more money? You're working on your second degree; some of us haven't even got one yet. Chill out on the backburner.

It seems as though everything has changed as far as this school's economic situation goes, but the politics are the same as always. The administration is leaning heavily on fees – fees that have gone up, and never down – to alleviate a budget situation caused partly by the fact that the economy imploded, or whatever it is that it did, and partly because of the cost of running one of the most convoluted bureaucracies of any university, more labyrinthine and confusing than this run-on sentence.

Meanwhile, graduate and undergraduate resistance to the fee increase fails to acknowledge the fact that yes, Beacon Hill should be investing in education, but how likely is it that the University of Massachusetts is going to be the place to do it when Harvard University is right down the street?

In a nutshell, the University wants students to pull $1,500 out of their hindquarters. Student organizers want the University to pull millions out of Beacon Hill's. And Barack Obama says he'll do it all, with a little hope and a lot of change.

I don't buy any of it.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian columnist. Read him online at blog.masslive.com/umass101.

From: editorial@dailycollegian.com
To:students@umass.edu; faculty@umass.edu, staff@umass.edu, students@fivecolleges.edu, faculty@fivecolleges.edu; staff@fivecolleges.edu
Re: "weekly feature" nutty nutshells

Subject: opinions, briefly

Dear All,

Barack Obama's inauguration, regardless of his ability as a chief executive, marked the beginning of a period in which many Americans are questioning their presuppositions. This is happening most clearly in the realM of race-relations, but its also happening in terms of how we deal with money, how we think of America's place in the world, how we view the electoral process, what standards we hold politicians to (and why,) and many others. Pastor Rick Warren's presence in the inaugural proceedings caused a big productive hoo-ha-ha within the LGBT community. People took sides. Opinions changed. It's what I like to call a "new perspective-producing ripple-effect.

James Mathews,
Ed/Op editor

2009.2.26 : enter the ed/opalypse.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

Common courtesy quite uncommon

Common courtesy is a concept that is rarely taken into account by UMass students.

I'm not trying to step on any toes here, but come on people – "please" and "thank you" goes a long way. Take for example the hard-working, full-time campus staff. They work as hard as anyone else on campus and it's about time they get some recognition for their services.

Mike Gillmeister

They don't need you to screw up everything that they've worked on for hours on end. Put your trays away. Remember that line that people with dirty trays stand in and they leave empty-handed? It's not magic, it's being an adult.

Listen, they're all good people and if you so much as take the time to acknowledge their existence as people, you've made their day. It's hard enough working on a campus of at least 25,000 students, let alone the fact that so many of them are irresponsible.

No, I don't know all of you but I see a lot of things that warrant this column. The dining hall staff feed those of you who live on campus, and maybe they deserve a little thanks.

Speaking of residence halls, the custodians don't have the easiest jobs, either. I'm not sure how everyone lives at home but I don't stuff my toilet full of toilet paper on a whim. Maybe that's a fun game somewhere, but I suggest keeping your sick little pastime in your home town.

Also, if you're getting so trashed on the weekends that you wake up the next morning not knowing what the horrible smell in the hallway is, maybe you need a new social activity. It's not as if these people wake up one morning hoping to scrub your disgusting vomit out of the carpet in the hallway.

The hallway is another area of worry. Did you have some horrible childhood incident involving a bulletin board? For those of you who have, my sincerest apologies. For those of you who haven't, leave the posters alone, they'll be changed soon enough.

This also goes out to the so-called artists who write obscene things not only on bulletin boards but also in bathroom stalls. You're an idiot.

Nobody cares about your messages about Obama, Socrates or how you hate the world. Chances are you're probably not a star student in Mother Earth's eyes anyways.

Acknowledge the kindness, thank them and move on. Trust me – a little reciprocation goes a long way.

There's an outlet for your pain and I promise you that you will be accepted; it's called the journalism department. I'm not just a spokesman, I'm also a member.

Cyclists, you're next. I understand the need to get across campus for a class that's in Lederle if you live in Central, but you don't need to shed blood to do it. I can't remember the last nice day that I haven't walked to a class in fear of being demolished.

These two-wheeled assassins must think that I can part molecules just so they can have a smooth ride to class. At least shout that you're encroaching upon some potential victim who has their back to you before you run them over with your bike.

Although, in fairness, those "traffic lines" down by Herter are obnoxious. However, they're merely there as a little reminder to ride in a straight line. Yes, no weaving in and out of crowds of people. If I feel myself getting clipped one more time, I'm putting a metal pipe in the sleeve of my jacket.

In reference to pedestrians, you're not all angels either. Crosswalks are there for a reason. I'm glad that your self-confidence is so high but if you challenge a Honda Civic, you'll lose.

When the cars do stop for you – as they should – wave thank you, they like that.

Another thing that you may have overlooked on your way to class is that you were brought there by someone – a bus driver. A lot of students apply for this job because they like driving and they like the above-average pay, not because they want loud and abrasive passengers.

It's not their fault that you jumped on the wrong bus and will therefore be late to a party. If you picked up a bus-schedule instead of a Solo cup, you'd probably be in better shape.

Lastly, I'd like to talk about the act of kindness that is opening doors for people. So many people just walk by as if they have their own personal doorperson. Acknowledge the kindness, thank them and move on.

Trust me – a little reciprocation goes a long way.

Mike Gillmeister is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

edopblog.blogspot.com

*not yet approved by the COC tell your friends we're on our way.

Happiness is not a warm gun

The Associated Press reported that a series of gunshots struck six people at a Mardi Gras parade in New Orleans this past Tuesday. One of those struck by the gunshots was an infant. The suspects in custody? Two males, ages 18 and 20.

Solmaaz Yazdiha

This one didn't even seem to make it to the big time. Just another old shooting spree, unworthy news it seems. Have the American people become numb to the news of young men with guns and of innocent victims?

With the Virginia Tech shooting in 2007, it was big news. There was no ignoring it: a public university, unsuspecting students and tragedy. But just as with Columbine in 1999, the story has since faded.

The New Orleans story, which appeared in The New York Times, tells the experience of an eyewitness Beau Beals, who watched as the shooting broke out.

According to Beals, he and other revelers tossed children over a metal fence to get them to safety, but others in the crowd remained, waiting for beads and other trinkets being tossed from the floats as if nothing had happened.

Now, when I think of Mardi Gras, I think of beads, booze and boobs. Who doesn't?

As a human being with common sense and urgency, a gunshot wound would likely change my focus. The same, I suppose, was not true for some bead-hungry parade-goers. In a country based on unity, it can feel a little like 'every man for himself' these days. Maybe that's why we hold guns.

According to the Violence Prevention Institute (VPI), the economic cost of gun violence reaches a staggering $100 billion annually. What's fun is the breakdown in prices –$22,400 for each unintentional shooting, $18,400 for each gun assault injury and $5,400 for each suicide. Who said you can't put a price on a life?

More than 10 children and teenagers are killed by guns every single day, and many more are wounded, according to VPI.

Of murdered juveniles ages 13-19, 77 percent are killed by guns. A whopping 39 percent of households have a gun. And, every year, 1,409 children and teenagers have taken their own lives with guns.

Numbers show that teens have knowledge of where a gun may be stored in their home. Between 1998-1999, more than 3,500 students were expelled from school for bringing a gun into the building, and that's only the ones that were caught.

So why, with all these crazy statistics, do we continue to support "the right to bear arms"?

In a country based on unity, it can feel a little like 'every man for himself' these days. Maybe that's why we hold guns.

Sure, it's all circumstantial. I understand that in a world so scary and with so many threats, a person can feel much safer with the warmth of a pistol under a pillow. But, as it turns out, guns kept in the home for self protection are 22 times more likely to kill a friend or family member than to kill someone in self defense.

In other countries, murders by handguns are thousands of lives lower. According to VPI, in Germany, the total was 373, compared to America's 11,789. The number is 151 in Canada – just a short drive up and we may walk dark alleys in confidence. However, setting the bar are Australia with only 57 gun-related homicides and a mere 19 in Japan.

We're paying more and losing more lives, but and the most sobering statistic of all is no statistic. We simply don't seem to care?

It's not that these gun owners are going out on shooting frenzies. Many are responsible and aware, storing their guns away in seemingly safe places. But we are all human. We lock our keys in the car, we spill wine on the sofa and we lose our heads.

In a world so fast paced and demanding, the gun locked away upstairs can not be on our minds every second of every day. And where is it when it's not there? Where are the kids? Where is the real threat, besides another gun just like yours, pointing right back at you?

Solmaaz Yazdiha is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at syazdiha@student.umass.edu

How far will the bailout go?

Combing through the headlines over the past few weeks, I couldn't help but notice all the references to Obama's stimulus package. In the world of Viagara, Cialis and Enzyte, you'd think the president's team might have pushed the media to use a different phrasing. It will only be a matter of days before it's heard in porn movies around the world – "Want to inspect my stimulus package, baby?"

Nick Milano

But seriously, upon a closer look at Obama's boost to the economy, it is surprising what you find.

Speaking of the sex industry, it turns out the porn industry finally got the bailout that porn magnates like "Hustler" publisher Larry Flynt and "Girl's Gone Wild" CEO Joe Francis have been lobbying in Washington for. And to think the Republicans were previously up in arms about stimulus money going to sex education.

An aide for a top House Republican said that the moral hazard was thrown out the window for the porn industry.

"If Playboy and Hustler can fail," he said. "What does that say about the future of Girls Gone Wild?"

There was actually some opposition, though quite mild, from the Democrats on the grounds that entities such as "Girls Gone Wild" export their labor and videotaping to poor countries such as Mexico and other Caribbean destinations. A congressman, choosing to remain anonymous because of the sensitivity of the issue, asked why American stimulus money should be spent on companies bent on outsourcing.

In the end, though, Obama won. As a spokesman for the president said, "With the failing economy, thousands have been forced out of work, especially former Wall Streeters. They need another way to entertain themselves; we've chosen to think of the porn bailout as an alternative antidepressant."

In another part of the stimulus package, the Obama administration responded to reports that thousands of Mexican illegal immigrants were fleeing the U.S. for their homeland. To counteract this disturbing trend, a hefty section of the bailout intends to fund construction of a wall along the border separating the U.S. from Mexico. Surprisingly, the bill was pushed by the Democratic Party, which was buoyed by strong Hispanic support in such states as California, Nevada and New Mexico.

Upon a closer look at Obama's boost to the economy, it is surprising what you find.

Asked about the unexpected change in ideology by most Democrats on the construction of a fence across the entire border, a prominent California Democrat responded, "We just won an election on the backs of millions of Mexican voters, what makes you think we can let them escape back to Mexico now?"

The infusion of cash is expected to guarantee the construction of a massive fence along the border as well as a variety of state-of-the-art computer technology. Both will assuredly clamp down on illegal border crossings.

Republicans, however, were outraged that public money would be spent on such a venture. One Republican allowed that this venture would definitely create jobs, but he wondered aloud at what cost this would be to the image of America both here and abroad as the home of the free.

There are other peculiar expenditures in Obama's stimulus package. Interestingly, the package contains a shout out to the University of Massachusetts. It was announced yesterday that $3.5 billion would be set aside to be spent on further research of UMass-Amherst and Amherst's soy sauce initiative.

The president noted that the usefulness of the soy sauce concoction in preventing the sticking of snow and formation of ice on the streets of Amherst and the UMass campus.

"Any UMass student knows well the smell of the mysterious substance that coats sidewalks and streets of Amherst," the president said. "The money set aside in my stimulus package will enable the federal government to gauge whether the soy sauce can be used in northern cities around the country. There will never be a need for another snow day again."

While the research grant is bound to bring jobs to Amherst and the UMass campus, as well as serve as the source for quite a few graduate theses, not everyone was as upbeat as the president.

An employee of the UMass physical plant retorted that the president's signaling out of UMass's soy sauce system saying, "The president thinks it works, does he? Well clearly he has not driven around the UMass campus."

With the campus roads notorious for their roughness and potholes, the UMass representative continued, "What do you think is to blame for all the horrible roads? You think it was years of neglect of the bickering government or the lack of funding? You're crazy. It was the soy sauce all along."

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

Developing countries suffer from globalization

Jamaica looks like a success story as of 2009, right? The low number of people in absolute poverty has decreased further, and middle-income groups prosper. Markets are open and attract relatively big amounts of foreign direct investment, all thanks to globalization. However, this is just the disguise that western lenders want the world to believe because, in reality, Jamaica is just another victim of contemporary colonialism.

Kristina Tams

Jamaica is what is known as a developing country. Since its colonization in the 16th century, Jamaica has struggled with economic instability and limited natural resources. Now, globalization forces the country to borrow from the International Monastery Fund (IMF). Globalization poses many dangers for developing countries and Jamaica is just one of its victims.

Globalization as a concept is not a harmful endeavor. However, when developing countries are forced to borrow from lender companies that implement new westernized policies nothing good can come of it.

Globalization can be compared to the mission to convert "uneivilized" people to Christianity while the lending companies are similar to colonists: one can not stand without the other. Globalization causes developing countries to cut their education and healthcare, partake in outsourcing, and undervalue their currency.

These large corporations, such as the IMF and the World Bank exert undue influence onto small countries like Jamaica. These corporations charge high interest rates that are impossible to pay back. These corporations are governed by western ideas of modernization. The IMF takes the role of Jamaica's superior, and is therefore able tell the country what to do, even if it means stripping it of its culture.

The developing country needs to work from the inside out and avoid being exploited by western lender countries.

The country is caught in a perpetual cycle of debt.

These large western lender companies wield enormous power over the debtor countries, for example by forcing non-English speaking countries to have their students learn the English language.

Western lender companies even go as far as to take away the countries land to build their own army bases on and also limit what crops should be sold and marketed. In one instance the IMF made Jamaica lower their currency, making their dollar worth less to boost their economy. Jamaica ended up having to cut many of their education and healthcare programs.

All of these restrictions made by western lender companies position the developing country to be more dependent. This raises the question: does globalization really help out developing countries, making them more economically connected with rest of the world?

The idea is that it should, but globalization perpetuates a superstructure of inferiority and superiority between lender countries and their debtors. Developing countries like Jamaica are forced to take part in globalization. If these countries did not involve themselves in globalization they would be worse off.

Globalization forces developing countries to make agreements with western lending institutions.

These superior countries are able to dictate how to live to the now dependent and supposedly inferior countries. Globalization, in turn makes developing countries more dependent and makes independence an unreachable goal. Globalization has become the new colonization of the 21st century.

Globalization is inevitable. However, the way that developing countries are treated and brought into globalization can and should be changed.

Western lenders should treat them differently, by not coercing developing countries, but rather compromising with them and granting assistance in their time of need. Countries like Jamaica should not be forced to borrow from lender countries that strip them of their culture.

If money has to be borrowed it should be under different circumstances. There needs to be a middleman, a mediator who can establish a common ground between the lender and the developing country. This person should know the country, without having a bias of western view; this person should be an anthropologist.

The developing country needs to work from the inside out and avoid being exploited by western lender countries. It needs the resources to facilitate a change to prosper from globalization, but without becoming more in debt and at the loss of its struggling independence. The developing country needs to take charge and mobilize its own resources and claim globalization as its own change.

Kristina Tams is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at ktams@student.umass.edu

ED OP

back in black and white.

t minus 7, t minus 6,t minus 5, t minus 4 [ed/opalypto]

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2009 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Starlets and gowns strut the Oscars' red carpet

Hollywood's finest showcased top designers Sunday night

Anne Hathaway's Armani Prive dress was made of many small paillettes, creating a shimmering, mermaid effect.

Amy Adams took the red carpet risk by wearing her red Carolina Herrera - and did not blend in.

Vanessa Hudgens sported a flowing Marchesa gown with Cathy Waterman Jewels - proof that black never fails.

By Rebecca Babin
Collegian Staff

LOS ANGELES — If Hollywood is suffering the effects of the economic recession, it didn't show on the red carpet last Sunday night for the 81st annual Academy Awards. Choosing a favorite was more difficult this year than ever before. With a nod to old school glamour, starlets rocked designer frocks and jewelry that left on-lookers in awe. But it certainly made for a slow night for the fashion police.

As the red carpet crowd grew, it was easy to spot emerging trends. Each gown represented a different fashion of evening wear this season, from the structure of asymmetric necklines to the softness of princess-like ball gowns.

Origami was in order for many on the red carpet Sunday night. While soft, classic looks were the name of the game for many, structured gowns with a modern twist also made a bold statement this year.

Whether they were one-shoulder gowns like Kate Winslet's dazzling Atelier Yves Saint Laurent dress of contrasting black tulle and grey satin, or stiffened off-the-shoulder frocks like Heidi Klum's Roland Mouret, asymmetric necklines popped up left and right.

Marissa Tomei epitomized this look with a cream Atelier Versace gown consisting of countless geometric panels layered in small sections beginning at the top. Enlarged in a swirling motion as they traveled down her body, Tomei's dress finished with a dramatic train.

Mermaid gowns were a mainstay for celebrities this year. Whether paired with the asymmetric, one-shoulder look or topped by a strapless neckline, Oscar attendees showed off their figures with body-clinging gowns that flared often went out in fullness at the knees.

Diane Lane offered up a more traditional look in a black tissue-like Dolce & Gabbana gown that wrapped in diagonal cross-sections across her torso.

"Grey's Anatomy" star Melissa George embodied evening wear's ode to lingerie in a skin-tight, white corset-like Dolce & Gabbana with exposed boning. A stunning Vanessa Hudgens turned heads in an outstanding Marchesa with vertical seams, billowing black fabric, a combination of black, white, and grey flowers embossing the bust with her handsome beau Zac Efron beside her.

Divas came in glamorous ballerina gowns with gigantic full tulle skirts that billowed out around them as they made their way down the red carpet.

Sarah Jessica Parker, famous for her bold fashion statements, wore a Christian Dior Haute Couture gown fit for a fairy princess. She called it "barely mint," with gold beaded patterns swirling about the bodice. A wide belt helped flaunt her petite waist before opening into a fluffed tulle skirt.

Penelope Cruz hunted down a cream vintage Balmain that she admired eight years ago for this year's Oscars. Gathered into a sweetheart top, the gown was intricate in detail from the lace on the bodice to the extravagant skirt that was delicately cinched as it cascaded down to the floor.

While black always finds its way on to the red carpet, it was pale tones like cream, champagne, bone, soft pink, and mint green that were the color craze of the year. Even the most extravagant of gowns were toned down, glammed up, and softened by these calm hues. One of many starlets to support this trend was Evan Rachel Wood. She was old-Hollywood all over, from her hair's soft wave to the banded bodice and flowing chiffon skirt of the champagne Elie Saab Haute Couture gown that complimented her fair skin.

See OSCARS on page 7

Del Toro stars in epic 'Che'

By Robert W. Butler
McClatchy Newspapers

"Che" is a bit of a slog.

It's also an unforgettable experience.

Steven Soderbergh's study of legendary Latin American revolutionary Ernesto "Che" Guevara won't be everyone's idea of a fun time at the flicks.

For many the film's single-minded vision and avoidance of traditional dramatic techniques will be insurmountable. Some will compare it to watching paint dry. For others this 4-hour, 17-minute saga will feel like some sort of masterpiece.

Soderbergh and star (and producer) Benicio Del Toro have fashioned an experience that threatens to swallow its audience.

"Che" isn't a conventional biography - it leaves out so much, including many of the less savory aspects of Guevara's life. Nor is it really a discussion of political ideas.

It is an examination of "the struggle." In Che's case that meant his battle against what he regarded as brutal capitalism and American imperialism (though there are plenty of other struggles out there).

The struggle is bigger than any individual, and despite Del Toro's charismatic performance, this Che remains an enigma. Why would a man leave his wife and family, a position of prestige and power, to risk his life in a revolution on behalf of people who may not even want him?

Because he's wholly committed to the struggle.

Late in this sprawling epic, Che, on the run from Bolivian soldiers, explains to a weary and discouraged comrade: "To survive here, to win, you have to live as if you've already died."

It's the struggle, stupid.

Benicio Del Toro plays Argentinian revolutionary Che Guevara in Steven Soderbergh's two-part biographical film "Che." The two films total over four hours, documenting Guevara's UN trip to New York City.

The film, in Spanish with subtitles, is divided into "Che: Part One" and "Che: Part Two."

"Part One" begins with Che - a native of Argentina - meeting Cuban exile Fidel Castro in a Mexico City apartment in 1955. Immediately thereafter we're thrown into the guerrilla war waged by Castro's ragtag army against the military might of Cuban dictator Fulgencio Batista.

The film weaves scenes of the guerrillas training and fighting in the mountains and jungles with newsreel-style black-and-white footage of Che's visit to NYC and the United Nations in the early '60s. By that time he was a bigwig in the new revolutionary government and the object of assassination attempts by Cuban exiles.

"Part Two" begins in 1965 when Che mysteriously vanishes from Cuba. In disguise he slips into Bolivia, where he raises and trains yet another guerrilla army.

If "Part One" is about the triumph of the struggle, "Part Two" is steeped in futility. Che's Bolivian successes are few. Federal troops specially trained in counterinsurgency by American advisers prove too great a match. Che's starving, bone-weary guerrillas are run to ground.

Soderbergh and writer Peter Buchman, who based his screenplay on Che's memoir, don't advocate for or against Che's beliefs. There are no big dramatic speeches - except for re-creations of the actual orations delivered by

See CHE on page 7

Jonas Brothers earn TV and film gigs

Brothers' 3D concert experience coming to theaters this weekend

By Rick Bentley
McClatchy Newspapers

LOS ANGELES — The Jonas Brothers can't make a move without adoring fans showering them with admiration. The three singing siblings adore each and every squealing supporter. But they really only care about making one person truly happy: their mother.

They want to make her proud of them.

"That's what we've been saying from the beginning. Live like you're at the bottom even if you're at the top. For us that just means stay humble and do your best every day. We're not saying we're perfect. Nobody's perfect. But we're doing our best," Nick Jonas says during an interview in late January at the Universal Hilton.

Nick and his brothers have shown up to talk about their new television series, "Jonas," scheduled to debut on the Disney Channel in May. The cable series is sort of like "The Monkees" meets "Saved By the Bell." Along with the new TV show, the trio chat about their new concert movie, their move into acting and the price of fame.

Their mother must be very proud. It has been hard to turn on the television lately without seeing the Jonas Brothers. They performed at the Children's Inauguration Concert in January. Then it was a quick trip to the Grammys in early February to croon with Stevie Wonder. Also in early February, the brothers hosted a night on The CW Network.

Even Barbara Walters tapped the brothers to be a guest on her Oscars interview show Feb. 22.

Now, they are headed to the big screen. "Jonas Brothers: The 3D Concert Experience" hits theaters Feb. 27. Special guests include Disney favorite Demi Lovato and Taylor Swift.

The Jonas Brothers appeared last year in the Miley Cyrus 3-D movie "Hannah Montana/Miley Cyrus: Best of Both Worlds Concert Tour." The offer to star in their own concert film influenced their last tour.

"I think we had some real ideas while we were creating our stage and our tour of what we wanted to see. We were able to see the first one in 3-D and saw what certain things looked like," Nick says. "The cool part about it is it's better than front-row seats because you feel like you're on the stage.

"You feel like you're behind the scenes with us. It gets some

See JONAS on page 7

The Jonas Brothers (left to right: Nick, Kevin, and Joe) run from an unexpected mob of fans. Theaters should expect similar crowds as the Brothers' 3D concert movie premiers this weekend.

Penelope Cruz opted for a vintage Balmain Couture gown with Chopard jewels and a Leiber clutch.

Red carpet's most stunning

OSCARS from page 6

However, there were exceptions to the pale tone rule. Amy Adams dueled with the carpet in a fiery red Carolina Herrera gown. Black piping formed a corset-like bodice, which wrapped around to a low point in the back. Red chiffon poured from the center of the bust and opened into a soft skirt. Most celebs avoid red for the fear of blending into the carpet, but Amy Adams proved that sometimes it's worth taking the risk.

Some of Sunday's most stunning looks were emblazoned with embellishments. Nicole Kidman's L'Wren Scott dress looked radiant, covered from top to bottom in an antique style lace. Jenniter Aniston's Valentino Couture, which was trimmed with crystals, also stole the Oscar spotlight.

Young star Miley Cyrus looked mature beyond her years in a petal-like Zuhair Murad gown. Encrusted with pounds of beading and crystals, the gown made Cyrus sparkle from underneath the shining Kodak Theatre lights.

In the end, it was Anne Hathaway who stole the show in a strapless Armani Prive constructed entirely of silvery-white, iridescent paillettes that caught the light with every step she took.

The women attendees of the 81st annual Academy Awards created many of the most exciting fashion moments of the year. Although risks were taken, the classic style of old Hollywood was preserved.

Rebecca Babin can be reached at rbabin@student.umass.edu

Marissa Tomei came decked out in a white Atlier Versace, complete with jewels by Van Cleef & Arples.

Soderbergh's 'Che' captures guerilla vibe

CHE from page 6

Che and Fidel (Demian Bichir). The characters don't explain themselves. There are no back stories.

As with the docudramas of Paul Greengrass ("Bloody Sunday," "United 93"), we're flies on the wall, observing "reality" and interpreting it as we will.

What's astounding is that despite its many breaks with conventional film storytelling, "Che" is hugely watchable, practically mesmerizing.

The images captured by Soderbergh (he handled the cinematography under the pseudonym Peter Andrews) are so rich you can practically feel the jungle steam and the deadly vibration of passing bullets. Yet this immensely tactile experience is achieved with no self-conscious camerawork. In fact, Soderbergh seems to have deemed even close-ups as too gimmicky.

Some of the battle scenes are scarily realistic. A train derailment is nearly as impressive as the one in "Lawrence of Arabia" (another epic about an inscrutable public figure).

Although the cast has a few familiar faces - Catalina Sandino Moreno ("Maria Full of Grace"), Lou Diamond Phillips, Franka Potente ("The Bourne Identity"), Julia Ormond - the film is populated mostly with unknown Hispanic actors who so fully blend in that it seems less like acting than "being."

There are risks in Soderbergh's non-critical approach to a controversial individual. But somehow "Che" avoids mere hagiography. It's not so much about one man as about the big idea - justice for the oppressed - that made that man risk everything.

Jonas Brothers prep Disney program, 3D concert movie

JONAS from page 6

really personal things in there, too. There's this one scene in particular where it captures all the things that we went through in Times Square in New York City on our album release night, which was one of the craziest scenes."

The feature film is just the latest step for the Joe, Nick and Kevin, who are the hottest musical brothers since the heyday of Hanson in the 1990s. As far as Joe is concerned, the attention they are getting starts with the music.

"I think, for us, we write about things that are real to us and the things we go through every day. We're the same age as a lot of the people that listen to our music. They're going through the same things," Joe says. "We get a lot of feedback from fans saying just thank you for encouragement. Or they understand what we're going through. They're going through the same kind of things."

It is a little bit of a stretch to think that their fans are going through such things as not being able to show up at a hotel for an interview without getting mobbed. Nor are any of their followers the favorite performing artists of "first children" Sasha and Malia Obama. Not to mention their cross-country tour and appearances on more magazine covers than Paris Hilton.

What they're referring to are the emotional highs and lows those fans in their teens and early 20s experience. That's the source of most of their music.

The brothers are most comfortable when performing on a concert stage. Acting is another thing completely. The Jonas Brothers have appeared on television shows from "Saturday Night Live" to "Christmas at Rockefeller Center." None of those shows required them to be anything but themselves.

Nick is just happy he and his brothers are getting the opportunity to act. It is something they have wanted to do all along.

The movie and the new television series add more layers to the brothers' fame. And fame is often a topic between the Jonas Brothers and their fans.

"I love to hear when somebody says, 'I want to be a musician,' 'I want to be an artist,' 'I want to be an actor,' as opposed to 'I want to be a famous person,'" says Nick. "As a musician, I'm very whole-hearted about it. I've always strived to be the best I can be. That's the attitude you should have."

Joe jumps in to add. "We always tell them, 'Live to your dreams, because it may not work out right away like you hope.'"

The Jonas Brothers perform in a scene from their new movie, "Jonas Brothers: The 3D Concert Experience."

STUDENT TRUSTEE AREA GOVERNMENT
NOMINATIONS CLOSING SOON
Nominations for President, Trustee, and Area Government Offices will be closing soon.
All Nomination Packets must be taken out by 5:00 PM on Friday February 27th and returned by March 1st at 6:00PM. Nomination Packets are available at the SGA Office in Room 420 on the second floor of the Student Union.
Sean McNair - Chancellor of Elections
(413) 545 - 0341 - electionscommission@stuaf.umass.edu
Office Hours: 5:00 PM - 7:00 PM Wednesdays in SGA Office
Commission Meetings: 7:45 PM Tuesdays in SGA Office
ELECTIONS COMMISSION UMASS
THE STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION AMHERST

Looking to rebound

Minutemen to take on Yale Saturday at Garber Field

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

An early season matchup in 2008 with Yale created a bit of a tailspin for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team last year.

After a heartbreaking 11-10 loss in the final seconds against No. 13 Hofstra this past weekend, the 2009 Minutemen look to bounce back against Yale on Saturday and avoid a fate similar to last year.

Working in UMass' favor this time around against the Bulldogs: Saturday's meeting is home at Garber Field and the Minutemen (1-1) are simply more talented than they were last year in a 5-9 season.

But the Bulldogs, who beat Holy Cross, 13-8, in their season opener last weekend, will look to duplicate last year's 7-4 win by pouncing on a perhaps vulnerable Minuteman team still reeling from the loss to Hofstra.

UMass coach Greg Cannella is confident there will be no ill-effects from that defeat come Saturday.

"Initially, the guys were really bummed, so it's hard to get through to them there. If we played [Yale] on Tuesday it might be a different story, but we're playing Saturday, so you have some time to let it digest and get past it," Cannella said. "I think our team will be fine."

The Minutemen, who led 7-3 at halftime and never trailed throughout until Sacred Heart scored the winning goal with four seconds left, played well against the Pride, but couldn't hold on for the victory.

"I thought they played their hearts out and they can be proud of that we just kind of ran out of time in the end," Cannella said. "Hofstra is a very good team, we played them on the road, we had a chance to win the game and we didn't and now we have to move on.

"[The coaches] talked about how it's good that our guys are bummed, pissed. To me, to the coaches, that means they care about what they're doing here. That's ok, but you can't let it affect your preparation for the future."

The immediate future brings the Bulldogs, a team that historically has struggled against the Minutemen, but has taken each of the last two meetings against UMass -- including a 2007 victory at Garber Field.

The difference for Yale over the past few years seems to be coach Andy Shay, who served as an assistant under Cannella at UMass from 2000-03.

"Andy Shay worked here with me for four years so he has a familiarity with what we do as a program," Cannella said.

Leading the way for Yale offensively are attacking brothers Brendan and Matt Gibson. Brendan, a junior, has scored 54 goals over the past two seasons. His freshman brother scored one goal in the win over the Crusaders in the opener.

"They are both really talented kids. They have stick sticks, are fast, tough," Cannella said. "They go 100 percent and bring a lot of energy to that team. They are unselfish and a handful."

The Minutemen don't have a pair of brothers, but they have a dynamic duo at attack, too, with Jim Connolly and Tim Balise starring on offense. Connolly has started a bit slow this season, scoring one goal in each game. Balise led UMass in the season-opening victory, scoring three goals and assisting on two others. However, he went scoreless against Hofstra.

The Minutemen have a balanced offense, but will likely need their two offensive leaders to produce to avoid a 1-2 start heading into next weekend's game against No. 15 Harvard in Cambridge, Mass.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Steve D'Amario is an incoming freshman this year for the Minutemen. The Minutemen are 1–1 heading into this weekend's game against Yale.

Failing to pull through

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

claim back-to-back games. The last time they won in that situation was against IUPUI on Dec. 27 to extend their winning streak to four.

Duquesne continued that streak while ending one of its own, having lost 11 consecutive times at UMass. And the Dukes did it despite the Minutemen hitting 16-for-35 from 3-point range.

UMass can blame that on 20 turnovers, and Duquesne's dominance in the paint, where it outscored the Minutemen 13-0 on second-chance points and 48-20 on 2-point field goals.

"They really get out and run. It was hard at times picking up guys and matching up," said Anthony Gurley, who led the Minutemen with 18 points off the bench. "We really need to communicate more and I think that's what led to some of their easy baskets in transition."

The Minutemen got burned on backdoor cuts and the pick-and-roll, something Kellogg worked on his team with during practice this week.

"Our guys didn't execute," Kellogg said. "[Duquesne] went with the most basic of basketball -- they went high, middle pick-and-roll and they scored continuously on that. I hope no other team is watching that DVD."

Five different Dukes scored in double figures, led by Bill Clark (22 points, eight rebounds, eight assists), Saunders (18) and Aaron Jackson, who had 17 points and nine assists. Ricky Harris had 14, while Matt Glass and Lowe each added 12. Lowe also had 11 assists, but turned it over six times.

After Sunday's thrilling last-second victory over Saint Joseph's at the Palestra in Philadelphia, UMass thought the win could be a turning point in what has been a difficult season. But the Minutemen suffered another setback against Duquesne, falling to 10th in the conference.

UMass travels back to Philadelphia on Sunday for a road tilt against La Salle (14-12, 5-7 A-10), a team they lost to, 62-54, on Jan. 24 at the Mullins Center.

Game notes

The previous school-record for 3-pointers was 15, which the Minutemen have done twice. The last time was on Nov. 17 against Wisconsin-Green Bay. ... Tony Gaffney (eight points, 10 rebounds) had three steals and two blocks for the Minutemen. He became the first player to have at least 100 blocks (107) and 50 steals (51) in a season since Duke's Shelden Williams in 2005-06. He's only the sixth to do it since the 1996-97 season. ... The 17-point win for Duquesne was its largest ever against UMass in Amherst. ... The Dukes are off to their best start since 1981. ... Their 28 assists are a season-high and mark the sixth-highest total in school history. ... Duquesne had 11 steals.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Chasing the "W"

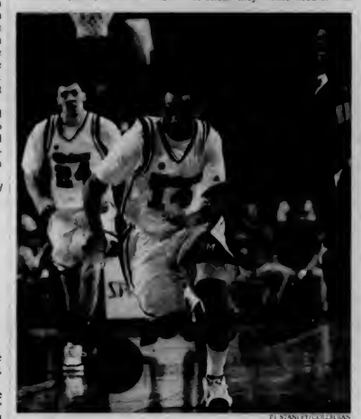
STRUGGLES from page 10

While UMass' only chance of making the NCAA tournament is a run through the A-10 Tournament, the Issue of winning consecutive games is something they must overcome quickly. Even in a night when the team hit a school record 16 3-point shots, UMass couldn't overcome the one bump they must to have any chance in the A-10 Tournament.

And with just three games remaining, the Minutemen cannot put together a streak in conference play that would equate to the kind of streak they would need to win the conference tournament.

"I wanted to be able to put two, three, four games in a row so our guys felt we could go to Atlantic City and win the tournament and have something to look back on and say 'You know we have won four games in a row'," Kellogg said.

While UMass won't be able to say they have won four conference games in a row, Kellogg does have another idea to pitch to his team, even if it may be a stretch.



"The good thing is we haven't played four days in a row so I can use that to say 'Listen, we haven't played four games back to back to back to back', and I'm hoping we can use that to our benefit," Kellogg said.

The one thing Kellogg can use to help his team come the A-10 tournament is the ability of the Minutemen to play up to their opponents. As well as UMass' victories over St. Joe's, Temple and Dayton the Minutemen almost knocked off the class of the A-10 Xavier, when they fell at then-No. 10 Xavier, 80-82.

While it is easy to point fingers for all the struggles UMass has had – whether it is the road struggles, finishing games or winning consecutive games – the players know that won't help.

"It is late in the season and we can't make excuses and we can't blame coaches, so we just have to blame ourselves," Lowe said after the game. "We just got to blame all nine of us who played in the game."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

PJ STAN/COLLEGIAN

Chris Lowe scored 12 points and tallied 11 assist in UMass' loss Wednesday night. Lowe recently became UMass' all–time assist leader.

All–around best performance needed

HOCKEY from page 10

Gilroy, Shattenkirk and Cohen.

Boston University leads Hockey East in scoring and defending.

The Terriers average 3.72 goals per game, while only allowing 1.94 against. They have one of the top power-play units in the nation, going 43-for-187 or 23 percent. Their penalty kill is above average, killing off 88.6 percent of their penalties even though they lead Hockey East in penalty minutes.

"They've got physicality, they've got speed and they've solved their goaltending dilemma by getting one of the top rookie performers in the country, Kieran Millan, to play at a very high level," Cahoon said.

Millan has played in 23 of BU's 32 games allowing 38 goals. He has a .930 save percentage and averages 1.02 goals per game.

Not only does BU have the makings of the No. 1 team in college hockey, the Terriers have proved they are by sitting atop the rankings for the last four straight weeks and 15 of the last 20 weeks. They were also ranked No. 1 in the early months of the season.

The last time the Minutemen played BU was Nov. 14 at the Mullins Center. UMass defeated then-No. 1 Boston University, 5-1.

"What we'll look at is the matchup piece – how did we have success that night? Why did we have success that night?" Cahoon said. "My suspicion is that we played pretty well and I think that will show itself and I think that my suspicion is they were not anticipating that we can skate the way we skate. So they'll play a better game, so we need to step up and push back."

This weekend will be nothing short of a difficult matchup for the Minutemen, but as of late they have shown their ability to perform against high-caliber teams (4-1 win over then-No. 2 Northeastern on Feb. 14).

"We just have to get ourselves prepared to compete and bring our best game to the rink. If we bring our best game we have a legitimate good shot at having success," Cahoon said. "But anything less than a very good game is not going to get it done against this team."

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com.

UM needs physicality

W. BASKETBALL from page 10

end of this season, Gerardot and Young are paving the way for a young team that shows tremendous promise in defense.

Freshman center Nicole Jones played 27 minutes in the game and had six points, two blocks, a steal and four rebounds.

New leaders are already immerging on the team, Wright being the best example.

Wright's work ethic is being mimicked by players up and down the roster.

Danella's footwork is improving, Jones is becoming a better scorer in the post and Avebe is always one of the first players up the court in transition.

Diatiema Hill is another player to watch for in future games. She's averaging 5.1 points per game and she's very quietly becoming a better player.

Against the Hawks, she scored eight points, with four rebounds and three assists.

Hill is a defensive staple for the Minutewomen and once her scoring improves, she will be tremendous for UMass.

Yet with such players like Hill and Benton getting more rebounds than post players, something's not right.

"We've got to get a body on someone and go up and rebound," Dacko said. "Just not being able to defend hurt us."

With the conference tournament looming, the Minutewomen are both a young team and a team with a lower win total. UMass hasn't advanced to the second round of the A-10 tournament in the last five years and in this being termed by many as a rebuilding year.

UMass has been lucky enough to play its last few games against some of the lesser teams in the conference, which can only provide valuable experience to its younger players.

The Minutewomen will have their final chance to prepare for the conference tournament as they faces La Salle (10-18, 1-12 A-10) on Saturday at the Mullins Center.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Villanova survives challenge from DePaul

By Joe Juliano
McClatchy Newspapers

ROSEMONT, Ill. — Villanova caught itself looking ahead to the finish line on Wednesday night and not really focusing on the opponent at hand, even if it was Big East Conference doormat DePaul.

Although they are winless in the conference, the Blue Demons had their way for one half before the 10th-ranked Wildcats steadied themselves, then had to fight for dear life in the closing minutes to escape with a 74-72 victory at Allstate Arena.

The Wildcats (23-5 overall, 11-4 Big East) won for the eighth time in their last nine games and are now one game out of third place in the conference. The top four finishers receive byes through the first two rounds of the Big East tournament.

But it was a hairy finish. After the Wildcats took their largest lead, 60-48, with 6 minutes, 20 seconds remaining, the Blue Demons (8-20, 0-15) went on a 12-2 run behind four three-point field goals and trimmed the deficit to 62-60 with 2:47 left.

But Scottie Reynolds came up with the answers for Villanova. He hit a lefthanded drive, a fall-away jumper in the lane and two free throws to put Nova up by 68-64 with 50.6 seconds remaining and the Wildcats finished it off.

Reynolds and Dante Cunningham led the Wildcats with 18 points apiece. DePaul's Will Walker led all scorers with 23.

The Blue Demons led by 44-41 just over seven minutes into the second half before Villanova went on an 11-0 run to take control, led by spark plug Corey Fisher.

After a jumper by Cunningham started the spurt, Fisher hit one free throw to tie the game, set up Corey Stokes for a three-ball, then drove the lane for a layup to put the Cats up, 49-44, with 11:21 remaining.

The Wildcats came out as if they just expected the Blue Demons to go through the motions. And even after it looked as if they had snapped out of their funk in taking a 17-12 lead with just under eight minutes left in the half, things didn't turn out that way at all.

The Blue Demons outscored the visitors by 14-5 in the final four minutes and took a surprising 33-25 lead, only the second time they had held a halftime advantage in a Big East game all season.

What was more revealing about DePaul's lead was the fact that the Blue Demons went a stretch of 7:41 without a field goal, scoring only one point during that time.

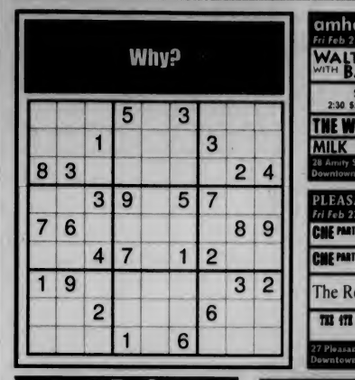
Only Fisher, who has made a habit of providing a spark off the bench, played with any fire and effectiveness, knocking down 4 of 6 shots to lead the Cats with nine points in the first half.

Reynolds went 1 of 6 in the half, scoring only on a breakaway layup. Cunningham made half of his four shots but played only 11 minutes before going to the bench with his second personal foul at the 7:03 mark.

After what was presumably a strongly worded halftime address from coach Jay Wright, the Wildcats looked like a different team early in the second half. DePaul had the first possession and scored to go up by 10, but Villanova scored on its first four possessions.

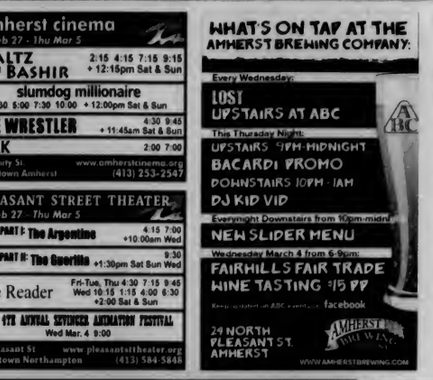
Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St. • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
Providing the best off campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane
We start showing apartments
Feb. 4th from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

Write for sports!
Email sports@dailycollegian.com today!



Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.



If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S
Auto & Truck Rental
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

amherst cinema
Fri Feb 27 - Thu Mar 5
WALTZ WITH BASHIR 2:15 4:15 7:15 9:15 + 12:15pm Sat & Sun
slumdog millionaire 2:30 5:00 7:30 10:00 + 12:00pm Sat & Sun
MILK 2:00 7:00
THE WRESTLER 4:30 9:45 + 11:45am Sat & Sun
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Feb 27 - Thu Mar 5
CHE PART I: The Argentine 4:15 7:00 +10:00am Wed
CHE PART II: The Guerilla 9:30 +1:30pm Sat Sun Wed
The Reader Fri-Tue, Thu 4:30 7:15 9:45 Wed 10:15 1:15 4:00 6:30 +2:00 Sat & Sun
THE 4TH ANNUAL SATURDAY ANIMATION FESTIVAL Wed Mar. 4 9:00
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

Quote of the Day

"I never put on a pair of shoes until I've worn them at least five years."

— Samuel Goldwyn

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You should reconsider moving to Texas just for their legendary toast.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Consuming the corpse is the best way to hide the body, but it takes commitment and a lot of A1 Steak Sauce.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Erinnern Sie sich die an Titanen!
Ja!

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Just be happy that American bankruptcy courts don't involve whips and beheadings, like in other parts of the world.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You are going through religions faster than Charles Barkley was driving when he got a D.U.I.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
The three or four years you spent in the workforce will not help you get into grad school, since prostitution is frowned upon.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You're a free spirit, especially when you are given free spirits.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Sadly, thanks to relativity, the more obese you get, the smaller your thingy looks.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You are going to be quite shocked when you realize today that "Mulatto" is not a new Starbucks expresso drink.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Be careful what you read.
It could give you oral herpes.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
UMass' new Overdraft Fee is completely Holub's fault for using the school's endowment debit card at Applebee's.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Be a hero: Buy local condoms, such as the Belchertown-grown "Wrap-Your-Tree" brand organic, ribbed tree bark condoms.

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Kid Shay

Labrat By Richard Martell

tasty crackers!
free pizza & hot cocoa!*
www.dailycollegian.com/comics
*none of this is true

Classifieds

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Survey Takers Needed Make $5 - $25 per survey. Do it in your spare time. www.GetPaidToThink.com

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lake-front cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, lifeguarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders, & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.camp-mataponi.com

EMPLOYMENT

ANNOUNCEMENT

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-2337

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblow-out.com or Montrealex-press.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincoln-realty.com

FOR RENT

Amherst 2, 3, & 4 Bedroom Apartments. Call for huge rent specials on both Immediate and Summer/Fall rentals! Beautiful property on the bus line to Umass. Air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Free Heat! 2 BR $1200-$1250, 3 BR $1500-$1550, 4 BR $2250. www.MillValleyApts.com 413-253-7377 or stop by at 420 Riverglade Drive.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Trying to hold on

UMass hits school-record, 16 3-pointers in 17-point loss

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's basketball team and Duquesne appeared more interested in having a 3-point contest rather than an actual game for much of Wednesday night's matchup.

But while the Minutemen insisted on launching shots from all directions, the Dukes competed in their own dunk contest – slamming home the Minutemen in a 94-77 win on UMass' home floor.

| | |
|---|---|
| Duquesne | 94 |
| UMass | 77 |

The Minutemen hit a school-record 16, 3-pointers, but the Dukes countered with 12 of their own and absolutely pounded UMass' downlow with seven dunks and 14 layups en route a 42-20 edge in points in the paint to earn the victory.

"It looked like one team was just superior athletically – they were flying and we were not running as fast," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said after the game. "And if we weren't going to be able to take advantage of the inside game with our size, then we may as well play four, five guards ourselves."

The Minutemen (10-16, 5-8 Atlantic 10) got off to a fast start hitting nearly every 3-pointer, but the Dukes tied the game at 31 before going on a 13-1 run to build momentum and take a lead they would never lose.

"We gave them this game. We didn't even fight, they just came and swept us off the court," UMass point guard Chris Lowe said.

The Dukes (17-9, 8-5 A-10) led by as many 21 points with 13 minutes, 22 seconds left in the second half, but the Minutemen made things interesting going on a 26-15 spurt to cut the lead to 10 points with 4:44 left. But a Jason Duty 3-pointer and a Damian Saunders dunk later forced the Minutemen to leave the Mullins Center with their seventh home loss of the season.

"It's very frustrating. One thing I want to be able to do is play well at home, hold home court advantage, be tough and have teams not want to come in here," Kellogg said. "I would say right now teams come in here and think it's going to be a shootout, we're going to be able to score points and have a free pass to play a wide open game."

In addition to having problems at home, UMass can't string together consecutive wins. Wednesday night's loss marks the fifth straight failed opportunity for the Minutemen to

See M. BASKETBALL on page 8

P.J. STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Ricky Harris had four of UMass' school-record, 16 3-pointers Wednesday night in a 94-77 loss to Duquesne at the Mullins Center.

Minutemen have trouble maintaining winning form

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

To win the Atlantic 10 Tournament, a team needs to string together four consecutive wins.

Putting together a winning streak of just two is something that has avoided the Massachusetts men's basketball team almost all year.

After overcoming two hurdles UMass has faced all year – finishing games late and winning on the road – in its win over Saint Joseph's last Sunday, the team seemed poised to win its first consecutive A-10 conference games all year. But after a 94-77 loss to Duquesne (17-9, 8-5 A-10) Wednesday at the Mullins Center, the Minutemen (10-16, 5-8 A-10) found themselves stumbling over a different hurdle.

For senior point guard Chris Lowe, it is beyond him why the Minutemen keep coming up short after a win.

"Man I can't even explain it to tell you the truth," Lowe said after the Wednesday's loss. "We can't find a way to string a few games together. I don't know what it is."

The only streak UMass has been able to put together this season was a four game winning streak from Dec. 10 to Dec. 27 (wins against Holy Cross, then-No. 23 Kansas, Hofstra, and IU/PU). Since then, the Minutemen have failed to win back-to-back games in five tries and all in conference play.

Even more frustrating for the Minutemen is four out of their five wins came against teams with .500 record or better, including wins over Temple and Dayton, the second- and fourth-place teams in the conference.

"That is a tough lesson there to learn, when you win a nice game or a big game to come back and put that game behind you," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said. "I don't think we've done that. It seems like at times we rest on the last game instead of preparing for the next game as a team."

The closest UMass has come to winning back-to-back games came after its victory over Temple. Following the victory, the Minutemen fell on the road in overtime to Charlotte, 69-64, after having a six-point lead with 2 minutes, 6 seconds to go in regulation.

See STRUGGLES on page 8

Young's effort not enough

Sakera Young scores 23 points but Minutewomen still fall

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Wednesday night's 77-63 loss to St. Joseph's won't affect the Massachusetts women's basketball team's postseason, since they already made the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

The Minutewomen (11-17, 4-9 A-10), played without starting center Teya Wright, who was held out of the game for precautionary measures. Wright suffered a head injury in UMass' last game against Rhode Island.

| | |
|---|---|
| St. Joe's | 77 |
| UMass | 63 |

Sophomore Val Avebe replaced Wright in the lineup and matched up against Brittany Ford, the leading scorer for the Hawks (13-15, 5-8 A-10). Ford led all St. Joe's players with 16 points, seven rebounds and four blocks.

Ford's having a breakout year for the Hawks, averaging 12 points per game after averaging eight last season.

Both the Minutewomen and St. Joe's spent a lot of time in the post. UMass scored 34 points in the paint while the Hawks had 32.

"I didn't know how we were going to be in the paint without the services of Teya Wright," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "I'm frustrated with our defense. I'd like us to be able to defend [consistently] and have the offense kick in off of our defense."

The Minutewomen are fortunate to have players that slash or muscle their way to the basket.

Forward Kristina Danella was a pure post player in high school and she's developed into a pure shooter as well.

She drew fouls multiple times scoring four of her 13 points from the foul-line and scoring nine from 3-point range.

Senior Sakera Young had a career night at The Palestra, netting a career-high 23 points and a team-leading six rebounds.

Junior guard Kim Benton had six boards as well.

Sophomore Cerie Mosgrove played for only eight minutes, limiting the UMass 3-point threat.

Danella scored the only shots on the team from beyond the arc. Danella's defense is improving every game, as evident by her three steals.

Captain Stefanie Gerardot was cold on the night, going 3-for-10 from the field. Like Young and Danella however, Gerardot did get to the foul line. Gerardot hit three of her four shots at the line.

As graduating seniors at the

See W. BASKETBALL on page 8

T.J. SOKOLOWSKI/COLLEGIAN

Sakera Young, No. 3, had 23 points and tallied six rebounds in her team's 77-63 loss to St. Joe's Wednesday night at the Palestra.

Pressure mounts once again

No. 1 Boston University will prove to be rough test for UM

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's hard to go into a game and not consider it important, but for the Massachusetts hockey team this weekend is the biggest of their season thus far.

Friday night will be the first of the last four games the Minutemen will play before the Hockey East playoffs.

UMass will play a home-and-home series against No. 1 Boston University starting Friday at 7:30 p.m. at the Mullins Center and again Saturday night at Agganis Arena at 8 p.m.

The Minutemen (14-15-3, 9-11-3 Hockey East) are coming off a three-game winning streak, but that doesn't compare to the 12-game streak Boston University (23-5-4, 14-5-4 Hockey East) is currently on – the longest in college hockey.

"Under normal conditions it certainly gives us some confidence," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "But they have a 12-game win streak, so it puts it all into perspective."

Boston University brings to the ice six solid defensemen in Matt Gilroy, Colby Cohen, Brian Strait, David Warsofsky, Kevin Shattenkirk and Eric Gryba.

"They've got the best core of defensemen in the country. Five out of the six guys they put on the ice are NHL draft picks – a couple of them first round draft picks," Cahoon said. "The sixth guy is the number one free agent in college hockey."

RYAN FUNSCH/COLLEGIAN

Justin Braun currently leads all UMass defensemen with seven goals and four assists and ranks fifth on the team in total points (12).

Not only do the Terriers present the top defense in college hockey, they have the top scorer in Hockey East with Colin Wilson, 14 goals and 27 assists.

But, the other members of their attack also produce a fair number of points. Nine players on the team have 21 plus points, including three defenders –

See HOCKEY on page 8

Tough second half dooms UM

UMass outscored 10–2 after halftime in blowout loss

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This has been the longest four days of the year for the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team.

The Minutewomen lost a 15-5 road contest to No. 10 Boston University on Wednesday afternoon, just four days after dropping a 16-4 decision to No. 6 Maryland.

Before the start of the season, UMass coach Alexis Venechanos talked about her plan to put together an extremely difficult schedule early for the Minutewomen (0-3) to prepare them for their Atlantic 10 opponents later on. She certainly followed through, having faced two top 10 teams already, with three more ranked teams (No. 13 Dartmouth, No. 14 New Hampshire, and No. 1 Northwestern) yet to come.

| | |
|---|---|
| BU | 15 |
| UMass | 5 |

"One thing about playing the best teams early in the season is that we learn where we are as a team," Venechanos said. "We can continue to learn from these experiences."

Despite being outshot 17-6 in the first half, the Minutewomen stayed fairly competitive going into the half with a 5-3 deficit, thanks to some excellent goalkeeping by freshman standout Katie "Flo" Florence who made eight saves, along with two goals by Jackie Lyons, and one by Meghan Reddy.

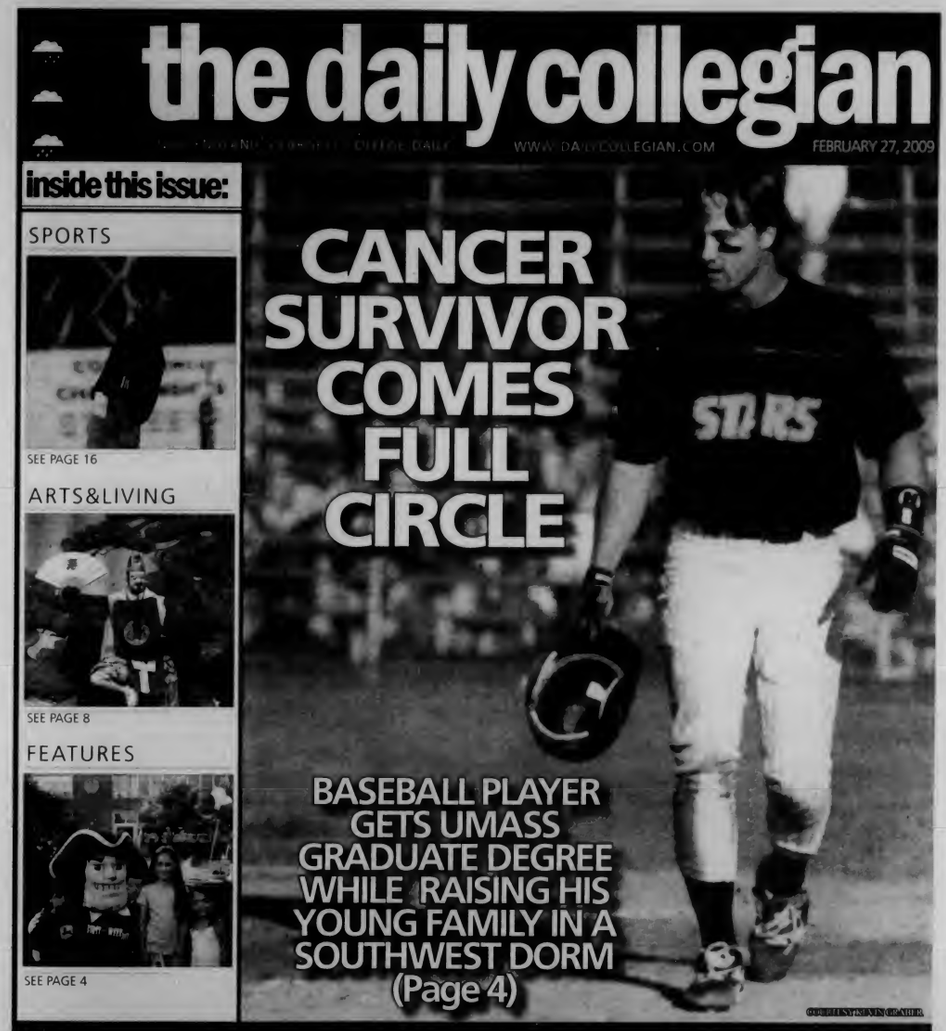
"I feel like we did a good job in the first half, towards the start of the second half was when they really started to control the game," Venechanos said. "We told our defense to let Flo see the ball and she'll make the saves, in the second half, most goals came on cuts or crosses which made it hard for her to see the ball".

The second half was much tougher for the Minutewomen, The Terriers (1-0) scored two quick goals right after halftime and continued to pull away outscoring UMass 10-2 after intermission. The Minutewomen actually closed the gap in shot total during the second half; the final shot total was 32-18 BU. UMass, though, were far less accurate. Holly Drown and Stephanie Hopkins scored the goals for UMass.

One bright spot for UMass has been the play of Jackie Lyons, who now has three goals and one assist on the season and has become an integral part of the Minutewomen offense. Coming off a freshman year that saw her named to the A-10 All-Rookie team, Lyons was expected to make a leap forward and help replace much of the offense that was lost when top goalscorer Kathleen Typadis graduated, so far she has done well.

BRIAN FEDERA/COLLEGIAN

Merritt Cosgrove has tallied two goals in two games so far this season for the Minutewomen. UMass is back in action Saturday at Harvard.



"Jackie has been a warrior, she never stops moving or attacking, we need to continue to get her the ball as often as possible," Venechanos said.

The defense has had some rough stretches this season and is hindered by a lack of experience. Senior Jackie Rosenzweig is the only upperclassman left on the back line, which features several freshmen, such as Riley Perry. It is hard to tell whether the defense is playing poorly or if they are playing well against superior competition, but obviously Venechanos would like to see the scoring reduced.

"The biggest problem with our defense is we are playing too much defense right now," Venechanos said. "Our best defense is keeping possession and playing offense."

The final stop on UMass' four-game road trip is this Saturday at Harvard, opening draw starts at 1 p.m.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 24

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Waszczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor James Mathews
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenswaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor P.J. Stanley
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolneirz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Koczwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Asst. Editorial Leigh Greaney
Asst. Editorial Nick O'Malley
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey r. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo Matthew Harrison
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. SULLIVAN
COPY EDITOR
MICHELLE FREDETTE
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHAEL SARKES

Suicide note on Facebook

By Rocco Parascandola
McClatchy Newspapers

NEW YORK — An aspiring model who committed suicide by hanging himself in a park behind the Brooklyn Museum Friday morning left a suicide note – on his Facebook profile.

Paul Zolezzi, 30, had struggled with terms of a broken engagement and with an addiction to heroin, according to his mother, Stephanie, 60.

On Friday at 7 a.m., police said, two police officers were alerted by a passerby to a body hanging from monkey bars of Mount Prospect Park playground, by the Brooklyn Museum.

On his cell phone, police found a note to call his mother. They called her, told her about his death and also about the message he had left behind on his Facebook profile.

"Paul Zolezzi is born in San Francisco, became a shooting star over everywhere, and ended his life in Brooklyn ... And couldn't have asked for more," the note reads.

Earlier posts on his profile described his pain.

"Paul is wondering," one post in January said, "what unspeakable act did I do in a previous life to deserve this one?"

His stunned mother last spoke to him when he visited her in September. She wasn't even aware he had moved to Brooklyn, she said, thinking he was still in Portland.

"He was engaged for several years but broke up two or three years ago, and I suspect that's when he lost his way in life," she said from her home near San Francisco. "Some people can have a few drinks and get over it. But somebody like my son was in a lot of despair."

She also said her son likely never got over the suicide of his father, Mark, a writer who jumped from the Golden Gate Bridge when Zolezzi was 8 years old.

"I think he grew up with a hole inside his heart, a void because it was difficult to grow up without a father," she said.

Zolezzi had some success modeling in San Francisco, she said, and in New York, where he had once before lived.

It was during his previous stint there that she tried in vain to get him to enroll in the Teen Challenge Training Center, a faith-based rehab started by the Rev. David Wilkerson's ministry to New York City gang members in the 1950s.

At the time of his death he was living in the Clinton Hill section of Brooklyn, police said.

Zolezzi's mother learned of his heroin problem when he was arrested for possession in San Francisco last year and spent a day or two in jail.

It was then, she said, that he headed to Portland, where she thought he had been still living until police called Friday.

COURTESY FACEBOOK

Aspiring model Paul Zolezzi left a suicide note on his Facebook profile prior to hanging himself.

She plans now, she said, to travel to Brooklyn to see where he spent the last days of his life.

"I want to bring him home to bury him here," she said.

Stem-cell research advances

By Bruce Japsen
McClatchy Newspapers

CHICAGO — Meet Zoey Walsh, a teenage stem-cell recipient who is pushing the frontier of medical science.

He's a dog.

Unable to alleviate his pain with drugs and unwilling to risk another hip surgery on a dog so old, Zoey's owners turned to a treatment that involved injecting stem cells, which had been extracted from Zoey's fat, back into the animal. The stem cells stimulate repairs.

The therapy is gaining momentum as a treatment option for pets. But it also holds promise for humans, researchers and companies involved say.

"It did wonders," Zoey's owner, Raymond Walsh of Palos Heights, Ill., said of his 14-year-old American Eskimo's first injection six months ago. "He is having another round. But had we not given the first shot back in August, we might have had to put him under."

MCT

Researchers have found that stem cells extracted from can pets help treat their ailments and the results show promise for humans.

Although still early in its use with more than 1,500 dogs and cats since marketing began last year, the technology developed by California-based Vet-Stem Inc. is being embraced by pet owners.

Take Daisy Benik, a 7-year-old golden retriever who had stem cells injected into both hind legs last summer after being unable to walk on her left hind leg.

"She is back to what she was. Before she had been holding her foot up, favoring it," said Daisy's owner, Mary Benik of Crest Hill, Ill. Such treatments aren't cheap. An injection and anesthesia to sedate a dog before and after stem-cell extraction and injection can cost between $2,500 and $3,500. A follow-up treatment usually costs less than half that because stem cells from the original extraction often are left over.

The cost is worth it to Daisy's and Zoey's owners.

Zoey had been urinating in the house because he couldn't go outside. Zoey soon will get a second injection in both hind legs because he has trouble climbing stairs. "If it prolongs his life, it was worth it," Walsh said.

Here's how Vet-Stem's product works: A small amount of the animal's fat, the equivalent of two or three tablespoons, is surgically removed and shipped overnight to Vet-Stem's labs in Southern California, where the stem cells are isolated. The cells are returned to the veterinarian two days later in the form of concentrated regenerative stem cells.

The stem cells are injected back into the animal, where they home in on the injury and stimulate "resident" cells to become more active in making repairs. Stem cells are derived from building-block cells and are able to develop into many different types of specialized cells, serving as a sort of repair system for the body. Theoretically, they divide without limit to replenish other cells as long as the person or animal is alive.

Just how long a repair lasts is unclear, however, and that can mean additional injections may be necessary.

"So far, we have been pretty lucky with the treatment," said Dr. Andrea Hayes of Animal Surgical Services in Western Springs, who treated Zoey and other pets. "Because it's so new, we don't know how long it is going to last."

Similar technologies using stem cells derived from fat are being studied in experimental stages in humans. The goal is to go beyond alleviating pain to restoring joint cartilage as a way to avoid hip, knee or other joint surgeries.

Wireless Internet throughout library

All 26 floors have access as part of a project by OIT to expand service

By Domenic Poli
Collegian Staff

University of Massachusetts students, faculty and staff searching for Wi-Fi on the upper floors of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library will no longer click on their browsers in vain, as wireless networks have been installed on all 26 levels of the tower.

The new Wi-Fi network installation, accessible to anyone with an Office of Information Technologies (OIT) account, is part of an initiative sponsored by OIT to expand wireless coverage on the UMass campus.

Jay Schafer, the director of libraries, said the upgrade had been under consideration since wireless was installed in the library's Learning Commons when it was built in the lower level in 2006. Since that time, Wi-Fi access had been limited to the Learning Commons, the main floor and the first and second floors.

The other wireless networks were added "so that people can use their laptops in the tower," said Schafer, adding that the lack of Internet access on the higher floors had created a lot of traffic on the building's four lowest levels. "We have lots of seating [on the upper floors] that could take some of the pressure off of the Learning Commons."

He said the project, which cost $168,000, was done floor by floor. Internet connection is available along the study carrels around the perimeter of each floor, but it does not extend to the center, near the book stacks or the elevators.

According to Kerry Shaw, OIT's web communications manager, the decision to install wireless networks throughout the entire library was a collaborative effort between Richard Rogers, the associate provost for academic technology (now on sabbatical in Italy), and John Dubach, chief information officer and special assistant to the chancellor.

Shaw said the number of students occupying the Learning Commons to use Wi-Fi, in addition to making the environment busier, caused the wireless networks to often become saturated or unable to sustain additional users at a particular time.

"[We] installed more access points. It just really made sense that we would equip the entire library with wireless," she said, adding that the project was started in September of 2008 and completed earlier this month.

According to an e-mailed statement from Mike Dickson, a network analyst at OIT, the department in January 2007 doubled the number of access points on the library's first four levels to enable more Internet connection. By the time of midterm exams in the spring 2007 semester, however, the networks became saturated again.

The statement said two of OIT's departments – Network Systems & Services (NSS) and the Telecommunications (Telecom) group – worked on the project. The NSS designed the network layout, performed testing and now handles the day-to-day operation of the wireless networks. Telecom installed the system when its workers were available to do the wiring.

Shaw said four to six OIT personnel worked on the project. She also said the work was done after library hours because of the building's physical and logistical complexities and because the concrete drilling that was required would have disrupted students.

"There [seemed] to be, just based upon what we've seen in the Learning Commons, a huge need for Internet access ... So having [wireless networks] on all floors – people will be able to do research in conjunction with actual, physical materials ... I think will be very helpful," Shaw said.

Some UMass students also think the upgrade will benefit their schoolwork.

"I think it'll be really good, actually, because [the quiet study rooms on the second and third floors] get so crowded during finals time and midterms," said Micheala Kinlock, a sophomore majoring in psychology. "They can get really crowded, so it'll be good to not feel like there are only two rooms that you can go to. You can kind of utilize the entire library."

MATT ROCHELEAU/COLLEGIAN

UMass is currently expanding wireless Internet access availability across campus.

Dan Hargey, a senior pursuing a double major in economics and sport management, said that though he loves the busy, social atmosphere of the Learning Commons, he is glad it is now possible to get wireless service on every floor. He said that it was a burden not having Wi-Fi when he went to the upper floors to do homework.

"You get up there and you get everything all set and all ready to go and you find out you can't get [Internet access]," he said. "Then you have to pack all your stuff up again, go all the way downstairs, try to find a computer – it gets to be kind of frustrating."

Dickson's statement said OIT is planning to expand wireless network coverage to regularly occupied spaces – such as all academic and administrative buildings on campus – but that issues with cost and complexity may cause some spaces to go without. Due to the University's tight budget, OIT will routinely assess the project to determine if it fits in with the University's strategic goals, he said.

To access the campus wireless network, users must select "UMASS" from the list of available networks, open a browser, and log in with their NetID (OIT account user name) and password.

Anyone with questions about wireless access in the library is encouraged to go to the Learning Commons and Technical Support Desk in the building's lower level or call the OIT Help Desk (545-9400) weekdays from 8:30 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

DOMENIC POLI/COLLEGIAN

Wireless Internet is now available on all 26 floors of the W.E.B. Du Bois library.

Domino's Pizza
Domino's
The Pizza Delivery Experts®
This week only:
Buy any large pizza
get free cheesy bread
or
10 Buffalo wings
not good with any other offer
413-256-8911

From diamond to degree

After battling cancer, baseball player earns masters alongside his family

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

Kevin Graber sits in class, pencils, pens and notebook neatly placed upon his desk, and he's nervous, yet excited, for one of his first English classes, Modern American Drama, at the University of Massachusetts.

Everyone around him looks fresh-faced and youthful, and their talking about the weekend they hardly remember because they spent most of it intoxicated, floating from party to party on campus.

The professor pairs him up with a sophomore bubble-gum chewing girl and asks the class to perform a mini-interview of their partners so that each pair can introduce the other student.

While most of the students are a bit nervous because they are positive the class will think they are just another generic college student who watches Comedy Central to get the news, spends most of the time hanging out with friends and works a minimum wage job in Amherst, Graber has an entirely different story.

Graber and his partner politely exchange the key points about their lives to each other, and the introduction begins.

"'Um, this is like Kevin. He's like 40 or something. He like has all these kids, and they like live in Washington Tower,'" Graber recalls his partner saying.

Thirty-seven year old Graber, who will graduate from UMass this spring with a master's degree in education with a concentration in English, has lived a lifetime of stories that are far from the generic life of most college students.

Why UMass?

Before Graber decided to apply to UMass as a full-time graduate student, he had to convince his wife first.

At the time, Graber was living in a modest Amherst apartment with his wife Tina and their three young children.

It had been almost two decades since he had been a student in a classroom, and he had secured a job at Amherst College as the sports information director. But, while he focused a great deal on sports, he also found the time to branch off into other Amherst College activities by helping plan commencement, attending senior staff meetings, and further developing a love of writing that he had discovered in his 20s.

"I liked the sense of importance working at Amherst gave me," said Graber. "Doing things for the greater school community was really fulfilling."

The administration at Amherst College felt Graber was just as important to the school community, because a year later, he was appointed director of alumni and parent programs.

Graber began coaching baseball at Amherst College, and that summer he also helped with a program called Amherst Mickey Mantle Baseball.

"The kids I helped teach baseball were 15 and 16 years old. That's when I really started to feel like I liked working with kids that age," said Graber. "They're just so smart and eager to learn. They soak everything up. I guess mentoring really appealed to me. I thought maybe I should start thinking about taking some courses in education."

And so began the trial run. When Graber had moved to Amherst, he had known absolutely nothing about UMass-Amherst. Having lived in Amherst, he knew the area surrounding UMass, Antonio's pizza and the elementary school district, but nothing about the school's reputation for protests, drinking and great dining common food.

Graber took one class at UMass called "the work of the high school and middle school teacher."

"I was totally into it. I started to get the feeling that I wanted to pursue a graduate degree," said Graber.

Soon Graber was completely obsessed with his goal of gaining a teaching certificate.

"I get restless, and I get these crazy ideas. I wanted to get going on getting my graduate degree, and I definitely could not do that just taking one class a semester," said Graber. "I was poking around online and saw this position for [an Associate Resident Director (ARD)]. So I went home and said 'Tina, I really want to get my Masters degree.' Then, I had to pitch to her the idea of moving into a dorm. She looked at me like I was insane."

As Tina had often done during their marriage, she finally gave in to Kevin's begging, understanding that it is important to support her husband's dreams. While their lifestyle would certainly change dramatically, their children were still able to attend Amherst public schools and Tina was still able to do her freelance graphic design work.

Kevin Graber's (center), wife Tina (above) and children Katie (left), Kelly (far right) and Kyle (right) have supported his adventurous life which brought him to UMass Amherst.

Graber applied and was selected for the 30-hour a week ARD position in Washington Tower in UMass' Southwest Resident Area. Kevin, Tina and their three children, Katie, 10, Kyle, 8, and Kelly, 6 moved into an apartment on the fifth floor of Washington.

Had Graber known that he was going to ultimately end up going to graduate school, he probably would saved himself the troubles of having to take English classes with freshmen and sophomores 20 years ago when he was an undergraduate communications major at the College of Saint Rose in Albany.

However, there were a lot of things distracting Graber from being incredibly studious at that point in his life.

Twenty-one year old Graber had an entirely different focus from the man who became obsessed with his dreams of teaching other students. His life revolved entirely around America's pastime: baseball.

For almost his entire life, Graber knew exactly who he was and wanted to be for the rest of his life. An up-an-coming shortstop, he loved and needed baseball like baseball loves and needs the rivalry between the Red Sox and the Yankees.

It was Graber's senior year and final undergraduate baseball season in 1992. He and his colleagues felt confident that Graber would be selected for the Major League baseball draft. Completely unexpectedly, Graber's 185-pound, weight-trained body turned against him.

He began to experience shortness of breath and swelling in his head, neck and chest. He experienced trouble sleeping, and explained that it felt as though someone was holding him upside down.

After weeks with little to no sleep, Graber still played through the pain. In a playoff game, Graber hit a ground ball to the pitcher, and the intensity of the pain made him clutch his hands around his knees.

"I felt like I was going to pass out, and I told my coach I had to come out of the game," said Graber. "I knew there was definitely something wrong."

His older brother Michael was in medical school at the time, and when Graber went home, Michael believed he knew the awful truth of his brother's ailments.

At the hospital, doctors performed a chest X-ray. Immediately after the results were found, Graber was rushed into surgery. He had been diagnosed with lymphoma.

According to the National Library of Medicine, lymphoma, or non-Hodgkin's lymphoma, is a cancer that begins when a type of white blood cell becomes abnormal and then rapidly begins to divide, multiply, and spread throughout the body.

He spent weeks in the hospitals' intensive care unit before he was able to begin chemotherapy.

"I was terrified when I woke up in intensive care, and I spoke for the first time and realized my voice sounded weird. It sounded like the noise you make when you suck helium. I was like 'hey, what the hell?'"

Because of Graber's large tumor in his chest, the doctors had kept him on an oxygen feed after the surgery, and often times, oxygen feeds have a bit of helium mixed in to help expand a patient's lungs.

Despite cancer treatments notoriety for being extremely painful, Graber remained optimistic.

"When I got the diagnosis, I was sort of relieved. I was just in agony before, and even though it was a grim diagnosis, I had some kind of place to go from there," said Graber. "It was a way for me to get better. But I won't lie, the treatments were tough."

Six months of chemotherapy, three months of radiation, and a bunch of surgeries including two biopsies of his chest and lower back bone marrow examinations later, and Graber had lost nearly 40 pounds.

"I didn't look very good. I think I looked like I was on my deathbed," said Graber.

His doctors congratulated him on beating the cancer and going into remission. They told him that it was OK to resume all normal activity.

However, Graber and his doctor's definitions of "normal activity" were not at all the same.

"I jumped back into baseball and went at it like Rocky Balboa. I was throwing baseballs all the time and playing in a local town league in

See GRABER on page 5

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

UMass just one part of a long journey

GRABER from page 4

Albany."

It was not long before Graber found his body begging him to take it easier. Blood clots appeared in his neck and shoulder. His head swelled to scary proportions.

"You're doing a lot really soon," explained Graber's doctors. They maintained that Graber needed to gradually get back into things.

As Graber started to feel better he proved once again, and not for the last time, that apathy has not consumed the youth.

He took a volunteer job coaching a legion baseball team in Scotia, New York. Even though at 23, he was a young coach, he felt as though coaching was definitely something he enjoyed doing.

His next venture would be to west coast, where he took a job as assistant coach for a baseball team at Lassen Community College in California. He packed up what little belongings he had and drove cross country to be a part of the ballgame.

But for young Graber, coaching was not the same as playing the game he so passionately had devoted most his life towards mastering.

"I was on the field with these players everyday, and as I was coaching them, I was doing a lot of the things they were doing," said Graber. "Just being in the California sunshine and having time to do baseball stuff, workout, and exercise, I really started to feel healthier. I felt as though I was as good as or even better than these players I was coaching."

"I felt like I was ready to play."

Can't take me out of the ballgame

Baseball does not halt its rosters for players who are sick at baseball if they're sick. Graber understood this. But even cancer could not keep Graber from playing. So when his future best man, Doug Kimbler, told him about an opportunity to play for a professional team in Australia, Graber jumped on it.

"I pack up and go anywhere for baseball," said Graber. "I called the team managers and told them that I wanted to play shortstop for them, and they said there were no guarantees and that I would have to pay my own way. I said, 'that's fine. I'll be there in a week.'"

Basically, the moment Graber walked off the plane he tried out for the Pine Rivers Rapids and the Brisbane Rapids jet-lagged and on very little sleep. Graber had not flown across the world to not deliver. The team kept him on as shortstop.

After playing for the Australian teams, in 1996 Graber played in the Chicago Cubs spring training in Arizona, and after that, he signed his first minor league contract in the United States.

"I was the guy making 900 bucks living in an apartment with a Murphy bed," said Graber. But he was living his dream. Playing for the Southern Minny Stars, Graber was in the line up every day, and he believed things were really clicking for him.

A blemish on his career

In the off-season, Graber started feeling severe pain in his rib cage.

"It felt like someone was stabbing me in the side," he said.

It was back to the hospital to visit his oncologist, and there he would find out that he had to be placed under surgery once more. A byproduct of the chemotherapy, Graber explained, was that there was a "mushy spot" on his ribs. The doctor's had to remove a portion of two of his ribs.

When Graber went back to play, he was in terrible pain again, having difficult raising his right arm.

"I just played through the pain, I absolutely did," said Graber. "But not as successfully. My coach and my team knew, but they were pretty generous about keeping me on."

There's an old adage that goes: "when it rains, it pours," and there is nothing baseball players hate more than having a game get rained out. That's pretty much what happened next to Graber.

During a routine check-up of his chest, the doctor's discovered a large mass inside his chest. It was his thymus gland attempting to regenerate itself. Graber was hospitalized for over a week after the surgeons cut the mass, which thankfully was not cancerous this time, out of his chest.

At age 27, Graber was playing for the Adirondack Lumberjacks in Glensfalls New York, and it got to a point in time where he just knew he could not play anymore.

Remembering his other love of coaching, Graber was offered a position to coach and manage his former team, the Southern Minny Stars. He became the youngest manager in all of professional baseball.

Graber recalls a lot of fun times with the Southern Minny Stars – traveling in beautiful weather, to towns with weird names, staying in sketchy hotels that were really secret strip clubs.

One time when Graber and the team were on the road, the management had apparently not paid the bus company in quite some time. The bus driver pulls over to the side of the road, refusing to drive another inch until someone showed up with a check.

Graber's story of trumping cancer, playing in the minor league and being the youngest professional baseball manager ever was catching attention from the media as well.

At this time, Graber was married to his hometown sweetheart Tina, and once they had their first child, Katie, he realized that "the whole minor league baseball life was not conducive to having a family."

Graber spotted a job as sports information director at the University of West Alabama, and he promised his wife the job would be temporary, as just a two-year occupation so that he could use his experience as a baseline to seek out future jobs of that nature located closer to her family in Albany. Tina agreed, and they moved to the rural south.

"It was a great place," said Graber. "There is something to be said for southern hospitality. Everyone was so nice to us. It really was the rural south though. We had to drive into Mississippi, about 35 minutes to go grocery shopping."

This brings us to Amherst

And this is where Graber's story comes full circle.

He applied for the sports information director job at Amherst College, and then found a new passion, getting his master's degree in education, to roll with alongside of baseball.

"I was very persistent that Tina and I could do this," said Graber. "I swore I could make it happen. I was just consumed with it. Even though our kids come first, I knew our kids would have a neat experience. I mean, who gets to grow up in a college dorm?"

His children loved living at UMass. Although Tina and Kevin recognized that it was unsafe to simply tell their kids "to just go out and play," their kids did not feel at all deprived. They enjoyed the sense of freedom to choose whatever food they wanted and run around within the Berkshire Dining Common.

A door in the Graber's girls' room connected to a medium-sized classroom, where his children frequently played "school," leaving notes for UMass students on the chalkboard.

Kevin and Tina were extremely impressed with the way the students at UMass helped them with their kids, and how they were very aware of how not to swear or say anything derogatory around the children.

Katie Graber liked having free air hockey in the recreation centers, where the children spent a great deal of their time going to dances and other UMass events. Kelly Graber's only complaint about living at UMass was that college students litter, and Kyle Graber did not like that college students are "kind of loud," and he misses the Berkshire's cheeseburgers.

At UMass, the stipend for ARD's was about $14,000, which was not enough money to raise a family of five.

Graber worked as an ARD, but remained coaching baseball for Amherst. He also taught English 98, a small class on special topics sports writing for Amherst College. He used to teach his class in the Southwest Grill one night a week.

He wrote consistently for the Amherst Alumni magazine, and he wrote a lot of junior baseball magazine pieces.

On weekends, he would work the press box for Amherst college football games. He and Tina also produced the football game day magazines. And he helped run the TPX top 96 baseball showcases, in which high school baseball players would play as college coaches watched for up and coming talent.

During the summer, he taught pitching lessons and supervised student painters in the dorms at UMass.

"We were pretty much doing everything we could think of to make money," said Graber.

All the while, Graber was taking a full course load at UMass, and he was completing his school work in the hours he could have used to be sleeping. Against all probability, he managed to get all A's and only one A-.

He now works at Phillips Andover Academy as director of admissions.

Kevin Graber is a man that cannot be stopped by any challenge.

"I'll be so proud to see that diploma, look into the crowd, see my family's faces, and know that this is something we accomplished together," he Graber.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached acreamer@student.umass.edu.

Take the next step.
Start your graduate degree now.

Antioch University New England's Master's and Doctoral programs will expand your professional options.

- Green MBA, weekend and accelerated programs
- Environmental Studies
- Psychology
- Leadership and Management
- Teacher Certification

Antioch University New England

Antioch University New England
www.antiochne.edu
800.429.1670

editorial&opinion

"THERE IS MORE STUPIDITY THAN HYDROGEN IN THE UNIVERSE, AND IT HAS A LONGER SHELF LIFE." – FRANK ZAPPA

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Robot warfare and push-button murder tactics

Ebad Rahman

As we wait for the movie "Terminator 4" to be released this May, we may find its world of humans fighting machines not so different from our own. Pakistanis have already begun the fight against unmanned drones in northwestern Pakistan where they come frequently and threaten their sovereignty.

Recently, on Jan. 23, the BBC reported that 14 people were killed when two missile attacks from U.S. drones landed in northwestern Pakistan.

Reuters tallied a total of 30 of these drone attacks, killing about 250 people in Pakistan, which were intended to kill suspected Al-Qaeda units. The drones destroy everything from civilians to schools.

The drones are remotely controlled by U.S. military bases in the States, such as Nevada. Like a video game, the military controls the drones half a world away to carry out missions in Pakistan. The best gamers usually make the best drone pilots.

The war in Afghanistan and Iraq has propelled the production and technology of robotic and unmanned warfare.

"When U.S. forces went into Iraq in 2003, they had zero robotic units on the ground. Now they have as many as 12,000," Army Goodman of "Democracy Now" recently reported.

This chilling shift to a robot-oriented version of war is changing how humans perceive and practice war. Traditionally, the only way most Americans at home feel involved with war is through the news and second-hand experiences. But with soldiers capable of shelling out a couple kills before dinnertime, the world of civilian life is blurring with military life.

Peter W. Singer, an expert on 21st century warfare and author of the book "Wired for War," said in an interview with "Democracy Now," "My grandfather [w]hen he went to war, he went to a place where danger took place, and the family didn't know if he was ever coming back. And that's very different than the experience of, for example, a Predator drone pilot that I met with who described that basically his experience of fighting in the Iraq war was getting in his Toyota Corolla, driving to work – he's doing this in Nevada – driving into work for twelve hours, he puts missiles on targets, then gets back in the Toyota, commutes back home, and within twenty minutes he's talking to his son at the dinner table."

Robotic warfare is letting loose a plethora of social and ethical issues – many of them frightening.

> With machines doing the killing, warfare looses its strongest restraint; the humanity a soldier feels when one human being kills another.

Singer said, "I interviewed … a Pentagon robotic scientist. And he said, 'You know what? You're wrong. There's no social or ethical or legal dimensions with robotics in war that we have to figure out.' He said, 'That is, unless the machine kills the wrong person repeatedly.' Quote, 'Then it's just a product recall issue.'"

Automated robots cannot be tried in court and given then imprisoned when they make an error or malfunction. They lack accountability, which provides protection when humans fight.

The lifestyle of a drone pilot leads to a drastic mental toll. Pilots are incapable of shifting between military mentality and civilian mentality and can suffer from post-traumatic stress disorder, sometimes worse than personnel in the field. This is primarily caused by immediate and vivid feedback of a mission.

"In a fighter jet when you come in at 500-600 mph, drop a 500-pound bomb then fly away, you don't see what happens," said Col. Albert Aimar, commander of the 163rd Reconnaissance Wing, but in a drone "you watch it all the way to impact, and I mean it's very vivid, it's right there and personal. So it does stay in people's minds for a long time."

Historically, war has been a highly ritualistic affair, where two forces meet in the battlefield to decide a victor. It has since deteriorated into a mechanized killing machine – with military concepts like collateral damage and pre-emptive striking. Now war is deteriorating even farther by sending machines. With machines doing the killing, warfare looses its strongest restraint: the humanity a soldier feels when one human being kills another.

Singer comments on the change, "We don't have declarations of war anymore. We don't have a draft. We don't buy war bonds anymore. We don't pay higher taxes for war. And now you have the fact that you may be sending more and more machines instead [of]people. And so, you may be taking the already lowering bars to war and dropping them to the ground."

Although a day when Skynet unloads a nuclear holocaust on Earth is still hard to conceive, the classic sci-fi myth of man against machine is sci-fi no longer. Drones and automated robots are taking root in our system of warfare and with it a worrisome tide of social and ethical implications.

I can only hope that humanity will disgust itself with the current state of warfare then pursue it in its increasingly destructive and inhuman form.

Ebad Rahman is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erahman@student.umass.edu

W.E.B. Dubois: memorial worthy or simply Stalinist?

Matthew Robare

William Edward Burghardt Du Bois, sociologist, politician, author and civil rights activist, now not only has the largest academic library in the country named after him, but will also be getting a center dedicated to his life and work. This is all very well and good – we need to honor our patron saints, after all, but it gives us the opportunity to examine what that life and work were all about and if they meet our modern scrutiny.

Du Bois' most lasting legacy was probably his contribution to the founding the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, which is celebrating its centennial this year and continues the mission of fighting for equal rights. In many of his books, Du Bois sought to correct the prevailing view among many historians and sociologists about black contributions to history and society.

But it is in his quest for civil rights and equality that we get a picture of Du Bois that few wish to remember. He used the language and ideas of Social Darwinism to talk about the "Talented Tenth," who "may guide the Mass away from the contamination and death of the Worst, in their own and other races" and "Negro leadership therefore sought from the first to rid the race of this awful incubus that it might make way for natural selection and the survival of the fittest"

The Talented Tenth was the group who would first be raised to legal equality with whites. Until their work was done the raising and education and resources of the whole community was to go towards the advancement of this special class. The Talented Tenth would then prove to the whites by their very existence that blacks were not inferior.

> Ultimately, Du Bois was not a great civil rights leader – as he is usually portrayed – but was an also-ran.

Du Bois was often at odds with other black leaders of his era – he feuded with Booker T. Washington, Marcus Garvey and Walter White and Roy Wilkins of the NAACP. Du Bois helped found While White and Wilkins advocated integration, Du Bois advocated separatism.

Integration triumphed and Du Bois found himself increasingly ignored in the United States and turned to ever more extreme ideas in the hope that someone would listen to him. Ultimately, Du Bois was not a great civil rights leader – as he is usually portrayed – but was an also-ran.

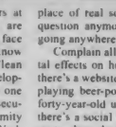
In contrast to his advocacy of what is essentially Uplift (a science-fiction concept about civilizations with advanced technology creating sentience/intelligence in non-sentient species), Du Bois was a true believer in Stalinism.

Stalin, of course, was the second-most horrific mass murderer in the 20th century – behind Mao and ahead of Hitler. After his death, Du Bois published an article "On Stalin" that begins:

"Joseph Stalin was a great man; few other men of the 20th century approach his stature.

He was simple, calm and courageous. He seldom lost his poise, pondered his problems slowly, made his decisions clearly and firmly, never yielded to ostentation nor coyly refrained from holding his rightful place with dignity. He was the son of a serf but stood calmly before the great without hesitation or nerves. But also – and this was the highest proof of his greatness – he knew the common man, felt his problems, followed his fate." Yet, somehow feeling the problems and following the fate of the common man didn't stop him from killing millions of them. At the Yalta Conference where the Allies of World War II divided Europe, Stalin boasted to Churchill that he had killed 10 million peasants. The final death toll, when Du Bois wrote his eulogy, was around 30 million.

While it would be vicious and illogical (not to mention a favorite Stalinist tactic) to suggest that Du Bois bears guilt by association, it is important that in honoring his memory with our amazing library and this new center we remember everything about him, even the parts of his life many no doubt wish never occurred. Indeed, if Du Bois is guilty of anything it is of a great moral negligence for failing to uncover the truth about Stalin.



A similar moral negligence was displayed with regard to China, where 60 million were murdered and Du Bois wrote that there was "a sense of human nature free from its most hurtful and terrible meanness."American history often falls into something I hate deeply, called the Liberty Valence Theory. It is simple: "When the legend becomes fact, print the legend."

History is not made of the hagiographies of great men, nor is it made by some force driving us on to a secular eschelon. History is made of facts, not myths. It is the responsibility of all of us to keep alive the facts and not allow our judgments to be clouded by myth.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu

The birth of a second, non-anonymous Internet

Rachel Dougherty

Software engineers at Stanford University are working to change the face of the internet as we know it. The Stanford Clean Slate Project is developing a second internet – one that would improve security by ending anonymity online. In his New York Times article on the project, John Markoff writes:

"What a new Internet might look like is still widely debated, but one alternative would, in effect, create a 'gated community' where users would give up their anonymity and certain freedoms in return for safety."

A gated Internet community that would track and regulate online behavior? This all seems very Big Brother.

We need to ask ourselves how much freedom we're willing to give up in exchange for security. Is what a person does in the privacy of their own Mac or PC protected by the constitution? Or should the laws of the "real" world apply to what goes on in the virtual world?

> The fact that the Internet is taking the place of real social interaction isn't even a question anymore. It has. It's here.

We treat the Internet as something apart from the "real" world. Go online – and the rules of social engagement change entirely. If some stranger were to come up to you and tell you they knew your birth date, your cell phone number, your dog's name and the color of the shirt you wore last Friday night – you would be seriously wigged.

But if they were to tell you they got all this information off of Facebook or Myspace, suddenly it's, "Oh thank god, I thought you were stalking me or something." Facebook stalking is just one step above sitting outside a guy's window with a pair of binoculars. Except users can do it from the convenience of their own homes, in total anonymity and with almost nil chance of falling out of a tree.

It's the same thing, but somehow the line between what is and is not acceptable is blurred when we go on the Internet.

So much of what accounts for life has been transposed onto the Internet. We shop and sell online, do our taxes, catch up with friends, etc. There's even a program called "Second Life" that allows you to, well – live online.

Never heard of "Second Life"? Neither had I, until my uber-techie English professor spent a class lecturing about the virtues of this virtual world. "Second Life" is a 3-D computer program in which users create characters of themselves, called avatars, and interact with other virtual people around the world. They talk to each other via instant message, attend events, form social groups and even engage in virtual sex. My professor knew a guy who had actually met his wife in "Second Life," and then married her in "first" life.

The fact that the Internet is taking the place of real social interaction isn't even a question anymore. It has. It's here. It's not going anywhere soon.

Complain all you want about the detrimental effects on human relations, but wherever there's a website with pictures of college girls playing beer-pong – some frat boy and his forty-year-old uncle will be there. Wherever there's a social network that lets people connect online, the shy kid who has trouble making friends in school will probably be there.

Right or wrong, the Internet gives people the opportunity to do things they find more difficult or inconvenient in real life. Like make friends. Or shop for clothes. Or rob a bank.

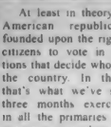
If the Internet really is becoming a second life – one with repercussions in "first" life – then we need to rethink whether the rules of the real world can and should be applied to what goes on in the virtual world.

This is where the Stanford Clean Slate Project starts to make sense. A gated Internet community would put an end to a lot of the dangers lurking in the anonymous web. Internet stalkers. Identity theft. Anonymous users who comment on The Collegian's website.

All of this could be stopped by the development of a second Internet.

More importantly, the hypothetical new Internet would offer greater protection from viral software. Far beyond the comparably petty concerns of Internet stalking and identity theft – the driving force behind the move to create a new Internet is the fear that someone will come along with software powerful enough to knock out communications systems at a national level.

We've all been there. You're sitting at your computer with an hour left to finish that paper you should've started last week, when suddenly, the computer freezes. Or crashes. Or bursts into flames. All because of a virus you picked up on the Internet.



Imagine what this would do at a global or a national level. In a world where so much of human interaction – not just social, but economic – is dependent on a functioning Internet, one good bug could send us into a state of chaos.

It's already happening. According to Markoff's article, last November the U.S. military branch in charge of the Iraq and Afghanistan wars discovered that its computer networks had been purposely infected with software that, left undetected, could've led to a "devastating espionage attack."

Nick McKeown, an engineer working with the Clean Slate Project at Stanford, warns, "Unless we're willing to rethink today's Internet, we're just waiting for a series of public catastrophes."

Rachel Dougherty is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu.

Letting the pubescent vote

Eli Gottlieb

At least in theory, the American republic is founded upon the right of citizens to vote in elections that decide who runs the country. In theory, that's what we've spent three months exercising in all the primaries. And everyone got their fair vote, right?

Well, except more than one fifth of the population – the under 18 community.

Unlike mental patients who don't belong to this minority one-fifth group, they just don't have the mental capability necessary to vote. We let other people represent them, instead.

After all, everyone knows those kids under the age of 18 just don't have the maturity, experience, sheer intelligence or a bunch of other overly-general positive attributes necessary to make such simple decisions as "should I vote for the Republican or the Democrat?"

Rather than let "kids" make any decisions about their own life or even cast a single vote per-person for their government, we let their parents vote for them. This, of course, causes a conflict of interest since the interests of a child can almost self-evidently conflict with those of their parents ("tax rebate, or funding for education?"), but we ignore that, so as to not challenge our prejudices about young people.

I mean, everyone knows that 18 is the perfect, magic age when you suddenly and immediately become able to handle your own life.

> I don't feel at all surprised seeing that the only group actually interested in bettering our schools – the students in them – wields precisely zero political power.

Except that – wait – it turns out that we thought the magic age was 21 until the year 1971.

Bull crap. It's long past time that we gave the vote to everyone in this country able to fill out a registration form and pull the levers – or at least push the age down well into the high-school years. I've got facts to back that up, too.

First, we already charge youth as young as 14 or 16 years old as adults, whenever the heck we like. Originally our politicians told us these new powers would only be used to charge obviously disturbed youth with highly violent offenses. However, that doesn't explain why I found myself in front of an adult judge for a misdemeanor and violation charge at age sixteen (long story – the judge threw out the charges and cleared me entirely. F the cop who put me through that).

But for some reason the youth who can be charged as adults for the slightest matter can't vote for the officials who decided to charge youth as adults. It's almost like that part of history when women couldn't vote for the lawmakers who decided that women couldn't vote.

Second, children – especially teenagers – pay taxes, just like adults. They pay billions in sales tax every year and always owe payroll and income taxes for anything they earn for actually behaving like mature, responsible citizens and taking a part-time job.

I sure as heck know that even though I didn't earn the minimum taxable income when I took a job in high school. I still had the taxes withheld from my paychecks, and I was paying into Social Security even though George W. Bush could have privatized the whole program with no word from me.

Besides, the youth constitutes a specific and special interest group whose concerns deserve to be addressed. America consistently ranks near last in international measures of primary and secondary education. I don't feel at all surprised seeing that the only group actually interested in bettering our schools – the students in them – wields precisely zero political power. They may not have much money, but we could give at least some young people the vote.

And to those who argue that youth lack the basic knowledge or competence necessary to vote, which god comes out of the sky and teaches civics to adults?

In a nation where a significant portion of the population wants the outright unscientific theories of "intelligent design" taught in science classes and a not-unrelated group can't find the nations we're occupying on a labeled map, could we really make things worse by allowing young people who actually have to learn science and geography to vote? Somehow I think it would actually improve matters.

Finally, allowing young people to begin voting before they leave for college will reduce the amount of unnecessary paperwork by lowering the number of absentee registrations young people need to file.

OK, so maybe I've got a few people convinced. What should we make the new voting age?

Personally, I have to go with 14. Nobody but me, even most of the members of the National Youth Rights Association, seems ready to see 5-year-olds with an official right to vote. But depending on which state you live in, 14 is the age when youths become legally able to drive, work for pay, consent to sex, and/or be charged as adults for crimes.

Given that all of these are the normal rights of American citizens that we older folks take for granted, I think their onset constitutes a perfectly good time to grant citizens their right to a legal say over the destiny of their own country.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

The magic of Awaji puppets

By Michelle Fredette
Collegian Staff

Children see and play with all sorts of puppets: Finger puppets, hand puppets, sock puppets, marionettes and even Muppets.

But what about Japanese Bunraku puppets?

This type of puppetry is an ancient Japanese art form. It involves not only puppeteers, but also chanters and musicians. The musicians play the shamisen – a three-stringed instrument – with a pick.

Although the Awaji tradition typically performs in temples or other outdoor settings, the Awaji Puppet Theater Company will be bringing this form of puppetry to Bowker Auditorium this Saturday, Feb. 28, as part of the Asian Arts and Culture Program.

Bunraku puppets can range anywhere from 2- to 4-feet-tall. While most tend to be on the smaller side, the puppets in the Awaji tradition are typically closer to 4-feet-tall. The Awaji style of the theater also undergoes quick changes of scenery as well as costume.

The design of these puppets is elaborate. While the puppeteers themselves often construct the puppets' bodies, the heads are carefully carved by specialists. The costuming is also intricate – puppets so large require costumes on a similar level to those worn by people.

Even the manipulation of the puppets is complicated, with most requiring up to three puppeteers. The least experienced puppeteers control the feet, while the veterans move the hands. The puppeteer in control of the feet is called the ashizukai, the one controlling the Traditional Awaji puppets require several puppeteers to operate them on stage. They often wear black cloaks to avoid drawing attention.

See AWAJI on page 10

COURTESY UMASS.EDU

TONIGHT

TGIWTF

THE PEARL STREET NIGHT CLUB IN NORTHAMPTON WILL PLAY HOST TO THE AREA'S ONLY 18+ ELECTRO, INDIE, AND 80'S DANCE PARTY TONIGHT.

VENUE: IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
DOORS: 9:00 PM
PRICE: $5.00 - $10.00

SUNDAY

FOUNTAINS OF WAYNE

HOMETOWN POP-FAVORITES FOUNTAINS OF WAYNE WILL BE PLAYING A SHORT RUN OF FULL-BAND ACOUSTIC SHOWS INCLUDING A STOP AT NORTHAMPTON'S IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL SUNDAY NIGHT.

VENUE: IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
DOORS: 7:00 PM
PRICE: A. $22.50 - D. $25.00

Prison Birth Project to host swap

Clothing event to benefit incarcerated mothers

By Heather Waxman
Collegian Staff

NORTHAMPTON — The Prison Birth Project (PBP) and friends will host a community clothing swap tomorrow afternoon at the Northampton Friends Meeting House to benefit incarcerated mothers.

The clothing swap will provide locals with the opportunity to choose from an array of children's and babies' clothing and toys as well as adult and maternity clothing.

Simultaneously, there will be an ongoing bake sale and kid-friendly music being played by local musicians.

The PBP, which got its start in May, began programming at the Western Massachusetts Women's Correctional Center this past September.

"I had been incarcerated myself and knew that [the WWC in] Chicopee was opening in September, so I proposed it to the jail and then got in contact with the other women who were in the workshop with me. All three of us are moms," said Marianne Bullock, one of the PBP's leading voices.

The organization's focus centers on providing education, support and resources regarding pregnancy and motherhood to incarcerated women in addition to supplying them with the necessary tools to help make empowered birth decisions.

The PBP also offers care for incarcerated women going through the pregnancy, birth and postpartum processes with childbirth education classes, one-on-one meeting times and open resource compilation with other local service organizations.

"It's definitely a population without a voice," said Bullock. "And [for] a lot of women … it's the time in their life when they most need to have their voice."

The community clothing swap marks the PBP's first fundraiser run entirely on its own, which is quite a feat for an up-and-coming project.

"We were trying to think of events that we could have that were family events," said Bullock.

"Lots of organizations tend to do night fundraisers and things like that and we had been doing that and it was really hard on our families so we [thought], 'We need to start planning events that are more family friendly that our children can be entertained at.'"

Bullock and the PBP's fellow members have certainly had their hands full. Aside from planning their first fundraiser, the organization recently launched their website, Theprisonbirthproject.org.

There, people can learn more about the project's support for incarcerated mothers, get the scoop on upcoming events and place a donation.

"The ultimate hope is that mothers that are incarcerated have comprehensive care during this time," said Bullock.

Those interested in getting involved are welcome to attend the PBP's next open meeting, which is scheduled for Saturday, March 21, at 10 a.m.

The Prison Birth Project's community clothing swap will be held tomorrow, Feb. 28, from 3-5 p.m. in the second floor of the Northampton Friends Meetinghouse, located at 43 Center St. in Northampton. Donations are encouraged and the event is free and open to public.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

Placing the spotlight on local high school jazz

COURTESY UMASS DEPARTMENT OF MUSIC AND DANCE

Conductor Jeffrey W. Holmes and the UMass Amherst Jazz Ensemble I will perform Saturday for this years' annual High School Jazz Festival at the Bezanson Recital Hall and Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

By Isaac Simon
Collegian Correspondent

High school and University of Massachusetts jazz ensembles, along with the U.S. Army Blues Band, will play at the Fine Arts Center this Saturday at the 11th Annual High School Jazz Festival. The all-day concert and showcase will feature high schools from Massachusetts, Connecticut and Vermont and is always open to any interested high school in New England.

"The majority of the ensembles are big bands [jazz ensembles with sections of trumpets, trombones, saxophones and rhythm]," said Jeffrey W. Holmes, coordinator and a conductor of the event as well as professor of jazz and African-American music studies. "There are combos and vocal ensembles that also participate."

Each high school band will get a 30-minute-set onstage during the festival. "They play a variety of music which is adjudicated on the spot," said Holmes. The ensembles will also go to clinics with UMass music department faculty.

The winning high school band will perform in the evening, opening for the U.S. Army groups. UMass's Jazz Ensemble I, with possible other UMass groups, will also play the festival.

According to Holmes, members of the U.S. Army Blues Band, also the top Army big band in Washington, D.C., will serve as guest adjudicators and clinicians for the day. Jazz faculty Catherine Jensen-Hole, Paul Lieberman and Steve Sonntag, along with former music faculty member David Sporney, will work with the high school students.

"This is an outreach opportunity where high school ensembles can come to a festival that emphasizes positive feedback and interaction with college ensembles of the same ilk," said Holmes.

"[The festival will be] a relaxed environment on a weekend day free of other responsibilities [and an exhibition of] what high school ensembles are negotiating in the world of jazz," said Holmes.

Scholarships will be awarded to high school students for the UMass Annual Jazz in July Workshops in Improvisation, which run from July 9-13 and 16-20. Holmes serves as the associate artistic director for the workshops. This is one opportunity the festival offers to high school students, some of whom are applicants and future students.

The Fine Arts Center is an annual collaborator with the music department for the festival, and has also collaborated to bring acts such as the Vanguard Jazz Orchestra, the Smithsonian Jazz Masterworks Orchestra, the Mingus Dynasty Band, the Yellowjackets and Christian McBride to UMass. According to Holmes, the department is striving to make the festival a two-day event.

"[This is one event that supports] jazz enthusiasts coming together in the educational world to keep the music alive," said Holmes.

High school and UMass jazz ensemble performances begin in Bezanson Theater at 9 a.m. and end at 12 p.m., continuing at 2:15 p.m. The winning high school ensemble will play in the Concert Hall at 7:25 p.m., followed by the U.S. Army groups at 8 p.m., which will close the show.

Isaac Simon can be reached at Isimon@student.umass.edu

Traditional Irish heavyweights coming to Pittsfield

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

Now and again you'll get a band from Ireland to visit the U.S. Usually it's around some specific time when the band can affiliate itself with something, with all Irish bands that something is St. Patrick's Day.

Tonight, the Wolfe Tones, Noel Nagle, Tommy Byrne and Brian Warfield will travel from their "soil" back in Ireland to Pittsfield, Mass. to play in front of a hyped-up and enthusiastic crowd that will be ready to sing, dance and listen to dozens of Irish stories that are entwined into every powerful song at the Wahconah Country Club.

Many of The Wolfe Tones' songs reminisce about Ireland's past, especially the country's fight against England in its battle for freedom. Songs like, "James Connolly," "Kevin Barry," "Michael Collins" and "The Foggy Dew" tell stories of either specific Irish nationalists, or, as in "The Foggy Dew," stories told from a first-person narrative of what it was like to fight in Easter Sunday in 1916.

"But the bravest fell, and the requiem bell rang mournfully and clear/ For those who died that Eastertide in the springing of the year/ And the world did gaze, in deep amaze, at those fearless men, but few/ Who bore the fight that freedom's light might shine through the foggy dew."

The same song can be heard before every Dropkick Murphys' show.

Not all songs are about nationalism, though. Others are about the experience of the Irish immigration to the U.S. and the experiences of said journey. Their song "Streets of New York" does exactly that.

"For I've spent my life working this dirty old ground/ For a few pints of porter and the smell of a pound. And sure, maybe there's something you'll learn or you'll see. And you can bring it back home, make it easier on me."

The Wolfe Tones, like any other band, have songs that cater to massive crowd-wide sing-alongs. Songs like "Boston Rose" and "Celtic Symphony" not only make attending their shows an enjoyable experience but also make you want to add those songs to your collection at once.

The trio wrote "Celtic Symphony" in 1987 on the 100-year anniversary of the Scottish football team, the Celtic Football Club. "Celtic Symphony" is sung at supporter events around the world and in bars in Boston. The group also sings, "Let the People Sing" and "Broken Dreams," which are also tied to the club.

On Dec. 23, 2002, the song "A Nation Once Again" was voted the world's top song according to the British Broadcasting Company's service poll.

Unlike most Irish bands the Wolfe Tones tend to stray away from famous traditional songs such as "Black Velvet Band, "Fields of Athenry," and "Molly Malone." The group takes pride in writing their own songs and in their connection to Ireland's past.

Whether you're Irish or you're not, if you want good "craic" (fun) while doing your best imitation of an Irish jig and hanging around with some of the friendliest people in the world, perhaps over a pint, this is one show you wouldn't want to miss.

The Wolfe Tones play at the Waconah Country Club. Limited if any space is available. To try your luck contact Brendan at 413-822-6317.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

COURTESY THEWOLFETONES.COM

Irish favorites The Wolfe Tones will perform tonight in Pittsfield, Mass. The band's songs often reminisce about Ireland's storied past.

Exhibit, China is 'Red'

By Caroline Scannell
Collegian Correspondent

Contrary to common belief there are actually two great walls of China. Though the first remains in China, the second lies nearby in the Smith College Museum of Art where "Post-Mao Dreaming" is currently on view.

On this wall hang powerful, evocative and politically-charged works of art. On the reverse, a simple coat of bright red paint on which a portion of the show is displayed confronts the viewer when first entering the gallery – the weighty symbolism suggesting the token color of Communism, good luck in the Chinese tradition and of course, blood and violence.

Behind the decision to present certain works on a red background is primary donor Joan Lebold Cohen. When asked about her reasoning behind the color choice she exclaimed, "China is red!"

The show consists of Smith College's recent acquisitions of contemporary Chinese art. Though some pieces were produced as late as 2005, most date to the late 70s and early 80s, a time when the country was in flux following the death of Chairman Mao Zedong and the conclusion of the anti-intellectual Cultural Revolution.

What the show manages to do so skillfully is straddle the enormous spectrum of energies that erupted in the new and freer artistic climate after Mao's death in 1976. The period that followed was characterized by increased openness to foreign influence, abstraction and a kind of revival of tradition that differed sharply from the Soviet-styled socialist-realism promoted during the Cultural Revolution to reinforce communist messages.

Cohen explained that on her first visit to China in 1979 she was prohibited to speak with artists because the establishment considered it too dangerous. But the pieces in the show speak for themselves about a chaotic portion of Chinese history as the viewer can read the works like a timeline of social change.

Though many of the works involve flagrantly political ideas, other works more subtly rely on technique and visual forms to articulate the changes occurring in the cultural atmosphere after Mao's death.

In the immediate wake of Mao's fall, artists trained before the Cultural Revolution relished the freedom to produce work for purely decorative purposes and to return to traditional styles of painting that were previously discouraged.

These fresh traditional pieces celebrate classical Chinese artistic practices with delicate calligraphy and ink painting on silk scrolls. But as the viewer moves through the show a subversive undercurrent creeps into the "traditional" ink paintings. The colors run and blots of ink are incorporated into the works, differing from the strict discipline of traditional techniques.

Some featured artists, such as Qui Deshu, who has four pieces in the show, engaged the traditional materials of ink painting in a new and iconoclastic way. He layers ripped pieces of paper and involves bold color in a surprising way. Inspired by a traveling show of Jackson Pollock's work on display in Shanghai, Deshu's work combines modern abstraction and ancient calligraphy.

With respect to the treatment of taboos such as nudity and warped depictions of the human body, a number of the pieces include raw, primitive, naked forms and shapes that suggest humanity, tenderness and ferocity that would have been seen as damaging to the state and to the health of communist society under Mao.

On the other hand, many artists who came of age after the Cultural Revolution but lived under Mao approached the issues in their work head-on. Zhang Hongtu's postmodern works play off of the history of propaganda during the Cultural Revolution. Incorporating images from Maoist propaganda posters he achieves a "cathartic purging of his early artistic and ideological education," writes Andrews.

His works fixate on the inflated image of Mao as God, as he was often depicted in Cultural Revolution artworks. "He grew up with Mao. He hated him. But Mao was his guiding light. It's really hard to get over that," said Cohen, shedding light on Hongtu's obsession.

Even today, many of the themes addressed in "Post-Mao Dreaming" still dominate Chinese art. But curator Aprile Gallant cautions viewers that though the show helps to illuminate a very complex era of Chinese history, the show does not demonstrate a one-way progression in and of itself. "There are still artists that are painting in this [traditional] way," said Gallant.

But the show does successfully capture the agitated energies that marked the times and attempts to provide viewers with "bite-sized chunks of information that they might be able to hang onto because it is such a diverse group of works," Gallant said.

In addition to functioning as a historical record of the immense changes China has experienced in the past 30 years, the show also points towards the creation of a common artistic language developing as the world grows smaller through globalization, Gallant explained. Above all, "Post-Mao Dreaming" helps to set the backdrop for the kind of hot, experimental art that recently has been coming out of China, fueled by rapid economic, social and cultural development as China emerges as a global superpower.

COURTESY SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

A series of post-Mao artwork, including this piece by Zhang Hongtu, is currently on display at Smith College's Museum of Art.

Post-Mao Dreaming will be on view at the Smith College Museum of Art until May 31.

Caroline Scannell may be reached at ccscanne@student.umass.edu.

Awaji puppetry far from child's play

AWAJI from page 8

left hand is the hidarizukai or sashizukai, and the one controlling the right hand is the omozukai.

The puppeteers are not hidden behind panels and instead perform in plain view of the audience. In contrast with the brightly colored puppets, the puppeteers wear all black so that the focus will remain on the puppets. In some companies, the puppeteers wear black hoods as well.

Begun in the 16th century on Awaji Island, the art form was originally used in religious rites.

Bunraku puppetry was once in danger of being lost in the early 19th century, but was reestablished by a puppeteer named Uemura Bunraku-ken, from whom the style gets its name.

Now, Awaji Puppet Theater has been deemed an "Intangible Folk Asset" under Japan's Cultural Properties Protection Law.

Miguel Romero, a professor in the University of Massachusetts' theater department, will be giving more background information about Bunraku puppetry prior to the performance. Romero visited the Awaji puppet theater in Japan and will provide greater insight into the tradition.

Despite the childish associations most people have with puppets, the performance this Saturday will delve into some difficult subjects. The Awaji Puppet Theater Company will perform three separate pieces. While one, a celebratory dance of the Japanese fisherman god, is indeed lighthearted, the other two tread on more intense subject matter.

The dance piece Hidakagawa Iriaizakura involves a woman tormented by love who is turned into a serpent consumed by jealousy.

Tsubosaka Reigen-ki, the final piece, involves a double suicide of husband and wife. The piece does have a brighter side, however, as much of the action revolves around a miracle that returns the couple to the land of the living.

For those who are more "hands-on" than visual learners, the Awaji Puppet Theater Company will also have a workshop this afternoon where attendees can learn how to handle the Awaji puppets. The workshop will also have a question and answer section.

Whether one attends the workshop, the performance or both, Awaji Puppet Theater offers a unique experience of puppetry seldom seen in the U.S.

Awaji Puppet Theater will be held at Bowker Auditorium on Saturday, Feb. 28, at 8 p.m. Admission is $20 for the general public and $15 for Five College students. The hands-on lecture/demo will be held at the Curtain Theater today, Friday, Feb. 27, from 3 p.m. to 5 p.m. The demo is $10 for the general public and free for Five College students.

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredette@student.umass.edu

UMass looking for first win of season

BRIAN TSUBOR / COLLEGIAN

Junior midfielder Merritt Cosgrove has three goals in three games (all losses) for the Minutewomen this season. UMass hopes to bounce back against Harvard this weekend.

By Kyle Predki
Collegian Staff

With a disappointing 0-3 start this year, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will look for their first win this weekend as they head to Cambridge to take on Harvard.

For UMass, it will be the final game before the home opener against No. 13 Dartmouth, and the last chance to notch a win during their season-opening road trip. Harvard (1-0) will be a welcomed opponent for the Minutewomen, who have already played at No. 6 Maryland and at No. 10 Boston University.

The match will mark the home opener for Harvard, which defeated Holy Cross, 13-10.

Harvard and UMass have both played Holy Cross this season. For the Crimson, the results ended in their favor. In Harvard's season opener, they were the victors in the match, 13-10. For UMass the outcome was not as fortunate. The Minutewomen dropped their season opener against Holy Cross, 11-7, on Feb. 17.

In the history between Harvard and UMass neither has the definite advantage. In the past 10 years, the two teams are set at an even record of 5-5. On the score sheet, Massachusetts has the advantage by outscoring Harvard, 101-87.

For UMass, traveling to Harvard may actually be an advantage, as UMass has a 3-2 record in the past 10 years. The Minutewomen have averaged 11 goals per game at Harvard in those games.

The one thing that Harvard has on its side is that when these two teams play, wins come in streaks of two. Since 1999, the outcomes of the matches switch every two years. Harvard's last victory over UMass was the first win of the reoccurring statistic.

Leading the UMass offense against Harvard will be senior Holly Drown and sophomore Jackie Lyons. These two combine for almost half of the UMass goals, seven of 16, and also combine for a shooting percentage of .350.

UMass will also have to watch Harvard's sophomore midfielder, Jess Halpern. Halpern opened the 2009 season by netting a career-high six goals. As a freshman, Halpern scored 34 goals and added 12 assists for the Crimson.

UMass will also need to watch freshman Katie Doherty. In Doherty's collegiate debut, she scored four goals on six shots against Holy Cross.

Merritt Cosgrove and Jackie Rosenzweig will also look to help the Minutewomen. Both Cosgrove and Rosenzweig – along with UMass assistant coach Kristin Blanchette – have been selected to represent Ireland in the Federation of International Lacrosse (FIL) Women's World Cup.

Cosgrove has notched three goals on 11 shots so far this season and has 13 goals as a midfielder in her career at UMass. Rosenzweig has earned recognition through her defense, a position that can't be graded by comparing score sheets.

For these three, the tournament doesn't start until June 18 in Prague, Czech Republic. For now the team will continue to prep for Harvard on Saturday at 1 p.m.

Kyle Predki can be reached at kpredki@student.umass.edu.

CINEMARK®
The Best Seat In Town
Advance tickets & showtimes available online at cinemark.com
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. • 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp 1118#
EARLY BIRD SPECIAL M-F, 1ST MATINEE SHOWTIME $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)
$5 Tuesdays are back!! All shows all day are $5!!
◆ JONAS BROTHERS 3D CONCERT MOVIE [G] 12:30 2:40 4:50 7:00 9:10 - Tickets $15
◆ STREETFIGHTER: THE LEGEND OF SHUN-LI [PG13] 1:35 4:10 7:35 10:25
◆ TYLER PERRY'S MADEA GOES TO JAIL [PG13] 120 430 710 940
◆ FIRED UP [PG13] 150 440 745 1005
◆ FRIDAY THE 13TH [R] 200 455 740 1030
◆ CONFESSIONS OF A SHOPAHOLIC [PG]145 430 725 1000
◆ THE INTERNATIONAL [R] 715 1015 - No shows 3/5
◆ HE'S JUST NOT THAT INTO YOU [PG13] 100 400 705 1010
◆ PINK PANTHER 2 [PG] 155 435
◆ CORALINE [PG] 140 420 650 920
◆ TAKEN [PG13] 110 425 730 1020
◆ PAUL BLART MALL COP [PG] 125 445 720 945
◆ GRAN TORINO [R] 115 415 705 955
Friday Night Rewind 3/6/09
TRAINSPOTTING
A POWERFUL NOISE LIVE 3/5/09 730
MET OPERA 3/18/09
MADAMA BUTTERFLY Encore 7PM
Senior Show 3/5/09 10am
THE INTERNATIONAL
CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

Track teams set for NECs

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's track and field team hopes to return to form as it travels to Boston University for the New England Championships this weekend.

In addition to showcasing the top teams from Division I, the New England Championships also feature some of the top athletes from Division II and III schools. UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien is quick to point out that, although schools from lower divisions may not have a high level of team success at the competition, they feature "outstanding athletes who can upset the scoring balance" and play the role of spoiler for the rest of the field.

Boston has become a second home of sorts to the UMass track and field teams. This weekend's meet will be its fourth trip to the Boston area this season and its third to Boston University. This is the last opportunity for athletes to qualify for next week's individual championships. The Minutemen have qualified seven individual athletes and one relay team for the IC4A Championships, while the Minutewomen have qualified three individual athletes for the ECACs.

Freshman mid-distance runner Philip Weltman has been strong as of late. He earned Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week honors after finishing sixth out of 164 runners in the 400-meter dash at the Boston University Valentine's Invitational. His time of 48.45 seconds qualified him for the IC4As and ranks second all-time at UMass.

He followed that up with another strong performance, finishing third in the same event at last week's A-10 Championships. Another solid performance from Weltman would be a huge boost for the Minutemen.

To be successful, the Minutemen will also need strong contributions from senior Peter Fortunato and junior Tyler Cotto. Fortunato, who was named A-10 Co-Performer of the Week after finishing 16th (out of 179) in the mile at the Valentine's Day Invitational, has been the most consistent miler for the Minutemen this season. Cotto has also been incredibly consistent. With two first-place finishes on the season, and only one lower than seventh (as a result of a disqualification), Cotto is primed for another strong performance.

After a solid sixth-place finish at last week's A-10 Championships, the UMass women's team is hoping to follow up with another strong effort in Boston.

The Minutewomen have found great success in the field events this season. Lisa Wilson, Ida Okkonen, Stephanie Aguguo and Kristen Bakanowski have been a major force for the Minutewomen and have played a vital role in the team's success. Aguguo and Okkonen should be riding high after joining UMass elite with top 10 all-time marks in the triple jump. Wilson is always a threat in the shot put and weight throw, while Bakanowski has proven to be on of the top pole vaulters in the conference.

In the track events, Shiyi Zan could play a pivotal role in where the team finishes. Zan will be running in the 3000 meter and will join Rosalind Murphy, Claire Petuit and Gina Perno in the distance medley relay. At the Great Dane Classic, she scored 10 of the team's 55 points. UMass also expects solid performances from Petuit and Holly Heinricher.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Samantha Salato and the Minutewomen will face No. 3 Alabama, No. 15 Georgia and No. 22 Southern Illinois as part of the NFCA Leadoff Classic in Columbus, Ga. this weekend.

UMass to play 3 more ranked teams

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

This weekend brings another tournament and another trip into the southern hemisphere for the No. 17 Massachusetts softball team.

Last weekend the Minutewomen (6-4) traveled to Cathedral City, Calif. for the Cathedral City Classic. UMass, much like last weekend, is going to take on some of the best teams in the country in the NFCA Leadoff Classic in Columbus, Ga.

"I think [this weekend] we're going to have five teams that are really going to come at us offensively," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "All five schools have great [pitching] staff earned-run averages, so we're going to see good pitching. We just have to do what we've been doing and hopefully we'll get better."

The Minutewomen will take on Nebraska (6-3) on Friday in the first game of the tournament. The Cornhuskers boast a solid offensive team that begins with Heidi Foland. Foland leads Nebraska with three home runs and 11 runs batted in. Despite her relatively low batting average (.280) compared to the rest of her team, she ranks among the leaders on the team in runs scored and hits.

UMass will take on No. 15 Georgia (15-1) in the second part of the day's doubleheader. Since it will be the Bulldogs' first game of the day, the Minutewomen will likely face UGA's ace, Christie Hamilton. So far this season Hamilton has dominated her opposition, posting a 5-0 record with a 0.43 ERA.

And for whatever reason the Minutewomen don't face Hamilton, they get to face Georgia's No. 2 pitcher, Sarah McCloud, who has also pitched for the Bulldogs extremely efficiently. McCloud's posted a 5-1 record and 1.50 ERA.

Saturday, starting at 4 p.m., UMass starts its day against Mississippi State. MSU comes into the tournament riding an eight-game win streak. In this past week's poll the Bulldogs received votes to enter the ESPN/USA Today Softball Collegiate Top 25 poll after going 5-0 in the Bulldog Classic last week in Mississippi.

Against teams like MSU, who are fast on the basepaths, Sortino knows that the UMass pitchers can't afford to give up many hits.

"That's something we're going to need to be ready for," said Sortino, regarding MSU's stealing threat in Chelsea Bramlett. "They just like to steal."

UMass takes on No. 22 Southern Illinois (11-0) and No. 3 Alabama (12-1) Saturday at 6:30 p.m. and Sunday at 10 a.m., respectively.

In perhaps UMass' biggest game of the season the Minutewomen will take on a Crimson Tide team that recently went 4-1 in the Cathedral City Classic, the tournament UMass played in last weekend.

The strength of Alabama is its ability to spread its offense. The Crimson Tide has four players that have 10 RBIs or more and four starters hitting better than .400.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Teya Wright's status is still up in the air for Sunday's regular season finale against La Salle at the Mullins Center. Wright suffered a concussion last weekend against Rhode Island.

UM hosts La Salle in final regular season contest

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

With one game remaining in the regular season, the Massachusetts women's basketball team could not have asked for a better conference matchup than La Salle.

The Explorers, one of the Atlantic 10's worst teams, only have one conference win under their belt. What makes this matchup especially favorable for UMass, though, is La Salle's 3-point field goal defense, which is last in the conference.

If UMass (11-17, 4-8 A-10) has displayed anything this season, it is the ability to shoot the 3-pointer, becoming the most prolific 3-point shooting team in school history. Most individual and team school records have been shattered by this year's team.

UMass features three major threats from behind the arc, senior Stefanie Gerardot, freshman Kristina Danella and sophomore Cene Mosgrove, although Mosgrove has recently lost playing time to Danella. La Salle (10-8, 1-12 A-10), however, counters with junior Jamie Walsh, who is currently second in the A-10 with 2.2 3-pointers per game.

Despite this game being UMass' conference finale, the A-10 tournament seedings are all but locked up. By losing to both teams with five conference wins (Saint Joseph's and Dayton) the Minutewomen lose the tie-breaker for seedings, but are still clinched as a participant.

Sunday's matchup marks the last home game for UMass as the team will be celebrating senior day. The ceremony will be short, however, as the team's roster only includes two seniors: Gerardot and Sakera Young.

The Minutewomen, though, will not be the youngest team on the court. La Salle only boasts one senior, guard Margaret Elderton, on its roster. While she leads the team in years played, Elderton is also the team's assist leader (3.7 per game) and second-leading scorer (11.3 points per game).

In addition to their trouble defending shooting from 3-point range, the Explorers are also the worst rebounding team in the conference with only 31.6 boards per game.

Ordinarily, UMass would have an enormous advantage in the rebounding department, but sophomore Teya Wright has yet to see the court since her concussion in Sunday's game against Rhode Island.

Wright, the team's leading rebounder and best post player, missed Wednesday's game against Saint Joseph's and her status is still in question. In her absence, junior Kim Benton and Young – the team's two shortest players – led the team in rebounding with six each.

Although UMass benefitted from a number of players stepping up on the glass in Wright's absence, it was not enough for the win. The three players that were expected to step up when Wright went out, Danella and sophomores Stephanie Lawrence and Valene Avebe, combined for three rebounds against SJU, all from Avebe.

All season, UMass has struggled to find a player to complement Wright. Freshman Nicole Jones has the size, but has not developed her post game. Lawrence and Avebe, meanwhile, have been good during some stretches this season, but struggle with consistency.

If Wright is out, the Minutewomen are going to struggle to defend La Salle's Morgan Robinson. Although, as a team, the Explorers have difficulty with rebounding, Robinson has the sixth most rebounds in the A-10, averaging 8.4 per contest. Robinson, who is also the team's leading scorer with 12.2 points per game, receives little help from her teammates as no other La Salle player averages more than four rebounds.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

UMass can clinch A–10 bid with win

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The best way to head into a conference tournament is red hot and on a run.

For the Massachusetts men's basketball team, there's not much time left to get hot, and before they can do that, they may want to make sure they make the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

With three games left and a trip to Philadelphia on Sunday to take on La Salle at 5 p.m., the Minutemen will have an opportunity to get back in the win column as well as inch closer to an A-10 Tournament berth.

It would take a collapse from UMass (10-16, 5-8 A-10), coupled with a George Washington resurgence to knock the Minutemen to 13th in the conference standings and out of the tournament. But with GW (9-16, 3-10 A-10) coming to Amherst next Wednesday, anything is possible.

With a victory on Sunday over the Explorers (14-12, 5-7 A-10), the Minutemen can bring their magic number to one, or, with a George Washington loss on Saturday at Richmond, clinch an A-10 berth. A victory will also give UMass the opportunity to string a few wins together in the conference before the tournament, something they haven't done all season.

The Minutemen, who are 3-9 on the road this season, will be out for revenge on top of everything else come Sunday, after losing at home to La Salle, 62-54, on Jan. 24. Much of the loss could be blamed on UMass' poor shooting (33.9 percent), but the Minutemen had a warm up Wednesday when they hit a school-record 16 3-pointers in the loss to Duquesne, and will hope to carry their hot hands over till the weekend.

Senior Tony Gaffney led the Minutemen back in the first meeting with a double-double of 19 points and 11 rebounds, while Chris Lowe (10) was the only other player to score in double figures for UMass. At the same time, Ricky Harris had the worst scoring output of his season when he scored just six points on 3-of-11 shooting and missed all six of his 3-point shots.

While the Minutemen will hope to carry over their shooting from Wednesday's loss, it's a different story for their defense – they gave up a season-high 94 points against the Dukes, not to mention 14 layups and seven dunks.

"When Duquesne came back at us, we didn't respond very well," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said Wednesday after the loss. "I thought we went on our heels. We didn't quite battle back as hard as I would have liked."

The Explorers (70.5 points per game) are not as prolific a scoring team in conference play as Duquesne (79.3 ppg), but will come at UMass with a balanced attack. Four of La Salle's players average double figures in points, led by Rodney Green's 16.7 ppg. Even on the boards the Explorers are very balanced and averaging 37.5 rebounds per game in conference play compared to UMass' 34.4.

While UMass has Gaffney dominating the boards with 10.4 rebounds per game – 16th in the nation – La Salle's leading rebounder, Yves Mekongo Mbala, grabs just 6.4 per game and five other Explorers average at least 3.7 rebounds per game.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Luke Bonner, bottom, battles for a loose ball in UMass' previous meeting this season with La Salle, a 62–54 loss for the Minutemen. They square off again Sunday in Philadelphia.

2009 brings new schedule, coaches

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

A year after a grueling schedule mixed the Massachusetts football team's chances for a third straight playoff appearance, the Minutemen released their 2009 schedule which has the potential to be just as arduous as last year's.

UMass is currently staring down the barrel of a schedule that features a major FBS opponent and the defending FCS National Champions.

The newly released schedule, which begins on Sept. 5 against FBS opponent Kansas State, will include six games at McGuirk Alumni Stadium, two of which are games against rival New Hampshire and national semifinalist James Madison.

The Minutemen, who missed the playoffs last year, will face four teams that made it last year: New Hampshire, Maine, James Madison and national champion Richmond.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Defensive coordinator Keith Dudzinski will call the plays on defense during the 2009 season, taking over the duties from former coach Don Brown. UMass will open the season against Kansas State.

"We are playing the typical UMass schedule that is ultra-competitive," said UMass coach Kevin Morris, who was named the team's head coach on Jan. 19, replacing Don Brown. "Each and every week we will be challenged by some of the top teams in the country. We open with a big game at FBS team Kansas State and then follow that with three home games at McGuirk.

"We are looking forward to playing in front of our home fans who have been so supportive in recent years. With the lights and the turf and a terrific fan base, we have a true home-field advantage at McGuirk."

After opening the season against KSU, the Minutemen will host three straight games against Albany, Rhode Island and Stony Brook. Then, following a bye week, UMass enters an intense four-game stretch against Colonial Athletic Association opponents.

Starting off at Delaware, the four-game stretch includes three playoff teams in UNH, Richmond and Maine. The Minutemen play at home in what will likely be a heated matchup against New Hampshire before going on the road against Richmond and Maine.

Following the Maine game will be back-to-back home games against conference foes Northeastern and James Madison. Closing out the season will be a game at Hofstra on Nov. 21.

Coaching changes

With Brown moving on from UMass to become the defensive coordinator at the University of Maryland and Morris being promoted from offensive coordinator to head coach, the UMass team announced two new hirings and other changes amongst the current staff.

Joining the UMass coaching staff will be a former UMass assistant and a coach switching over from a CAA rival.

Dyran Peake, who acted as assistant defensive backs coach, cornerbacks coach and special teams coordinator throughout his four-year tenure at Delaware, was named assistant coach for defensive backs for the Minutemen.

Returning to Amherst will be Steve Tirrell who, after spending two years as associate head coach at Nichols College, will be named associate coach, special teams coordinator and defensive line coach. Tirrell held the same position for four years at UMass before leaving for Nichols in 2007.

As for the Minutemen's current staff, there will be a number of internal changes.

Filling in Morris' position as offensive coordinator will be run-game coordinator and offensive line coach Brian Picucci, who is entering his eighth year as a UMass coach. Picucci will retain some of his offensive line duties as he will continue to work with the tackles and tight ends.

Other staff changes include sixth-year coach Guido Falbo moving to coach centers and guards from his old position as running backs coach. Taking up the reins for the running back position will be Mike Wood, who worked as UMass tight ends coach for the past three years.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

comics

JORNALISM AT ITS FINEST

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Survey Takers Needed: Make $5 - $25 per survey. Do it in your spare time. www.GetPaidToThink.com

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lake-front cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, lifeguarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders, & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

ANNOUNCMENT

Worship at Dwight Chapel on Sunday mornings at 9 or 11. For rides and information please call us at 256-8059 or visit www.dwightchapel.org

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com, Montrealexpress.net. 781-979-9001/ 781-979-0076

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-233

MISCELLANEOUS

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900

Spring Break 09
TRAVEL FREE
LOW LOW PRICES!!
WE HAVE IT ALL...
Sun Splash
BOOK NOW!!
1800-426-7710
www.sunsplashtours.com

FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for HUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstrealty.com 253-7879/ 781-979-0076

Amherst 2, 3, & 4 Bedroom Apartments. Call for huge rent specials on both Immediate and Summer/ Fall rentals! Beautiful property on the bus line to Umass. Air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Free Heat! 2 BR $1200-$1250, 3 BR $1500-$1550, 4 BR $2250. www.MillValleyApts.com 413-253-7377 or stop by at 420 Riverglade Drive.

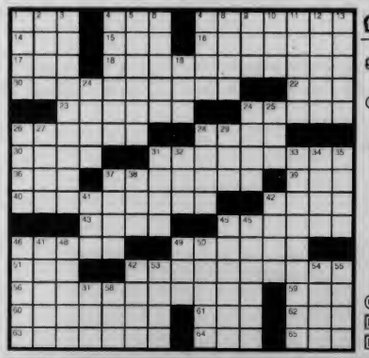
ACROSS
1 "Nova" network
4 Heavy-hearted
7 Systematic procedure
14 Swiss peak
15 Actor Tognazzi
16 Very angry
17 Part of rpm
18 Jurassic beasts
20 Cases of infidelity
22 Tennis do-over
23 Two-wheeled carriage
24 Takes a break
26 Ryan and Worth
28 Spinnaker or jib
30 Pheasant's brood
31 Forties
36 Dallas sch.
37 Northern Ireland capital
39 Get it wrong
40 Plimpton book
42 Jockey's strap
43 Speech defect
44 Former Spanish dictator
46 Syrup tree
49 Shoots for grafting
51 Id's relative
52 Cave hanger
56 Censures severely
59 Take in food
60 Earhart and Bloomer
61 Chill
62 Theater-sign letters
63 Cargoe
64 Decompose
65 2000 lbs.

DOWN
1 Father
2 Used leeches
3 Took care of grooming
4 Ingeniously simple
5 Concurs
6 Armoire parts
7 Ceremony
8 Eve's grandson
9 Neon, for one
10 Writer Levin
11 Heavy hammers
12 Heronlike wading bird
13 Cozy abodes
19 Actress Peeples
21 Narrow road
24 Uproar
25 Diminutive being
26 Title for M. Clouseau
27 "Green Mansions" girl
28 Team of oxen
29 Numbskull
31 Fastener
32 ET's vehicle
33 Rivet and bitterest
34 Stoltz of "Mask"
35 Tuscany river
37 French cheese
38 Emie of golf
41 Hospital wing
42 Talk wildly
44 Plop
45 Missile
46 Conductive element
47 Old World lizard
48 Jabbed
49 Plopped
50 Verlaine poem, "... de lune"
52 Lone invitee
53 Heave
54 Tropical root
55 Stiff collar
57 Actor Wallach
58 Wickedness

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

www.dailycollegian.com

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach



THINK AHEAD

Two 6-week summer sessions

Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net

Registration begins March 9

SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

follow the breadcrumbs

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

CAUTION:

ENTERING REDUCED THOUGHT AREA

SOME NEVER RETURN

Crunchy number cereal.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 3 | 9 | | | | 8 | 5 | |
| | | 8 | 3 | | 4 | 6 | | |
| 6 | 4 | | | | | | 3 | 1 |
| | | | 4 | 2 | 3 | | | |
| | | | | 8 | | | | |
| | | | 1 | 5 | 6 | | | |
| 8 | 6 | | | | | | 9 | 3 |
| | | 7 | 9 | | 8 | 4 | | |
| | 9 | 4 | | | | 1 | 7 | |

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You know in your heart that you'll never use all those free condoms you've collected.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You need a pet, but you are not quite ready to take care of a helpless, living creature. Start with a pet cactus, and work upwards.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
When Obama said he wanted to invest in "green" initiatives to create jobs, no one realized that he meant bong factories.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your going to be the first star to go from a humble start shovelling manure to Beverly Hills, and then back to shovelling manure.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Today you will stumble on the missing link between early humanoids and today's humans: Rush Limbaugh.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Fall of the American Empire, Reason #205: Mexico is an uncomfortable chair to sit in.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You're still waiting for a pack of naked girls to run by you while you walk to class, but it's yet to happen. Have faith.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Life for you is normally a roller coaster, but lately it's been more like the Death Drop. Keep all hands and feet inside the vehicle.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Like Superman, you have been having a problem with accidentally killing your lovers in the heat of intercourse.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If it seems like just yesterday that you had cigarettes, you're right.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your weekly newsletter is going to see its popularity explode now that you are including pictures of your naked ex.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Violence is not the answer, but it's normally pretty funny to watch.

QUOTE OF THE WEEKEND

"No man is exempt from saying silly things; the mischief is to say them deliberately."

— Michel de Montaigne

BLISS By Harry Bliss

"They're real."

Hard-hitting 2009 schedule

P.J. Stanley/Collegian

UMass announces 2009 schedule, coaching hirings (page 13)

MEN'S BASKETBALL

The Minutemen travel back to Philadelphia this weekend hoping the return to the "City of Brotherly Love" results in another win and a berth into the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

SEE PAGE 13

SOFTBALL

Another weekend, another slate of games against some of the toughest teams in the country for the Minutewomen. UMass will face three ranked teams, including No. 3 Alabama.

SEE PAGE 12

DAILY COLLEGIAN sports WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

MARCH

Not Published

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY
COLLEGIAN

HI: 25 LO: 6 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MARCH 3, 2009

SGA to hold election debate

The debate for the Student Government Association President and Trustee will be held tonight at the Student Union Ballroom at 7 p.m.

The candidates for SGA President are Governor of Southwest Chris Faulkner and Vice President of the African Students Association Ngozi Mbawuike. Emily Bloch, a campus organizer with the Center for Education Policy Advocacy, is running with Mbawuike for Trustee and Josh Davidson, an SGA senator on the Ways and Means Committee is running with Faulkner.

This year's SGA election, scheduled for March 10th and 11th, comes amid campus concerns about the $1,500 fee increase approved at Friday's trustee meeting in Dartmouth.

Other recent campus concerns focus on the possibility of a shift to online balloting for SGA elections, lingering concerns over issues relating to campus diversity, and issues of communication between both the administration and the SGA with the general campus community.

The biggest apparent difference between the two campaigns lies in the Mbawuike/Bloch campaign platform's greater emphasis on statewide organizing; through working with lobbying and advocacy programs that push to hold both school and state authorities more accountable for their decisions.

The Faulkner/Davidson campaign platform places more emphasis on internal campus changes such as improved wireless Internet access, campus energy efficiency and further focus on UMass Amherst's status as a flagship school.

Additionally, each campaign's platform offers promises of a more inclusive SGA. Faulkner/Davidson offer further outreach to RSO leaders and use of outlets to improve communication such as The Daily Collegian and a new SGA website. The Mbawuike/Bloch campaign offers similar promises with bi-monthly SGA newsletters, new connections with Resident Life to encourage participation, and a new website.

Tonight's debate will consist of five questions that will be asked to both candidates along with five questions that are specific to each campaign's platform.

Student suggestions for debate questions can be sent to mgfox@student.umass.edu.

-Mike Fox

Trustees pass increase

Administrators vote to raise fees by $1,500 for next year

By Niina Heikkinen
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees voted, 12-to-4, to approve a fee increase of $1,500 per student for the next academic year on Friday in Dartmouth, Mass.

Trustees cited the need to close a $102 million state funding gap. The reduced funding would effectively reduce the UMass budget to 1997-1998 levels.

With the new fiscal plan in effect, the average cost of tuition and fees for in-state undergraduates will increase from $9,548 this year to $11,048 beginning in the 2009-2010 academic year.

"The University of Massachusetts is taking a responsible, balanced step in order to ensure academic quality and financial stability," UMass President Jack M. Wilson said. "Despite the economic uncertainty of the moment, UMass is on a strong footing and will provide opportunity and quality to the sons and daughters of the Commonwealth."

In a mass e-mail to the student body, Chancellor Robert C. Holub said roughly one-third of the fees' revenue will go directly back to students in the form of expanded financial aid for students with the greatest financial need.

The proposed fee increase incited vehement student response last week, even before the measure was approved on Friday. Graduate and undergraduate students traveled to UMass-Dartmouth on Feb. 27 to join students from the UMass campuses in Dartmouth, Lowell, Boston and Worcester to protest the decision.

"We feel that it is an unnecessary fee increase because we know that money is coming in from the federal stimulus package that will hopefully alleviate UMass' operating budget," said Lindsay McCluskey, an SGA student trustee at a student protest on campus last Wednesday.

UMass officials are also looking to the federal stimulus money as a way to offset the impact of the fee increases.

According to Wilson, some or all students could be eligible to receive a fee rebate under the new fiscal plan, depending on the amount of funding the University receives from the federal stimulus package.

In an effort to make the fee hike less of a blow to students, the board also approved a freeze on most non-mandatory fees at 2008-09 levels.

"Even though we have made plans to blunt the effects of a fee increase, our preferred course would still be to obtain stimulus funds that would allow us to rebate some or all of this increase," Wilson said in a statement.

The board's finance committee had rejected a proposal the previous week that would have raised student fees by $3,100.

The increase will come just as applications to each of the UMass campuses have risen to near-record levels.

Niina Heikkinen can be reached at nheikkin@student.umass.edu.

Students protest the fee increase Friday at the University of Massachusetts Dartmouth, where the trustees held the vote.

Young women from Sierra Leone, above, are painted white after undergoing female circumcision to symbolize their newfound cleanliness and purity. The controversial surgery is part of a traditional practice in some tribes.

UM hosts 'Secret Pain'

By Lisa DeBenedictis
Collegian Staff

Six thousand girls are circumcised in Sierra Leone every day, and Kate Kendel is ready to talk about it.

Kendel, a filmmaker from Sierra Leone who underwent circumcision at the age of 16, visited the University of Massachusetts on Thursday, Feb. 26 to host the viewing of her documentary "The Secret Pain" to students and faculty.

The documentary follows Kendel on a journey back to her home countrty in an attempt to bring attention and awareness to both its own people and to the Western world.

"I'm going back and reliving my childhood," said Kendel.

Female circumcision, referred to as female genital mutilation by its critics (including Kendel), is the partial or total removal of a woman's clitoris, labia minora and labia majora for cultural or religious purposes rather than medical or therapeutic ones, according to the World Health Organization.

Although female circumcision is performed in many countries around the world, the secrecy surrounding the act makes it difficult to track. Kendel's documentary focuses on the traditional practices of female circumcision in some tribes of Sierra Leone.

Kendel explained at the beginning of the film that, although many young women are being circumcised, they must take an oath immediately following the ceremony never to speak of it again. This oath, in addition to the cultural taboo that surrounds female circumcision, made it very difficult for Kendel to speak with anyone about it, and made the trip itself a risky one.

"I am an African woman, a traditional woman, so I have nothing to say about it. Don't put me in trouble," said Amenata Suta, Kendel's sister in her interview.

Filming interviews with local doctors, everyday people in the city and countryside, religious leaders, her own family, local women who have undergone female circumcision and even the "digbas" or the midwife-like women who perform the surgeries, allowed for Kendel to learn more about this tradition from different perspectives.

While "The Secret Pain" does not film any female circumcisions, the camera crew was allowed access to a "kanta," a stronghold where the ceremony takes place.

The young women are taken to a kanta, where they are circumcised by the digbas. Afterward, they are painted white to symbolize their newfound cleanliness and purity, and they remain in the kanta, separated from the rest of the community for several weeks until they are fully healed.

As the camera panned across the faces of the young women in the kanta, the ranging age differences became apparent: toddlers all the way up to late teenage years.

See SECRET PAIN on page 3

Gonzalez addresses Latinos on campus

By Gisel Saillant
Collegian Staff

On the last Wednesday of each month, University of Massachusetts students are invited to attend the "Wednesday Luncheon" hosted by the Bilingual Collegiate program. Aside from the yellow rice, roasted pork shoulder and avocados that were served last week, Carlos Gonzalez, the president of the Latino Chamber of Commerce and a UMass alumnus, came to speak on the future of Latino businesses, politics and community responsibility.

Gonzalez, who founded the Latino Chamber of Commerce in 2004, spoke to those gathered about the importance of running one's own business.

Gonzalez shared his experiences on going to a second-grade class and listening to students who were running a pencil business and how they would sell and share the profits among themselves. He compared the students to those in a high school class he visited in which the students had goals of working in offices but not of owning their own businesses.

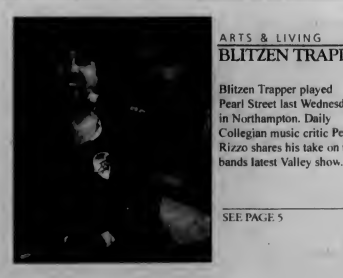
Gonzalez also frowned upon the "6 o'clock Latino" stereotype. He said the negative images of Latinos in the media, often focusing on teen pregnancy, and the lack of coverage on the Latino population, including UMass students, shows how bad news always makes the front page.

"They don't talk about you guys," Gonzalez said of those in attendance at the luncheon.

Gonzalez emphasized that the interaction between business and politics contributed to the attendees' dislike for politics. Gonzalez said politics follow people from birth to death, since a state official must sign a birth certificate to indicate a birth and a death certificate indicating a death.

Referring to President Barack Obama's address to Congress regarding the responsibility to family, friends and community, Gonzalez mentioned how he gave similar remarks in 2001 about community engagement. Gonzalez said Latino students serve as role models for their community and that the attendees should see themselves as that, since Obama won because people believed in him.

"Carlos Gonzalez was an excellent speaker," said Modesto Montero, a UMass political science major. "As a Latino student, I felt much pride while listening to his testimony and the work that he has done and continues to do. It served as a source of inspiration and reminded me of how far we've come and also how far we can go.



"What was most astonishing is the fact that he is an active member of the community he seeks to help," Montero continued. "He is 'un orgullo Hispano' [an admirable Hispanic], and I hope that in my lifetime I can accomplish a mere fraction of what he has accomplished. He is not just a businessman or a leader but a role model to the Latino community."

The Latino Chamber of Commerce supports the advancement of education and economic growth of Latino businesses and communities. It also works closely with for-profit and non-profit businesses and organizations, as well as local and state chambers of commerce and the U.S. Hispanic Chamber of Commerce, to push development throughout the state.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu.

Carlos Gonzalez, a UMass alumnus and founder of the Latino Chamber of Commerce, spoke to students last Wednesday.

ARTS & LIVING
BLITZEN TRAPPER

Blitzen Trapper played Pearl Street last Wednesday in Northampton. Daily Collegian music critic Peter Rizzo shares his take on the bands latest Valley show.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
7 FOR CONNOLLY

Senior Jim Connolly scored seven goals as the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team had little problems with Yale, 18-6, during Saturday afternoon's trouncing at Garber Field.

SEE PAGE 12

EDITORAL & OPINION

MATT ROBARE –
LIBERAL AND CONSERVATIVE AREN'T THE ONLY TWO IDEOLOGIES ON THIS CAMPUS, AND LIBERTARIANS ARE TIRED OF BEING LUMPED IN WITH CONSERVATIVES.

SEE PAGE 5

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

THE TWO TICKETS FOR UMASS' NEXT STUDENT BODY PRESIDENT AND TRUSTEE EXPLAIN WHY THEY ARE THE RIGHT PEOPLE TO LEAD THE STATE'S FLAGSHIP.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 25

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Wanczenik
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor James Mathews
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenzweig
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor P.J. Stanley
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kocsvara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Asst. Editorial Leigh Greaney
Asst. Editorial Nick O'Malley
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo Ryan Fung
Assistant Photo Matthew Harrison
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Welsver

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenues. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Joe Meloni

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION TEAM
Dan Centola

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

MONDAY

NEWS
News Editor William McGuinness blogs on Jason Vassell's evidentiary hearing from Northampton.
Spend the snow day on "Editor's Note"

TUESDAY
Podcast:
A roundtable of The Collegian's reporters and editors discuss the University system's financial crisis and what it may mean looking ahead.

Video:
Collegian reporter and UVC-TV 19 correspondent Gisel Saillant holds little back while soliciting real student opinion on a variety of issues.

WEDNESDAY
News Editor William McGuinness writes on going under the knife and his semester so far as a gerbil for UMass Kinesiology;
Emily Reynolds updates on UMass reseach projects for the news blog Research this Week.

LATER THIS WEEK
Catch the best video, audio and slideshow exclusives on campus events only on dailycollegian.com.

Community Clips: March 3–7

Exhibit: Natural History Prints
An exhibit of photographs by John Green consisting of 14 photographic prints taken with a film camera using natural light.
Tuesday, Jan. 6 to Sunday May 3
Library, Integrated Sciences & Engineering

Exhibit: Sheron Rupp: Dialogue with a Collection
The University Gallery presents "Sheron Rupp: Dialogue with a Collection," in which the photographer, Sheron Rupp, was invited to curate an exhibition from the Gallery's holdings and to integrate their own works in direct dialogue within the exhibition.
Thursday, Feb. 5 to Sunday March 29
Fine Arts Center- University Gallery

Exhibit: Miroslaw Balka: Gravity
The University Gallery is pleased to premiere recent video works by the internationally acclaimed Polish artist Miroslaw Balka.
Thursday, Feb. 5 to Sunday, May 24
Fine Arts Center-University Gallery

Art Exhibit: Gems in the Valley
This exhibit will showcase works by renowned painter and long-standing member of the Pioneer Valley, Nelson Stevens.
Monday, Feb. 9 to Friday March 13
Augusta Savage Gallery 101 New Africa House

Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program
The Volunteer Income Tax Assistance Program at the Isenberg School of Management is offering free income tax assistance to qualified taxpayers.
Tuesday, Feb. 10 to Thursday, April 9
Isenberg School of Management 27

Battle of the Bands Submissions
Submit a CD with at least one song for a chance to play at the Battle of the Bands. The winner will the opening act for Spring Concert 2009.
Tuesday, Feb. 10 to Friday, March 6
Student Union Resource Room

Five College Opera Project
Henry Purcell: Dido & Aeneas & Kurt Weill/Bertolt Brecht: Seven Deadly Sins.
Saturday, Feb. 28 to Sunday March 1
Rooke Theater

Dogma
1999 comedy, March 8, 7 p.m.
The Montague Bookmill, 440 Greenfield Road, Montague. Part of the Free Films for the Frozen series. Donations accepted. (413) 367-9206.

Mamma Mia! The Sing-Along
Out For Reel! Film Series sponsors screening March 6, 7 p.m., Academy of Music, 274 Main St., Northampton.
After-film party at the Hotel Northampton
$3 w/ticket stub; $4 without. $10 advance; $12 at door; $8 college students.
www.outforReel.org

Cuentos de Eva Luna
Stories of Eva Luna- Adaptation of Isabel Allende novel by Ellen Kaplan
Feb. 27-28, March 4-7, 8 p.m., Hallie Flanagan Studio Theatre, Mendenhall Center, Smith College, Northampton.
$8 general; $5 students and seniors. Dollar night March 4. 585-2787.

Auditions
Renaissance Center Theater Co. holds open auditions for The Merry Wives of Windsor March 1, 1-4 p.m.; March 2, 7-9 p.m.
Massachusetts Center for Renaissance Studies, 650 E. Pleasant St., Amherst.
Sign up or walk-ins welcome. Ann Garner at anngarner@mac.com.

Banrion Boru
Old Deerfield Productions presents excerpt from new musical by playwright Talaya Delaney and composer Rosemary Caine
March 4, 12:30 p.m.
Academy of Music, 274 Main St., Northampton.
Part of the Academy Lunch Box Series. Free. 584-9032.

Almost, Maine
Magical realist comedy by John Cariani
March 5-7, 8 p.m., Kirby Theater, Amherst College, Amherst.
Free. 542-2277 for advance tickets.

Western Massachusetts Sacred Harp Singing Convention
Free participatory shape-note singing event March 7-8, 9:30 a.m.-3:30 p.m. Northampton Center for the Arts, 17 New South Street, Northampton.
No experience necessary; all welcome. www.wmshc.org

Holub freezes parking fees

Chancellor Robert C. Holub has frozen parking fee increases as a gesture to campus employees, who will not receive pay raises this year due to the current economic climate.

According to an e-mail Holub sent to UMass faculty and staff, previous contract agreements with unions on campus allow the administration to raise annual parking fees.

Due to the $102 million budget shortfall the University faces next year, pay raises will not be possible.

While keeping parking fees the same will not offset that considerably, Holub felt it was the wrong time to add insult to injury by raising fees that tax campus employees.

The freeze will go into effect July 1, 2009, when fiscal year 2010 begins.

"This agreement, based on fiscal year 2008 compensation increases, would result in an approximate 4 percent increase in parking fees for fiscal 2010," said Holub. "However, in recognition of the difficulty that such an increase would present for our faculty and staff in the face of the Commonwealth's inability to fund any salary increases this year, and the likelihood that it will fund only modest increases next year, we have decided to impose a freeze on parking fees for next year. As a result, fiscal 2010 parking rates for all faculty and staff will be unchanged from those currently in effect.

"We know that this is a modest benefit," Holub added, "But we hope it will be of some help to our faculty and staff, whose continuing efforts on behalf of the campus are deeply appreciated."

–Ben Williams

'No-frills' college plan intrigues many

By Susan Snyder
The Philadelphia Inquirer

PHILADELPHIA— A private university in New Hampshire is offering students a "no-frills" option: more than a 50 percent cut in tuition if they take courses at a satellite campus and forgo many amenities.

In New Jersey, Richard Stockton College will allow students to take from 12 to 20 credits for a flat rate.

And elsewhere, some colleges are running three-year degree programs, so students can get through school more quickly and save money, using a model common in Europe.

The idea of less costly or "no-frills" universities – as proposed by Pennsylvania last month – is under discussion and in some cases is playing out in other communities around the country, as the economy worsens and the price tag for higher education continues to rise.

"It's an idea whose time has come," said Richard Vedder, director of the Center for College Affordability and Productivity, a Washington think tank. "Right now, we're in a recession, and everyone is more cost-conscious than ever. College costs are rising faster than people's incomes, and this can't continue."

The cost of higher education, on average, has increased about 3 percent above inflation annually, Vedder said.

It was the issue of cost that prompted the Pennsylvania State Board of Education last month in a report to suggest that the state consider establishing "no-frills" schools.

While details have not been worked out, the proposal generally calls for the colleges to offer an accelerated year-round program for bachelor's degrees that focus on education. They could operate much as a four-year version of a community college and would forgo sports teams, extracurriculars, super gymnasiums, plum dorms, and other amenities.

"We've gotten lots of positive comments from students and families, and we've also gotten calls from other states about it," said Jim Buckheit, executive director of the State Board of Education. "It's certainly an idea that has touched a nerve."

College affordability recently was rated among the five most important issues for state legislators, according to the Denver-based National Conference of State Legislatures.

Some critics of rising costs have described a race of sorts in which schools are vying for top students by offering the biggest and best of everything. Even some state schools have joined in. Colleges in the Pennsylvania State System of Higher Education are replacing traditional dorms with apartment-style living spaces.

Need An Apartment?
PUFFTON VILLAGE
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Write For News
Contact Will McGuinness
at
news@dailycollegian.com

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

2X Tuesday
Domino's Pizza
Buy any large pizza, get second one FREE
413-256-8911

Alumni Association
UMassAlumni.com/students
You were. You are. UMASS.
Student Alumni Association
GOT JOB?
Networking, Self-Marketing & Interviewing Skills
Campus to Career - Alumni Panel
Tuesday, March 3 • 5:30 p.m. - RSVP Today!
Memorial Hall (between Herter Hall and the Old Chapel)
PANELISTS INCLUDE:
FREE REFRESHMENTS
Thanks to the support of Cape Cod Chips and Kraft/Nabisco
Attend to enter the drawings!
Movie passes • $20 UStore gift card • Seniors only: $1,000 cash prize

UMass and Berkeley develop data storage

By Gary Tarantino
Collegian Staff

Scientists at the University of Massachusetts and the University of California, Berkeley have developed a new technology that allows microscopic nanoscale elements to precisely assemble themselves over large surfaces, which may drastically increase the storage capacity of electronic devices.

Scientists say the technique could pave the way for dramatic improvements in the ability of devices to store data.

"I expect that the new method we developed will transform the microelectronic and storage industries, and open up vistas for entirely new applications," said co-lead investigator Thomas Russell, director of the Materials Research Science and Engineering Center at UMass and one of the world's leading experts on the behavior of polymers.

"This work could possibly be translated into the production of more energy-efficient photovoltaic cells, for instance," he added.

Russell envisioned this new idea with co-lead investigator Ting Xu, a UC Berkeley assistant professor. A description of their work can be found in the Feb. 20 issue of a journal called Science.

"The density achievable with the technology we've developed could potentially enable the contents of 250 DVDs to fit onto a surface the size of a quarter," said Xu.

Here's how the nanotechnology works: Xu explained that the molecules in the thin film of block copolymers (two or more chemically dissimilar polymer chains linked together) self-assemble into an extremely precise, equidistant pattern when spread out on a surface.

For more than a decade, researchers have been trying to exploit this characteristic for use in semiconductor manufacturing, but they have been constrained because the order starts to break down as the size of the area increases.

Once the formation breaks down, the individual domains cannot be read or written to, rendering them useless as a form of data storage.

To overcome this size constraint, Russell and Xu decided to layer the film of block copolymers onto the surface of a commercially available sapphire crystal.

When the crystal is cut at an angle – a common procedure known as a miscut – and heated to 1,300 to 1,500 degrees Centigrade (2,372 to 2,732 degrees Fahrenheit) for 24 hours, its surface reorganizes into a highly ordered pattern of sawtooth ridges that can then be used to guide the self-assembly of the block polymers.

With this technique, the researchers achieved defect-free arrays of nanoscopic elements with feature sizes as small as three nanometers, translating into densities of 10 terabytes per square inch. One terabit is equal to 1 trillion bytes, or 125 gigabytes.

There are few limitations to how large this block copolymer array can be produced because crystals come in a variety of sizes, the researchers said.

They also noted that the angle and depth of the sawtooth ridges can be easily varied by changing the temperature at which the crystal is heated to fine-tune the desired pattern.

"We can generate nearly perfect arrays over macroscopic surfaces where the density is over 15 times higher than anything achieved before," said Russell. "With that order of density, one could get a high-definition picture on a screen the size of a JumboTron."

"It's one thing to get dozens of soldiers to stand in perfect formation in an area the size of a classroom, each person equidistant from the other, but quite another to get tens of trillions of individuals to do so on the field in a football stadium," Xu added. "Using this crystal surface as a guide is like giving the soldiers a marker so they know where to stand."

Other research teams across the country are engaged in similar efforts to break the size barrier of self-assembled block copolymers, but this new project by the UMass-UC Berkeley scientists differs in that it does not rely upon advances in lithography to achieve its goals.

In the semiconductor industry, optical lithography is a process in which light passes through a mask with a desired circuit pattern onto a photosensitive material, or photoresist, that undergoes a chemical change.

Several steps of chemical treatment are then used to develop the desired pattern for subsequent use.

To keep up with Moore's Law, a principle formulated by American scientist Gordon E. Moore in 1965 that states that the number of transistors per silicon chip doubles each year, and the demand for increasingly smaller features for semiconductors and microprocessors, industry has turned to nanolithography and the use of ever-shorter wavelengths of light at greater cost.

"The challenge with photolithography is that it is rapidly approaching the resolution limits of light," said Xu. "In our approach, we shifted away from this 'top-down' method of producing smaller features and instead utilized advantages of a 'bottom-up' approach. The beauty of the method we developed is that it takes from processes already in use in industry, so it will be very easy to incorporate into the production line with little cost."

According to Xu, an added benefit is that "our technique is more environmentally-friendly than photolithography, which requires the use of harsh chemicals and acids."

UMass and UC Berkeley have filed a joint patent on the technology.

Gary Tarantino can be reached at gtarant@student.umass.edu.

Kendel's story a tough one to tell

SECRET PAIN from page 1

After the surgery is completed for the girls, they attend a sort of housekeeping school within the kanta, where they learn to care for the home, clean, cook and entertain the community through dances. When they are fully healed, they wash off the paint in the river, and their families throw celebrations and give them gifts of clothes, shoes and jewelry to welcome them into womanhood.

"I'm not trying to scorn our culture," explained Kendel in an interview with a digba. She said she just feels female circumcision is physically and mentally damaging.

Dr. Koso Thomas, a physician and women's activist from Sierra Leone, emphasized the negative effects of female circumcision during her interview.

"[The digbas] take the clitoris off, and the labia minora and majora. These are the parts that help during the delivery of babies," said Thomas. "The clitoris allows for female orgasm, and the enjoyment of sex. Its removal is permanent."

After the film ended, Kendel spoke briefly about her vision for the film and for her organization, Project Mountaintop for Women's Progress. The title reflects a dream Kendel had that empowered her into activism.

"I was traumatized [by the circumcision] for a long time. I had a vision of a mountain. I climbed it with my mother and my grandmother. At the top of it were other women and children. I realized that I needed to take the focus away from me and to other women," said Kendel.

Her choice to document her own life story and its connection to others who have undergone female circumcision was an attempt to allow outside nations to learn about it as a cultural and traditional practice rather than as malicious treatment of women and to attempt to work with that culture to change its traditions.

"I felt I had to go back and challenge the culture," she said. "It is important to hear the words from the horse's mouth. My intentions were [to come up with] ways to eliminate mutilation. In the Western world, the response has been good, but my own countrymen, they felt that I have been exposing a secret culture."

On her hopes for change, Kendel explained that she believes educating people is the best way to stop female circumcision.

"I think education is the key to life. If we can find a way to preserve the culture and at the same time educate the women ... I believe it is possible," she said.

The film "The Secret Pain" is being sold for $30, with $19 going directly to Project Mountaintop for Women's Progress. For more information, or to purchase the documentary, visit either thesecretpain.com or womensprogress.com.

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebenedictis@dailycollegian.com

Kate Kendel, above, was circumcised in Sierra Leone at the age of 16. Her documentary, "The Secret Pain" tells her story.

Please join us for a discussion with
Israeli and Palestinian peace activists from the OneVoice Movement
ONEVOICE קול אחד صوتنا فلسطين
Thursday, March 5 at 7:30pm
Cape Cod Lounge
Student Union Building
UMass Amherst
"One Million Voices for Peace in the Middle East"
The OneVoice Movement is an international grassroots movement with over 650,000 signatories in Israel and Palestine, and 1,800 highly-trained youth leaders.
It aims to amplify the voice of the overwhelming but silent majority of moderates who wish for peace, working toward a two-state solution guaranteeing an end to occupation and violence, and a viable independent Palestinian state at peace with Israel.
More info at www.umass.edu/jewish or (413) 545-9642
UMASS AMHERST
Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Muslim Students Association, Student Alliance for Israel, Arab Students Club, UMass Muslim Public Affairs Council, and the Center for Student Development, Student Affairs & Campus Life.

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES
Executive Chef Tom Cortes UC Berkeley

Cal Bistro Fare
· Grilled Wild Pacific Halibut with Fennel
· Coq au Vin (in sherry sauce)
· Carved Pork Loin with Honey Mustard Sauce
· And more...
Wednesday, March 4
Berkshire DC from 5–9pm
Restaurants & Institutions Ivy Awards
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Cal Dining
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 3, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Breaking the silence

Let's say I come to your house while you're sitting at home and doing nothing wrong, and I kick you out of your house. Not only do I kick you out, but I also put you in your own backyard, build a fence around you and tell you to stay. I don't let you have food or water and the conditions are miserable.

Subhan Tariq

You stay there for quite sometime and then happen to spot a rock. You think to yourself that if you throw the rock, you have the ability to make my life a little less comfortable inside your house, so you throw it and break a window. In retaliation, I kill you.

Our society stands for democracy: equality for all, under the law as well as in practice. This is what our country spreads around the world, or at least the thought of it. We push for it with our staunchest allies and criticize our enemies for not having a democracy. Perhaps nowhere else in the world is the United States' stance more hypocritical than in Israel.

Here is a country that, by name, is a democracy, but in actuality doesn't follow democratic principles at all. They deny access to highways and other roads to those who aren't Jewish. There are roads that native Palestinians aren't allowed to drive on, a wall separating Israel and its occupied lands and hundreds of checkpoints in Palestinian land to prevent Palestinians from moving and traveling.

The US-Israel love reminds us that Israel is a "beacon of light" for democracy in the Middle East, where people can live and don't have to worry about being oppressed. False.

Israel is in violation of countless UN resolutions and countless more international laws. Building an apartheid wall is against international law and a UN resolution. Occupying the West Bank is against international law and a UN resolution. Building a blockade to prevent the delivery of food, medicine and other essential necessities is against international law. Israel's use of white phosphorus – and it has been proven that they've used it – is against international law, the Fourth Geneva Convention, as well as countless other international regulations.

When it comes time to enforce international law, the United States is silent. And the silence of the United States on the issue is deafening.

Let's say I was to tell you that tomorrow I'm going to walk up to you and throw mud at you. But this wasn't just any type of mud, it was mud that could burn you down to your bone and burn everything you have and everyone you know. What would you do?

That's exactly what Israel did. They sent leaflets letting people know that they were going to bomb their house. Sounds quite heroic right? To let people know so that they can escape – except for one thing, the people had no where to go. Israel had bombed the UN compounds, sealed the borders and continued to bomb civilians.

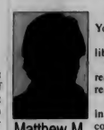
Resistance in the face of occupation is legal under international law, not even to mention that countless laws and resolutions that were violated in order to begin the occupation.

The United States loves to promote free trade in which capitalism can flourish. False.

According to the Bureau of Industry and Security and the U.S. Department of Commerce, "The Bureau is charged with administering and enforcing the Antiboycott Laws under the Export Administration Act. Those laws discourage, and in some circumstances, prohibit U.S. companies from furthering or supporting the boycott of Israel sponsored by the Arab League and certain Muslim countries, including complying with certain requests for information designed to verify compliance with the boycott."

Is that free trade? No. Now, before you say that they are just doing it to protect Israel from the Muslim countries, I say "so what?"

So what if the countries want to boycott Israel? After all, Israel is in violation of international law, UN resolutions and the Fourth Geneva Convention. So what if the Muslim countries want to boycott Israel, is there something anti-democratic about that?



What's funny to me is that some obscure federal law to prevent boycotts on Israel is enforced. Yet, when it comes time to enforce international law, the United States is silent. And the silence of the United States on the issue is deafening.

Now before a group comes together and begins to call me anti-Semitic, let me tell you this, I love Jews. I enjoy the company of Jews and I work very closely with Jews on this campus. I am not criticizing the Jewish people. Rather, I am criticizing the United States in Israel.

Subhan Tariq is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at stariq@student.umass.edu.

Get it right: I am a libertarian

Matthew M. Robare

"I know you're a conservative. You don't want to be here."

"I'm not conservative. I'm a libertarian."

"Conservative-libertarian. I've read your articles, they're very reactionary. You should leave."

With those words delivered in a menacing tone, I was welcomed to a public forum against hate speech last Wednesday by a bald man. The man had a look of such disgust on his face that my first reaction was: "What's a skinhead doing here and how does he know about my Jewish heritage?"

Adding to the irony of being made to feel threatened for holding different political and philosophical beliefs (or it could be my sense of humor, who knows?), at an event where tolerance is presumably a highly-regarded principle, I was being chastised as one of the event's organizers. While this stranger was making me feel threatened, a guy named Dan was saying that in today's society: "If I feel threatened, I am threatened."

I felt so unsafe at this "safe space" – especially with this same semi-skinhead constantly looking over his shoulder at me – that I was very relieved at being able to excuse myself for a meeting back at Collegian HQ, instead of sticking around and reporting like I was supposed to. Yes, UMass, I am a coward, a yellow-belly, a scaredy-cat and a pantywaist.

But not only was I threatened by a pseudo-skinhead, this mockery of a human being had the nerve to threaten me out of ignorance. I am neither conservative nor reactionary. I am a libertarian.

That means that I believe in two political principles. Firstly, I believe that every human being – from the earliest embryo to the oldest, most decrepit, most expensive coma-patient – enjoys the absolute right to the ownership of their bodies. That means that no one can tell you how to live your life, every person is responsible for their own choices and must suffer the consequences of their actions. From that principle, it follows that abortion is wrong, euthanasia is allowable and laws restricting the rights of transgendered people are utterly wrong.

The second principle is the non-aggression axiom: it is wrong to initiate force against another human being. From this principle murder, theft and war are all wrong. Slavery is the utter antithesis of libertarianism because it violates both principles.

To these, I have added my own moral principles. These are the sanctity of all human life, the belief that the ends do not justify the means and that power corrupts.

Not only was I threatened by a pseudo-skinhead, this mockery of a human being had the nerve to threaten me out of ignorance. I am neither conservative nor reactionary. I am a libertarian.

I am wondering how any of these beliefs are conservative or reactionary.

Conservatives might be pro-life, but many of them are also pro-war. Liberals might be opposed to restrictions on sexuality or gender expression (a world where it would be illegal to dress in drag even in the privacy of one's own home? Utter nightmare for me), but they rarely consider the means to the end. The means often involve stealing money from some people and giving it to others under the name of taxation. Both liberals and conservatives want power more than anything.

Or perhaps it was something I wrote in my editorials? Like warning of the dangers of the police – admittedly with regards to illegal searches and seizures – before Jason Vassell was more than a student living in Southwest.

Maybe it was joining in the condemnation of the Iraq War? Or trying to call attention to ongoing genocides in the Democratic Republic of the Congo and elsewhere in the world before The New York Times gave a crap about the place? Perhaps it was being against laws allowing gay marriage because the government shouldn't be involved in marriage of any kind in the first place?

Is wondering how change comes from appointing the people from the establishment Obama repeatedly distanced himself from – including an appointee of the previous president – conservative or reactionary? How is defending Wal-Mart a conservative cause when Hillary Clinton sat on the board of directors for several years?

I appreciate that you have been a loyal reader of my columns over these two years. In fact, I take a perverse pleasure in being recognized so readily. But I will not tolerate intimidation or threats, even if I run from them or have to hide in my room all day so I don't break down and cry in class.

But if you attack me in ignorance and willfully misunderstand my message, I will expose you for the fool and small-minded hypocrite you are. But, take comfort in the fact that you are not the first to labor in ignorance over what label to affix upon me. Last year I attended two meetings of the Republican Club, one by invitation and one by accident. At the first one I was called a liberal when I maintained that prisoners held in Guantanamo have human rights, too.

So, UMass, am I a liberal? Am I a conservative? Or am I not what others choose to label me, but what I have decided to be: a libertarian?

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Modeling the law after the true judge

Eric Magazu

To whom does the scepter belong? Who among us shall be delegated authority and power over his fellow?

This debate has raged throughout human history. It is a human tendency, especially in modern democracies, to seek out political leadership that will implement our own policy conceptions. We have a checklist of our own personal priorities and select the candidate that agrees with our own views. We seek to do what is right in our own eyes, but instead we ought to look to do what is right in the eyes of God.

True religion is not simply a guide to morality or a way to bring structure to our personal lives. It is the true standard by which to judge all of human law.

Modern religion seems to focus on being a therapy session. But if the purpose of religion is simply to guide our personal behavior, then it is not sufficiently fulfilling its purpose according to Scripture. Nor is it rightly worshipping the Creator and Preserver of the universe.

The idea of personal religion is an invention of secular philosophers that have stumbled into the folly of substituting the easily manipulated desires of men for the enduring wisdom of God. The affairs of religion and the affairs of the state have always been intimately intertwined, even – and especially – in America and even under the First Amendment.

All laws enacted by our legislature ought to be in accord with God's law. All politicians ought to be elected in a way that reflects the leadership that God intends.

At first glance, this might appear as a prescription for tyranny, with religious clerics defining what we can and cannot do. But this misses what Scripture actually teaches us. Among such teachings is that there is a messianic king that rightfully ought to be granted leadership over humanity. And, by our recognition of his right, he will rule with judgment and truth.

There are two principle properties upon which God governs the universe: justice and compassion.

When a ruler governs with justice, he exacts harmony among men. When people stumble into disputes, they both claim competing rights over the same entity. The law must be defined, and the judge must render his decision in such a way that it resolves the conflict.

There can be nothing less than complete impartiality under the law as well as by the judge between the two parties. The judge must be entirely diligent to decide meticulously between the claims of both parties. Anything less transgresses the perfect justice of God.

When a ruler governs with compassion, he repairs the bonds of affection that have been severed among his people. The truest form of compassion is not mercy, Mercy implies that the ruler is charitably forgiving the debt owed by the wrongdoer. It is, however, grace, as it is when the victim simply chooses not to see the guilt of the wrongdoer at all. It is grace that marks the highest form of love.

This compassion needs to be unlimited for all people, so that no one will be left behind. A true leader must subjugate himself completely to his citizens, so that their needs are his immediate concern. He must work behind the scenes, in humility, to incur trouble himself if it shall serve to repair the relationship between two opposing parties. Anything less transgresses the perfect compassion of God.

True religion is not simply a guide to morality or a way to bring structure to our personal lives. It is the true standard by which to judge all of human law.

There is a drawback to compassion. A king who rules his kingdom with grace, but with no law, will eventually bring rampant disorder among his people. Misguided compassion can end up forgiving a murder and thereby placing many innocent people at risk, and doing so will transgress justice.

Justice also has a drawback. Rendering strict justice destroys the hope and faith of those who regret their past mistakes and seek to return in repentance, and rendering justice in such a manner will transgress compassion.

It is difficult for judges to render justice without error. But there may be some human beings that will place enough time and thought into decisions to prevent these mistakes. Likewise, it is difficult for people to show unlimited compassion towards one another.

But perhaps we can find such people whose only limitation is the number of hours in each day. We must turn to heaven for the knowledge and wisdom to exact justice and compassion simultaneously.

Such a person would render judgment in such a way that the losing party in a court case will still maintain complete and perfect faith in this judge. It would seem that such a judge would actually have to have a perfect love for both sides, even the one he must rule against. This is something that appears impossible with any human being, but it is certainly possible with God.

It is here where true religion must turn its attention: towards understanding God's righteous laws and ordinances, by enacting these statutes today and in this world and where true faith must turn its hope towards God's righteous Messiah, who will teach us God's law with love.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 3, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Wore out its welcome

Blitzen Trapper enticing, but fails to bring it home

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

NORTHAMPTON — On Wednesday night, Northampton's Pearl Street Night Club played host to six-piece Blitzen Trapper of Portland, Ore., as well as its opening act, and fellow Pacific Northwest resident, Alela Diane.

Diane, who hails from Nevada City, Calif., is supporting the band through mid-March behind her latest effort, "To Be Still," now out on Rough Trade Records. Backed by a quintet of musicians, Diane opened the concert at 8:30 p.m. to a modest but budding crowd, playing tunes in her signature sound, one that ranges from gentle Americana to bouts of acid folk. The familiar sound was augmented by dual female vocalists, adding a soothing, lullaby quality to the music.

The highlight of the set found Diane and her band pulling from her latest effort on the song "Every Path." Here, Diane showcased her vocal range harmonizing with her back-up singers on the song's repeated lyrical refrain "Every path has lead me back to you" over shuffling drums and simple picking from the rhythm section. The result was a haunting melody that lingered after the band began dismantling their stage set-up.

In the meantime, the assembled club-goers had begun to pack the front of the stage in anticipation for the main set while the Velvet Underground's "Velvet Underground and Nico" album played in the background.

Soon enough, Blitzen Trapper arrived – unleashing a slew of noise on the crowd before leading off the set with the tune "Fire & Fast Bullets," from its fourth album, "Furr." The track featured lead singer Eric Earley making up for his surprisingly small stage stature by accenting his lyrics with hand motions and working his duct-taped Gibson guitar for a note-perfect rendition of the album's solo.

For the early part of the set, the band stuck strictly to playing new material, stopping only between songs

See BLITZEN TRAPPER on page 6

Blitzen Trapper performed at Northampton's Pearl Street last Wednesday performing its most recent music. It was clear that the band is much more comfortable with its older material.

The Awaji Puppet Theater Compnay provided a unique look into Asian culture to broaden awareness throughout the UMass community.

A look at Japanese culture

Awaji Puppet Theater broadens awareness with puppetry

BY MICHELLE FREDETTE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Awaji Puppet Theater Company brought traditional Japanese puppetry to a mixed audience in Bowker Auditorium Saturday night. Those waiting for the performance to start ranged from young children to white-haired grandmothers.

The event was put on by the Asian Arts & Culture Program at the University of Massachusetts in the hopes of broadening awareness of Asian culture. Because the show contained so many different aspects of Japanese culture – the shamisen, dramatic recitation, puppetry and traditional stories – the event achieved its mission.

"I really enjoyed being exposed to traditional Japanese culture," said UMass senior Brian Umbarger.

Since professor Miguel Romero, who was supposed to give background information on Bunraku puppets, could not be present, the performers got down to business right away. The curtain lifted to reveal a bright yellow background, painted carefully with green and brown trees.

A figure in all black – including a black hood covering his face – stepped onto the stage and began chanting in Japanese, welcoming the audience and introducing the chanters and musicians.

English translations were shown on a screen above the stage. Since the screen was so high, one often missed some of the puppets' actions. While this somewhat detracted from the show, the performance would have lost something if it had not been presented in its rightful Japanese form.

The event used two different chanters, Takemoto Tomosho and Takemoto Tomowaka. Tomosho performed the first two acts, while Tomowaka performed the last. The styles of these two chanters differed greatly: Tomosho followed the drumbeats steadily while Tomowaka gave the words more flair, drawing out certain phrases more.

"[The first chanter] was very rhythmic but not as emotional [as the second]," said freshman Mikaela Ortstein-Otero.

The differing approaches to the recitation worked, though, since the three acts required very different tones. The rhythmic style of the first chanter fit the first act, "Ebisumai," well.

The main action of "Ebisumai" centered on a visit from Ebisu, the Japanese god of fishermen and fortune. A mortal welcomed the god into his house and offered him sake. As the story goes, the god drinks more and more and gets drunker and drunker.

The three puppeteers operating Ebisu gave the puppet realistic and detailed movement. The way the Ebisu puppet gulped down each cupful of sake was surprisingly lifelike, as was the way his motions got sloppier as he got drunker.

The talent of the puppeteers was obvious throughout the entire show as they moved puppets' hands, eyebrows and even noses to give them more expression. Since each puppet

See PUPPETS on page 6

Irish music, a crowd favorite

Wolfe Tones celebrate St. Patrick's Day a few weeks early

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

DALTON, Mass. — On Friday Feb. 27, The Wolfe Tones played a sold-out show at the Wahconah Country Club to people young and old, holding hands, dancing and singing as if Irish nationalism was alive and well in the United States – or at least Dalton.

Before the show started the trio from Dublin sat at the bar with its fans, having casual conversation as well as a drink ... or three – a ritual before every show, which many fans have witnessed.

As the band introduced itself a projector turned on and displayed a PowerPoint presentation behind them. There were pictures of documents, buildings, historic people, events and even athletes that perfectly coordinated with each song being played. Before every tune, the band's leading songwriter, Brian Warfield, took a few minutes to describe what made the upcoming song so important and if it had a specific relation to them, usually ending their tale by saying, "You'll never beat The Wolfe Tones" – a reference to their popular song, "You'll Never Beat the Irish."

From the first song, The Wolfe Tones had spotless transitions, making it seem as if they have been playing with each other for years – 45 to be exact.

They opened with "Sunday Bloody Sunday," not the familiar U2 song, but one written by John Lennon that recognizes the horrible acts were carried out by the First Battalion of the British Parachute Regiment on Jan. 30, 1972. After the song, Warfield went on to discuss how Lennon and Paul McCartney, both of Irish descent, wrote songs about the horrendous event; some were banned from BBC broadcasting.

See WOLFE TONES on page 6

The Wolfe Tones performed in Dalton, Mass., Friday night. The group has been together for 45 years playing Irish nationalist music.

11th Annual High School Jazz Festival

University of Massachusetts jazz ensembles, high schools and the U.S. Army Blues Band played at the Fine Arts Center Saturday in the 11th Annual High School Jazz Festival. The all-day concert and showcase featured high schools from Massachusetts, Connecticut and Vermont.

Artist asks, but fails to answer

Whitmore steers away from traditional sound, lyrics

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the nation shifts its vocabulary from recession to depression, William Elliott Whitmore has shifted his gaze beyond his humble Iowan horse-farm toward the state of the union.

The result is an all-too-predictable release and the first misstep by one of America's most promising songwriters.

With a somber trilogy of self-reflective releases already under his belt, Whitmore changes gears on his latest release, "Animals in the Dark." The record deals largely with the ever-present societal abuse of hierarchical power, and from the album's incipiency it's clear the introverted farmhand is not a fan.

Beyond just lyrical content, the composition on "Animals" also strays from the mold Whitmore has crafted over the last several years. The majority of the album finds him ditching the trusty twang of his banjo and the backbeat of his boot stomps for jangling guitar strums and full drum accompaniments.

Album-opener "Mutiny" is as subtle as a song with its title may imply. Whitmore uses the full-band opener to search for answers and offer up outdated solutions.

"Well it's a goddamn shame what's going down / How we got to this I do not know," confesses Whitmore during the first verse of the song. "There's a sick sick wind that is blowin' 'round / And the captain's got to go."

Following a similar formula is the rollicking anti-establishment jam "Johnny Law." While much of the album utilizes a more rounded, full-band sound, "Johnny Law" is conspicuously devoid of any kind of instrumental accompaniment.

See WHITMORE on page 6

William Elliot Whitmore raises numerous political questions in his new album, but doesn't provide the resolutions that people desire.

Irish holiday comes early

WOLFE TONES from page 5

The trio then played fan-favorites "God Save Ireland," "The Streets of New York" and their biggest hit, "The Helicopter Song." Warfield then asked the crowd for a "Wee bit of coolness" or in other words to calm down while he tells a story of the past troubles in Belfast.

Following the synopsis, the band played "In Belfast," to the delight of the crowd. The slow, melodramatic song's lyrics stung at the emotions of, most visibly, some of the audience's older members, though all in the room were affected. As a perfect follow-up to the emotional tune, the band played "Celtic Symphony," which got everyone out of their seats, jumping up and down and singing, "We're on the road again / We're on the road again/ We're on our way to Paradise / We love the jungle team / That's where the lion sleeps / And all those evil eyes, they have no place in paradise."

After a short drink break the band resumed with the light-hearted "Boston Rose" and "You'll Never Beat the Irish," pumping more energy into the crowd. Feeding off the audience, the trio broke into "Come Out Ye Black & Tans" and "Big Strong Man."

When the concert ended the band stuck around, had some more drinks, told some stories and signed autographs on anything fans could get their hands on.

In their career The Wolfe Tones have released 13 albums with the most recent being 2005's "You'll Never Beat the Irish."

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

The Wolfe Tones performed in front of a sold-out crowd at the Wahconah Country Club in Dalton, Mass., Friday night. The band's lyrics are inspired by Irish nationalism, playing songs that inspired emotion and tunes to get the audience on their feet and dancing.

Performance tailored to UM

PUPPETS from page 5

required three puppeteers, they had to be extremely coordinated. The left hand, right hand, head and feet all had to match up – not only with each other but also with the drumbeats, shamisen and chanting.

"It was actually realistic," said Ortstein-Otero. "Even though you could see the puppeteers they didn't seem like they were there."

The Awaji Puppet Theater Company tailored its performance specifically for UMass. As Ebisu got drunk, he lifted his glass in a toast.

"To more green cars in Massachusetts, cheers" he said. "And finally a toast to no more books falling from the W.E.B. Du Bois Library"

The audience laughed at these inclusions and appreciated the reference.

"It was clever how they incorporated things about UMass," said senior Carly Cavanaugh.

The last two acts, "The River Crossing Scene" and "The Mountain Scene," were more serious.

In the former, a woman consumed by jealousy turns into a serpent and intends to murder the lover that spurned her. In the latter, a couple commit suicide by jumping off a cliff but are returned to life by a goddess.

In "The River Crossing Scene," the female puppet interacts with a ferryman puppet. To make it easy to determine who was speaking, the chanter made his voice higher for the woman, gruffer for the ferryman and more singsong for narration.

Each puppet in the Awaji Puppet Theater Company requires three puppeteers, they had to be extremely coordinated. This made the puppets have full range of motion and lifelike actions.

"[The River Crossing Scene] had the most realistic exhibition of emotion of the three [acts]," said freshman Josh Litchman.

After a brief intermission, chanter Tomowaka took her spot to the right of the stage. Accompanied by the whining notes of the shamisen, she began reciting "The Mountain Scene." Her recitation sounded almost like wailing at times, which fit the desperate tone of the piece.

Again, the coordination between the various performers was impressive. As Tomowaka recited, "The violent sound of a waterfall can be heard in the valley below," the puppet cupped her hand to her ear.

Despite their differences, the three acts all appealed to the audience.

"The last one was my favorite because it told a complete story," said freshman Emily Olmsted.

Whether it was the puppets, the music or the Japanese recitation, the Awaji Puppet Theater displayed an easily likeable performance Saturday night.

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredett@student.umass.edu.

Band lacks unity, sound hard to define

BLITZEN TRAPPER from page 5

to thank the modest Wednesday night crowd. The set included admirable versions of new tracks like "Saturday Nite" and "Sleepytime in the Western World" (the opener of "Furr"), but despite the enthusiasm, it was clear the band had yet to settle into a groove.

If the band's sound is hard to characterize, the band members seem harder to define, as the motley group hardly looks like a cohesive unit.

On stage, backing vocalist and multi-instrumentalist Marty Marquis counters Earley's clean-cut looks with cleaner vocals, made all the more unsuspecting by his wild mane of red hair, lumberjack flannel and professor glasses.

Elsewhere, Erik Menteer, the band's backing electric guitarist, provides the band with the requisite Johnny Greenwood (of Radiohead) look-a-like while keyboardist Drew Laughery's looks would be more at home in an alternative band rather than a folk one.

All these unique styles come with unique influences – ones that enable the band to traverse a wide array of sounds that range from their earlier, blues-influenced material to the keyboard-laden pop attack of their latest album.

However, it was clear they were most comfortable with their earlier material, as it was with these tracks that the band finally settled into some stage banter, making small talk about the location of Oregon as well as the current economic crisis.

Soon the band was firing through song after song, none of which lasted longer than four minutes.

Mid-set highlights included songs like "Wild Mountain Nation," "Big Black Bird" and "Furr." The latter found the musicians using a variety of brightly colored shakers for percussion instruments, even incorporating a yellow birdcall whistle for backing accents.

Despite some well-performed stretches of material, the band wore out its welcome toward the end of the set. Songs quickly began to blend together in style and subject matter with many of the instrumentalists falling into similar patterns. Despite a variety of songs, bassist Michael Van Pelt could not break out of playing simple quarter notes while similarly, drummer Brian Koch failed to deviate from the heavy use of the snare drum and high-hat.

After promising that the band had only two more songs, it was well over 20 minutes before they finally quit the stage. After exhausting most of its solid material, the band was left with weak backtracks like "Lady on the Water," which failed to end the set on a positive note.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

Fails as promising songwriter

WHITMORE from page 5

Without it, the song sounds more like a rough sketch than a polished product.

There has always been a timeless quality to the 30-year-old's music, but the majority of "Animals" comes off as weak political allegories rather than substantial critiques.

Whitmore's back catalog sounds as if it could have been recorded at any time following the Americana revival. "Animals in the Dark," however, comes with a very distinct born-on date.

Whitmore uses symbols for his lyrical targets. Governments are ship captains, while law enforcement is personified into one corrupt entity. His intention is clear: to allow the album to transcend the current time period as his past releases have so effortlessly. Unfortunately, this technique does the exact opposite.

Whitmore deflates the album with his tired political anthems. They offer no new experiences, and the ones they do have already been created several times over.

Unsurprisingly, Whitmore is at his best on "Animals" – when he's at his barest. It doesn't happen frequently, but there are a handful of gems scattered within the sluggish political album.

Subtle guitar work and world-weary vocals blend harmoniously on selections like "Who Stole The Soul," and album-closer "A Good Day to Die." This is vintage Whitmore at his best: introspective and sorrowful.

"There's Hope For You," a modern hymn infused with the soul of Southern gospel, is another genuinely enjoyable track and is an uplifting addition to balance some of the record's more morose selections.

Few will argue with Whitmore's assessment of the nation, but his delivery is so hackneyed that it carries no substance. Whitmore's charm has always been his ability to craft stories that are both identifiable and otherworldly with his precocious lyricism that is weathered well beyond his years.

On "Animals" it seems he has lost his way.

People are living and breathing the political and economical crisis, the last thing they need is another songwriter to remind them of it without any real solutions. Those searching for any on "Animals" will have to look elsewhere.

All Whitmore offers his listeners is more of what they already know. And with it, for the first time in his career, the oft-timeless songwriter has delivered a forgettable record with a tragically short shelf life.

William Elliott Whitmore's "Animals in the Dark" was released Feb. 17 on ANTI-Records.

Brian Wood can be reached at bwood@dailycollegian.com.

Blitzen Trapper failed to end its performance on a positive note because it exhausted its solid material, leaving only weak backtracks.

Clarkson in her purest form

BY ANN POWERS
LOS ANGELES TIMES

The third album from pop's most sympathetic rebel girl, Kelly Clarkson, has nearly as many mandates attached to it as a certain economic stimulus plan. The record label execs who objected to the emotionally loaded, tough-sell hard rock of 2007's "My December" are hoping for a massive, industry-saving hit. The critics who love her spunk but question her sensibility desire artful pop with a little bit of red meat. The "Idol" watchers and Top 40 listeners who made her a star in the first place want the perfect blend of sincerity and catchiness to lift their spirits during a year when nobody needs another breakup album.

Clarkson, ever the overachiever, has delivered on all counts. "All I Ever Wanted" is a masterful rap-prochement with the mainstream, full of cheerfully ear-snagging tunes, inventive production, exhilarating vocals and enough inherent Kelly-ness to put aside fears that her label bosses implanted blond electrodes in her brain to make her behave.

"All I Ever Wanted" also fulfills the one requirement that makes Clarkson a top-shelf pop star worth loving: It provides her faithful female fans with a solid group of anthems and introspective moments expressing dignity, independence and emotional truthfulness.

The first single, the desperately radio-friendly "My Life Would Suck Without You," wasn't a good sign: Ripping off one's biggest previous hit isn't a path toward self-discovery. But that album opener simply announces a rousing, if slightly overloaded, collection of ballads and barn-burners well serving the needs of Kelly's girls for a big scream and a good cry.

Anyone who has been to a Clarkson show and seen the earnest love her female fans express knows this is where her work goes beyond entertainment to affect lives. Without uttering the word "feminism," she applies its principles within pop formulas now more often used to sell peep-show thrills, greed and cynicism.

Clarkson works her every-superwoman magic within a few different phone booths here. She removes the cartoon mannerisms from two songs co-penned by Katy Perry; her version of "I Do Not Hook Up," a song cowritten by Kara DioGuardi and produced by modern rock heavy Howard Benson, should be heard by every teen girl contemplating chucking her purity ring.

Her collaborations, including several co-writes, with mood-rock hit maker Ryan Tedder take the opposite approach. They insinuate instead of shouting, showing how the self-described "limestone rock" sound Coldplay perfected with Brian Eno can work as a vehicle for feminine yearning. The albums' sequencing presents the quieter Tedder material as a mini-suite, resulting in an energy drag; that's too bad, because individually considered, each track is gently memorable.

Pop addicts looking for fizzier stuff will prefer the work Clarkson did with former Color Me Badd member Sam Watters and his partner Louis Biancaniello, including some covers of tunes by Oklahoma-based unknowns Aranda. The title track evokes the soul-rock fusions of Timbaland and Rihanna, while "Whyyouwannabringmedown" gives Clarkson a chance to howl the way she has wanted since her grunge-loving teen years.

"All I Ever Wanted" also has a couple of the old-fashioned tear-jerkers that Clarkson does so well – "Cry," which she co-wrote, and songbird Keri Noble's "If No One Will Listen," which she produced -- and an apparent Pink tribute song, "Don't Let Me Stop You."

The album is a generous helping of the Kelly so many love – yes, Photoshopped and slicked up, but with her big, hrilllantly accessible heart and voice intact.

Offensive explosion ends weekend

UMass splits series vs. Northwestern in Fla.

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team started off its season on a high note with a 4-3 win over Northwestern last Friday, but it was a 25-4 win over Fairfield on Sunday that gave the team a winning record to finish the RussMatt Central Florida Invitational.

UMass (2-1) split the series with Northwestern, both games decided by one run. On Friday, the Minutemen stopped a rally and scored the winning run late against the Wildcats, but NU (2-4) mounted a four-run comeback in the seventh and eighth innings on Saturday and evened up the series.

UMass 25 – Fairfield 4

The weekend's final game began like any other – with the teams tied at two after the first inning. But when the Minutemen's offense exploded with 11 runs in the fifth inning, the rout was on.

Harsh conditions put the game in question, but after a delay, the teams played on as the winds continued to whip around the field.

"It was a tough day to pitch and a tough day to play defense, but we did a good job," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We had good pitching, which made a difference and that was great. It was great to score some runs and open up the offense."

The Minutemen totaled 20 hits against the Stags (0-1) on the day. Leading the charge was Peter Copa, who was 4-for-4 on the day with six RBIs. Brian Baudinet was 3-for-5 with two RBIs and a home run. Adam Tempesta went 2-for-7, knocking in four runs with a double and one of the team's four triples on the day – a school record. Seven Minutemen had multi-hit games in the blowout.

Picking up the win was Mike Dicato, who went six innings, giving up three runs, eight hits and no walks.

Northwestern 7 – UMass 6

The Minutemen squandered a 6-3 lead after six innings, surrendering two runs in both the seventh and eighth innings, en route to their first loss of the season, a 7-6 defeat at the hands of the Wildcats.

UMass jumped on NU pitcher Zach Morton early, scoring three runs through the first three innings, putting the Minutemen up 3-1. A solo shot by NU's Tommy Finn put the Wildcats on the board.

Senior Mitchell Clegg started the game for UMass, going five innings and giving up three runs on seven hits. The real damage, however, was not done until Bryan Leigh entered the game. Leigh went 2 and 2/3 innings, giving up four runs (two earned) with five hits.

Junior Austin Weymouth drove in freshman Tom Conley and later scored on an error to put the Minutemen up 6-3 in the sixth, but that was it for the UMass offense.

The Wildcats would go on to storm back into the game, putting up four runs in two innings, including one of three Northwestern home runs on the day.

In the second game of his career, Conley had his first multi-hit game, going 2-for-4 on the day.

UMass 4 – Northwestern 3

The Minutemen started off the 2009 season by pulling out a tough win against the Wildcats as pinch hitter Mike Gedman's sacrifice fly in the seventh brought in Mike Donato for the winning run.

"It was great," Stone said. "But I was disappointed. We should've won the second game too. We were ahead, had a two-run lead and just made some mistakes defensively. We got sloppy and it cost us the ballgame."

Tempesta had the best day for UMass, going 3-for-4 with a walk. But it was two-run home run by designated hitter Sam Boone (2-for-3) that led the way for the Minutemen, putting them up 2-0 in the second inning.

After Northwestern got on the board in the fifth, UMass added another run off of an Austin Weymouth single that brought in Kyle Molter, who singled earlier in the inning.

Sloppy defense in the bottom half of the inning allowed the Wildcats to tie the game after the Minutemen committed three of their four errors on the day, allowing two unearned runs to cross the plate.

Junior Jared Freni went six innings, giving up one hit, four walks and one unearned run. Lefty Charlie Benson came on in the seventh, but was replaced by Mitchell Eilenberg after giving up two unearned runs. Eilenberg pitched 2 2/3 scoreless innings, picking up the win for UMass.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Jim Macdonald had three hits and an RBI in the Minutemen's 25-4 throttling of Fairfield. He was one of seven players who had a multi-hit game, which included five doubles and a UMass record four triples.

UM regains winning record

BY JAY ASSER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a difficult week of losses, the Massachusetts tennis team was unfazed by its back-to-back-to-back situation as it took two of its three matches this weekend.

Leading off the schedule for the Minutewomen on Friday was opponent Fairleigh Dickinson. UMass (6-5) had few problems, sweeping the Devils in doubles and dropping one singles match to pick up the 6-1 victory.

At No. 1 doubles, the pair of Tanisha Hodgson and Magdalena Ploch outlasted Ksenia Chernyshova and Julia Prantl, 8-4, to give UMass its first point on the day.

Following suit for the Minutewomen were the No. 2 and No. 3 doubles teams. Duo Candynce Boney and Kaitlyn Carpenter made quick work of their opponents, defeating Jessica DeCarlos and Julia Koshunova, 8-1. In similar fashion, Laura Danai and Maude Lecluyse came out on top against Jinny DeCarlos and Christina Martine, winning 8-0.

In singles play, UMass' only difficulty came at the No. 1 position. Freshman Ploch fought hard in a three-set match, yet fell to Koshunova, 6-2, 7-5, 10-4.

At No. 2 singles, Boney took the match to a super-tiebreaker, defeating Prantl, 6-3, 2-6, 10-5, to pull out her eighth singles win of the season.

The Minutewomen easily handled the Devils from the No. 3 through No. 6 positions. Carpenter, Hodgson, Lecluyse and Danai all won their respective matches, combining to outscore Fairleigh Dickinson, 48-12.

UMass snapped a seven-match losing streak to Columbia (3-4) on Saturday, prevailing with a hard-fought victory against the Lions, 4-3.

After dropping two of three doubles matches and losing the doubles point, the pressure fell on the Minutewomen to perform in singles play. UMass came through, winning four of six singles matches to take the victory.

At No. 1 singles, Boney recorded a win after her opponent, Natasha Makarova, retired at 2-0 in the first set.

The two losses for the Minutewomen came at the expense of No. 2 singles, Ploch, and No. 3 singles, Carpenter. Ploch nearly pulled out a victory after taking the match to three sets, but couldn't close it out, losing 3-6, 6-2, 6-0 to Nicole Stanziola. Carpenter lost to Eliza Matache after a close second set, 6-1, 7-6 (4).

Laura Dinai, above, went undefeated in doubles play alongside Maude Lecluyse this weekend, including an extremely close 9-8 (3) win over Anne Houghton and Kristin Beehler of Army.

The highlight of the day came when No. 4 Hodgson impressed by defeating Columbia's previous No. 1 player and current co-captain, Nina Suda, 6-1, 7-5.

At the No. 5 and No. 6 positions, Lecluyse and Danai earned UMass's final two victories of singles play. Lecluyse defeated Natalia Christenson, 6-1, 6-2, while Danai came out on top against Linnae Goswami, 6-1, 6-3.

However, UMass was unable to continue its momentum into Sunday's match against four-time defending Patriot League Champion, Army. The Minutewomen took two of three doubles matches and two singles matches, but could not pull out the victory against the Black Knights (6-7).

No. 1 doubles duo, Ploch and Hodgson, lost to Niki Flach and Michael Tollerton, falling 8-6.

The No. 2 doubles pair of Lecluyse and Danai won in a back and forth match, defeating Anne Houghton and Kristin Beehler, 9-8 (3).

Boney and Carpenter earned their second doubles win at No. 3, getting past Robie Verano and Jurelle Mendoza, 8-3.

Boney, though, couldn't pull out a victory at No. 1 singles as she fell to Army's Houghton, who is 18-1 on the season.

Ploch and Carpenter gave UMass its only wins in singles play, defeating Flach and Sarah Giles-Madden, respectively. Ploch handled Flach at No. 2, winning 6-1, 6-2, while Carpenter came out on top at No. 3 in a hard-fought 7-6 (1), 7-5 match.

Army finished the day giving the Minutewomen difficulties at the No. 4 through No. 6 singles positions, winning all three matches.

UMass returns to action Tuesday when they travel to Providence to face Brown, the team with the highest winning percentage in the Ivy League.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu.

Normandin hits 2 homers in 2-game span

SOFTBALL from page 12

Balschmiter finished off the game by striking out Simone Ashkar, her seventh strikeout of the game. The Minutewomen's ace did this all while her coach thought she had a B-minus game.

"It was a B-minus night," Sortino said. "She has been thwarted by an arm injury and has been sick.

"She has to come at them with more movement to think she dominated them instead of them just having a had hitting day."

At the plate, UMass managed seven hits and none were bigger than Carly Normandin's in the sixth inning. With the Minutewomen up 1-0 and the game still in the Blue Demons reach, Normandin led off the inning with a solo home run to right-center field.

UMass found itself in a similar situation Friday against Nebraska before winning 3-0. The Minutewomen had a 1-0 lead in the sixth inning before Normandin created some separation.

With two outs, the Cornhuskers' (7-4) Molly Hill first walked Jessica Serio. Normandin followed with another home run to right-center field giving Balschmiter a three-run lead to work with.

Nebraska kept the rest of UMass bats pretty quiet. Leftfielder Samantha Salato and second basemen Kyllie Magill were the only other two Minutewomen that registered hits, with Salato's driving in Whitney Williams in the first inning.

Williams led off the bottom of the first by getting hit with a pitch and advanced to second base two batters later on a sacrifice bunt by Whitney Mollica. Salato followed with her first hit of the game, a single to center-field off Nebraska's Molly Hill, to give UMass the early 1-0 lead.

Normandin finished the weekend with a perfect 4-for-4 at the plate and a walk. The center-fielder also drove in three runs, all from her two home runs.

"We dropped [Normandin] down in the order to take some pressure off of her," Sortino said. "And she responded really well."

Balschmiter dominated Nebraska as well, holding the Cornhuskers to just four hits, gave up two walks while striking out six.

The Minutewomen will take the field again in two weeks when they head to Clearwater, Fla. for their final five non-conference games of the season before they begin to defend their Atlantic 10 championship.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

UMass softball pitcher Brandice Balschmiter had another outstanding performance this weekend, pitching two straight shutouts.

Track teams end year, place in top 10

Minutewomen take 9th place, Minutemen 10th at NECs

BY NOAH STEINBERG-DI STEFANO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

In the final team competition of the indoor season, the Massachusetts women's and men's track teams put forth solid performances, placing ninth and 10th respectively at the New England Championships this past Saturday at Boston University.

Among the competitors were Division I teams from all corners of New England as well as the top athletes from Division II and III schools in the area. Connecticut continued their dominance on the track, finishing first for both the men and women for the second year in a row.

The problem for both UMass teams was not a lack of quality performances, but a shortage of athletes. With only 16 athletes competing on the men's side and 13 competing for the women, it was very difficult for both squads to compete with teams with twice as many competitors, even though the majority of UMass athletes scored in their respective events.

The Minutemen scored 23 points to place 10th in a field of 31 competitors. Junior Jonathan Pierce paced his way to the highest finish of the day, ranking second in the 5,000 meter run with a time of 14 minutes, 36.47 seconds. Junior Nicolai Naranjo and sophomore Jeff Hill just missed scoring in that race, finishing ninth and 10th respectively.

In the relays, the undermanned Minutemen put forth solid performances to put points on the board. Ryan DiOrio, Peter Fortunato, Sean Duncan and Scott VanderMolen teamed up for a fourth-place finish in the distance medley relay with a time of 10:02.85. DiOrio, Fortunato and Duncan later teamed up with senior Josh Boone to register a fourth-place finish in 4x800 relay with a time of 7:43.23.

Also scoring points for the Minutemen were juniors Andrew McCann and Tyler Cotto. McCann ranked fifth in the 3,000-meter run, while Cotto finished eighth in the 55-meter hurdles. Freshman standout Zack Koncki placed ninth in the long jump with a distance of 21-07.50.

For the Minutewomen, the meet was highlighted by a number of outstanding individual performances. Junior Holly Heinricher set the third fastest indoor time in UMass history with a mark of 25.25 in the 200-meter run, good for an eighth-place overall finish.

Brittany Bakanowski and Karen Roa also scored individually for the women, each registering eighth-place finishes in the 500-meter (1:16.93) and 3,000-run (10:17.91) respectively. Redshirt sophomore Shiyi Zan finished just before Roa in the 3,000 with a time of 10:16.72, placing seventh in the event. Senior Taryn Trapp also notched a seventh-place finish, running a team-best time in the 1,000 meter (2:56.71).

In the field for the Minutewomen, sophomore Ida Okkonen earned a fourth-place finish with an impressive distance of 18-00.25. Stephanie Aguguo, also a sophomore, secured a seventh-place finish in the triple jump with a distance of 37-02.50. UMass pole-vault record holder Kristen Bakanowski cleared 12 feet to secure fifth place in an event that she took second in last year's competition. Junior Lisa Wilson threw the shot 42-11.50 for an eighth place ranking.

Overall, the event was a significant improvement from last year's championship in which the men finished 12th and the women 13th. This weekend, the Minutemen will send seven qualified athletes and one relay team to Boston for the ICAA championships, while the Minutewomen have qualified three individual athletes for the ECACs. Athletes will have a month off competition before the outdoor season begins on April 4.

Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano can be reached at nsteinber@student.umass.edu.

JAMES WILLIVER/COLLEGIAN

Bobby Hayes and the Minutemen had a spectacular performance against the Bulldogs on Saturday, taking a 12-2 lead into halftime as they cruised to an 18-6 victory.

UMass dominates Yale

M. LACROSSE from page 12

championship game as a freshman, scored 51 goals over his first two years and was suspended all of last season for his alleged role in an off-campus incident.

"No one was more upset than Jimmy only scoring one goal last week and losing that game, so I'm not surprised he came out with a performance like this. That's kind of what he's all about," UMass coach Greg Cannella said. "He's been able to face a lot of challenges in his life – obviously this one, coming back [to school and the team], playing pretty well. It says a lot about him."

"It's great to see," added Schneider, who came to Amherst as a freshman with Connolly. "He's worked his tail off when he wasn't here to come back and this is the best he's ever looked."

Connolly wasn't the only UMass player to look good in the first half, as the Minutemen jumped out to a 5-1 lead after the first quarter and had a 12-2 cushion heading into halftime. UMass scored on 50 percent of its 24 first-half shots, including a Connolly tally with .7 seconds left in the first half.

The defense in front of Schneider was terrific all game long, limiting star attackers Matt and Brendan Gibson to one goal apiece. After scoring its second goal with 10 minutes, 33 seconds left in the second quarter, Yale went 27:23 seconds of game time before scoring its third goal early in the fourth quarter. During that span, UMass increased its lead from 7-2 to 15-3.

Even when the Bulldogs broke through for a goal past Schneider, they paid the price for it. Just as Brendan Gibson scored with 51.1 seconds left in the game, UMass freshman midfielder Greg Rushing flattened him to the ground in the game's biggest hit to cap off a physically dominating performance by the Minutemen.

UMass returns to action on Saturday, March 7 for a road tilt against No. 15 Harvard (2-0), which topped No. 5 Duke in the season-opener. The Minutemen have won 12 consecutive games against the Crimson in Cambridge, Mass., dating back to 1985.

GAME NOTES

Connolly's seven goals was one short of a single-game UMass record and marked the first time a Minuteman had at least seven goals since Jeff Zywicki had seven on March 18, 2003. ... An 18-6 UMass win resulted in the Minutemen taking an 18-6 lead in the all-time series with the Bulldogs. ... Saturday marked UMass' largest margin of victory since a 16-4 win over Manhattan on April 9, 2004. ... The Minutemen have scored 43 goals in three games this season – their highest-scoring start to a season since 2001, when they scored 45. ... UMass only held a 43-40 edge in shots, lost 40-29 in ground balls and 15-10 in face-offs. ... UMass was 4-for-7 on the man-advantage. Yale was 0-for-3. ... UMass (22) and Yale (23) combined for 45 turnovers. ... Senior midfielder and captain Rory Pedrick sat out to rest an injured knee.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com

DYLAN HUTCHINSON/COLLEGIAN

Jackie Lyons was nearly unstoppable on Saturday, torching the Crimson for a career-best six goals including the game-winning goal with 2:34 left to play. She was named the Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week for her efforts.

UM slips by Harvard

W. LACROSSE from page 12

18 saves and faced 40 shots by the Crimson (1-1) overall. Her biggest save came with 1:34 left in the game when the team was clinging to the 13-12 lead. After her save, the Minutewomen were able to get the ball and run out the clock.

"Flo did great. She kept us in the game during that first half and made some crucial saves at the end for us. We don't want give up that many shots, but the defense allowed her to see the shots, and she was able to make all the saves," Venechanos said.

Stephanie Hopkins also had a career day, scoring three goals and adding one assist to help the Minutewomen get an early lead.

The match started off well for UMass as it opened up a 5-0 lead in the first half, with two goals by Hopkins and Lyons before Harvard was able to get on the board.

Harvard stormed back with a 5-0 run, keyed by Kaitlin Martin who had five goals and three assist for the Crimson, to chop the lead to 6-5, but a goal just before halftime by Lyons allowed the Minutewomen to go into intermission with a 7-5 advantage.

The second half was nearly a mirror image of the first, UMass jumped out to a 12-8 lead, Harvard scored four straight goals to tie the game at 12, but the Crimson never took the lead.

"This was a complete effort, everyone from top to bottom got involved and that was what we needed to beat a team like Harvard, they are a great team and I give them a lot of credit," Venechanos said.

Harvard outshot UMass 40-24 and held a dominating 12-4 edge in groundball control, but the Minutewomen did have success in the draw circle and grabbed the ball on 15 chances out of 26.

Other goal scorers for UMass included senior captains Meghan Reddy (2 goals) and Holly Drown, along with sophomore Haley Smith.

The Minutewomen will return to Amherst for their first home game of the season when they host No. 13 Dartmouth at 3 p.m. on Wednesday at McGuirk Stadium.

GAME NOTES

UMass scored goals in the opening minute of both halves. ... UMass shot over 50 percent and scored on 13 of its 24 total shots. ... Harvard goalie Kelly Clark started the game but was replaced by Katherine Martino after surrendering her 10th goal of the game at the 40 minute mark.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Gaffney hurt in loss to La Salle

BASKETBALL from page 12

defeat in its last 11 games overall – since stunning Saint Joseph's in Philadelphia last Sunday, with both losses resulting in a season-high in scoring for the opposition. The Minutemen allowed 94 points in Wednesday's loss to Duquesne.

Sunday's defeat puts UMass in trouble in the conference. If the Minutemen (10-17, 5-9 A-10) fall to the suddenly-surging Colonials, they will be in serious danger of missing out on the A-10 Tournament for the first time in school history. If they do qualify, they'll be one-and-done in the tournament for the seventh straight season if a repeat of Sunday's first-half performance occurs.

"It's big if we want to go to Atlantic City. It's as big as it can be," said Kellogg, referring to the upcoming game against GW.

He doesn't have to tell his players of that fact.

"We're well-aware, but we're trying not to think about that and make this more about us. If we play the way we're capable of playing on Wednesday that will be put to rest," UMass' Tony Gaffney said.

Gaffney won't necessarily be a part of that effort Wednesday, as the senior forward sat out much of the second half with tendonitis in his knees. But both he and Kellogg were optimistic after the game that he will be able to play.

Gaffney played 19 minutes in the first half as seemingly everything went wrong for the Minutemen. UMass trailed 14-3 early and never recovered. Two quick fouls on Harris sent UMass' leading scorer to the bench for much of the first half, while the rest of the offense sputtered, forcing up bad shots and missing the few close-range looks it did get. Poor defense and hot shooting by the Explorers escalated UMass' problems quickly in a 46-29 score heading into halftime.

Harris scored 20 second-half points to tie Gurley for the team-high in scoring. Lowe had 15 points and nine assists. But it was Green and Partin – who averaged 3.2 points per game entering the game – that took over the game from the start.

Likely due to the second-half effort, UMass remained relatively upbeat following the loss.

"We haven't had the season that we had hoped, but it says a lot about the character of our team – especially after what happened against Duquesne," Gaffney said. "It would have been extremely easy for guys to just give in and no one did. It doesn't show in the win-loss column but it shows how far we've come."

GAME NOTES

George Washington (10-16, 4-10 A-10) enters Wednesday's game having won two in a row and three of its last four. A win for the Colonials would give them a potential tie-breaker over UMass. ... Partin's previous career-high was 11 points.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

FJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

David Gibbs and the Minutemen face the surging Colonials on Wednesday in what is essentially a playoff game. A win assures them a spot in the A-10 tournament, but a loss puts their postseason hopes in jeopardy.

JANUARY 30 - APRIL 26, 2009
Documentary photography by noted American contemporary artist
Lauren Greenfield
THIN & GIRL CULTURE

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM of ART & MUSEUM SHOP
free!
Artist Lecture: Lauren Greenfield
Thursday, March 6, 2009 5 PM
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
Book-signing and reception in Museum immediately following lecture
Presented in conjunction with THIN & Girl Culture
Advocate
Canon
www/smith.edu/artmuseum

ARMY NURSING
A CAREER PATH TO SUCCESS
WHO: ALL NURSING STUDENTS/ FACULTY INVITED
WHAT: ARMY ROTC NURSING SCHOLARSHIP INFO SESSION
WHERE: SKINNER HALL RM 012
WHEN: MON. MARCH 9, 12:15-1
WHY: LEARN ABOUT THE ARMY NURSE CORPS AND HOW TO RECEIVE A SCHOLARSHIP FOR FREE TUITION/FEES/BOOKS FOR REMAINDER OF YOUR DEGREE
FREE LUNCH!
University of Massachusetts Amherst Army ROTC
413-545-2321 – www.umass.edu/armyrotc

STUDENT UNION BALLROOM presidential debate
FAULKNER
VS.
MBAWUIKE
trustee debate
DAVIDSON
VS.
BLOCH
Sean McNair
Chancellor of Elections
(413) 545 - 0341 - smcnair@student.umass.edu
Office Hours: 5PM - 7PM Wednesdays in SGA Office
ELECTIONS COMMISSION UMASS

Youngsters show improvement in 2009

Mike Gillmeister

I'd like to think that I gave the Massachusetts women's basketball team a chance at the beginning of the season at being competitive but I'm probably wrong.

I covered a game last season in which the Minutewomen earned a decisive 70-50 victory over St. Bonaventure. The win created a three-way tie for the 10-12 spots in the Atlantic 10 Tournament. These three teams made the cut by one win.

Some might say this season's UMass (11-17, 4-9 Atlantic 10) team made the tournament with less. Without forward Kate Mills (17 points per-game) and guard Pam Rosanio (15 points per-game), the Minutewomen didn't have multiple players average double-figures.

Instead, senior guard Stefanie Gerardot averaged 15 points per game in the regular season and three other starters averaged at least eight points per game.

At times, UMass had problems that any team with an inexperienced roster has: forgetting fundamentals, beating themselves over mistakes trying to do too much etc. Still, with team the team had youth and time on its side.

"We are young but we're going to use it as an advantage," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "We have an outside game we've established inside presence, we can apply pressure; those are all strengths for us."

The dribble-drive offense that is now the focal point of the Minutewomen's game has bolstered UMass' offensive numbers and has made opposing defenses expand their focus beyond the paint, where Mills thrived during her time at UMass.

The Minutewomen netted 180 3-pointers, 79 more than last season's total. , Gerardot, freshman Kristina Danella and sophomore Cerie Mosgrove were legitimate threats from beyond the arc. Each of them made 40 or more 3-pointers during the regular season.

Players like Danella and Mosgrove have gotten past the "young player" stigma and established themselves as legitimate scorers on this team. They can break away from the defenders to get clear looks from 3-point range.

On the other side of the dribble-drive, Teya Wright has secured the post for UMass, a daunting task in the wake of Mills' recent departure. However Wright is just seven rebounds away from Mills' total of 219 boards last season.

While both Mills and Wright are the same size, Mills had better footwork and therefore had less fouls. Wright is still a key-contributor, even if it's not in a Mills-esque way. She leads the team in steals with 45 and she's as quick as Mills was physical. It was because of Mills' size that she could be physical against larger guards.

Wright's heart is unquestioned and her willingness to challenge larger forwards is rubbing off on her young teammates.

The final regular season stat sheet doesn't do justice to what sophomore forward Val Avebie and freshman center Nikki Jones provide to this team.

Jones is improving her interior defense every game. Her four blocks against No. 13 Xavier (25-5, 13-1 A-10) was one of the biggest defensive performances of the season in my eyes. At one point, 6-foot-2 Jones denied a shot by 6-foot-4 center Ta'Shia Phillips, who averages 13.3 points per-game and is one of the most physically imposing players in the A-10.

Avebe is quicker than Wright but is just as tenacious on defense. Wright always dives to the floor for loose balls and Avebe never misses the opportunity for a rebound.

The only Minutewoman who covers more ground on the court is senior guard Sakera Young. Young has the unique ability to disrupt so many offensive schemes because of her freakish athleticism. At 5-foot-7, Young's vertical leap enables her to get a hand in on almost any errant pass in the passing lane.

For the end of this season, the jury is still out on whether or not UMass can break its five-year streak of not making it to the second round of the tournament. Yet when speaking about the next few years, the talent is there; the rest is in their hands.

Mike Gillmeister is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Reserve point gaurd Kim Benton has been critical to the Minutewomen's improvement this year allowing coach Marnie Dacko to rest starting point guard Sakera Young without sacrificing defense.

Minutewomen win in finale

UMass shoots over 50 percent in final regular season game

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's basketball team found a good opportunity to score its highest point total of the season.

Freshman guard Kristina Danella's matched her career high with 25 points which led the way for the Minutewomen (12-17, 5-9 Atlantic 10) to an 82-66 Senior Day victory over La Salle Saturday afternoon.

After UMass's regular season finale, the team honored senior guards Stefanie Gerardot and Sakera Young, who added 11 and 12 points respectively, in their final game at the Mullins Center.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 82 |
| La Salle | 66 |

The Minutewomen will enter the A-10 tournament as the No. 11 seed March 6.

"Overall I think we did a much better job the second half, rebounding and defending changing up to a zone and I can't ask much more from our offense," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said.

Danella completed her second double-double of the season with a team-high 10 rebounds, shooting 7-for-10 from the field, 6-of-8 from three point range and 5-for-7 at the free throw line.

"[Danella] was big. I'm so happy that she's catching and shooting, I like that she got some rebounds, and as a freshman she's going to get better and better," Dacko said.

UMass' offensive game plan was effective from the start against an Explorers (10-19, 1-13 A-10) team that managed one conference win this season.

Sophomore Teya Wright (14 points), who returned to the starting line up after sitting out Wednesday's loss at Saint Joseph's with a concussion, was the fourth player in double figures for the Minutewomen, with freshmen forward Alesia Howard and center Nicole Jones contributing off the bench for UMass.

"It was nice to have [Wright] back, she's critical in her defensive presence and getting us quick buckets and I think our kids are looking at her as the upperclassman post player," Dacko said.

Junior guard Kim Benton, who will likely fill the departing Young's role at the one position, added five assists.

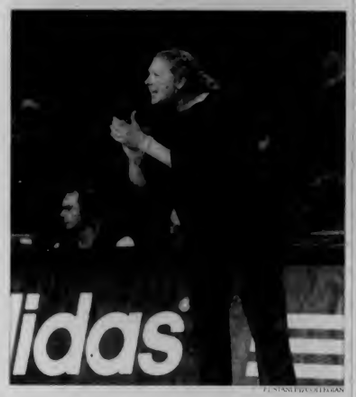
Sophomore forward Cerie Mosgrove added thirteen minutes off the bench with two clutch three pointers in the contest.

UMass led all but 13 seconds throughout the game. Red shirt sophomore guard Diatiema Hill (nine points, five assists) hit back-to-back lay-ups, part of a 12-2 run capped off by a four-point play by Danella with just under fifteen minutes to go in the first half.

The Minutewomen held a nine-point advantage on several occasions throughout the game, their largest lead of the half until the Explorers scored seven straight points to trim the UMass lead to two on a 3-pointer by Explorer forward Jenna Gilbert with just under ten minutes to play in the half.

Gilbert tied the game at 36 with just over a minute left in the half, but a jumper from Hill and a 3 from Danella gave the Minutewomen a five point halftime lead.

UMass picked up were they started, and stretched its lead to nine points, five minutes into the second half, thanks to a pair of lay-ups by Wright and 3-pointers by Danella.



Explorer guard Jamie Walsh helped her team get within three points with 14 minutes left, but the Minutewomen's offense, which shot 51 percent on the afternoon, led by five or more points for the remainder of the game, and took double digit lead on a 3-pointer by Gerardot with about four minutes left.

The Explorers, who shot 60 percent in the first half, were completely shut down in the second frame, could not create second chance opportunities on the offensive side of the ball and had trouble getting back on defense.

After the game, Dacko reflected on her time with Gerardot and Young, the staples of the backcourt this year.

"We are like a family. I am like a grandmother to these girls and they know how much I enjoy them and enjoy being around them."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

UMass coach Marnie Dacko and the Minutewomen were able to celebrate Senior Day with an 82-66 win over La Salle.

Women's ski team ready for Nationals

Shilletto, Nolan lead team after strong ESCSA showing

By Jeffrey Engmann
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's ski team avoided the snow storm that whitened the Northeast on Monday, as it headed to the slopes of Winter Park, Co., for the USCNA National Championships, which begins Tuesday, March 3.

UMass coach Skip Fox expressed via e-mail that he hopes his team's good fortune will continue as the Minutewomen compete in both the giant slalom and the slalom events.

"For things to go well at this level, there is always a bit of luck, or fate or the stars lining up to make things happen. The ladies have to ski fast and finish, it's that simple," Fox said.

The Minutewomen were able to do just that last weekend, when they earned their trip out west by finishing fifth in the ESCSA Regionals.

The team was able to place three skiers in the top 15 on both Saturday and Sunday en route to its top-five finish, just barely enough to make the cut (the top five teams get invited to Nationals).

Junior captain Emily Shilletto gained experience last year, when she competed in the giant slalom at Nationals in 2008, which will be crucial because this year she will lead a UMass squad that has been without top skier Ashley Hawes since Jan. 25.

Sophomores Jaime Taloumis, Abby Nolan and Amy Gilford have all grown into key contributors as the season progressed. This came to fruition last weekend as each were able to place in the top 20.

Nolan led the group in the giant slalom with a fifth place finish with a combined time of 2,19.79.

Shilletto was tops in the slalom with a ninth place finish (144.40).

In addition, Junior Heidi Skinner managed to notch a 15th place finish (2:21.86) in the giant slalom.

Although the Minutemen failed to qualify as a team last weekend, due to several skiers falling to finish the slalom, although they managed a second place finish in the giant slalom. They will still be represented by one member of their team this week in Winter Park.

After finishing seventh in both the giant slalom and the slalom in last week's Regionals, senior Alex Zahoruiko will race this week as an individual.

He will try to atone for what was a disappointing end to the team's hopes to defend their championship.

The Nationals will conclude on March 7.

Jeffrey Engmann can be reached at jengmann@student.umass.edu.

After jumping out to a 3-0 lead on Friday, it seemed the as if the Minutemen were going to pull off the upset over No. 1 BU. But a potential big win turned into a devastating loss ater six unanswered Terriers goals.

Minutemen surrender 13 goals in pair with No. 1 BU

HOCKEY from page 12

"We relaxed to the point where we took a couple of penalties and gave them a couple of power play goals, which changed the look of the game. It gave them a life," Cahoon said. "And that's when I think they started to apply the pressure and we didn't push back.

The Minutemen struck first with nine minutes remaining when T.J. Syner scored his sixth goal of the season on a 2-on-1 break. Topher Bevis added another in the first period, beating Millan seconds after a power play had expired.

Despite being shutout, the Terriers were far from being outplayed as they would continue to mount intense offensive pressure on UMass.

BU's Matt Gilroy started off the comeback by scoring back-to-back goals. On his first goal, Gilroy took advantage of a crumbling UMass defense. Goalkeeper Paul Dainton, who had 38 saves on the night, played with teammates Cory Quirk's stick after he lost his while sprawling out for a loose puck moments earlier. The Minutemen never recovered defensively and Gilroy found a crack in the defense for the goal.

The Terriers continued their attack as Jason Lawrence earned a natural hat trick in a span of 6 minutes and 39 seconds. Lawrence added one before the end of the second period and two in the third to push the BU lead to 5-3.

Just as they did in the first game, the Minutemen owned the first period of Saturday's game at Agganis Arena in Boston.

James Marcou scored first for UMass, picking off a BU pass and settling in the slot to blast a slapshot past Millan.

The celebration did not last long as the Terriers' Corey Trivino scored 26 seconds later to tie the game. The goal was the beginning of a long night for the Minutemen as BU would go on to score UMass' season-high for goals allowed, all in a row.

The shot count was even for both teams at 30-30, but BU's execution on the power play gave them the edge. The Terriers were 3-for-8 with the man advantage.

Dan Meyers started the game in net for UMass, but was replaced by Dainton with about seven minutes to go. Shortly after Dainton entered the game, Jason Lawrence picked up were he left off against the UMass goalie, scoring his fourth goal of the weekend.

Game notes

Boston University had 24 assists combined on its 13 goals this weekend. ... The Minutemen scored one power play goal, compared to six by the Terriers. ... UMass players spent 50 minutes in the penalty box, the Terriers had 32 penalty minutes.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Call Lateef with questions.

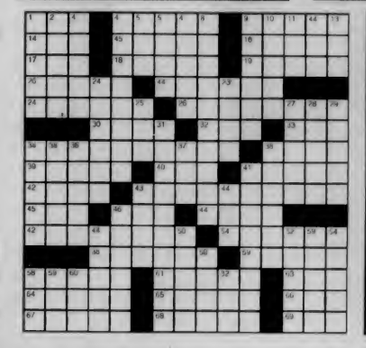
| | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1 | | 6 | | | 9 |
| | | 7 | | 4 | | 1 |
| | 8 | 4 | | 5 | 2 | |
| 8 | | | | | 2 | |
| | 4 | | 8 | 3 | | 9 |
| | 9 | | | | | 3 |
| | | 8 | 3 | | 7 | 1 |
| 1 | | 5 | | 8 | | |
| 4 | | | 2 | | 3 | |

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Little devil
4 Emerge from a shell
9 Bit of parsley
14 Unknown John
15 Florida city
16 Vowels
17 Conclusion
18 "Slave Ship" author Jones
19 Started
20 Ansel or Samuel
22 "Silkwood" star
24 Nabokov title character
26 Most meager
30 Singer Horne
32 April 18 org.
33 Two-finger sign
34 Didn't miss a beat
38 Solid
39 Man-made fiber
40 Muscle spasm
41 Costume
42 Reservoir filler
43 Fantastic aspirations
45 Noshed
46 Canine
47 Spoke
48 Biting midges
51 Common insect
55 Fassen
57 Toy-car sound effect
58 Quite chubby
61 Mock playfully
63 Actor Curry
64 Shoots
65 Kind of circle or city
66 Period
67 Glorify
68 Surrenders by treaty
69 ___ Moines, IA



DOWN
1 Paradigm
2 "___ Cane"
3 Foot control
4 Black-and-white cow
5 Unreturnable serve
6 Old sailors
7 Coagulates
8 Toupees
9 Cavalry swords
10 Hatchery chatter
11 Put in the fix
12 Promissory note
13 Firearm
21 "Paradise Lost" poet
23 Wyatt of the Old West
25 Cape ___ MA
27 Madonna title role
28 Blood part
29 Short-term workers
31 Of an eye defect
34 Islamic lead
35 Poetic Muse
36 Works in 37 Gratuity
38 Tributary stream
41 Funeral group
43 Act petulant
44 Par gently
46 Abhor
49 Stand in the studio
50 Act division
52 Carried
53 Longest French river
54 Samms and Lazarus
56 Ranch worker
58 Washington's bill
59 Swap punches
60 NASA's ISS partner
62 Observe

Continuing & Professional Education
THINK AHEAD
Two 6-week summer sessions
Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net
Registration begins March 9
SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

Quote of the Day

"If not actually disgruntled, he was far from being gruntled."

— P. G. Wodehouse (1881 - 1975)

Dream Nation by Louis Coppola

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Kid Shay

Cheap City By Michael Capozzola

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
The only reason you ever did martial arts was your fascination with colorful belts.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Your existence is entirely unaffected by the recent breakout of MG-42 "Jesus" virus in Bangladesh. For now.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Just because you can order ninja stars off the Internet doesn't mean you should.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
"I'm so sorry Mrs. Patterson; there's nothing we can do ... Jimmy has the Jesus virus. The worms are in his brain."

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Don't fear global warming. Embrace it. Invest in sunblock companies, and purchase some property on a mountain.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If you stare at the television screen for long enough, you'll realize that cable news has the funniest shows around.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Every time you cut down a tree, you make more room for civilization!

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You are destined to craft burritos at Taco Bell with the skill of Mr. Timbaland crafting beats.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You never back down from a confrontation you can easily win, so why let that sissy steal the last bag of Peanut M&Ms?

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Your dreams tonight will be haunted by visions of Don Johnson driving a speed boat.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
When missionaries come to your door, ask them why they feel so dedicated to that position.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're excellent at writing everything down in a little notebook, but quite terrible at ever again locating those notes.

tasty crackers!
free pizza & hot cocoa!*
www.dailycollegian.com/comics
*none of this is true

Classifieds

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

SUMMER ON CAPE COD!! The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews for summer employment on our Cape Cod property March 26,27,28 and April 2,3,4. Servers, Lifeguards, Beach Attendant and more needed! On-site Housing is Available. Visit our website at www.wychmereharbor.com for available positions and call (508) 432-1000 x129 for details.

Announcement

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright

Announcement

413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900

For Rent

28 Stockbridge St: 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room eat in kitchen, pantry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 miles to campus! www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Amherst 2, 3, & 4 Bedroom Apartments. Call for huge rent specials on both Immediate and Summer/Fall rentals! Beautiful property on the bus line to Umass. Air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Free Heat! 2 BR $1200-$1250, 3 BR $1500-$1550, 4 BR $2250. www.MillValleyApts.com 413-253-7377 or stop by at 420 Riverglade Drive.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 3, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A-10 Tournament bid no longer a lock

Loss to La Salle sets up crucial GW tilt

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

PHILADELPHIA — The Massachusetts men's basketball team may have found the answer to its problems in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Don't qualify.

The Minutemen took another step in that direction Sunday night, losing a deceptively-close 97-88 contest at Tom Gola Arena to fall to 11th place in the conference standings and set up a crucial matchup with George Washington on Wednesday.

| | |
|---|---|
| La Salle | 97 |
| UMass | 88 |

UMass made a late spurt to keep it respectable, but 30 minutes of bad basketball consisting of defensive lapses, careless turnovers and bad shooting – among other problems – was too much for the Minutemen to overcome a 26-point deficit against the Explorers.

"Anytime two players go for 60 points, obviously something's not right on the defensive end," said UMass coach Derek Kellogg referring to the 30-point efforts from both Rodney Green and Darryl Partin. "We came out sluggish and didn't play with real toughness in the first half."

Kellogg sent an immediate message in the second half to his team, benching point guard Chris Lowe, Luke Bonner and Ricky Harris – who had no first-half points – in favor of David Gibbs, Tyrell Lynch and Anthony Gurley to start the second half.

"I was pretty candid with the team at halftime. It was definitely a statement," Kellogg said. "I thought those were the guys who competed in the first half and played at a level I expect. So I figured we'd play the guys who were playing the hardest."

It took a while, but the Minutemen got the message midway through the second half just as Harris scored his first points of the game.

The Minutemen battled back from a 72-46 La Salle lead with 11 minutes, 47 seconds remaining in the second half to pull within eight points with 1:02 left – but Partin hit two free throws to seal the win for La Salle (16-12, 7-7 A-10), which went the final 6:01 without a field goal to let UMass back in it.

It was UMass' second-consecutive loss – and eighth

See BASKETBALL on page 8

Following a 97-88 loss to the Explorers, UMass coach Derek Kellogg and the Minutemen fell to a tie for 11th place in the Atlantic 10 and face the possibility of missing the A-10 Tournament with a loss to GW.

UMass KOs Ivies

Connolly single-handedly outscores Yale in home rout

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There's no "I" in team, but all the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team needed against Yale was Jim Connolly.

Connolly 7, Bulldogs 6.

Behind a career-high seven tallies from the senior attack, the Minutemen bounced back from a heartbreaking last-second loss with a dominating 18-6 victory over Yale Saturday afternoon at Garber Field.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 18 |
| Yale | 6 |

UMass (2-1) pounced on the Bulldogs (1-1) early and often, intent on avenging last weekend's 11-10 loss to No. 13 Hofstra – a game it never trailed until the Pride netted the game-winning goal with four seconds remaining.

"Last week's loss was pretty awful. To be up that many goals and then have them come storming back in the second half – it was a tough one to swallow. But we were able to put it to these guys today," said Connolly referencing a 7-3 halftime lead against Hofstra.

UMass goalkeeper Doc Schneider, who was sensational in net making 14 saves, echoed Connolly's sentiment.

"I thought we needed to show what we were made of against a good Yale squad. In the first half against a great Hofstra team we saw how good we could actually be, and we were excited for a chance to get that loss out of [our system] and take it out on someone else," Schneider said.

Connolly wasn't the only one taking last weekend's frustration out on Yale and goalkeeper Andrew Brown. Seven other Minutemen scored at least once, led by Tim Ballise's four goals and Ryan Marcus' two, en route to UMass' highest-scoring output since scoring 18 in a win over Penn State on April 2, 2005.

But all anyone wanted to talk about after the game was Connolly, who helped lead UMass to the 2006 national

See M. LACROSSE on page 8

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Jim Connolly was a force for the Minutemen Saturday, managing to tie his career-high of seven goals, one more than the entire Yale team.

Lyons scores career-high 6 goals in first win of season

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It's always good to get that all important first win of the season – no matter when it comes.

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team did just that on Saturday when the survived a late rally by Harvard to pull of a 13-12 victory on the road. The win comes after three straight losses – two to teams ranked in the top 10 – to open the season. UMass has played every game of the season on the road so far.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 13 |
| Harvard | 12 |

"It was a good team effort, a really good win to have. The momentum shifted back and forth but we were able to keep our composure," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "It ended up being a tic in the last six minutes we were able to get the draw and score and play tough defense."

Jackie Lyons led the Minutewomen (1-3) a career-best six goals (one assist), including the game-winner to break a 12-12 tie with 2 minutes, 34 seconds left in regulation. This came after Lyons was switched from midfield to the attack position.

"She is one of our strongest threats on the field and the last two games playing midfield took a lot out of her," Venechanos said. We just told Jackie when she wanted her opportunity to take it to the goal [she should], her teammates did a great job of creating space and Jackie was able to do her thing."

Freshman goalkeeper Katie "Flo" Florence was instrumental in the victory. Florence made

See W. LACROSSE on page 8

Early leads wasted

Minutemen fail to hold leads of 3-0, 1-0 in losses to BU

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

What started off as a dream game for the Massachusetts hockey team ended in a nightmare as a 3-0 lead went up in a puff of smoke in a devastating 6-3 loss Friday night at the hands of No. 1 Boston University.

The Saturday game against the Terriers did not go well for the Minutemen either as BU responded to a 1-0 deficit with a frenzy of seven straight goals that sent UMass home with a 7-2 loss and a weekend sweep.

| | |
|---|---|
| BU | 7 |
| UMass | 2 |
| BU | 6 |
| UMass | 3 |

The Friday game could not have started better for the Minutemen (14-17-3, 9-13-3 Hockey East). The team had built a 3-0 lead on the top-ranked team in the nation in front of a riotous crowd of 8,291. UMass' hopes for a blowout win were dashed as the Minutemen allowed six consecutive goals.

"It was all about which team applied the pressure," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "They applied the pressure all night, forced into playing out of our comfort zone and we never pushed back and applied the pressure the other way."

After building a three-goal lead, everything seemed to be falling in UMass' favor. The Minutemen had momentum against the top-ranked team in the nation. With three goals allowed on 10 shots, freshman goalkeeper for BU (25-5-4, 16-5-4 HEA) Kieran Millan was pulled from the game in favor of fellow freshman Grant Rollheiser. Millan entered the game with only one career loss under his belt, but he finished this one on the bench.

"Just keep playing, which we didn't," Cahoon said of the change. "It doesn't change anything from our perspective, pressure the new guy."

After that point though, the Minutemen let up on the Terriers, and allowed the best team in the country back into the game.

See HOCKEY on page 10

PI STAFF PHOTOGRAPHER

Alex Berry, above, assisted on Cory Quirk's power-play goal late in the third period Saturday, but it was too late as the Terriers had a 7-1 lead.

Balschmiter, Minutewomen pick up pair over weekend

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

She's not a sure bet, but she is about as close to one as there is in college softball.

Following her shutout last weekend over defending national champion Arizona State, the three-time Easton All-American, Brandice Balschmiter continued her dominance as she pitched two more shutouts in the rain shortened NFCA Leadoff Classic for the Massachusetts softball team.

The No. 17 Minutewomen (8-4) were scheduled to play five games over the weekend (Nebraska, No. 15 Nebraska, Mississippi State No. 22 Southern Illinois, and No. 3 Alabama), but due to severe rain and thunderstorms, the schedule was revised. UMass instead played two games, against Nebraska on Friday and against No. 13 DePaul on Saturday.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 2 |
| DePaul | 0 |
| UMass | 3 |
| Nebraska | 0 |

While DePaul may have possessed a higher national ranking than UMass, it was clear who the better team was by the end of the game. The Minutewomen came out on top 2-0, behind a one-hitter by Balschmiter.

The senior held the Blue Demons (9-4) hitless through the first 6 2/3 innings before she surrendered her first hit with one out left in the game. Balschmiter had a perfect game, entering the seventh inning.

After getting the first batter of the inning to fly out to center field, Purdue's Becca Heteniak drew Balschmiter's only walk all game. After a fielder's choice that got Heteniak out at second base, Balschmiter gave up her only hit of the game, a single by Annie Demas.

See SOFTBALL on page 7

BRIAN TEVEBAUGH/COLLEGIAN

Sarah Reeves and the Minutewomen continued their early season success with a pair of wins over teams from major conferences this weekend.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

PARTLY CLOUDY HIGH: 30 LOW: 8 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 2009

UMass writing awarded

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Writing Program was one of three in the country chosen by the Conference on College and Communication (CCCC) to receive its 2008-09 Writing Program Certificate of Excellence.

The CCCC (known as the Four Cs), the largest national organization of writing teachers and writing program administrators, will present UMass, Washington State University and North Carolina State with the award at its annual meeting in San Francisco from March 11 to 14.

According to the CCCC's website, the award was established in 2004 and recognizes programs that have conducted research that serves similar programs at other institutions, uses practices and materials that lead to desirable learning and provides valuable and valued community services, among other characteristics.

"This is the highest honor given nationally to writing programs," said associate English professor David Fleming, the director of the UMass Writing Program since 2007. "For such a large research University, we're really very proud to have this kind of coherent attention to writing throughout the students' career here at UMass and across the disciplines."

Fleming said he will receive the award in San Francisco on March 13.

Writing programs wishing to win the honor must go through an application process. Fleming said the UMass program applied for the award in August and was notified Jan. 29 that it had been selected.

"I think it kind of puts us in the top tier of writing programs in the country," said Fleming. "We've always been there, but I think this is kind of a stamp of approval by our national organization and I think it not only gets us great publicity across the country – we can attract better graduate students to the Ph.D. program in the English department that focuses on the study of writing – but I think it attracts good teachers here."

Haivan Hoang, an English professor and director of the Writing Center located in the Learning Commons of the W.E.B. Du Bois Library, said the award pays homage to all those who have contributed to the UMass Writing Program since it was formed in 1982.

"It rewards the kinds of work that all the past directors of the writing program have put into supporting both teachers of college writing as well as the students who are in the classrooms of those teachers," she said.

The Writing Center's assistant director, Chris DiBiase, is a second-year doctorate student concentrating on composition and rhetoric and he said the UMass Writing Program is one of the most supportive ones he has seen.

See AWARD on page 2

SIGNATURE WASHINGTON CREATIVE SERVICES

The Writing Center located in the basement of the library is one area honored by the CCCC.

NICOLE CARABALLO/COLLEGIAN

David Fleming, director of the Writing Program, said he will receive the award on March 13.

SGA holds debate for presidential elections

BY MIKE FOX
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The candidates for Student Government Association (SGA) President and Trustee held a pre-election debate before a crowd of about 50 people last night in the Student Union Ballroom.

Each candidate was asked several questions by each of the major campus news outlets – The Collegian, WMUA, and UVCTV. The questions centered on topics relating to the recent $1,500 fee increase and other issues of diversity and affordability, ways to increase student participation in the SGA, how the group should relate to the administration, and whether the SGA's priorities should have a campus focus or larger state-wide context.

Trustee candidate Emily Bloch focused her opening statement on her past experience as a student organizer working with the Center for Education Policy Advocacy, specifically her work to fight ballot Question 1, which was the attempt last November to eliminate the income tax, and her work to promote on campus safety.

Her opponent, Josh Davidson, focused his opening statement more on his vision for the trustee position. He spoke more in favor of increased cooperation and dialogue with the state-level administration in place of protests and other disruptive measures.

For their portion of the debate, presidential candidates Chris Faulkner and Ngozi Mbawuike focused on very different themes in their opening statements.

Chris Faulkner spoke about his experiences as governor and lieutenant governor of Southwest. He touched on various events that he has helped organize, such as Southwest Week and issues that he has worked to address, such as student's issues with laundry.

Ngozi Mbawuike's opening statement was centered on her ideological view of what the position of President means. She emphasized the importance of the President being an elected representative and the importance of speaking up for those that vote for them.

During the questioning, each campaign – Mbawuike/Bloch and Faulkner/Davidson – typically answered questions that aligned with their running mate.

In regards to the fee increase, Mbawuike/Bloch stated that they believed that the Board of Trustees acted preemptively and should have waited a short time longer to hear the impact that President Obama's stimulus package would have on the UMass system. It was added that the state should fund its own institutions.

Faulkner/Davidson said that they believed the fee increase was a responsible measure taken by the Board of Trustees and that it would be a failure of leadership if they refused to take action in light of the recent budget crisis. However, it was added, that they would encourage the Board to seek alternatives to additionally offset the increase.

Both campaigns cited the need for increased communication between the SGA and the rest of the campus community. They both spoke about restructuring the SGA to better facilitate dialogue with the student body and a reliance on on-campus media to advertise SGA messages. Both campaigns also mentioned the need for a new SGA website.

In regards to relating to the administration, Faulkner/Davidson spoke constantly about fostering a cooperative relationship with both Whitmore and the state-level administrators. The point was reiterated that their administration would seek less confrontation when dealing with the administration.

Mbawuike/Bloch stated that while they were also willing to build a relationship with the administration, they would take whatever measures necessary to ensure that student priorities always came first.

The two campaigns offered different plans on how they would work to directly impact the campus community.

Mbawuike/Bloch focused on efforts to promote campus safety in regards to informing students about rape and hate crimes that take place at UMass. They stated a need for the student body to be constantly informed about these types

See DEBATE on page 2

Chancellor's Task Force creates blog

BY ADAM MCGILLEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In the interest of bringing transparency to a possible reorganization of the academic colleges at the University of Massachusetts, Chancellor Robert C. Holub's Task Force started a blog where students and faculty can voice their opinions on alternative academic designs.

The Task Force on Reorganization, created early last month, will advise the chancellor on his efforts to reduce costs by creating a more efficient structural model by uniting colleges on the flagship campus in Amherst.

Holub estimates that reorganization could save the University anywhere between $1 million and $2 million by streamlining internal operations.

On his website, Holub proposes a new College of Humanities, Arts and Social Sciences and a College of Natural Sciences, reducing four colleges into two.

The task force consists of 12 department heads and the chairs of the four colleges that would be affected by Holub's reorganization.

On Friday, the task force will release a preliminary report, but will take "whatever additional time is required to produce a thorough and complete final report," as outlined in the Feb. 9 general faculty meeting.

"We actively seek input and shared information from our academic community who are generating ideas and plans concern-

See BLOG on page 3

Congress makes act for teen drop-outs

BY KATHRYN FOLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A new bill has been introduced in the United States Congress that's designed to help some high school students complete their education in ways that are more suitable for their personal well-being.

The "Move on When Ready Act" (House Bill 149) was recently drafted by Georgia State Rep. Jan Jones. It will allow students to attend community colleges or technical schools to finish their high school education on their own time, provided that they demonstrate the suitable initiative.

Studies by the American Promise Alliance showed that nationwide, 1.2 million students drop out annually. In 2008, 17 of the nation's 50 largest cities had graduation rates that fell lower than 50 percent, with the lowest percentages falling in Detroit, Indianapolis and Cleveland.

It was reported that students seeking education in urban public high schools were less likely to graduate than their counterparts in rural and suburban public high schools.

Former Secretary of State Colin Powell told the Associate Press, "when more than 1 million

See ACT on page 2

Area credit union makes gains

BY SAM BUTTERFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Though Federal Reserve Chairman Ben S. Bernanke said in Washington Tuesday that America faces "a prolonged episode of economic stagnation," the UMass Five College Federal Credit Union, based in Hadley, Mass., is growing sizably.

The union grew by 10 percent in 2008 and is continuing to expand its base in 2009, according to Jon Reske, vice president of marketing.

"We finished off 2008 up about 10 percent in total deposits and assets, and our lending was up about seven percent," he said.

Despite the economic downturn responsible for a 44.6 percent decline in the Dow Jones Industrial in the last year, the credit union added 2,300 members in 2008, bringing their total membership to 23,500 in an area with a population of about 150,000.

Reske said he believes the current financial volatility is leading consumers to look for a more stable, conservative outlet for their banking needs.

"I think individual consumers are taking a second look at where they're doing their banking," he said. "I think people are starting to realize that a credit union may be different, being a non-profit cooperative, so the member comes first."

Reske explained that because the UMass Five College Federal Credit Union and credit unions in general do not need to worry about profits or stockholders, they are better able in times of financial stress to give consumers the services they need rather than attempting to make a loan with a high interest rate or a greater possibility of profit for the bank.

"When you join the credit union, we work very hard to figure out what your needs are, and once we get a handle on that, we're going to offer some products and services to you that may be of help," he said.

"A lot of banks, it's 'well, how many checking accounts do you have?' But with us, we're not product-centric, we're consumer-centric," Reske added.

Historically, credit unions have fared better in times of overall economic decline than other banks. Through the Great Depression, credit unions saw their membership numbers swell, pooling resources through corporations or municipalities, where banks declined steeply in size and number. The savings and loan crisis of the 1980s was another instance where many banks aiming to profit on housing loans faltered and credit unions endured.

Reske said he believes this is because credit unions tend to lend more carefully and do not give what they feel will be difficult loans for their members to pay. Instead, he said, they put their resources toward generating more services for their members.

"Because we know our members and tend to have more conservative and pragmatic policies and procedures in regards to lending, we, and credit unions in general, haven't gotten into some of the issues that have taken place, like the sub-prime issues," he said.

Though the news is largely positive for credit unions, Reske said they are not immune to the problems plaguing the economy.

"There's a lot of collateral damage that takes place, and there's no doubt that we're seeing, as with every institution,

See CREDIT UNION on page 2

SIGNATURE WASHINGTON CREATIVE SERVICES

Despite an economic recession and many national banks asking for bailouts, the UMass Five College Credit Union has excelled, finishing up by about 10 percent in total deposits in 2008 and continues to see gains.

ARTS & LIVING
ACTOR RETURNS

Former 'ER' star Eriq LaSalle returns to television with a starring role in a Hallmark movie called 'Relative Stranger.'

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
WIN AND IN

A loss against George Washington tonight may cost the UMass men's basketball team a bid into the A-10 Tournament for the first time in school history.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION
COLLEGIAN COLUMNIST BEN MORIARTY SAYS THAT OCTOMOM GIVES WOMEN A BAD NAME

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
WATCH VIDEO FROM LAST NIGHT'S SGA PRE-ELECTION DEBATE

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 26

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wanczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COPIES EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR James Mathews
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Ela Rosenzweig
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR P.J. Stanley
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Korzwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Turtinen
ASST. EDITORIAL Leigh Greaney
ASST. EDITORIAL Nick O'Malley
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldmann
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO Ryan Fung
ASSISTANT PHOTO Matthew Harrison
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION TEAM
Nick Guanno

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

INTRODUCING NEWSGARDEN

FOLLOW NEWS GEOGRAPHICALLY WITH DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM'S NEW APPLICATION.

NEWS

VIDEO:
SEE MORE OF WHAT THE SGA CANDIDATES HAD TO SAY AT LAST NIGHT'S PRE-ELECTION DEBATE.

PODCAST:
A ROUNDTABLE OF THE COLLEGIAN'S REPORTERS AND EDITORS DISCUSS THE UNIVERSITY SYSTEM'S FINANCIAL CRISI AND WHAT IT MAY MEAN LOOKING AHEAD.

VIDEO:
DAILY COLLEGIAN EDITORS AND REPORTERS PROVIDE A WRAP OF THE CAMPUS' BUDGET CRISIS AND CHANCELLOR HOLUB'S REACTION TO IT IN THE "WAR ROOM."

VIDEO:
COLLEGIAN REPORTER AND UVC-TV 19 CORRESPONDENT GISEL SAILLANT HOLDS LITTLE BACK WHILE SOLICITING REAL STUDENT OPINION ON A VARIETY OF ISSUES.

BLOG:
READ THE LATEST IN UMASS RESEARCH, POLITICS AND STUDENT LIFE FOR THE WEEK ON THE COLLEGIAN'S NEWS BLOGS. NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS TELLS OF GOING UNDER THE KNIFE FOR UMASS KINESIOLOGY.

SPORTS

SLIDESHOW:
SEE THE HIGHLIGHTS OF THE UMASS MEN'S BASKETBALL GAME AGAINST URI THROUGH THE LENSE OF A COLLEGIAN PHOTOGRAPHER.

Crime Log: February 23 – March 1

The UMass Police Department is requesting assistance from the community in the identification of a person of interest who may have been involved in a large theft of over $5,500 worth of Adobe software. The merchandise was stolen from the shelves of the University Store on Thursday, Feb. 26, at approximately 1:45 p.m.

"The investigation right now has stalled. We have a pretty good surveillance photo of him from the University Store, but we have not been able to identify him," said UMPD Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald.

Concerning the actual larceny, he added that "there was no confrontation or physical injury, he simply stole it and walked out." The suspect is "student age," and a white male.

"Right now, we are just asking for help," he added.

If someone can help by identifying the person pictured or can provide any information, they are asked to contact UMPD at 413-545-2121 or the UMass Detective Bureau at 413-545-0893.

MONDAY

Brian Douglas Irving, 20, of 3 Kenwood St. Chelmsford, Mass., was arrested after an alleged domestic disturbance at Dickinson dormitory at 7:29 p.m., and charged with assault with a dangerous weapon and intimidating a witness.

"The victim in this case was crossing the street on Orchard Hill Way when he saw a vehicle approaching from 100 yards away – he tried to cross but the car revved its engine and began to speed at him, spinning the tires," said Archbald.

The man crossing the street recognized Irving as the driver when the vehicle just "stopped short of hitting him on the sidewalk." According to the UMPD, Irving has also been allegedly calling and sending text messages, which have caused the victim emotional distress.

"The phone calls have been about 'putting people in the hospital,'" said Archbald. The victim in this case has told authorities he believes the incident, calls and text messages are in an attempt to get him to "drop the case against him." It is not clear at this time if there is a previous case involving the two men.

SATURDAY

Stephen Martinez, 19, of 173 Walter Ave. Thornwood, N.Y., was arrested after an alleged domestic disturbance at Washington dormitory at 8:03 p.m., and charged with breaking and entering, malicious destruction of property +$250, kidnapping, intimidating a witness, assault with a dangerous weapon and attempting to commit a crime.

"A female reported that her ex-boyfriend came into her room, pushed her to the ground and choked her," said Archbald.

While a resident advisor (RA) was speaking to the police dispatch, a screaming female could be heard in the background according to authorities.

"We were then dispatched to the 17th floor of Washington dormitory and the suspect was still on the scene and we arrested him immediately," added Archbald.

According to the UMPD, the boyfriend entered the room uninvited and then refused to leave.

"The suspect punched the victim and when she tried to leave, the suspect threw the victim on the bed and held her down, putting his hands around her neck," said Archbald.

Martinez smashed the woman's cell phone and again prevented her from leaving, constituting the kidnapping charge.

"When she attempted to leave a second time he grabbed her and threw her down again and then threw a curling iron at her," he added. The RA heard the victim and went to help.

Monique L. Jemmott, 24, of 330 W.141 St. 1A New York City, N.Y., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on Commonwealth Avenue at 10:35 p.m., and was charged with having an outstanding warrant. "The car was traveling southbound on Commonwealth Ave. without its headlights on," said Archbald. The details of the warrant are unknown at this time.

SUNDAY

Jenna Nicole Stein, 17, of 41 Strawberry Lane North Reading, Mass., was arrested as a result of a traffic stop on North Pleasant Street at 2:05 a.m. and charged with possession of liquor while under the age of 21.

—Adam P. Coulter, Collegian Staff. He can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

Growth despite slow economy

CREDIT UNION from page 1

some people paying slower, some people getting laid off, but nothing compared to what's happening at the national banking level," he said. "We're going to lend prudently and that's going to keep our balance sheet on stable ground."

The difficulty credit unions will face in this recession, he said, is similar to that of other banks – enticing customers to borrow and take loans where they have less to spend.

"Trying to get people to borrow money, to lend it out, is the harder thing, because a lot of people are being very careful and prudent about what they're spending on, so obviously that makes it more challenging in the marketplace to lend money," he said. "We're seeing a shift in peoples' attitudes about what they'll borrow for."

He furthered that credit unions have a similar reserve ratio, or amount they must keep in their reserves, to other banks, and are regulated by an insurance corporation, the National Credit Union Association (NCUA), which acts in much the same way as the FDIC for banks.

He also explained that credit unions retain more capital than other banks because that is inherent to their nature; they cannot sell stock to generate capital and therefore build capital through the retained earnings.

"The credit union industry, overall, is more capitalized than banks," he said. "The money we make on a monthly basis, we use to give our members better rates on CDs (certificates of deposit), or to lower our rates on auto loans, as well as lower fees."

Reske said a lot of effort goes to educating its members on good financial decision making.

"We want our members to be really good consumers of financial services, so we do a lot of education, workshops on how to lower your credit score, how much to take out – the more educated we can make our members as far as being financial consumers, the better for us," he said.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sjb09@hampshire.edu

UM scribes honored

AWARD from page 1

SHAUNEE WANT/CREATIVE SERVICES

The staff of the UMass Writing Program will see their work recognized as one of three nationally awarded Certificates of Excellence.

He said that administrators take the time to show graduate students, who teach many of the classes, different methods of teaching in addition to helping them outside of the classroom.

"I'm very proud to be associated with a program of this quality," he said. "I've always kind of believed in the strength of the program, which is one of the reasons I chose to come over to UMass and I think the recognition is well deserved."

About 100 graduate student teaching associates work in the program and teach first-year classes. The program receives more than 100 applications each year from graduate students wanting to join its teaching staff, but can offer new positions to only about a quarter of them.

Hoang said all writing teachers are given an intensive orientation before they begin teaching. In sessions that meet about once a week, teachers discuss teaching strategies, ideas and concerns all for the purpose of helping the teachers' professional development.

"All of this, in turn, helps students," she said, adding that the strength of the support that is offered to teachers is one of the reasons she took the job as the Writing Center's director.

Fleming said the UMass Writing Program is made up of three parts – first-year writing, junior-year writing and the Writing Center.

The first-year writing course is required of all UMass freshmen. According to Fleming, the class, taken each year by more than 4,000 students in about 200 sections, teaches students the basics of writing and composition.

Once students have decided on a major, they must take a junior-year writing course.

"What's really cool with the junior writing program is that it's very tailored to what you might need with your major," said Joan DeGeorge, a junior-year writing teaching assistant and graduate student pursing her doctorate in clinical psychology.

"Within psychology, there's a pretty wide range, so we cover things like how to send an appropriate e-mail – the kind of writing we do a lot but that we don't really consider writing – and ways to make that very effective, up to your typical term paper with appropriately cited references and research and things like that. And we do a lot of things in between."

Domenic Poli can be reached at dpoli@student.umass.edu.

SGA candidates discuss issues

DEBATE from page 1

of situations in order to make the campus feel safer.

Faulkner/Davidson spoke more about matters such as increasing individual RSO funding, citing the fact that Registered Student Organizations (RSOs) receive collectively about $500,000 out of the $2,000,000 Student Activities Trust Fund, and living space issues such as concerns about campus laundry machines. They also talked about an increased focus on campus concerns.

In regards to how the SGA should approach state-wide advocacy, Faulkner/Davidson mentioned a desire to recruit professional help to assist in lobbying for increased university funding in addition to cooperating with pre-existing systems.

The questioning from the media panel was followed up by questions taken from the audience. The partially polarized audience primarily asked questions that allowed the candidates to reemphasize their platforms. They also asked questions that highlighted opposing candidate's strengths.

In regards to their performance, the Mbanwuike/Bloch campaign stated, "Tonight was great. We are happy with the attendance due to the fact that the important, well-informed, and though out questions tonight hopefully gives us a chance to better inform the campus and help people make educated decisions on election day."

Faulkner/Davidson said, "I feel that we fielded a lot of difficult questions but they will help students develop a better understanding in order to make a more informed choice."

Speaking of their strengths during the night, Faulkner/Davidson said, "We were able to highlight the focus of our campaign and our overall strategy. It was also good that our campaigns saw a lot of common ground tonight and that no matter the outcome, future dialogue can only be positive, productive and encouraging."

Both campaigns stated a mutual weakness that they weren't well informed of their opposition's platforms prior to last night's event.

He added, "When you pay for the Student Activities Trust Fund, you have a responsibility to your self and every student to voice your opinion and vote during SGA elections to help decide how the money is divided. It is a shame that people complain about campus issues if they don't make their voice heard through elections."

He continued, "I'm not going to ask students to go to every senate meeting, or read the minutes from every meeting, I won't even ask them to be student leaders. However, For god's sake, support your student leaders."

"Out of 20,000 students, four people were willing to stand up and make an attempt at leading," he finished. "It's not a lot to ask for students to take five minutes out of their day and vote."

Elections will be held on March 10 and 11, from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 5 to 8 p.m. in all of the dining commons and the Campus Center.

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu

High drop-out rate of concern

ACT from page 1

students a year drop out of high school, it's more than a problem, it's a catastrophe."

It was this statistic that precipitated discussion about what could be done to reform schools; what could be done to keep students motivated; what could be done to help teenagers do a complete turnaround and reformulate their futures.

The primary goal of the act is to decrease the increasing drop-out rate. It will give students at public schools and their families more alternatives in order to fit their individual educational needs.

Jones believes that this new option will predominantly attract the students who remain "uninspired in or unserved by a traditional high school setting."

She also hopes the act will allow said students to finish high school and prepare for their futures while still having the time to assume family obligations, take online classes, work to maintain an income, etc.

This opportunity is not only available to students who are on the brink of failure or leaving school, but also open to "highly motivated, high-achieving students whose aspirations would be better met as full-time college students."

If students choose to take up this generous offer, they must still fulfill all course requirements for the typical high school graduation. The board of education would then also have to discuss and institute rules concerning the issuing of a diploma to students who went to college early.

The Atlanta Journal-Constitution reported that community colleges and technical schools have agreed to accept the state share of the student's per-pupil spending as payment, in trade for allowing the enrollment of high school students. The local dollars that would have initially been spent on the student would be left with the high school.

Georgia is not the only state looking to increase the graduation rate.

New Hampshire will soon attempt an analogous trial run that would allow eligible sophomores to earn a two-year community college degree while completing their high school career. New Hampshire also promotes substitute education programs, out of school course work and distance learning.

Jones said what interests her most is the ability to provide students more options that will benefit everyone as opposed to just a select bunch.

She wants to transform public education so Georgia students will be prepared to thrive and compete in the global economy of the 21st century.

Kathryn Foley can be reached at kfoley@student.umass.edu.

JANUARY 30 - APRIL 26, 2009
THIN & GIRL CULTURE
Lauren Greenfield

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP
free!
Artist Lecture: Lauren Greenfield
Thursday, March 6, 2009 5 PM
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
Book-signing and reception in Museum immediately following lecture
Presented in conjunction with THIN & Girl Culture
Advocate
CANON USA's "Explorers of Light" program is pleased to sponsor Lauren Greenfield at Smith College www.smith.edu/artmu.com

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Blog seeks opinion of faculty, students

BLOG from page 1

ing how best to move forward in response to the proposed reorganization," the blog outlines in its only post thus far.

Political science professor Jane Fountain chairs the task force.

"We are searching for better ways to organize our schools and colleges and the systems and programs within them in order to be as productive, in terms of research and teaching, as possible," she said in an e-mailed statement. "We are also mindful that the world around us is changing, with implications for how and what we teach and for opportunities for research."

A range of faculty members have posted comments to the blog, many of them extensive and polished stances on the direction they think the University should take.

Some feel the current economic crisis provides an opportunity to improve the way UMass operates by bringing different disciplines together under new college headings.

Others argue that the crisis may provide an excuse to pare back in areas that may not drive as much publicity or income to the University.

Brian Marquis, a senior legal studies and sociology major, believes reorganization is necessary in order to sustain quality at UMass during an economic downturn.

"This is painful for an undergraduate to write about, but individual faculty members should shed their Ph.Ds and start reading the morning newspapers," he said in a comment posted to the blog on Feb. 27.

In an e-mailed statement, Marquis said that some of the arguments against reorganization seemed designed to "protect the best interest of the competing departments."

Scott Auerbach, a chemistry professor at UMass, also pronounced support for reorganization in a comment posted Feb. 24 to the blog. He outlined the possible benefits of creating a College of Life and Physical Sciences.

He argued that an interdisciplinary college combining the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics with elements from microbiology, veterinary and animal sciences and neurosciences could help UMass remain competitive in new research endeavors.

"If the [reorganization] is done well, urgent times like these can catalyze such a structural change," Auerbach wrote in his comment.

Other professors feel this is not the right time to make drastic changes in the academic structure of the University.

"Merging is unlikely to create stronger and more effective administrative capacities that will best support the intellectual development of faculty and students," wrote Joya Misra, associate professor of sociology and public policy, in her comment on the blog. "Simply put, one size does not fit all."

Smaller colleges at UMass allow academic deans to address the specific needs of faculty and students within their college, others argue.

Unifying colleges that currently stand apart encourages interdisciplinary pursuits, allowing departments cordoned off from each other to open up new avenues of communication that could lead to broader discoveries in research, according to the Chancellor.

Merging disparate colleges could create a situation at an already-large University where anonymity becomes the status quo for students and professors.

Ten colleges currently make up the UMass campus: Engineering, Humanities and Fine Arts (HFA), Natural Resources and the Environment (NRE), Natural Sciences and Mathematics (NSM), Social and Behavioral Sciences (SBS), School of Education, Isenberg School of Management, School of Nursing, School of Public Health and Health Sciences and the Stockbridge School of Agriculture.

Holub's original proposal would leave only the College of Engineering untouched.

In a comment posted to the blog Feb. 26, Raymond J. La Raja, associate professor of political science, expressed a concern that "the reorganization is a strategy to improve the standing of UMass in popular rankings such as US News & World Report."

La Raja said that a College of Arts and Sciences would place an emphasis on engineering and sciences that produce doctorates, which could boost the University's national rankings.

"At the same time, other programs will be left to wither on the vine."

The task force's blog is available at blogs.umass.edu/reorg. An OIT login is required to post comments.

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu.

Interested in writing for the News section?
contact Will McGuinness at news@dailycollegian.com

SMUCKER'S THURSDAY
UMASS IN PARTNERSHIP WITH SMUCKER'S FOODSERVICE
THURSDAY MARCH 5
BREAKFAST
• Georgia Peach Pecan Sticky Buns
• Blackberry Patch Coffee Cake
LUNCH
• Creamy Chicken with Wild Rice Soup
DINNER
• Spicy Roast Pork with Sweet Potato Polenta
• Ancho-Lime Jicama Slaw
• Tres Leches Cake with Coconut Butter Cream Frosting
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
ENTER TO WIN FABULOUS PRIZES!
Worcester DC • Franklin DC • Hampshire DC
www.umassdining.com

VISITING COLLEGE CHEF SERIES

Cal Bistro Fare
• Grilled Wild Pacific Halibut with Fennel
• Coq au Vin (in sherry sauce)
• Carved Pork Loin with Honey Mustard Sauce
• And more...
Wednesday, March 4
Berkshire DC from 5–9pm
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Cal Dining
www.umassdining.com

Please join us for a discussion with
Israeli and Palestinian peace activists from the OneVoice Movement
ONEVOICE קול אחד صوتنا فلسطين
Thursday, March 5 at 7:30pm
Cape Cod Lounge
Student Union Building
UMass Amherst
"One Million Voices for Peace in the Middle East"
The OneVoice Movement is an international grassroots movement with over 650,000 signatories in Israel and Palestine, and 1,800 highly-trained youth leaders.
It aims to amplify the voice of the overwhelming but silent majority of moderates who wish for peace, working toward a two-state solution guaranteeing an end to occupation and violence, and a viable independent Palestinian state at peace with Israel.
More info at www.umass.edu/jewish or (413) 545-9642
UMASS AMHERST
Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Muslim Students Association, Student Alliance for Israel, Arab Students Club, UMass Muslim Public Affairs Council, and the Center for Student Development, Student Affairs & Campus Life.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 2009

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Giving women a bad name

Ben Moriarty

Imagine this, if you can. The year is 2001. A single, 26 year old wants a child but isn't involved in a relationship, so she gets in vitro fertilization. She has the kid she wanted.

This isn't so bad – babies are cute. She could take care of it, and everyone wants to have a child of their own at some point.

But then she wants another one, and does the same thing. Again, not so bad, having a boyfriend do it would be more fun, but OK.

And then another, and another, and so on, until she has six children.

It entered into weird territory a couple kids ago.

Then, as if being a single mom with six children wasn't enough, she decides to have a doctor shoot the ultimate egg concoction straight into her uterus, hoping for six more. Fortunately, two eggs split, so she had octuplets.

She is the Octomom, or, as her birth certificate says, Nadya Suleman.

In case you were wondering, no, she is not a millionaire who can afford to pay for a nanny, the diapers and the food. She can't, in fact, pay for them at all, as the woman's mother made clear when she said that Octomom wasn't even contributing to the food bill. Her 67-year-old father, Edward Suleman, is going back to Iraq as a translator in order to help take care of the children, because Octomom cannot.

He's a nice guy.

Because of her negligent behavior, she has been given taxpayer dollars to help care for the kids, which she should. There is no reason why children should suffer because their mom suffers from some sort of problem as well.

So, when you thought that things couldn't get any weirder in the Octomom saga, it did.

The Octomom turned down an offer which would give free health and dental insurance for all her children. Oh, and one million dollars as well. The catch?

Appear in some porn movies.

I mean, half the gynecologists in the country have seen it already, so why not?

"Those guys at Vivid video must be nuts! Who wants to see me naked?" she said about the offer.

It used to be that both males and females had to be involved, but Octomom showed us six times you can do it by yourself with a present from the sperm bank. Thanks, science.

She is right that no one wants to see her naked. She is wrong though, when she says they must be nuts. She obviously knows nothing about the porn industry. No one wants to see her naked, but there's a reason why everyone slows down when they see a multicar pileup on the highway. Convert that analogy to her potential movies, and you will understand.

According to FOX News, the guys at Vivid want her to have sex with eight different men in eight different scenes. I sent in a suggestion saying they should prosthetically attach four more arms onto her so she would be a real Octomom, but they haven't responded yet.

Stephen Hirsch, the CEO of Vivid Entertainment, said he "would really love to sit down and talk with her and come up with something she feels comfortable with … she's struggling financially and this is a woman who wants to provide for her kids. This way, she can hold her head high and not be using taxpayer's money to support her family."

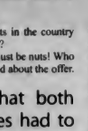
Why the hell not?

Noam Chomsky, the famous linguist and porn hater, says pornography is a "humiliation and degradation of women." He is correct in believing that it lends to the objectification of women and more. But it's unfortunate that people don't see how Nadya Suleman's actions lead to the degradation of women as well.

Coming full swing from the right to not bear a child, Nadya is the epitome of what the choice to do whatever you want to your body really entails.

She is taking the sacred ability of creating and nurturing life and turning it into a sham. Females have been graced with the wondrous and unmatched ability to produce life. It used to be that both males and females had to be involved, but Octomom showed us six times you can do it by yourself with a present from the sperm bank.

Thanks, science.



Suleman makes it clear that allowing women to choose to do whatever they want to their bodies isn't a source of empowerment or something worthy of respect. There is nothing admirable in abusing women's envious ability to give birth by taking it to excess. Nor is there anything respectable in casting out the role of the familial mother by getting rid of potential life because it's inconvenient.

Throwing away and making a farce of the one thing that sets you above the other sex is purely self-debasement.

But as it goes, on the individual level, it will always remain, "it doesn't affect anyone but me." But on the whole, it's a different story. And it's a story where the unfortunate ending results in the continual objectification and degradation of women.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

Controlling the credit craze

John Glaser

In his address to Congress and the nation last week, President Barack Obama assured us that the government is working aggressively to "restart lending." Federal Reserve Chairman Ben Bernanke told the Senate that he was "committed to using all available tools" to "unfreeze the credit markets."

Just one question: why in God's name would we want to do that?

Obama explained that "the flow of credit is the lifeblood of our economy." Evidently, he wants Americans to be able to borrow even more money so that they can buy more houses they can't afford, additional cars they don't need (and again, can't afford), and begin once again to put to use the nine credit cards the average American possesses. This is ridiculous.

Sometimes credit is good, of course. But in recent years, and with regards to this economic crisis specifically, credit has been the cancer of our economy rather than the lifeblood. Debt has been the cornerstone of American capitalism for too long. Too much easy money; credit and debt are exactly what got us into this mess. Why would the government be encouraging more of it?

Everyone agrees that lax lending policies helped realize the financial crisis. We hear all about the predatory lenders that made bad loans to people who couldn't afford to pay them back. But now, in a flush of nauseating irony, the do-gooders and master planners in our oversized government of ineptitude are incentivizing – by law – more irresponsible lending.

We're told things would be worse without government assistance. Really, we would be better off in the long run if they stayed out of the damn way.

Will they be ready to accept the blame the next time the financial market crashes because of too much debt? Or will they still blame the evils of Wall Street, despite their own culpability?

Actually, encouraging excessive credit and huge amounts of personal debt has been the de facto policy of our government for quite some time now. If we were spared artificially low interest rates provided by the feds, which are government agencies like the Federal Housing Administration and certain subsidies built into the tax code, we might have avoided all that predatory lending which hoisted us into this slump.

Through Obama's American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, all of these pro-credit, pro-debt and anti-saving governmental inducements towards destruction will balloon in size, scope and influence. In such hardship and economic misery, it literally baffles me that Americans turn to those in government for guidance and assistance when all they offer us is more of the problem.

The national debt now stands at $10,894,989,984,415.97, not including all the future liabilities for which we're responsible. Since September 2007, the debt has increased an average of $3.62 billion every single day.

Is it at all responsible – or even honest – for the government to continue to take on unprecedented levels of debt in this crisis? We're told things would be worse without government assistance. Really, we would be better off in the long run if they stayed out of the damn way.

Racking up debt hasn't just been done on the part of government. Even now, in this terrible credit crunch, individual Americans have way too much debt and use credit much too permissively. Americans used to save about 10 percent of their income each year. Now the average is less than 1 percent.

How can we keep buying houses, cars, flat screen televisions and all the rest of the luxuries we enjoy if we only save 1 percent of our income? How can we not expect to get foreclosed on or to file for bankruptcy when we live like this?

More importantly, how can we ever expect to get out of this ailing economy when these clueless morons in government continue their despotic, populist pleas for more of what got us here?

The underlying assumption in this massive government response to the economic downturn is that, if the federal government puts itself even deeper into debt and makes up the difference by printing money and pumping it into the system, everyone will start borrowing again and buying more stuff, ultimately stimulating our economy back to normalcy.

This whole mindset is flawed.

What really stimulates economies in the sustainable long term is savings. Once there is enough of that, people can start to invest. That is the engine of economic growth.

None of this can happen unless we get out of debt and the government and consumers stop borrowing.

That's right. Stop borrowing.

Stop bogging us down in unpayable amounts of debt. Stop devaluing the currency. Stop enticing banks to lend. Stop.

Back when the housing bubble initially burst, everyone seemed to agree that this bubble was dangerous from the beginning. We should have avoided the bubble caused by easy money and lax lending, they all said. How our enlightened government proposes to fix things by re-inflating that bubble, I just don't understand.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jwglaser@student.umass.edu.

Irrational health care rationing

Alex Perry

One of the scariest implications of Barack Obama being elected president of the United States is the irreversible damage he will do to the nation's health care system. The health care provisions that were slipped into the stimulus bill all but assure we are on the path to universal health care.

To those who haven't given it much thought or consideration, universal health care may initially sound like a great thing. Every American agrees that the price of health care is too high and something needs to be done about it. In addition to that, Democrats will remind you that there are approximately 45 million "Americans" out there without health care. Obama and Democrats think the solution to both of these problems is universal health care much like the health care provided in Europe and Canada.

In reality though, these aren't solutions. They are only going to compound the health care system's problems. Before I even mention that 10 million of the 45 million "Americans" Obama wants to cover with the universal health care plan are illegal immigrants, it is important to know the implications of introducing this many new people into the health care system.

By introducing 45 million new people into the universal health care system, the demand for health care in this country would skyrocket. Hospitals, emergency rooms, clinics and doctors' offices will all be flooded with people seeking medical care under the new system. But at the same time of the rapid demand increase, the supply of doctors, nurses, hospitals, clinics and other medical facilities would remain the same. They aren't just going to appear out of thin air.

So what happens when demand drastically increases and supply remains the same? It doesn't take an economics major to tell you that it leads to drastic price increases – the exact opposite of what Obama is allegedly setting out to do by changing the system.

By introducing 45 million new people into the universal health care system, the demand for health care in this country would skyrocket.

So, if prices are obviously going to skyrocket, what does Obama plan to do in order to keep prices down? If you read his plan, he suggests a few things, none of which can be implemented immediately and none of which are really going to make a big difference. For example, Obama states in his plan that he wants to increase competition among drug companies. He doesn't propose how to do that, but he likes the idea of it. Either way, it's not something he can cause or that would happen overnight.

So what is really going to happen to keep costs down? Rationing health care.

What does rationing health care mean? Basically, it means that someone else is going to be in charge of the drugs and medical procedures you are allowed to use and take, regardless of whether or not you are prepared to pay for it yourself.

Federal bureaucrats or private companies empowered by federal legislation are going to determine what is cost effective and what isn't.

If you want to use a proven effective medication like Tarceva to fight lung cancer, a bureaucrat is likely to tell you no. Not because it is not likely to work, but because it is not considered to be cost effective. Scary.

Things like this go on all the time in countries like Canada that allegedly have "better" health care than the United States. And this isn't me trying to scare you into thinking a loved one may not be able to receive adequate treatment for something threatening their health. This is the truth.

Rationing health care is the only way to control costs under this kind of system.

Why in the world are we doing this? Why would we give up access to some of the best health care and doctors in the world? If not to get prices under control, it must be to get the 45 million "Americans" who are uninsured, insured.

But who are these 45 million? Illegal immigrants count for 10 million of them. A whopping 15 million more of them are people who are eligible for Medicaid but just haven't bothered to sign up yet because they are not sick and don't need care.

As a country, we already spend 16 percent of our national wealth on health care. No nation in the world comes close to matching it. The U.S. spends $5,711 per capita on health care and France, the nearest other large country, only spends $3,048. Now we're going to spend even more?

Throwing money at the problem is not the solution; we need to spend it more effectively. But I wouldn't count on logic and reason seizing the day in Washington. I've got 1.5 trillion reasons that concept is out the window.

The worst part about all of this is that change in the health care system is irreversible.

Can you imagine a presidential candidate running on taking health care away from 45 million people? How on earth is that person getting elected when he or she is alienating 45 million people right off the bat? Not going to happen.

I would say be careful what you wish for, but it's far too late for that. Democrats have their wish in the form of controlling government, and we're all going to have to live with the consequences.

Alex Perry is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at aperry@student.umass.edu.

Families hold the right to honor

Matt Kushi

War is a tragic thing. War is never fun. It ends lives, and marks the end of innocence for all involved.

No matter the good that is achieved during the course of a war, no matter the humanity that has occurred, the lives of those involved are never the same.

That not only goes for the brave members of the armed forces that serve the United States of America, but the families of those members as well.

For as long as wars have occurred, the families of those brave souls that serve fight a war of their own. This war is the constant guessing game of whether your loved one will one day make it back home or not.

When a family loses a son or daughter to a war, the emotions likely are a mixture of pride and grief. Pride because of the fact that they raised a person who fought and died for what they believed in. Sadness because that person is now gone forevermore.

For the families of those men and women that gave the last full measure of devotion to their nation, the ritual remains the same. Every single year, the bodies of those who have been killed in action are transported to Dover Air Force Base in Delaware. This is where the debate begins. Should photographs be taken of the caskets of the honored dead?

There are many points to each side of the argument. Some say yes while others say no.

Those that say yes argue that these troops died serving their country. Therefore, the whole nation should be given the chance to honor them by seeing a photo of their casket. The supporters of this logic view the photo tribute as a badge of honor.

Those that say no state that, inside the casket, there is an individual that was somebody's whole world. Shouldn't we grant those that have already been devastated by loss a bit of privacy?

What this all really comes down to is the right to privacy. The only problem is that, on an issue that is so sensitive and emotionally driven, there is no right answer. Each person's view on the matter is different. That is why the decision must be based on personal preference.

Through all of the triumph and grief of combat, we must remember that all of these troops – living and dead – are Americans just like us.

That decision is to let the families decide whether they want the casket photographed or not as it is unloaded from the transport plane.

This decision by President Barack Obama reverses the decision made by President George H.W. Bush in 1991 during the first Gulf War to ban all photos of incoming casualties.

Bush's decision to ban the photos was based on the right to privacy and because he believed that Americans did not want to see how many of their troops were being killed in action.

This act was probably a result of memories of the infamously unpopular Vietnam War, where thousands upon thousands of American troops were shipped home in body bags.

Government is good for many reasons; there are times and places where the government should be the force implementing the rules. This, however, is not one of them. This is far too personal of an issue.

By letting the families decide whether media should be allowed to give a public viewing of one of the most sobering events that a military family can go through puts the baton in the people's hands.

Through all of the triumph and grief of combat, we must remember that all of these troops – living and dead – are Americans just like us. You may not support a certain war, such as Iraq, but you should never decide not to support our troops.

These soldiers are noble individuals who are willing to fight for their country to grant those of us at home the freedom that we often take for granted. The soldier is simply doing his job. It is not the soldier's fault that they may have been placed in an unjust war.

The members of our military are men and women that honor America with their sense of responsibility and loyalty.

Likewise, we should honor them – and those that raised these heroic figures – with what is true to their wishes. If a family's wish is to grant them privacy while dealing with the loss of a loved one, grant them that honor. If a family wishes to honor their loved one by having their American flag-covered casket photographed, grant them that request.

This is the best thing that the government can – and should – do. They are neither forcing their will upon the American people with a decision too personal to characterize as a position of governmental rule.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Weekly advice from the 'college guy' perspective

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Columnist

Fashion's a strange thing. When most people first hear the word, they think of clothes and catwalks, but the truth is fashion entails far more. How people present themselves with their clothes, cosmetics and behavior defines their fashion sense.

Now I don't know what's going to be the latest trends this spring, and I can't tell a fake Louis Vultton bag from a real one. To be honest with you, I don't care about knowing either one. What I do know is how to dress like, look like and act like a college guy. The purpose of this column is to take a question or two every week from other UMass students regarding any aspect of fashion, and let them know what I think.

Liz from Southwest: "It seems like girls are constantly buying clothes to mimic each other and 'fit in.' What styles/clothing actually catch a guy's attention?"

It's funny, Liz, how a strange trend from the '80s has become as common as Vicky's thongs in every girls closet. I'm of course talking about leggings. No matter the weather, no matter the occasion, girls all over campus will be wearing leggings. Although every six out of seven UMass girls wear them, I find them incredibly attractive.

Some of the things that girls wear today are just stupid (relax girls, that definitely goes for guys too, but this question is about girl's clothing in particular). From what I've seen, girls who try to be too bold with what they wear just look ridiculous. It's a fine line. On the other hand, some girls can actually pull things off. If it's really you, and you're not trying to be something else, wear it and the right guys will find you.

Coley from Central: "Some girls have looks, brains and style, but still go blank when it comes to talking to a guy. I want to talk about the guy's interests like sports and stuff, but I don't want to sound ignorant. So should I just talk about myself? I don't want to sound arrogant. What do guys actually want to talk about?"

Wow. Tough one. I don't think you want to know what guys actually want to talk about…what I can tell you is that anything you say past a hundred words without him saying anything went right over his head. Guys like to brag, naturally. Ask him about his life, and he'll return the questions if he's not dense. Let him talk, and he'll want to hear the same things about you. If he's asking you questions, he's interested. You'll blow it by talking about your cats or your incredible performance as Tinker Bell in the third grade play.

He really doesn't care; yet, anyway.

If you try to talk about sports or politics or whatever he's into, be honest. If your dad loves the Sox but you have never sat down and watched a full game, tell him. Don't try naming off the starting line-up, you'll look like a fool if you don't follow the team as much as he does. You might, however, want to be dishonest if he's a Red Sox fan and you are unfortunately an avid follower of the Evil Empire. At least wait a few dates…

If you want your fashion/relationship/life questions answered, send them to jgagnon@student.umass.edu.

Your name will remain anonymous and not be posted in the paper.

Sander displays feminine individual

By Robin Givhan
The Washington Post

MILAN, Italy — This fashion capital, where the fall 2009 collections are being unveiled, has always been known for two kinds of design. A restrained, tailored sensibility was popularized by designer Giorgio Armani, whose good taste has permeated American culture from Hollywood to Capitol Hill. That same belief in graceful understatement can be seen in a younger generation of designers showing here, such as Tomas Maier at Bottega Veneta.

The other dominant philosophy is the style championed at Dolce & Gabbana, where collections are defined by lush fabrics, generous use of embellishments, unabashed sensuality and joyful ostentation. According to this worldview, too much of a good thing isn't vulgar, it's merely a reason to say "thank you." For designers such as Roberto Cavalli and Dan and Dean Caten of Dsquared2, if fashion doesn't make a woman feel a little gluttonous, then what good is it?

But one designer, Raf Simons, has followed a particularly distinctive path. As the creative director of Jil Sander, which has always been known for its fabric innovations and its minimalism, he has transformed the house into a brand that is more complex and cerebral than one simply squeamish about paillettes and ruffles. In his hands, collections have become something akin to modern art with the same capacity to mesmerize and repel in a single stroke.

Simons has stayed true to the austere and restrained history of the house, even when he dabbles in shades of fluorescent pink and yellow. His work isn't angry or self-consciously dour, as if he has spent too much time listening to the collected works of the Cure or reading the financial pages. His clothes appeal to the intellect rather than the emotions.

For fall, when fear and panic about the economy threaten to overwhelm our capacity for rational thought, his work would seem to be just the kind of fashion required. Indeed, the collection he showed Friday night came across like a quiet plea for everyone to look in the mirror, take a deep breath and calm down. Banks may be failing but the sky is not falling.

Fashion, after all, can serve as a security blanket in tough times. A woman puts on a suit to go to the unemployment office, not because such formality is necessary to fill out a few forms but because it makes her feel less defeated. She wears lipstick to her chemotherapy appointment to ease the assault on her body. And she puts on her favorite heels when she thinks she might run into an old boyfriend who did her wrong. The right clothes at the right time can hide the scars of a wounded dignity.

The Jil Sander sensibility exudes control and calm, two traits that would serve us well right now. And in some ways, the fall collection did just that. But it also revealed that a triumph of aesthetic experimentation can still be a stylistic failure.

Simons divided his fall collection into two parts. The first half was a homage to the house's namesake, who long ago sold the business and ended her involvement. Sander was known as a stickler of a designer who, above all else, respected women. Her clothes weren't traditionally sexy. In many ways, they denied a woman's sex appeal, choosing instead to focus on her power, confidence and intelligence.

With a nod to that history, Simons sent out a collection of camel coats, slim trousers and high-waist skirts that can only be described as exquisitely pure. There was nothing to them beyond the most necessary seams.

It takes tremendous confi-

See STYLE on page 6

'ER' wasn't Eriq La Salle's last stop on television or in the acting business. After spending eight seasons on the NBC drama, La Salle has taken a directing role with several television programs. He is also expected to reprise his role on 'ER' in the series finale later this month.

La Salle in 'Relative Stranger'

Former 'ER' star back on television with starring role in Hallmark movie

By Luaine Lee
McClatchy Newspapers

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Actor Eriq La Salle may not be a gambler, but he figures he's beat the odds.

The man who played the earnest Dr. Peter Benton for 169 episodes on "E.R.," says, "I'm a tall, skinny bow-legged kid from Hartford, Conn. who quite honestly, statistically speaking, I'm not supposed to be sitting in this beautiful hotel in Beverly Hills right down the street from my house. Statistically speaking, I'm not supposed to be here. So from that point of view I'm winning."

As everybody knows, acting is not a win-win situation. And La Salle has had his share of losses. One of four kids, he was raised by his mother (though he has met his father) in an era when African-Americans were not crowding the soundstages. "We had Sidney Poitier and Bill Cosby. It was more unheard of and seemingly unrealistic. So there was natural fear and concern," he says, ordering a lobster omelet for breakfast.

His mom supported the family by working at a cleaners and cleaning houses when necessary.

It would be "a bit romantic" to imply that La Salle's life paralleled the one he plays in his latest role. He portrays an absentee father who turns up just when his family has reconciled to his loss on Hallmark's "Relative Stranger," airing March 14.

The show is edgier than Hallmark's usual movies. And that's what LaSalle likes about it. "They never compromised anything. They never said, 'Let's soften it, he has to be a good guy.' He's a flawed character, and it's the journey of this flawed character that we really want to see," he says.

He admits he has an edge himself, forged from his tireless pursuit of perfection. He was 14 when he first thought of becoming an actor. Drama club in high school changed him (though he was teased by his pals). "My grades went up. I knew if I didn't do it all well it could be taken away from me. It gave me focus. A lot of times kids need something they feel they excel at. I think that can elevate them. I went from a freshman almost being held back to the honor role in a short span."

He studied at Juilliard, encouraged by his mentor, director Clay Stevenson. But in his second year he was booted out. "They felt my speech and diction wasn't up to par by their standards. That was a devastating experience because I knew I wasn't ready to go out in the world and make it as an actor. From 14 on I had a game plan and at 20 years now everything went out the window."

He immediately signed up for private speech lessons and then headed for NYU where he's one credit short of graduating. "That (experience) became a standard for many other obstacles," he says.

"I was working as hard as I possibly could. I wasn't out partying, not going to class. But you realize in that moment that even your best isn't good enough. And you still have to survive. I think that experience became something for me that said 'You can get over these unexpected obstacles even when you've given your best and it's not enough. You still can dig deeper and find something else.' That has helped me through other bad experiences."

He suffered another bad experience when he was fired from the Michelle Pfeiffer movie, "Love Field." "I was working as hard as I could, doing everything I could do and one morning the producer came to my apartment and said, 'We feel you're too young and we have to fire you.' What ended up happening, you're doing everything you feel you can and it's not good enough. The reason it was so influential was because they fired me, they still had to pay me. And I'd just bought an apartment in New York, and I went on a shopping spree and furnished it … that was the week of indulgence and self pity.

"The second week I enrolled in directing class. And truly it's one of the best things that ever happened to me. It gave me a game plan of how I deal with disappointment and setbacks and rejection."

Unmarried, La Salle won't say whether he has a girlfriend. As for marriage? Maybe not. "What I would want is actually a very committed relationship. I don't know it has to fall under the title of 'marriage.' I'd rather have a healthier relationship of not being married than have an unhealthy relationship of being married," he says.

"I've lived my life from a very simple thing that my mother used to say. 'Your talent is God's gift to you. What you do with

See ERIQ on page 6

Bravo viewership keeps making strides

By creating a slew of reality shows Bravo has found an audience that finds celebrity and wealthy life interesting.

By Aaron Barnhart
McClatchy Newspapers

So what happens to a cable channel devoted to chronicling the lifestyles of the rich and famous when the economy goes into the toilet?

In the case of Bravo, it actually gets richer.

The upwardly mobile, gay-friendly lifestyle channel owned by NBC Universal reported last week that ratings for February were the highest in Bravo's history.

While Hollywood develops sitcoms about people looking for work, a record two million viewers watched the fourth season of "The Real Housewives of Orange County," the ironically named series about shopaholic trophy brides that Bravo has used to create a year-round franchise with spinoffs filmed in New York City, Atlanta and, coming in April, New Jersey.

More than 2.5 million viewers this month tuned in for the latest "Top Chef" competition, in which aspiring gourmets cooking the kinds of meals that would cost the average American the equivalent of a week's worth of groceries.

And Kathy Griffin, the onetime sitcom sidekick whose career was so perilously close to obscurity that she turned it into a Bravo series, "My Life on the D-List," has signed a book deal to write her memoir for a reported $2.2 million, a figure that led the Defamer blog to observe, "We fear that the book industry may be losing its grip on reality."

Indeed, the media have been almost uniformly brutal toward Bravo since Wall Street started to go south. Bloggers and print critics have found it incongruous that a TV channel would be celebrating "real housewives" who can afford spa treatments and second homes while millions of actual housewives are getting pink slips and seeing their ARM payments skyrocket.

The New York Post tut-tutted the Feb. 17 season premiere of the NYC "Housewives," in which Alex McCord and husband Simon van Kampen spent $8,000 on clothing at a Hamptons boutique, noting that the couple's "extravagance will likely strike viewers as prodigal in the extreme."

Another critic wrote, "What I found amusing a year ago is no longer so laughable. It makes me wonder if Bravo's wealth-based programming has jumped the Louis Vuitton-monogrammed polo pony."

So who's behind the times, Bravo, or its proletarian critics? I decided to ask Lauren Zalaznick, who oversees Bravo for NBC Universal and whose candor

See BRAVO on page 6

TV stars recycle back

ERIQ from page 5

it is your gift back to God.' So I've always been afraid of not trying to return a sense of appreciation."

He's a perfectionist not only about his work but also about himself. "I pray to be more patient, less judgmental, more compassionate toward others," he says. "I pray for those things and work on those things. I'm not always successful but I don't sit around and say, 'I wish I could change things.' Because it's where I am. I'm not supposed to be here. From how I grew up, where I come from there was no evidence to support as an African-American man I would be here doing the things I'm doing on the level I'm doing them."

It was great to see Tom Selleck on CBS Sunday in the role that seems written for him, Jesse Stone. The character was created by Robert B. Parker and it fits Selleck like a leotard. But TV movies are becoming more and more rare on the networks. "I've always thought this character had Colombo-like potential," says Selleck. "God knows I'm not Peter Falk. But he's (Jesse Stone) interesting enough and watchable enough and complex enough where he's not going to get used up. The great irony of all this is that CBS has now canceled their movie-of-the-week. They air Hallmark but they don't pay for those, so we're the only one left."

If the show continues to do well in the ratings, Jesse Stone will be back.

Fox's series "Lie to Me" is based on the real experience of Ph.D. Paul Ekman, who has studied the unconscious signals we make with our voice, face, body and posture that reveals the feelings behind the mask. But Dr. Ekman says he can't tell what people are thinking. "What I can read is their emotions. I can't tell what they're thinking. And most of us are most worried that people will know our private thoughts. There is no sign of thinking; there are signs of emotion."

"Lie to Me" moves into its 8 p.m. EST berth on March 11.

One of Hugh Hefner's 20-watt "Girls Next Door" is making good. Bridget Marquardt will be hosting "Bridget's Sexiest Beaches" on the Travel Channel beginning March 12.

"I love adventure, and I think that's the No. 1 qualification for this," she says. "I like to experience everything. When I go to plan a trip, even for my personal life, I research it ahead of time. I'm looking online. I'm buying the books. I'm asking friends. And I don't want to be the person who ever goes somewhere and then comes back and they're, like, 'Oh, did you do this?" and I say, 'No.' I want to do everything when I get there. I like to completely immerse myself in it ... But I also have my degree in communications, a Master's degree, so I can do the voiceover. And I've had broadcast journalism and voiceover courses. I kind of understand Dolce and Gobbanna are known for using elegant cloth for their designs, like this one J-Lo is wearing, as she poses next to the designers. But their style soon may be a thing of the past.

Simons stands alone in Milan

STYLE from page 5

dence to wear clothes like that. The less courageous, that is, most of us, use fashion as a kind of camouflage or a costume. We want clothes to perform some trick like lengthening the legs or elevating the bosom. The fearful want garments that will provide them with cover and hide their insecurities or their outsize ambitions, like one of those boxy women's suits that turn up on C-SPAN characters.

Simons's spare clothes don't reveal a woman's body, not in the least, but they still leave her virtually naked. She cannot hide behind the false power in a pair of shoulder pads, the stereotypical femininity of ruffles, the macho swagger of wide lapels or the banality of a heavy knit jacket whose greatest recommendation is that it doesn't wrinkle.

Those clothes, so respectful and admiring of female individuality, provided a striking contrast to the second half of the collection, which was inspired by the French ceramicist Pol Chambost, who died in 1983 and known for his graceful forms and use of color. Simons chose colors such as citrus yellow, favored by the potter, and used horsehair padding and hoops to create some of the sculptural shapes. The results were visually stunning, molded skirts that stood away from the hips. Strapless bodices curved gently around the torso and then tilted backward like the delicate spout of an urn. Collars rippled around the neck as if they had been lifted by a breeze, a spontaneous flutter captured for posterity.

Yet for all of the curves and swirls, the clothes did not respect the lines of a woman's body. The clothes were wholly linear. Any curves were artificially imposed by the designer. The woman was merely the support structure on which the clothes, dynamic and mentally invigorating, could hang.

Jil Sander's legacy, as reinterpreted by Simons, is thoughtful clothes that disappear on women. (What! After all that expense?) But in the more aesthetically daring second half of the show, Simons designed clothes that made women vanish.

While the times cry out for clothes that are rational and refined, those garments must also announce our presence, keep us from getting lost in the throngs and make it impossible for the individual to be ignored.

It may be that the reaction to the second half of the show would have been different had Simons chosen more dynamic models. His pale, look-alike young women were so devoid of life they seemed practically bloodless. Their lack of diversity was disappointing, but it was a trifle compared with their lack of strength.

For the average consumer of luxury goods, "newness" is not reason enough to spend money. Nor is it enough that a garment can inspire an entire art history term paper. Fashion has to dazzle the eye or stimulate the mind. At its best, it can do both.

But above all else, even if the clothes should fade into the background, the woman should never disappear.

Not your average housewives

BRAVO from page 5

and thoughtfulness set her apart from most top TV executives. I read her the polo-pony quote and she said:

"What's so amazing and great is there's a very, very, very external and unemotional arbiter of that statement and that arbiter is the television audience. And they are telling us that they're not done with us in a very simple way _ in fairly extraordinary ratings growth and higher levels of engagement across the platforms that we design for them to tell us what they think."

She's referring not only to the bravotv.com website, but to one of Bravo's highest-rated time periods of the week: the "Info Frame" hour at 9 p.m. EST Wednesday nights, when a popular show is repeated with a blue frame that pops up announcing contests, polls and feedback that viewers text in throughout the hour.

"So not only are they enjoying (these shows) the first time around with their aspirational qualities, beautiful casting, lovely locations, terrific houses, delicious food and stylish clothes – they're also enjoying all of the information we share about the program," said Zalaznick.

As for the charge that she's indifferent to the shifting economic tides, Zalaznick points to the moment when she made her first programming adjustment based on the collapsing economy. It was the spring of 2007 – long before the recession even officially began.

"We were shooting the first season of a show called 'Million Dollar Listing,'" she recalled. "We wanted to have both houses close at the end of the show. We wanted resolution." Bravo had a successful show about reselling high-end homes, "Flipping Out," and this seemed like a natural extension.

Just one problem: "The houses were not closing," said Zalaznick. "It took forever to shoot." Eventually, the format of "Million Dollar Listing" changed with the times: Instead of both deals closing every episode, usually only one would.

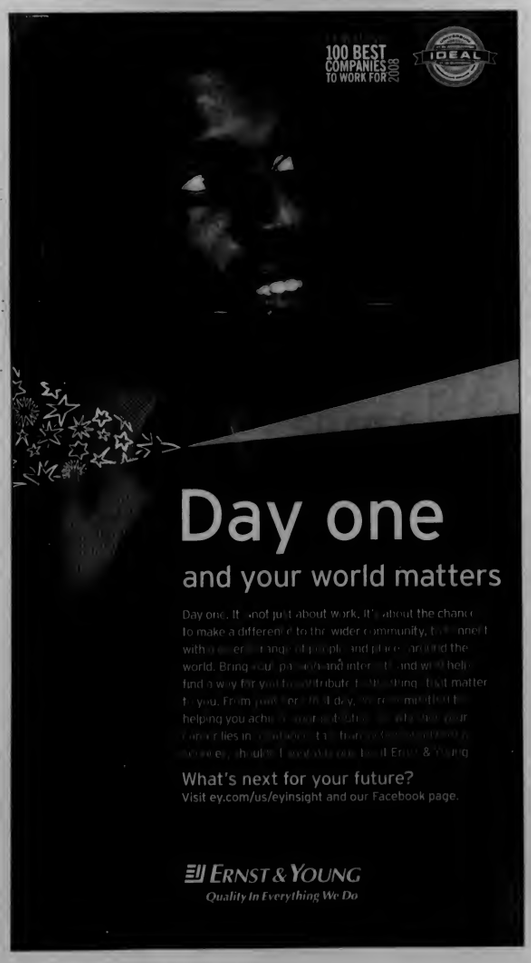
Things had gotten worse by year's end, when shooting began on the second season of "Flipping Out." The realtor, Jeff Lewis, was going into debt because so few homes were moving. He wound up taking jobs as a remodeler. Again, the show's format was adjusted.

"So not only do we not have our heads in the sand now, we openly embraced the tide of change," Zalaznick said.

Meanwhile, she and her team of executives "were relentlessly, maybe obsessively, talking about the notion of affluence and what our programming is really about."

And the takeaway was that people who liked Bravo were less interested in the shiny things that money could buy than in the type of person whose career made it possible to acquire those shiny things.

"We really program to people who esteem the notion of jobs and careers as what makes them more affluent. We program to people who enjoy thinking about what their lifestyle of hard work is going to yield in terms of personal relationships and stuff they appropriate."



Speaking of relationships, ratings have zoomed this month for the second season of "Millionaire Matchmaker," a documentary-style show filmed at the Millionaire's Club, a California firm "where successful men come to meet their beautiful and intelligent wives or girlfriends." It airs at 10 p.m. EST Thursdays on Bravo.

In a twist apparently unrelated to the shrinking pool of millionaires, matchmaker Patti Stanger this season agreed to conduct a manhunt on behalf of a wealthy woman –thus reversing the usual gender roles on the show.

Kathy Griffin, are you watching?

ARMY NURSING

WHO: ALL NURSING STUDENTS/ FACULTY INVITED

WHAT: ARMY ROTC NURSING SCHOLARSHIP INFO SESSION

WHERE: SKINNER HALL RM 012

WHEN: MON. MARCH 9, 12:15-1

WHY: LEARN ABOUT THE ARMY NURSE CORPS AND HOW TO RECEIVE A SCHOLARSHIP FOR FREE TUITION/FEES/BOOKS FOR REMAINDER OF YOUR DEGREE

A CAREER PATH TO SUCCESS

FREE LUNCH!

University of Massachusetts Amherst Army ROTC
413-545-2321 – www.umass.edu/armyrotc

UMass faces hot GW

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

UMass will see a 10-16 Colonials team that has been playing much better recently than their overall record indicates. GW, which started the conference season with seven-consecutive losses, has topped Richmond, Charlotte and St. Bonaventure since Feb. 19. Its only loss in that stretch was a 71-53 defeat to No. 17 Xavier.

GW is a young group that loves to push the ball up and down the floor. But the Colonials are led by their big-men, forwards Rob Diggs and Damian Hollis, who both lead the team in scoring with 13.2 points per game. Diggs and Hollis also rank 1-2 on the team in rebounding, respectively, and Hollis can also hurt teams with his inside-outside game.

Hollis had 21 points and 11 rebounds last season against UMass, but GW fell just short in a 67-63 loss on March 8 in Washington, D.C. Harris had 20 points in that game for the Minutemen, and Colonials coach Karl Hobbs is worried he'll have more than that this time.

"The thing that makes [UMass] the most dangerous is that they got a guy that single-handedly can beat you in Harris," Hobbs said in the weekly A-10 teleconference. "For us, he creates a major, major problem. I don't know how we're going to do it, but we got to contain Harris and not let him throw up 30 points."

Hobbs also had high-praise for Tony Gaffney and Chris Lowe, whom he thinks does a great job controlling the frontcourt and backcourt, respectively, for UMass.

Gaffney, who sat out much of the second half in Sunday's loss with knee tendonitis, is expected to play Wednesday. Considering the magnitude of the game, the fact that its senior night and that he's been playing through injuries all season long, the senior forward will find a way to play – no matter the pain.

The Minutemen will need him in there to defend Diggs and Hollis, not to mention to defend their annual spot in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

UM in need of a win

LOSSES from page 10

with six points and three assists in 17 minutes.

All three seemingly got Kellogg's message, playing much better in the second half. Harris scored 20 points (all in the last 11 minutes, 12 seconds) to help lead the comeback charge; Bonner played much tougher inside with some big rebounds and Lowe helped direct a second-half offense that scored 59 points. Lowe had nine points and six assists after halftime.

"It was great to watch Luke play like a 7-foot-1 guy in the second half – rebounding the basketball and playing physical and tough," Kellogg said. "Luke did a good job in the second half anchoring our defense."

GAFFNEY INJURY

Gaffney sat out much of the second half with tendonitis in his knees. Both he and Kellogg seemed optimistic that he will play in Wednesday night's crucial matchup with George Washington.

"His knees were bothering him and he wasn't as effective as he's been, so I opted to kind of rest him when we got down 20 [points]," Kellogg said. "I feel confident he'll play Wednesday.

"He wasn't as energetic and athletic as he's been – he just didn't look right to what I'm accustomed to seeing out of him. A little ice and a little rest should get him ready for Wednesday."

HIGH-WATER MARK

For the second straight game, the UMass defense allowed its opponent to score at least 90 points.

La Salle's 97 points surpassed its previous high of 92 against Rider. The Explorers had only broken 80 points one other time in conference play, and that came in an overtime loss against Rhode Island. Both Rodney Green and Darryl Partin scored 30 points in the win. Partin came in with a scoring average of 2.3 points, with a previous career-high of 11.

Duquesne scored 94 against UMass on Feb. 25, marking its second-highest scoring output this season in conference play and highest in regulation.

GURLEY IMPROVING

Sophomore Anthony Gurley scored a season-high 20 points off the bench against La Salle. Gurley, who started the first 23 games of the season, really struggled in his first two games off the bench.

But he has scored 38 points in his last two games, tying for the team-high in both contests.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

PJ SANTOS/COLLEGIAN

Freshman guard David Gibbs had 10 points and three steals in Sunday's loss at La Salle.

BU Hobey hopefuls

HOCKEY from page 10

attempted to lure Gilroy from school; he opted, instead, to return to BU in hopes of winning a national championship. He can thank two other potential Hobey Baker candidates for his success. Like Gilroy, sophomore center Colin Wilson was tempted by a jump to the professional ranks after the Nashville Predators spent the 11th overall pick in last June's NHL Entry Draft on him. Wilson decided another season school would be best for his potential career. His decision may very well earn him a Hockey East scoring title. His 14 goals and 30 assists lead Hockey East – three points ahead of UMass' James Marcou who is second with 12 goals and 29 assists.

Of course, the primary reason for the Terriers struggles in 2007-08 was the inconsistency in net. Freshman Kieran Millan stepped in early in the season and quelled any concerns of another season of 6-5 games at Agganis Arena.

Millan who is 20-1-3 with a 1.76 goals-against average and a .926 save percentage, is hardly a favorite for the award, but with his numbers he could certainly make a case.

UMass' primary concern at this point may not be individual awards, but Marcou might be in the conversation on a national level if the Minutemen were enjoying a more successful season.

ICE SHAVINGS

BU's Nick Bonino scored six goals and assisted on eight others in the month of February to earn Hockey East's player of the month award. The Terriers posted a 6-0-3 record in nine games, including a Beanpot Championship ... UNH's Brian Foster won the goaltender of the month award with a 6-1-1 record and a 1.86 goals-against average ... Vermont's Rob Madore challenged Foster for the goaltender of the month with a 4-2-1 record and a 1.70 goals against average. His performance earned him the starting job and the league's freshman of the month award. He spent the season's first three months sharing the net with junior Mike Spillane.

Material from personal interviews, other beat writers and league and team sources was used in this report.

Joe Meloni can be reached at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com.

HOCKEY EAST STANDINGS

| | Hockey East | | | | Overall | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| Team | W | L | T | Pts. | W | L | T | |
| 1 Northeastern | 17 | 5 | 3 | 37 | 22 | 8 | 4 | |
| 2 Boston University | 16 | 5 | 4 | 36 | 25 | 5 | 4 | |
| 3 New Hampshire | 14 | 7 | 4 | 32 | 18 | 9 | 5 | |
| Vermont | 14 | 7 | 4 | 32 | 19 | 8 | 5 | |
| 5 UMass Lowell | 12 | 11 | 2 | 26 | 15 | 15 | 2 | |
| 6 Boston College | 10 | 10 | 5 | 25 | 15 | 12 | 5 | |
| 7 Massachusetts | 9 | 13 | 3 | 21 | 14 | 17 | 3 | |
| 8 Maine | 7 | 15 | 3 | 17 | 12 | 18 | 4 | |
| 9 Providence | 4 | 16 | 5 | 13 | 7 | 20 | 5 | |
| 10 Merrimack | 4 | 18 | 3 | 11 | 8 | 20 | 4 | |

ECAC makes a name, SJU off to best start

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

With two undefeated teams, two teams ranked in the Nike/Inside Lacrosse Top 20 Media Poll and four teams yet to play a conference contest, this past weekend was interesting in the Eastern College Athletic Conference Lacrosse League.

Also this week, a number of former ECAC players were selected to tryout for the 2010 United States men's lacrosse national team, which will compete in the Federation of International Lacrosse World Championship from July 10-24 in Manchester, England. Tryouts for the team will be held this summer at Bryant University, June 7-10 in Smithfield, R.I.

St. John's (3-0, 1-0 ECAC), a team that registered just two wins in 2008, is off to its best start since 1983 after one of its biggest wins in school history. The Red Knights received 15 votes to be considered in the weekly poll, but could not crack the Top 20.

ECAC Lacrosse

After not knowing whether or not it was going to keep its Division I status last season, Hobart has been impressive early on this season, starting 3-0 for the first time in 2006 with wins against Saint Joseph's, Binghamton and Providence.

No. 16 Loyola and No. 19 Massachusetts received votes this week after impressive wins over Penn State and Yale this past weekend.

However, Fairfield, Rutgers, Hobart and UMass have yet to play an ECAC opponent, and all but the Statesmen have lost close games, including the Scarlet Knights who have just one victory and three defeats.

RED STORM ROLLING

SJU pulled off one of the biggest upsets in school history Saturday, defeating then-No. 5 Georgetown, 10-9. It was the Red Storm's first victory over a Top 20 opponent since the team's reinstatement in 2005 and the team's first victory over the Hoyas in the two team's nine-game series history.

Since being reinstated, the Red Storm have posted two seasons with just two wins along with a 5-8 record back in 2007.

But third year head coach Jason Miller had expectations of turning the Red Storm into a national powerhouse and with the victory over the Hoyas, SJU shouldn't be overlooked this season as a top tier program.

Eight players tallied at least one point for the second week in a row, with senior attackman, Drew Schanen, leading the offensive attack with his second-straight hat trick. Fellow senior attackman Trevor Michaelson, a transfer from Rutgers, scored two goals and one assist. Senior midfielder Malcolm Miles had a team high, as well as a career high in assists (four).

In the first quarter, the Red Storm opened up a 4-0 lead against the Hoyas, but GU was able to chip away at the deficit with three straight goals, including one from attackman Ricky Mirabito, who led the Hoyas in points on the day with five goals.

The Red Storm then answered to end the half with three unanswered goals to take a 7-3 lead. Mirabito and Schanen traded goals in the third quarter, but SJU held on despite giving up five in the final quarter of the game by scoring two goals with fewer than five minutes to play for their third-straight victory.

Junior goalie Gavin Buckley earned the ECAC Co-Defensive Player of the Week after notching 15 saves this week, including seven that came in the second period.

SJU will host non-conference foe Drexel in its final three-game home stand on Saturday.

EX-ECAC PLAYERS SUIT UP

Four former UMass players along with two former Fairfield players are among the 84 players selected to tryout for the national team that will compete next summer in the newly-formed FIL's first men's championship. The FIL is the result of the merger between the International Federation of Women's Lacrosse Associations and the International Lacrosse Federation.

Midfielders Chris Fiore and Kevin Leveille, along with attackman Sean Morris and defenseman Jack Reid, headline a list of former Minutemen who were selected to try out for the national team. Morris was one of the top collegiate players in the nation and helped UMass reach the NCAA Lacrosse Championship game in 2006.

Former Stags standouts Greg Downing and Peter Vlahakis were also selected to play for the national team.

Downing, a 2007 graduate of Fairfield, is the Stags only three-time All-American selection, and finished his career fourth all-time in school history with 101 goals and fifth with 141 points. Vlahakis, a face-off specialist, holds the school's all-time record with 620 face-off victories.

Material from personal interviews, other beat writers and league and team sources was used in this report.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Like Sports?
Write for the Daily Collegian
Contact Eli Rosenswaike at Sports@DailyCollegian.com

THE BRYANT GRADUATE PROGRAMS

THE BRYANT MBA
- A rigorous program that can be completed in one or two years.
- Complete the program with a class of other professionals.

THE BRYANT MPAc
- The two semester, full-time MPAc program meets the 150-hour requirement for CPA licensure.
- More than 40 top regional and international firms recruit at Bryant each year.

THE BRYANT MST
- This highly specialized program builds an expertise in taxation.
- The 10-course program can be completed on a part-time basis.

TO LEARN MORE ABOUT THESE PROGRAMS AND UPCOMING INFORMATION SESSIONS:

CONTACT US AT (401) 232-6230 OR GRADPROG@BRYANT.EDU

Bryant UNIVERSITY
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
Smithfield, Rhode Island
www.bryant.edu | (401) 232-6230

Get in Shape for Spring Break!

Sign up at your nearest Wellness Center on Mon. March 2nd for only $40.00 for the Spring Semester!

- *Group Exercise Classes!
- *FREE Workout Suggestions!
- *Access to ALL centers!
- *Convenient locations!

Located in the following residence halls:
John Quincy Adams (19th floor)
Washington (19th floor)
Lewis (basement)
Webster (1st floor)

Call FIT-WELL with any questions!

Bank on this.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 1 | | | 6 | | | 9 |
| | | | | 7 | | 4 | | 1 |
| | 8 | 4 | | | 5 | 2 | | |
| 8 | | | | | | | 2 | |
| | 4 | | 8 | | 3 | | 9 | |
| | 9 | | | | | | | 3 |
| | | 8 | 3 | | | 7 | 1 | |
| 1 | | 5 | | 8 | | | | |
| 4 | | | 2 | | | 3 | | |

ACROSS
1 First name in espionage
5 Memory method
9 Pot starters
14 Olfactory offense
15 Something shared
16 Leg bone
17 Presidential power
18 Exploits
19 Benefit from tutoring
20 Components
22 Blessed
23 Claim as a right
24 Foundation
25 Regardless of
28 Slugger's stat
31 Ambassadors' offices
35 Secret observers
37 Guys' dates
38 Dry runs
40 Swindle
41 In full hearing
43 Greedy
45 Morning moisture
46 Truly amazing
48 Iowa State city
49 Exists
54 Sports venues
57 Wife of Odysseus
59 French Open winner of 1986
60 Warsaw native
61 "The Right Stuff" org.
62 Spooky
63 Supplicant's request
64 Molecular building block
65 Post-Christmas events
66 Setback
67 Outer edges

DOWN
1 Relocated
2 Fred's first partner
3 Clan emblem
4 Bakery bouquet
5 Most circular
6 Force out
7 Very French?
8 Switchback turn
9 Map tomes
10 Female relative
11 Stu Ungar
12 Cork's country
13 Durra material
21 Ceases
22 Fr. follower
24 Small nightclub
26 Strainers
27 Mexicali money
28 Puerto ___
29 Suitor
30 Distinctive doctrines
31 Old-time oath
32 Stag or hart
33 Exhale forcefully
34 Tempe sch.
36 Trident-shaped letter
39 Monotony
42 Harms
44 Sign over
47 Director Craven
48 Sharpshooter Oakley
50 Pertaining to an arm bone
51 Raccoon cousin
52 ___ salts
53 Clothes lines?
54 High cards
55 Mother of Hera
56 Viscount superior
57 Type of shirt
58 Shade trees
60 Sidekick

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach

THINK AHEAD

Two 6-week summer sessions

Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net
Registration begins March 9
SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

Quote of the Day

"I love Mickey Mouse more than any woman I've ever known."

— Walt Disney

Dream Nation by Louis Coppola

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Kim Shay

Cheap City By Michael Capozzola

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
As the old saying goes: "Sex in mouth is worth two in bush."

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It's about time you opened up to someone about what really happened that time in astronaut camp.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Plan ahead: Start training your guerrilla rebel army now, to save time later.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You're never going to get laid wearing bowties around campus.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
The only thing less successful than America's War on Drugs has been your continual attempts to quit smoking.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You have a multiple-choice test tomorrow. That means you've got a solid 25 percent already in the bag. Cash money.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You were hoping for a gift-basket of some sort, but you're going to have to settle for some complimentary mints.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Note: Poison milkshakes work equally as well (if not better than) exploding cigars.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Stop treating class like it involves repeatedly shocking your genitalia with a car battery.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
There will be a bitter irony to the fact that you're now living in the cardboard box your Ikea furniture was delivered in.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You'll have your own "Red Scare" this month (or lack thereof). It's time to stop blacklisting condoms.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Hot dogs may be cheap, as well as bad for you, but that doesn't stop you from wanting one every once in a while.

go where life takes you*
www.dailycollegian.com/comics
*death

Classifieds

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Announcement

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblow-out.com or Montrealex-press.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900

For Rent

Center of town. 1,2,3 bed-rooms, hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincoln-realty.com

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass. Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

Feed your future

See the difference 100 PwC interns made in Belize.

Begin at www.pwc.tv

PricewaterhouseCoopers

© 2009 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Win and in

Victory over Colonials clinches Atlantic 10 Tournament birth

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

For two straight seasons, poor performances in the Atlantic 10 Tournament likely cost the Massachusetts men's basket- ll team a bid into the NCAA Tournament.

With an 11-17 record, the Minutemen don't have to worry about a similar fate this season. But if they can't end their skid Wednesday night against George Washington, it may cost UMass a bid into the A-10 Tournament for the first time in school history.

Since Charlotte fell to 5-10 in conference play with a loss to Richmond Tuesday night, the Minutemen only need to win one of their final two games to clinch a spot in the tournament.

Wednesday's senior-night tilt against the Colonials is simple: A win for UMass clinches a birth to Atlantic City. A loss would force the Minutemen to win their regular-season finale at Rhode Island on Saturday and hope GW falls to Temple later that night.

UMass coach Derek Kellogg prefers his team clinches sooner than later.

"With the potential of three to five teams all fighting for that last birth into the Atlantic 10 Tournament, it would be nice to hopefully get a win this week and put ourselves into position," Kellogg said in Monday's weekly teleconference. "So obviously we have to come out and play with that kind of desire and intensity and passion that that's on the line."

The Minutemen, who have lost eight of their last 11 games in conference play, are only concerned about themselves and the Colonials right now.

"We're well aware, but we're trying not to think about that and make this more about us. If we play the way we're capable of playing on Wednesday that will be put to rest," said Tony Gaffney following Sunday's loss to La Salle.

"I hope we can get this win Wednesday so we can make it to Atlantic City," added Ricky Harris. "I feel as though if we get to Atlantic City a lot of teams won't want to play us."

Considering UMass has already beaten two of the top four teams in the standings (Dayton and Temple) and gave the other two (Xavier and Rhode Island) a serious scare, Harris may be right. But the Minutemen may not get a chance to show it in the A-10 Tournament for the first time in school history, dating back to the 1976-77 season when the conference was created.

If UMass can get past the Colonials, a team that has won two straight and three of its last four, Harris and the Minutemen would lock up that opportunity. According to Kellogg, doing that is up to the players.

"At this point in the season your players have to take the team over, especially the older guys," he said. "They need to make a statement that we're really trying to do something here."

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

Junior guard Ricky Harris had 20 points in UMass' most recent loss to La Salle, with all 20 points coming in the last 11:12 of the game.

Lesson learned in recent loss

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

PHILADELPHIA — The Massachusetts men's basketball team has a lot of losses this season.

Sunday's most recent defeat was one of the most damaging of those 17 setbacks, as UMass' loss to La Salle has put the Minutemen in danger of failing to qualify for the Atlantic 10 Tournament with just two regular season games remaining.

There may be no such thing as a good loss, but UMass was pleased with the way the team battled back in a 97-88 defeat after trailing by 26 points with fewer than 12 minutes remaining against the Explorers.

UMass Basketball

"It would have been extremely easy for guys to just give in and no one did. It doesn't show in the win-loss column but it shows how far we've come," Tony Gaffney said after the game. "We haven't had the season that we had hoped, but it says a lot about the character of our team."

UMass coach Derek Kellogg liked what he saw from his team down the stretch in the loss.

"I was proud of that, and it was a good learning lesson for our young guys – that this is how we compete," Kellogg said. "And for the last couple games of the season – and hopefully the Atlantic 10 Tournament – that we don't ever give up. Don't quit. The team that plays the hardest the longest wins the game."

UMass made two separate scoring runs (11-2 and 11-3) to make a game of it, cutting the La Salle lead to eight with just over a minute left to play – but by then it was too late.

The Switcheroo

Sunday's lineup to start the second half looked a lot different than the one UMass started the game with.

Considering how poorly his Minutemen played in all aspects of the game to trail 46-24 entering halftime, one could hardly blame Kellogg for benching three of his starters to begin the second half.

So out went Chris Lowe, Ricky Harris and Luke Bonner and in went Gary Correia, Anthony Gurley and David Gibbs.

"I was pretty candid with the team at halftime. It was definitely a statement," Kellogg said about the lineup change. "I thought those were the guys who competed in the first half and played at a level I expect. So I figured we'd play the guys who were playing the hardest."

Harris picked up two early offensive fouls in the first half, and didn't score a point in six minutes of action. Bonner had two points and no rebounds in nine minutes, while Lowe did better

See LOSSES on page 7

Junior Merritt Cosgrove looks for an opening against Maryland last season. The midfielder has three goals for UMass in the 2009 season.

Opener against Dartmouth

By Holly J. Galvin
Collegian Staff

Riding momentum after clinching a back-and-forth, one-goal victory over Harvard, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will face its third ranked opponent of the season tomorrow.

For the Minutewomen's home opener at McGuirk Stadium, No. 15 Dartmouth (2-0) travels to Amherst coming off a 10-8 win over No. 14 New Hampshire. UMass (1-3) will have the chance to climb closer to .500 against another Ivy League school, after what coach Alexis Venechanos called a "roller coaster" of a game earlier this week in Cambridge.

"We never were behind [against Harvard], which I think was a feat to the team," Venechanos said. "We stuck together and then when Harvard came back to make it 12-12 with five minutes to go, we really focused again and were able to score and defend."

Two key cogs in that late-game scoring and defending, Katy Florence and Jackie Lyons, did not go unnoticed by the women's lacrosse world this week. Florence was named Rookie of the Week by Womenslax.com. Lyons picked up Atlantic 10 Player of the Week honors after notching a career-high six goals and netting the game winner at Harvard with three minutes to play. The goal was Lyons' sixth of the game and ninth of the season.

"Lyons shot the ball extremely well. She was in the zone," Venechanos said of the sophomore midfielder. "I think her teammates did a good job of finding her, clearing her space and letting her do her magic in there."

Florence, who has faced nearly 100 shots in the past two weeks since her collegiate debut at Holy Cross, notched 18 saves against a potent Crimson attack that outshot the Minutewomen 40-24.

"Florence stood strong in the beginning of the game," Venechanos said. "[She] kept us in the game."

Much like Lyons, Florence was clutch in the final minutes. With under two minutes to go, the freshman goalie stuffed second-team All-Ivy Harvard attacker Kaitlin Martin to preserve UMass' one-goal lead.

Venechanos again cited Florence's teammates as instrumental to the performance, noting the trust UMass defenders have in the young goalkeeper.

"Going into the game, we just told our defense, let Harvard take low-angle shots, and Florence will make the save," the coach said. "There was a lot of trust between the defense and Katy. Hopefully we never give up a large amount of shots, but Flo made the saves when we needed her to."

Continuing through their tough non-conference schedule, UMass looks to develop its chemistry as it faces a Dartmouth squad that returns nine starters and 17 letterwinners.

The Big Green squeaked out a 9-8 win over UMass last season that has increased UMass' losing streak against Dartmouth to eight.

To prevent Dartmouth from going on a second-half goal-scoring run similar to what the Minutewomen saw at Holy Cross, Boston University and Maryland, Venechanos reportedly has adjusted the lineup and will rotate more players into the game.

"We've moved Jackie Lyons to attack, we've put Merritt [Cosgrove] back on defense and we're trying to make the game longer," Venechanos said. "We've been really impressed with the first halves of all our games. In our Harvard game, we moved some people around to keep them fresh for that second half."

Cosgrove, a junior captain, has started 39 consecutive games for a UMass midfield that has been seeing contributions from various sources. Venechanos indicated this trend should continue.

"We're looking to play more people in our game tomorrow, and hopefully that will keep us fresh for the last five to 10 minutes of the game," Venechanos said.

"We're still a young team trying to get our chemistry developed, and I think our assistants have been doing a good job of getting people involved in practice. I think the results will show."

Holly J. Galvin can be reached at hgalvin@student.umass.edu.

Hockey East tourney seedings up in the air

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

The weekend's action answered a few questions about the Hockey East Tournament; we know who is in the tournament, we just don't know the four first-round matchups.

Losing to Boston College Friday night eliminated Providence from the tournament, and guaranteed Maine the eight seed and Massachusetts the seven seed. Even if UMass loses both games to Merrimack this weekend and Maine sweeps its weekend pair with UMass-Lowell, leaving the teams tied with 21 points, the Minutemen own the head-to-head tiebreaker.

The top six seeds are entirely undetermined with UMass locked into No. 7 and Maine the No. 8.

UVM and UNH are tied with 32 points for third place and meet for a pair in Burlington on Friday and Saturday night. The Wildcats defeated the Catamounts, 3-2, in Durham on Jan. 30, so they would win earn the tiebreaker if the teams finish the weekend tied.

The Catamounts seemed destined for No. 3 seed before a pointless home weekend against UMass-Lowell two weeks ago locked them in the race with UNH; both teams swept their series this past weekend, UNH over Merrimack and UVM over Maine.

The battle for the league's regular-season championship may be the most thrilling, however. Northeastern occupies the top spot in the conference in the league, while Boston University, the national No. 1, sits second.

Two weeks ago, the teams battled to a pair of ties, but BU holds the tiebreaker thanks to a win over NU in November. Both teams play home-and-home pairs this Friday and Saturday – BU with Providence and NU with Boston College.

National implications

The team that wins the Hockey East Tournament earns an automatic bid to the national tournament. There are five other conferences in college hockey that makeup the remainder of the automatic spots.

Beyond that, 10 teams earn at-large bids. Currently, BU, NU, UVM and UNH are in position to earn at-large bids even if they falter in the Hockey East Tournament. BU is the No. 1 overall team in the PairWise Rankings, a system devised by USCHO to predict the field of the NCAA Tournament. The raw numbers of the system will change between now and March 22 when the 16-team field is announced. Still, there is a realistic chance that at least four Hockey East teams will play for a chance at a national championship. If someone other than those four wins the Hockey East Tournament, as many as five teams could have the opportunity.

However unlikely, no team to play on the road in the first round of the tournament has won the tournament, this is probably the best chance you have to see it.

The four regional sites for the NCAA Tournament are the East Regional in Bridgeport, Conn., the Northeast Regional in Manchester, N.H., the Midwest Regional in Grand Rapids, Mich. and the West Regional in Minneapolis. Should Northeastern or Boston University, the Hockey East Tournament, they would essentially be guaranteed a No. 1 seed in the tournament. Four teams play in each bracket and the winner of each regional advances to the Frozen Four – scheduled for April 9 and 11 in Washington.

Boston College won both the Hockey East and NCAA Championships last season. The Eagles defeated Notre Dame, 4-1, in Denver after losing in both the 2006 and 2007 national championship games. Prior to that, BC was the last Hockey East team to win the national championship – defeating North Dakota, 3-2, in overtime in 2001. A Hockey East team has advanced to the national championship game in eight of the last nine years – BC five times, Maine three times and UNH once.

Race for the Hobey

Following BU's 6-3 win over Massachusetts on Friday, BU coach Jack Parker praised defenseman Matt Gilroy for his performance in the win. Gilroy scored BU's first two goals while down 3-0. On the season, the senior has scored eight goals and assisted on 20 other for the Terriers who lead Hockey East in goals scored and goals allowed.

Teams from the National Hockey League

See HOCKEY on page 7

Boston University defenseman Matt Gilroy, right, scored the first two BU goals in the Terriers' 6-3 win against UMass on Friday. Gilroy has 28 points on the season and is a candidate for the Hobey Baker award.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HI: 38 LO: 26 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 2009

Fine Arts Center part of new WMECO solar energy proposal

The Western Massachusetts Electric Company has proposed putting solar panels along the south facing roof of the Fine Arts Center at UMass. The arrangement would benefit both institutions for different reasons.

By Claire Bronchuk
Collegian Staff

The roof of the Fine Arts Center at the University of Massachusetts could become a site for harnessing solar power energy in the near future.

The plan has been proposed by the Western Massachusetts Electric Co. as a part of $42 million solar energy plan. The plan could involve leasing the roof space of the FAC in order to install photovoltaic solar panels which would generate a portion of the company's energy supply.In 2008, Gov. Deval Patrick initiated a state-wide plan to expand solar energy production when he passed the Green Communities Act.

The act stipulates that utility companies must purchase new technology that improves energy efficiency whenever the costs of these new implements are cheaper than the current processes.

According to the governor's official website, The Green Communities Act is meant to help Massachusetts achieve 250 megawatts of solar energy by 2017, thereby "lowering the overall demand on the system and reducing greenhouse gas emissions."

On Feb. 12, a WMECO press release listed the FAC roof as the first of several buildings around western Massachusetts that the company sees as potential sites for solar facilities.

According to Jason Burbank, UMass campus engineer, WMECO and UMass have been in discussions about other ground sites on campus that could potentially offer surface space for photovoltaic installation, as well.

Sandra Ahearn, spokeswoman for WMECO, described the photovoltaic cells as reflective panels that absorb the sun's rays. These rays are converted to energy, which is then transmitted back through the WMECO power grid and used to supply energy to the company's customers.

WMECO says the technology, although not yet widespread, will be safe for both the building and the students.

The entire WMECO project, expected to be expanded through 2010 and 2012, could achieve 15 megawatts of solar power. The solar power generated would be enough to power nearly 15,000 homes,

See SOLAR on page 3

Tough competition for fewer student jobs

By Niina Heikkinen
Collegian Staff

As the national economy slips further into a recession, student employers at the University of Massachusetts say they have experienced a flood of interest in student jobs.

At this point it is difficult to determine what effect, if any, the recession is having on how many students are applying for jobs because employers do not keep records of the number of applications they receive from one year to the next. Yet students contend that, whatever the reason, searching for a job on campus has not been easy this semester.

Claire Tansey, a sophomore at UMass, began her job search on campus at the beginning of the spring semester. For three weeks, she had no luck finding a job; the places she looked at on campus weren't taking applications because they had received too many already. Applying for jobs off-campus wasn't much better – few places were hiring.

"I think everyone is cutting back because of the economy," said Tansey. Overall, she described the job hunting process as "kind of disappointing."

Tansey is not alone in her frustration. Elizabeth Murphy, also a sophomore at UMass, said that she had been unable to find a job on campus this semester.

"There was pretty much nothing I could get, so I broadened my search to look at off-campus jobs" said Murphy.

Murphy said she applied to become a campus security monitor at the beginning of the semester, even though she had been warned by friends that the competition was tight. The security application process, administered by Residence Hall Security, requires applicants to pass an exam on security rules following a three-hour training session. Only the first 100 students who arrive can attend the training session held in the Campus Center.

"I got there an hour and 15 minutes early and I was 40th in line waiting to get in the room," she said.

"I really thought that I had done well enough on the security exam," said Murphy, but after two weeks without getting a response to her application, she figured that she hadn't gotten the job. Murphy said the whole experience felt like a waste of time

Employers have also noted an increase in applications, and some believe that the struggling economy may account for the change. Tim Lane, operations manager at Worcester Dining Commons, said that he had seen a heightened interest in student jobs.

"It filled up really quickly, usually it takes about a week, this year it took us a day to fill our positions," said Lane. He said approximately 120 students are employed at Worcester, with similar numbers working at Berkshire, Franklin and Hampshire dining commons. Dining services positions offer

See JOBS on page 2

Felice Lopez, left, a residential advisor for the Johnson, Lewis, Thatcher Cluster, helps resident Yasmine Desouza, right, get the key to her room.

JLB to host 'Dress for Success'

By Josh Walovitch
Collegian Staff

The Jewish Leaders in Business Group will host their second annual "Dress for Success" fashion show Thursday, featuring special guest Betsy Hilfiger.

The event comes at a seminal time, as graduation looms around the bend. Many seniors are currently undergoing the process of job interviewing. With the recession wreaking havoc on the job market, interviews have become more significant.

According to the United States Department of Labor, the number of unemployed persons rose in January to 11.6 million. The unemployment rate also rose, reaching 7.6 percent.

"You only have one chance to make a first impression," said Betsy Hilfiger, director of community affairs for Tommy Hilfiger Company. "My belief is that students should dress to present their best self to the potential employer, no matter what field they are in. A conservative, clean and polished look is always a winner."

Hilfiger owned a retail clothing store for nine years and interviewed many people during that span of time. The one interviewee that she remembers most is a young man who came in looking for a sales position.

"I could not concentrate on what he was saying because of all the rings, etc. He also had very poor hygiene and needed a bath and some deodorant in a big way," said Hilfiger. "I always tell people looking for tips on interviewing success to remember good hygiene

See SUCCESS on page 2

Popcorn sets off alarm

The University of Massachusetts Student Union building was evacuated around 12 p.m. Wednesday after a popcorn maker reportedly set off a fire alarm on the first floor.

The Amherst Fire Department and University Environmental Health and Safety responded to the alarm within 10 minutes and students and staff were readmitted to the building within the hour. The popcorn maker could be seen outside the Center for Student Development office.

The Student Union was evacuated yesterday following a fire alarm set off by a popcorn maker.

"For whatever reason, it set the fire alarm off," Assistant Chief Lindsay Stromgren of the Amherst Fire Department said in an interview. "They may have burnt it or something; I don't believe it was a malfunction."

The machine was reportedly too close to the fire prevention system.

Representatives from Auxiliary Services, the division of UMass Dining Services which rents out the popcorn machines, said they had no knowledge of the incident.

Lloyd Henley, assistant director of the CSD, said the popcorn maker was not being used for any campus event.

"It was just lunch time and someone wanted to make some popcorn," he said. Basically, it was an error. Just popcorn."

S.P. Sullivan

Atlantic City bound

UMass' Anthony Gurley goes up for a layup against George Washington's Rob Diggs in a 77-62 win for the Minutemen Wednesday night. The Senior Night victory clinched an Atlantic 10 Tournament berth for UMass.

SGA debates Israel divestment

By Nicole Sobel
Collegian Staff

Wednesday, March 4th the SGA gathered in the Campus Center at to vote on whether or not the University of Massachusetts should divest from companies who support Israel such as Caterpillar, General Electric, and Motorola.

The meeting concluded with the motion being tabled until March 25th, after, lengthy and controversial debate.

The main debate was between The Student Alliance for Israel and the Campus Anti-War Network debate over whether SGA should pass the bill.

Michael Feder spoke firest on the topic, representing a pro-Israel outlook. He said the bill contained a number of half-truths.

"Real decisions come from knowing the information on boih sides," said Feder.

Feder's speech also had a

See SGA on page 3

Financial trouble for Dudley

By Matthew M. Robare
Collegian Staff

In need of $58,872 before the end of the fiscal year, the Dudley Board of Selectmen and Town Administrator Peter Jankowski have had to give layoff notices to all police officers, firefighters, dispatchers, highway, water and sewer workers.

Under the collective bargaining agreements with each respective union, all the members had to receive notice.

"We're still in the negotiation stage," said Jankowski. After losing $187,209 in aid from the state, the Select Board has been able to cut $130,337 from the town's budget. "Now we're at the point where we need to find the remaining money," he said.

The Select Board is looking everywhere to make up the shortfall, from operating budget, to combining jobs, cutting non-essential services, and looking at personnel that can be laid off. Unfortunately, some of the layoffs may have to come from the police and fire departments.

"That's craziness," said University of Massachusetts student Thom Gulino. "The fire department I can potentially see. But keep in mind fire departments respond to calls that are 80 percent medical. The police force I can't even imagine."

"I can't imagine that the local

See DUDLEY on page 3

ARTS & LIVING
STREET FIGHTER

A new video game adaptation of "Street Fighter: Legend of Chun-Li" fails to deliver action and introduce game's characters.

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS
ALMOST THERE

The Minutemen take on Merrimack in last two-game set before Hockey East Tournament.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORAL & OPINION

STAFF EDITORIAL —
STUDENT GOVERNMENT NEEDS TO FIX ITS ELECTION PROCESS IF IT EVER HOPES TO DRAW MORE STUDENTS TO THE POLLS.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

COLLEGIAN PHOTOGRAPHER AND WMUA DJ OLIVER SCOTT SNURE INTERVIEWS PORTLAND, OREGON BAND BLITZEN TRAPPER AFTER THEIR WEDNESDAY NIGHT SHOW AT PEARL STREET.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 27

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Wawerchuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Dettmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor James Mathews
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenzweike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor P.J. Stanley
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zeltzert
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kurowaw
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Asst. Editorial Leigh Greaney
Asst. Editorial Nick O'Malley
Assistant News Lia DeBonisfactis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo Ryan Fung
Assistant Photo Matthew Harrison
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillenwater
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Weliver

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aegis Lux, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1958. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Joe Meloni

COPY EDITOR
Shayna Murphy

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michael Sarkes

BSU hit high note last Friday

By Jasmine R. Pina
Collegian Correspondent

The Black Student Union wrapped up Black History Month last Friday with "The Evolution of Music," a night of performances in the Student Union ballroom.

"The purpose was to close out Black History Month and celebrate the heritage and history we have," said Mohamed Vandi, the president of BSU.

The Black History Month showcase, "The Evolution of Music," took the audience on a musical journey from Africa, through to the contemporary hip-hop era.

Music was the theme of the night, and BSU introduced the different types of music through performances and speeches.

"We especially wanted to focus on black music because it's such an important part of our culture," said Vandi.

BSU opened the celebration with the national anthem and then went to Africa with Teranga Step, a group which performs African dances and playing the drums.

There were poetry and spoken word performances and swing dance numbers, performed by the UMass Ballroom Dance Team. Ballet and break dancing were performed from the UMass Hip-Hop Culture Organization.

There were also songs performed by students such as Cecily Graham, who sang songs from Chaka Khan. The performances underscored varying musical eras.

The founder of the BSU, David Moore, attended the event to see how far the BSU legacy has come and to explain how the BSU began 21 years ago.

"There weren't any groups for African Americans on campus. The surrounding four colleges had it – finally it was time to make this happen. The meetings were in the New Africa House," Moore said.

Vandi was thrilled to have the founder of the BSU present at the event.

"The founder of BSU came back 21 years later. It's amazing to see the group is still going strong. It was a great moment for the both of us; the former president and the present president," said Vandi.

"This is a function where people are learning about their history. A people that do not honor their past are a people headed to destruction," said Moore.

Jasmine Pina can be reached at jpina@student.umass.edu

Demand increases for RA jobs

JOBS from page 1

a starting salary of $8 per hour.

Al Byam, associate director for Campus and Transportation Services, said he had seen a slight increase in bus driver applications.

"I'd assume off the top of my head that it's primarily the economy," said Byam. UMass Transit employs about 200 students, according to Byam. Tansey said she decided to apply to UMass Transit because of the high starting salary of $9.50 per hour.

Just this week, Tansey also applied to be a resident assistant for the 2009-10 academic year. She said the main draw to the job was the housing benefits the position offers.

"I have no idea where I want to live next year, I want a single [room] and I need the money, also I think I'd be good at doing it," Tansey said. "I hope my chances are good."

RAs receive a stipend, which goes toward paying for room and board. RAs also receive two OIT fee waivers and free membership to the Wellness Centers. Altogether, total RA compensation is valued at $8,089 for the 2008-09 school year, according to the UMass website.

Student Development Director for Residence Life, Lisa Giddens, said there was a high level of interest in RA positions. She wasn't sure how many applications had been submitted, but she believed that there would be more applications this year.

"We have had more interest in our information sessions than last year, that would lead me to believe that there will be an increase," she said.

Competition for the RA positions is intense, with applications greatly exceeding job openings. Last year, housing received about 420 applications, and Giddens expects the figure to be similar this year. Of the 353 RA positions on campus, about 150-170 RA positions will be open for the 2009 fall semester, said Giddens.

She added that the number has stayed consistent over the years. Currently, Housing and Residence Life employs over 400 undergraduate students, including 19 apartment living advisors and 51 peer mentors, Giddens said.

Tansey still has a while to wait before she hears back about becoming an RA, but last week she found another job, as a bus driver for UMass Transit.

Meanwhile Murphy's off-campus job search finally paid off. Last week, she was hired as a delivery driver for La Piazza Ristorante in Amherst.

"I'm really glad I have a job, it's a relief," she said.

Niina Heikkinen can be reached at nheikkin@student.umass.edu.

Hilfiger gives interview tips

SUCCESS from page 1

and to have clean fresh breath. Many young people I interviewed smelled like cigarettes and alcohol ... they never got the jobs."

Hilfiger remembers her first interview with Wyeth Laboratories for a pharmaceutical representative position. The interview was held in a local restaurant in Elmira, N.Y., where she wore a navy blue suit.

"I had about five interviews trying to get the job. I had to wear the same suit a few times but did wear different blouses each time," said Hilfiger.

"I ended up getting the job and buying several suits with my first few paychecks. I was young and probably talked too much, but it must have been OK as I ended up with the job," she said.

Many students who attended last years' event were graduating seniors who took advantage of Hilfiger's tips.

"The event gave me insight on real world situations and I was able to apply what I learned while I interviewed," said UMass graduate Grisha Maziya, who now works in finance.

"I think this event is going to be a great opportunity to talk to a woman who is obviously very well established in the fashion industry about how to make a great impression with your outfit" said JLB President Sam Akiba.

"Just the chance to interact with someone who is so successful is reason enough to come to this event."

Hilfiger will field questions from all the attendees. Staff and students from UMass will be modeling during the event, which takes place in 137 Flavin School of Management at 7 p.m.

Jash Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu.

British dog show comes under fire

By Henry Chu
Los Angeles Times

BIRMINGHAM, England — It seems so very British that an ugly row has broken out between those who say they love dogs and those who say they love dogs more. But just such a royal catfight has ensnared the country's most prestigious dog show, Crufts, which opens Thursday here, a four-day extravaganza of four-legged bliss that has drawn millions of viewers to the British Broadcasting Corp. since 1966.

But not this year.

The BBC has dropped its coverage of Crufts after a documentary exposed questionable practices among some competitive dog breeders. The quest for the perfect look produced Pekingese with excessively mashed-in faces, bulldogs with oversize heads, and dachshunds with unhealthily long bodies. Crufts, complained one anti-cruelty activist, was nothing less than a "parade of mutants."

The fallout has led to competing claims over who has the best interests of dogs at heart in a country where more than 1 in 5 households owns a dog, a fact well-supported by evidence on the country's sidewalks.

Stung by the bad publicity, Britain's Kennel Club, which runs Crufts, issued revised standards of canine beauty in January – modifications they say were already under way but acknowledge rushing into force because of the controversy. That sparked protests from some breeders and owners who fumed that the rules were being changed without fair warning before Crufts, which people here call the "greatest dog show on Earth."

"It's almost as if they invented the idea, whereas actually we were very conscious of it, and we were already working with those breeds which we felt to be of the most concern," says Caroline Kisco, the club's secretary. "But we were taking a more softly-softly approach in getting them to agree to the changes."

The program that spawned the fuss, "Pedigree Dogs Exposed," aired on the BBC and was not for the squeamish. It showed animals suffering from horrible physical problems apparently bred into them by owners intent on achieving contest-winning looks. Some mated dogs with their parents, or siblings with each other, inbreeding that can lead to deformities.

There were pugs and Pekinese bred to have as flat a face as possible, but which left them unable to breathe properly or regulate their body temperature. (One champion Pekinese had to be set on a block of ice when it received its prize.) Bulldogs were molded into such an odd shape that they could not mate nor give birth naturally.

Most painful to watch, a Cavalier King Charles spaniel writhed in agony from a permanent headache because its skull had been bred too small for its brain – like "a size 10 foot shoved into a size 6 shoe," a veterinary neurologist grimly explained.

Public outcry was immediate. Crufts' chief sponsor, a pet food maker, pulled out. And after an internal review, the BBC decided in December to ditch its coverage of the show. Meanwhile, judges have been instructed to be vigilant for signs of poor canine health. The revised guidelines for poochy pulchritude, Kisco said, should also help ensure that the dogs are "fit for function, fit for life," as the Kennel Club's slogan has it.

"It is difficult to see dog as man's best friend when we castrate them, make them commit incest and parade them under bright lights in Birmingham," the newspaper said.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Joe Meloni

COPY EDITOR
Shayna Murphy

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michael Sarkes

your week ahead on Daily Collegian

INTRODUCING NEWSGARDEN

Follow news geographically with dailycollegian.com's new application.

NEWS

Video: See more of what the SGA candidates had to say at last night's pre-election debate

Podcast: A roundtable of The Collegian's reporters and editors discuss the University system's financial crisi and what it may mean looking ahead.

Video: Daily Collegian editors and reporters provide a wrap of the campus' budget crisis and Chancellor Holub's reaction to it in the "War Room."

Video: Collegian reporter and UVC-TV 19 correspondent Gisel Saillant holds little back while soliciting real student opinion on a variety of issues.

Blog: Read the latest in UMass research, politics and student life for the week on the Collegian's news blogs. News editor Will McGuinness tells of going under the knife for UMass kinesiology.

SPORTS

Sideshow: See the highlights of the UMass Men's basketball game against URI through the lense of a Collegian photographer.

THE ONLY THING GROWING FASTER THAN OUR GRADUATE PROGRAMS IS OUR REPUTATION.

Cardiovascular Perfusion
Computer Information Systems
Education – Elementary Education – Secondary
Interactive Communications
Journalism
Law
MBA-CFA® Track (Chartered Financial Analyst)
MBA/HCM (Health Care Management)
MBA/JD (Joint degree in business and law)
Medical Laboratory Sciences/Biomedical Sciences
Molecular & Cell Biology
Nurse Practitioner
Pathologists' Assistant
Physician Assistant
Radiologists' Assistant

Graduate Online Programs
Interactive Communications
Organizational Leadership with focus areas in:
Higher Education
Human Resources
Information Technology
Insurance

Learn more:
www.quinnipiac.edu

Graduate Programs: graduate@quinnipiac.edu
Graduate Online Programs: quonlineadmissions@quinnipiac.edu
Law School: ladm@quinnipiac.edu

QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
1-800-462-1944 | Hamden, Connecticut

Lincoln Real Estate
N. Hadley, Amherst, Hadley & Amherst

Providing the best off campus living experience
24 hour maintenance
Safe Apartments
Friendly Staff
Two Great locations:
Amherst Center and Hobart Lane

We start showing apartments
Feb. 4th from 11:30am – 4:30pm M-F

The Interview:
De-Stress, Dress and Impress
Campus to Career

Wednesday, March 11 • 5:30 p.m.
Memorial Hall (between Herter Hall and the Old Chapel)

Sara Coady Howe '02, senior recruiter with EMC, will share best practices for interviews, the proper dress for both men and women and what you can do to prepare for the big day. Seating is limited. RSVP today at UMassAlumni.com/students!

FREE REFRESHMENTS
Thanks to the support of Cape Cod Chips and Kraft/Nabisco

Attend to enter the drawings!
Movie passes - $20 UStore gift card - Seniors only: $1,000 cash prize!
Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association and the Student Alumni Association.
Alumni Association
Student Alumni Association

Students optimistic about solar at FAC

SOLAR from page 1

according to the press release.

The target area of the FAC is the concrete bridge running east to west along the top floor. This section of the roof has a south-facing slope that is regularly exposed to intense sunlight. Both WMECO and Burbank seem sure that any possible construction on the building will not inhibit students' use of the FAC facilities.

Burbank feels optimistic about UMass' involvement in the project, stating that the university "would gain some benefit; either electricity or financial compensation." Burbank was also glad that the FAC site could be so "wonderfully visible" to students and the community.

Some UMass students are also excited about the possible benefits that the project may have.

"I think it's a great cooperation between UMass and WMECO," said Tim Sine, a junior geology major. "I think it's great that UMass can be part of [the state's legislation]."

"Agreeing to rent roof space to WMECO is a harmless and friendly endeavor that could only help UMass," said Lindsey Athananison, a junior sociology major. "It is a smart way to raise extra funds amid the severe budget crisis".

In addition to the financial incentives that the university may gain from leasing the FAC roof, Burbank hopes the project could also help out the FAC. Burbank points out that WMECO proposes to mount the solar panels on a concrete wall that is not insulated.

"If we insulate the wall at the same time, we will save as much energy as we gain from the solar panels," said Burbank. Students should not expect to see any changes to the FAC during this school year. WMECO only recently submitted a proposal to the Massachusetts Department of Public Utilities. Ahearn said the company expects a decision "in the next six months."

Even if the government approves the project Ahearn explains that the photovoltaic cells would not be fully installed until sometime in late 2010.

Burbank cautioned against too much preemptive speculation claiming that the project is "not a done deal yet."

Claire Brunchuk can be reached at cbronchu@student.umass.edu.

SGA tables motion after lengthy debate

SGA from page 1

strong emphasis on 'war as a symptom.' He claimed that, "An anti-war stance is a way to avoid thoughtful inquiry."

The Student Alliance for Israel's believed the bill should be treated as a starting point for dialogue, not for rash decision. The main qualm expressed by Pro-Israel students was their worry only one side of the issue was being seen, and more debate and dialogue was necessary on the matter.

Hannah Grossman from the Student Alliance for Israel was concerned that "This bill is going to polarize the campus and make it impossible for each side to understand each other."

Other pro-Israel speakers at the meeting referred to the bill as an "unfair vilification of Israel," and a "means for polarizing the campus."

The campus Anti-War network, on the other hand, felt the bill should be passed.

The Anti-War network said that, "Divestment helps towards peace." They claimed repeatedly that the bill was urgent, since many Palestinians were dying and starving by the minute.

"Palestinian Civil Society asked the U.S. to make this move." network representatives said.

The Anti-War network claimed that Israel should not be portrayed as representing 'democracy,' considering their recent assault on the Gaza Strip. The Anti-War network felt that this bill would, "protect the Palestinians from being besieged."

The Anti-War network referred to the Gaza Strip as, "an open air prison right now," and said this bill needed to be passed in order to, "Divest from occupation of war, and invest in education."

They were insistent upon this bill being passed quickly because of the urgent humanitarian crisis that was at stake In Israel concerning the Palestinian people.

Nicole Sabel can be reached at nsabel@student.umass.edu

Military men consider marraige

By Joanna Lin
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — The year was 1951. The U.S. military had just declared homosexuality an "unacceptable risk" and dishonorably discharged about 2,000 men and women from the armed services.

It was the same year Army Sgt. Bob Claunch and his commanding officer, Lt. Jack Reavley, fell in love.

More than half a century later, they are still together.

For most of their lives, marriage was not an option for gays. But when same-sex marriage became legal in California last year, more than 18,000 couples tied the knot. Claunch and Reavley, longtime Los Angeles residents, were not among them.

"I know that we've been together a long time," Claunch said, "but the idea of cementing this relationship seems unnecessary."

But, then, perhaps that is exactly why marriage matters: As the couple enter the twilight years, what will happen to one when the other dies?

Friends have passed, families are distant. Although they are registered domestic partners in California, federal marriage benefits – including Social Security and survivor payments – are out of reach.

So Claunch and Reavley have been reconsidering. If the opportunity to marry came again, they said they probably would take advantage.

Thursday, the California Supreme Court will consider the constitutionality of Proposition 8, the ban on same-sex marriage that the state's voters passed in November. The court's ruling, expected within 90 days, could overturn the ban.

Claunch and Reavley are quiet about their feelings toward marriage. In recent months, as protests mounted against Proposition 8, they sensed that people were disappointed that they weren't vocal marriage advocates.

To some degree, the couple said, their reticence stems from the environment in which they first fell in love.

Reavley, who was drafted in World War II and remained in the Army Reserve, was called back to service during the Korean War. He became Claunch's commanding officer at Armed Forces Radio in Munich, Germany.

Claunch and Reavley share a two-bedroom apartment at a complex in Hollywood of mostly low-income seniors who are gay, lesbian, bisexual or transgender.

The only reason to marry at their age, the couple say, is to receive marriage benefits. Given another chance to say "I do," they say they probably would, but history makes them hesitant.

"I suppose it's because for so many, many, many years and centuries, men have not married men, and women have not married women," Claunch said. "We've been brought up not having anything like that, not wanting anything like that... We've always been given the impression that it was a horrible kind of situation, and it is not easy to cross over that line."

Mass. towns face tough choices

DUDLEY from page 1

government would go to such an extreme measure, in an economic crisis, as to put their civilians in danger," said Andrea Cook, a senior music education major from Dudley.

Any layoffs which do occur will be made based on seniority and work classification. For example, the most recent hires with the least experience and lowest pay grade will be fired first.

Letting go of police is hardly confined to Dudley, however, and a number of towns and cities have already begun to do so. Thirty-two graduates of Worcester's police academy have had to turn in their badges, while in Fall River, Mass., over 100 city employees have been laid off, including police and firemen. According to the Massachusetts Budget and Policy Center, Gov. Deval Patrick's proposed budget for Fiscal Year 2010 will cut commonwealth aid to cities and towns by 27.4 percent. The towns of Lawrence, Fall River, North Adams, Lowell and Somerville will be the hit the hardest.

However, Gov. Patrick has proposed certain new local taxes to make up for the lost money and increase revenue.

The proposed budget will also see the elimination of community police grants. According to the Executive Office of Public Safety and Security, the Community Policing Grants program supplies funds to cities and towns across the state for community policing activities, programs, purchases, or construction. The governor's proposed budget will also reduce the amount spent on the Committee for Public Counsel Services – the branch of the government that makes sure courts can appoint attorneys to defend those who cannot afford them – by almost $24,000. Police in the Amherst area were unavailable for comment.

Matthew M. Robare can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Iran still opposes U.S. administration

By Thomas Erdbrink
The Washington Post

TEHRAN, Iran — Iranian leaders said Wednesday that President Obama follows the "crooked ways" of his predecessor, repeated earlier warnings that Iranian missiles could reach Israel, and reiterated that the Holocaust was "a lie."

Iran's president and other officials have at times appeared to welcome Obama's proposal for greater dialogue, but the remarks Wednesday suggested that Iranian positions on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict and other issues would pose obstacles. The comments were also a reminder that Iran's complex leadership structure brings together clerics and political leaders with sometimes sharply differing views.

In his first public comments on the new U.S. administration, Ayatollah Ali Khamenei, who is Iran's supreme leader and who has the final say over foreign policy, said Obama had adopted former President George W. Bush's support for Israel, which Khamenei called a "cancerous tumor."

"Even the new American president, who came to office with the slogan of bringing change in the policies of the Bush administration, avows unconditional commitment to Israel's security," Khamenei told representatives of several pro-Palestinian groups at a conference in Tehran. "This commitment to Israel's security means the defense of state terrorism, injustice, oppression and a 22-day-long massacre of hundreds Palestinian men, women and children," Khamenei said.

Khamenei was referring to Israel's recent assault on Hamas, the Iranian-backed Islamist movement that controls Gaza and rejects Israel's existence. Some 1,300 Palestinians, among them hundreds of civilians, and 13 Israelis, including three civilians, were killed during fighting in December and January.

Khamenei criticized Palestinian leaders who have sought a negotiated settlement with Israel, including Palestinian Authority President Mahmoud Abbas. "By now those who advocated a 'pragmatic' approach under the illusion of the invincibility of the Zionist regime, and who succumbed to surrender and compromise with the usurpers, should have realized their mistakes," Khamenei said.

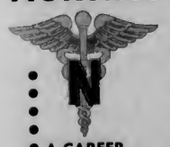
Secretary of State Hillary Rodham Clinton, while briefing reporters traveling from the Middle East to Brussels, said Khamenei's comments about Abbas "were a clear interference in the internal affairs of the Palestinian people. There is a great deal of concern about Iran in the entire region," she added.

Iranian leaders, including President Mahmoud Ahmadinejad, have repeatedly said they are ready for "real" talks with the Obama administration, but say that they first want to see a significant change in U.S. policies.

"That the Obama administration wants to think all this through and take its time is a positive sign," Mohammad Marandi, head of the North American studies department at the University of Tehran, said in a recent interview. But he added that Iranian leaders need to see "change from them on several issues."

Iranian politicians seek U.S. recognition of Iran's clerici-led system of government and its development of nuclear power, which Iran says is for peaceful purposes, but which the U.S., Israel, and other nations worry is part of a weapons program. Iranians have also demanded U.S. apologies for orchestrating the 1953 overthrow of President Mohammed Mossadegh and for the 1988 downing of an Iran Air passenger jet, with 290 people aboard, by an American warship. U.S. officials at the time said the airliner was shot down inadvertently and apologized.

"At this point there is no need for Iran to compromise," Marandi said. "Let's face it, (Americans) are in a poor position. Their economy has run aground, they have no need for more instability in the region. They need us more then we need them."



On Wednesday, Khamenei made clear that Iran's support for "resistance movements" such as Hamas and Lebanon's Hezbollah is unequivocal; the U.S. has branded both terrorist organizations. Iranian politicians and analysts say that their backing of Palestinian groups parallels U.S. political, financial and military support for Israel.

The United States and European nations favor a negotiated two-state solution to the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, but Khamenei said a "democratic referendum" was the path to a resolution.

Ayatollah Ali Khamenei is the supreme leader of Iran, who continues to be conflicted with the United States administration despite the change in power.

ARMY NURSING

A CAREER PATH TO SUCCESS

WHO: ALL NURSING STUDENTS/ FACULTY INVITED
WHAT: ARMY ROTC NURSING SCHOLARSHIP INFO SESSION
WHERE: SKINNER HALL RM 012
WHEN: MON. MARCH 9, 12:15-1
WHY: LEARN ABOUT THE ARMY NURSE CORPS AND HOW TO RECEIVE A SCHOLARSHIP FOR FREE TUITION/FEES/BOOKS FOR REMAINDER OF YOUR DEGREE

FREE LUNCH!
University of Massachusetts Amherst Army ROTC
413-545-2321 – www.umass.edu/armyrotc

SMUCKER'S THURSDAY

UMASS IN PARTNERSHIP WITH SMUCKER'S FOODSERVICE
THURSDAY MARCH 5

BREAKFAST
• Georgia Peach Pecan Sticky Buns
• Blackberry Pate
Coffee Cake

LUNCH
• Creamy Chicken with Wild Rice Soup

DINNER
• Spicy Roast Pork with Sweet Potato Polenta
• Ancho-Lime Jicama Slaw
• Tres Leches Cake with Cinnamon Buttercream Frosting

Restaurants & Institutions Ivy Awards
Dining Services UMass Amherst

ENTER TO WIN FABULOUS PRIZES!
Worcester DC · Franklin DC · Hampshire DC
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 2009

"I HAVE A THEORY THAT THE TRUTH IS NEVER TOLD DURING THE NINE TO-FIVE HOURS. .." – DR. HUNTER S. THOMPSON

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SGA elections broken, at best

Tuesday evening, the two candidates for Student Government Association President – Chris Faulkner and Ngozi Mbawuike – debated in front of a small crowd in hopes of winning votes in next week's election.

The pair expressed interest in increasing outreach to the campus community. For the most part, University of Massachusetts students' opinions on the SGA are neither negative nor positive – they border more on complete apathy. Hardly anyone votes in the elections, and even fewer people pay attention once they cast their ballot and scramble into the dining hall.

Still, the elections are next week, and the SGA has done next to nothing to ensure that students know their candidates and are adequately prepared to cast a vote for either. For a body with so much responsibility, it just doesn't make sense to continue such an ineffective process year after year.

A few weeks ago, The Daily Collegian questioned the legitimacy of current president Malcolm Chu's administration; not because Chu has or has not lived up to his promises, but because so few people actually voted in the election.

Six hours notice may be enough for a few, but one can't expect to garner much interest and attract many students to the debate in less than a day.

Election Commissioner Sean McNair attempted a shift to online elections through the proper channels this year, but concerns over safety among other things – tabled the vote until it was too late to make the move for next week's election.

McNair provided data from other Universities that utilize online voting formats, but still it's less than a week until the polls open, and students can only expect another little-known president voted in by a paltry fraction of the student body.

It's not the students' fault that they don't know when the elections are, or that they can't even name a single candidate. The first campus-wide advertisements for elections for Tuesday's debate didn't even reach the students until Tuesday morning. Six hours notice may be enough for a few, but one can't expect to garner much interest and attract many students to the debate in less than a day.

Even for those students who showed up to the debate, there wasn't much to learn from the candidates. They routinely stumbled over answers to simple questions about student involvement and working with the administration. Both candidates claimed to be satisfied with the attendance at the meeting. The Daily Collegian reported that "about 50" people were in attendance. There are more than 18,000 undergraduates eligible to vote. Satisfaction from 50 demonstrates either naïveté or simple, raw stupidity.

Normally, The Daily Collegian would endorse a candidate based on the answers they provided and the direction they plan to bring the student body. But it's pretty hard to endorse a candidate that no one's ever heard of.

No matter how qualified Faulkner or Mbawuike may be, endorsing either is useless – who knows who either of them are? An endorsement would also be irresponsible because we weren't given enough time to properly analyze their candidacy.

To this day, The Daily Collegian stands by its support of an online voting system. But with a timetable of a week, we're pretty sure that method wouldn't do the student body any justice either.

Unsigned editorials represent the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

Of finance, fees and $1,500

S.P. Sullivan

It's over, but it ain't over.

The University of Massachusetts board of trustees voted 12 to 4 in favor of a $1,500 – roughly 15 percent – increase in undergraduate fees for the coming semester, despite protests from the over 100 students clamoring inside and outside the meeting.

Students from every campus bused to Dartmouth last Friday to protest the measure, which they claim is another example of an administration short on creativity and fast to dig into the pockets of students for quick cash.

Video from the meeting shows the trustees visibly angry at the rowdy students yelling and chanting all-purpose protest slogans before and after the vote. Apparently it's much harder to take $1,500 from someone when they're right there yelling at you.

But I wonder how much trustee fees are going up next year.

Trustee Jennifer Braceras was one of the four who opposed the measure, but was none too pleased with the behavior of the protesters.

"I will not vote for one [a fee increase] today," she said to much applause, but interjected: "Hold your clapping because frankly, your behavior disgusts me."

Now, I'm just as desensitized as anyone else on this campus to protests, and protesters' ability to append just about anything to the phrase "No justice, no peace," including, but not limited to, "No racist police" and "No raising our fees." Between the divestment from Israel stuff ('did Hampshire College divest, or didn't they?') and the Darfur die-ins ('I don't think there are any Janjaweed in Whitmore ...') it can be a little much.

But an almost unprecedented fee increase is something students can – and should – be pissed about. If trustees want to hail the University out on the backs of students, that's their prerogative. But they shouldn't expect a pleasant afternoon in Dartmouth while they do it.

Meanwhile, the administration has been quick to point out the things that student organizers neglect to mention when wielding their megaphones. In an e-mail to the campus community, Chancellor Robert C. Holub wrote that roughly a third of the increase will go back into financial aid for low-to middle-income students, and that the majority of graduate students will be unaffected by an increase in curriculum fees via fee waivers provided for teaching assistants.

Apparently it's much harder to take $1,500 from someone when they're right there yelling at you.

The UMass system also promises that you'll get your money back when federal stimulus money comes through, but if the speed with which students get their excess checks is any indication, you might graduate before you see any of it.

This budget crisis is serious, and nobody is having an easy time with it. Yesterday, not a week after the fee increase, the University announced it will not be reappointing 60 of its non-tenured profcssors. Luckily, the administration announced the other day that it would be freezing parking fees for the coming semester, so if those 60 profs did still work here, it wouldn't have cost them any more to park.

So it's clear that every department, every office and every person on campus is going to have to give a little to keep quality up and cost down.

Yet the voice that has been heard least in this process – save for outside administrative offices over megaphones – has been the student voice.

The vote was the trustees' decision, but this is not.

There are media through which students can voice opposition – or support – of reorganization processes and the fee increase. Holub has set up an e-mail address, budgetcomments@chancellor.umass.edu, to field any grievances or suggestions. The Task Force on Reorganization, which is full of tenured profs – probably because they're the only ones guaranteed to be here next semester – has also created a blog, blogs.umass.edu/reorg/, to make the process more interactive. They haven't gotten past their inaugural post on Feb. 19, but their comments section is pretty active, with 19 and counting as of March 4.

Standing outside meetings with megaphones is one way to make your voice heard, and it's probably a lot of fun to chant and talk to television reporters about how hard your life as a college student is and how The Man just doesn't get it.

But there are quieter but arguably more effective ways to get your point across, and those are being ignored almost entirely. Send Holub an e-mail. Post on the TFR blog. Call your senator and tell them to invest stimulus monies in higher education.

Because bureaucrats are growing deaf to campus protest, but I bet they check their e-mail every five minutes like the rest of us.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian columnist. Read him online at blog.masslive.com/umass101.

Bay State casinos: another easy budget fix

Nick Milano

It's like déjà vu all over again.

It was around this time last year that the casino debate came to the forefront of state politics. March 20, 2008, went down as the victorious day that House Speaker DiMasi led the defeat of Gov. Patrick's gambling dreams.

Now, the issue is back, and with a vengeance.

Just this Tuesday, State Treasurer Tim Cahill proposed to license three slot machine parlors in Massachusetts. Even though the casinos were defeated a short time ago, the stakes have changed. DiMasi is no longer even in the House of Representatives and his replacement is more open to the idea of casinos than DiMasi was.

In what could be a giant step backwards for the state of Massachusetts, state sponsored gambling might just be coming back to town.

I actually do not have much of a moral problem with gambling. If a person wishes to spend his money in a game of chance then he has every right to do so. Despite what some may believe, poker and blackjack are most definitely not games of skill. At the end of the day they are still games of luck.

The problem lies in the state using gambling as a means of necessary revenue. If important state services, like lottery tickets and education, rely upon the income generated from gambling, is there any incentive for the state to actually educate its residents about the pitfalls of gambling or to help compulsive gamblers?

In this case, the problem already exists. The state generates millions of dollars from a tax on cigarettes in the name of public health. If the state was truly interested in the public health of its people, it would tax cigarettes so high that buying a pack would physically hurt.

This will never happen, because the source of income would quickly dry up. The same will happen with gambling. There is no motivation to help degenerate gamblers who ruin families or to regulate casinos more closely or to enforce state laws that casino owners thumb their noses at.

Patrick was elected to represent a new voice ... why not invest in the future of Massachusetts?

Think its all nonsense? Look up where you can legally smoke indoors in New Jersey, Colorado and Denver. Hint: it's nowhere except for inside of casinos. Apparently, public health efforts stop at the door of casinos.

But there is more to the argument against slot machine parlors and casinos than simply the moral argument. The problem with introducing them is that there is no guarantee that they will be as successful as their proponents project.

With Mohegan Sun and Foxwoods, two insanely gigantic resort casinos just a few hours away, adding slot machine parlors, or three resort casinos, will surely distort the market.

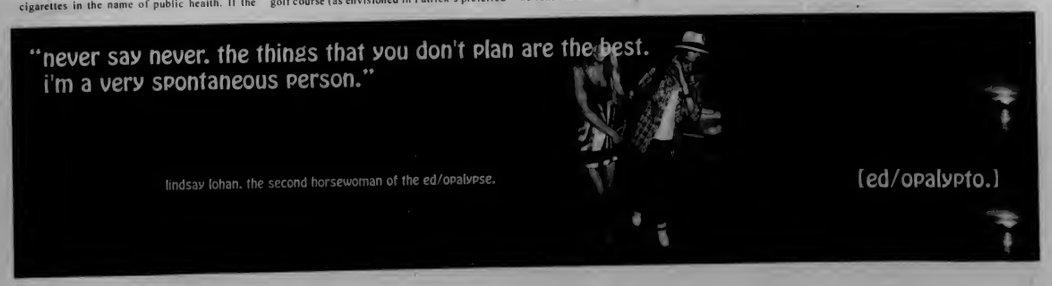
Furthermore, are local businesses going to be buoyed or crushed by the arrival of a resort style casino? If the three resort casinos all have a huge gaming area, a magnificent hotel and a golf course (as envisioned in Patrick's preferred plan), why would a guest venture into a town like Palmer?

The third argument against casinos and perhaps the best is quite simple. Casinos and slot machines are just a cop-out.

Patrick and Cahill are desperately looking for a new source of income and since neither can come with any new ideas. Thus, they have settled on casinos.

Since Patrick was elected to represent a new voice, it is all the more upsetting to see him resort to such boring, old ideas.

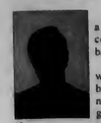
Why not invest in the future of Massachusetts? Create tax breaks for green technology companies and health information technology companies whose future is expected to boom under Obama. In these uncertain economic times, upstart companies must be looking for states to give them a measure of support.



Patrick and Cahill should stop wasting the state's time trying to create more low-paying, cheap benefit jobs.

In short, gambling is a way to prey on the people for an immediate flow into the state coffers. It is a way to create a whole new crop of degenerate gamblers who are bound to ruin lives and bankrupt families across the state.

Casinos and slot machine parlors are old and worn out ideas. Gov. Patrick was elected to mix up the way business was down on Beacon Hill; instead, he is pursuing the king of all quick fixes.



The people of Massachusetts deserve brighter and more creative leaders who are willing to 'roll the dice' on a new idea. Here's to hoping the House of Representatives crushes the slot machine parlor and casino ideas like it did under the bright leadership of Sal DiMasi.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Recession economics 101: bars and beers

Jon Peterson

Imagine that every evening, a group of college students in a college town populates a local bar to have some beers.

If the bar was run the same way our banking system was before and now during the economic crisis, those nights might go a bit like so:

The bar owner allows his tabs to be paid in the future, and because of this, he starts having a problem with people not paying. He makes people who want to open tabs prove that they have jobs, or that they have a good history of paying off bar tabs at other bars.

This goes on for a long time and everyone is happy until one day, some people who the bar owner knows have a history of not paying some of their bills at other stores start complaining that they can't get tabs at the bar, and they sue the owner so that he has to open tabs for everyone who claims they can pay it.

For a time, this goes on and the owner starts to lose some money when some of these people don't pay for their beer, but he still makes enough money that it doesn't affect him much.

But suddenly, people start talking about the bar owner never checks if people can pay their tabs. That night, everyone at the school starts going to the bar and the owner racks up an enormous amount of profit on tabs, both from people who could pay and from those who could not.

With sales being off the chart, and so many people wanting to buy beer at his bar, he raises the price immensely so that people are paying more for their beer than they would otherwise.

The bar owner is also a pretty slick investor, and he decides that he can make money by selling bonds based on the tabs at his bar. These bonds are guaranteed to pay off by a well known corporation, and are distributed among every major financial market in the world.

So one day, a person who bought the beer bonds decides to call in the debt from the students. As it turns out, they don't have enough money to pay off the tab. This strikes panic in the market as investors world wide start to think their tabs may not be able to be paid off, and the prices of the bonds, which had become one of the most popular bonds in the world, plummeted.

A person who bought the beer bonds decides to call in the debt from the students ... [and] they don't have enough money to pay off the tab.

Sam Adams, which considered this bar to be one of their best customers, and had given them a great amount of leniency in their payments, gets ready to claim bankruptcy. Then, the President of the school starts thinking that her school is largely just a party school, known for its drinking.

She decides that it would be catastrophic for this bar to shut down because of its popularity with the school. Potential future students would be driven away if the bar were shut down.

So the President decides to bail out the bar by raising tuition and other fees for all students, whether or not they drank at the bar. To stabilize the beer tab bonds, the school starts paying off the tabs of the drinkers who hadn't been paying them.

Other bars around the college had also instituted tabs, so the president starts sending money to the different bars while taking a portion of control in them so they could pay off their debt and continue buying more beer.

But now, the bars owners know that the President would keep sending them money whatever they did to keep the bars on the market. And it went on and on that the bars could do whatever they wanted after being bailed out, and if they were in risk of failure, the President would send them more money.

Prices skyrocket for tuition and the other fees at the school, and while the President wants to keep a good reputation that will attract students, new students who are attracted to the atmosphere were driven away by the high prices, and the school was in peril of losing all of its prospective students, not just the ones that hadn't come to party.

And that is how the mortgage system worked and how the financial system is now in peril of being swallowed by the government.

With banks having large government interests, and AIG now being sent another $30 Billion on top of the $150 Billion that it had been given previously, while having showed no improvement and a massive drop in profits, the investors are now realizing that they wont he getting back any dividends as the government money dilutes the stock value and its controlling interest further and further.

Tax these people too much, and they will eventually just start having their beer money sent over to other countries where there are better business practices.

Jon Petersen is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpeterse@student.umass.edu

The impending end of end-days madness

Kelsey Rooney

If you haven't heard, the world's going to end Dec. 21, 2012. The Mayans knew it. Nostradamus predicted it. Scientists attest to it. Even my dad, a straight-laced Army Colonel, asked me one day if there was any credence to the 2012 Armageddon.

Doomsday believers come far and wide, from devout Baptists to science-lovin' atheists. Whether it be the second coming, or 'Reptoids' commandeering the world's government, theories about the apocalypse abound. These theories do not have to be scientifically valid or adhere to religious beliefs. They serve an alternative purpose in society. An overwhelming amount of people subscribe to them, and vigorously defend them even when they have to repute validated facts. Why?

It's because our world views do not stretch as much as we pretend. Things we know must happen, like the eventual extinction of the human race, obsess and preoccupy some minds. We piece together a giant jigsaw of available evidence and make leaps between facts to style a story.

The events of 2012 form one such current tale. The 2012 theories draw on everything from geomagnetic data to the I Ching, visions from saints, and Mayan myths. Apocalypse-obsession is not a recent phenomenon. Jehovah's Witnesses have been expecting Armageddon since 1914, and that's only going back one century. Every belief foundation included some form of world annihilation.

We turn to the ancients, cloaked in the magic of the past, to elaborate on things we cannot see. Although these civilizations obviously failed, they nevertheless possessed arts and ways of thinking that now elude us. People spot similarities and amass data to spin a story and ameliorate the suspense of waiting for the end.

Witnesses have been expecting Armageddon since 1914, and that's only going back one century.

As much as we know it must happen, the end of the world cannot mesh with our world construct. Life can't go on if we explode tomorrow. But with an expiration date, we can anticipate our own demise, whether it be by neutrinos from the sun or by Nazis pouring out of the inside of the earth. Any socially irrational belief is justified through the knowledge of when the earth will end.

Government conspiracies evince this irrationality. An inquisitive look at any government reveals that the most effective way to run a nation state is to hide some things. As such, government action is publicly scrutinized. However, people study the highly publicized government action, like the Sept. 11 attacks and the JFK assassination.

People grab issues that they see, rather than assume the real issues will never surface in the public's eye. By suspecting lies in such large events, conspiracies suggest both that the government is a larger, near-omnipotent power. It assumes that their lies are hidden on the surface, when it would be equally realistic to assume that the government is no more than a ruling system, with a budget, capable of making and hiding mistakes often. It is easier to acknowledge that the administration has more power than less.

In America, our lives are constructed on the basis that our government is both the final word at home and in the world. So these events – the death of a president, a successful attack on our homeland – are almost more comforting if the government plotted them, because that means the government still has power.

Logic gets twisted in order to keep everything into an understandable context. The mystery of Armageddon and the true extent of the government's power are much more palatable if we see some clues to the truth. Regardless of the conspiracy's accuracy, it provides a necessary comfort when faced with the unknown.

Kelsey Rooney is a Collegian contributor. She can be reached at krooney@student.umass.edu.

Shock value versus sense

A recent political cartoon featured in The New York Post on Wednesday Feb. 18 has been the topic for some debate and controversy. Some have lambasted it as racist; others say the symbolism of the cartoon is what makes it so overwhelming, and some have ambivalent feelings concerning it.

Nicole Sobel

The NY Post however, did issue a partial apology in an editorial, and followed up with a personal apology from Rupert Murdoch, the chairman of News Corporation, which owns the Post. He addressed the issue of the cartoon being provocative and offensive in saying that he wanted to "personally apologize to any readers who felt offended and even insulted." He admitted that the cartoon had been a 'mistake'.

After explaining that the cartoon had been misinterpreted, the partial apology in the editorial, published last Thursday, concluded: "Sometimes a cartoon is just a cartoon – even as the opportunists seek to make it something else." The controversial cartoon depicted police officers shooting dead a chimpanzee – a reference to a real-life incident in last weeks news when a pet simian was killed after it mauled a woman in Connecticut

"They'll have to find someone else to write the next stimulus bill," observed an officer with a smoking gun in the image. President Barack Obama had the previous day signed the $787 billion dollar economic stimulus recovery bill after a heated debate in Washington

Rev. Al Sharpton, the prominent civil rights activist, immediately accused the newspaper, which has a conservative editorial tone, of deploying a crude racist stereotype of blacks as monkeys.

Many students around campus feel that the political satire portrayed hints of racism, and many feel that the editorial process was also at fault here, because of the unintended results of the cartoon.

The discourse around campus varied from student to student, but many do feel strongly, as I do, that the cartoon was provocative and dramatic, and a piece of propaganda, not so much different then the types of propaganda and cartoons used in the very early stages of the Holocaust to depict Jewish people.

Many feel that the editorial process was also at fault here, because of the unintended results of the cartoon.

However, there are still an abounding amount of people who either feel that the cartoon was ambiguous, or feel that it was simply just a cartoon and nothing more Ada Flores, a sophomore at the University of Massachusetts expresses her opinion on the political cartoon saying, "It's typical for the NY Post, and although it's overdramatic we do have to remember that President Bush was also once depicted as a monkey in a political cartoon."

The cartoon from the NY Post has certainly stirred up some controversy. Rev. Al Sharpton, and others continue to react strongly to it, alleging that the gorilla in the Political cartoon is intended to represent our African-American president, Obama.

Although many feel that it is a racist depiction, there are still large numbers of people who do not feel that anything wrong was done in this cartoon. There still remains a strong perception around campus for some students that feel that the cartoon is simply that, a cartoon, embodying no actual racist connotations or depictions.

Some even feel it's just a parody of a recent news event. However, this uproar was caused by many things, not just the cartoon itself. Opinions concerning the cartoon have been offered all around the media. On NPR, Michelle Norris was told by Eric Deggans, that the conservative-leaning Post is "willfully ignoring," which is a statement that only adds wood to the already lit fire.

The biggest proponent of this stimulus package is the first African-American president, Obama, and African-American people have been depicted as apes in simian ways in stereotypical media in the past. I don't positively think this was intentional, however I can completely understand why some people would be offended and appalled, and wonder if this was a disguised jab against Obama.

I just find myself wondering, "was there anyone at the NY Post who might have said, 'There might be a connection here between a gorilla or a chimpanzee and an African-American person, this seems racist?'" what went wrong in the editoriai process, and were they also at fault? Despite all of the controversy, the cartoonist, Mike Luckovich stands by his cartoon and claims there was no intentional racism portrayed in the cartoon, and that it in no way was a direct correlation to Obama, but to others the racism and correlation to Obama through the political cartoon is seemingly obvious.

Nicole Sobel is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at nsobel@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Chun' fails

New 'Street Fighter' film lacks in fighting, characters

BY NICK O'MALLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

As the film adaptations of "Max Payne," "Super Mario Bros.," and "Doom" have shown, the transition from video games to the big screen has lead to failure more often than not. With this in mind, the expectations for the newly released "Street Fighter: The Legend of Chun-Li" were less than stellar. Combined with the fact that the 1994 adaptation of the "Street Fighter" franchise, which starred Jean-Claude Van Damme as Guile, was a box office flop, the bar was set as low as possible for "Chun-Li."

Unfortunately, the movie still failed to live up to that.

A movie that needed only to show off real-life versions of video game characters fighting, regardless of the reason, not only fails to do so, but sullies the franchise further by combining it with poor acting performances, a sluggish plot filled with holes and unimaginative side plots.

As the title indicates, "Street Fighter: The Legend of Chun-Li" focuses on the title heroine, played by Kristen Kreuk of "Smallville" fame, from the kidnapping of her father when she was young to her ultimate revenge against the man who ruined her family.

The plot is simple: General M. Bison, a crime boss who expelled all the good from his soul, kidnaps the father of Chun-Li and, years later, the schoolgirl grows up and searches for revenge. What is frustrating, though, is the fact that little revenge is actually sought until at least 45 minutes into the movie. The action until that point was non-existent.

Unlike the 1994 version of "Street Fighter," which featured over-the-top fighting and as many characters as possible mashed into the cast, "The Legend of Chun-Li" offers only a handful of characters from the franchise and, more importantly, little fighting.

In its attempt to establish a storyline independent of the games it draws from, "Street Fighter" forgets to do the one thing that makes the franchise enjoyable: have characters fight each other. What the game lacks in fight it makes up in street, as fans are forced to bear witness to

See CHUN-LI on page 7

Kristin Kreuk stars as Chun-Li in Andrzej Bartkowiak's new adaptation of the "Street Fighter" video game series "Street Fighter: Legend of Chun-Li." The film's sluggish plot and minimal character cameos make for a joke of an action movie.

Jonas Brothers' big screen flop

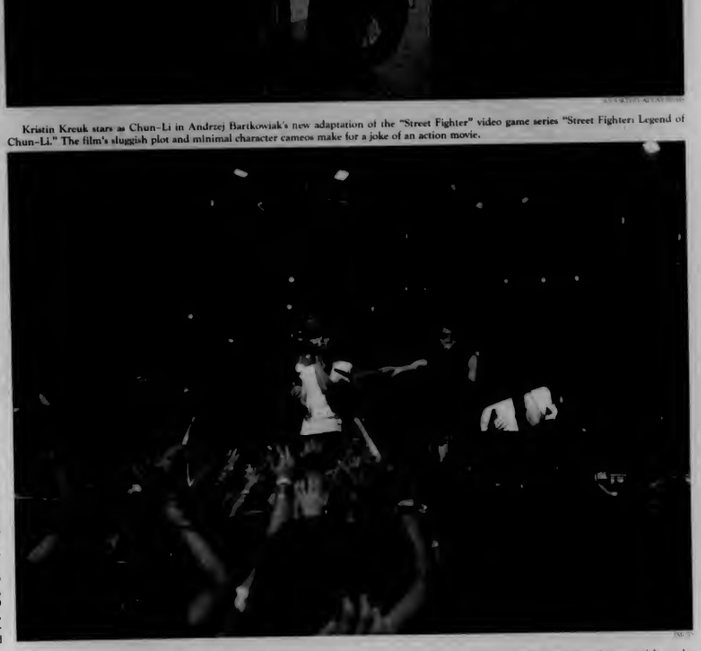
BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Tight pants, juvenile lyrics and 3-D glasses combined in a Walt Disney Pictures film would usually appeal strictly to members of the tween generation, but not for some college students as they went to see the film "Jonas Brothers: The 3D Concert Experience," which opened Feb. 27.

For a couple fans to experience a 3-D movie Jonas Brothers concert, the cost is just $15,cheaper than seeing them live.

The film takes scenes from the Jonas Brothers' "Burning Up" concert tour, which featured guest performances from Demi Lovato (star of Disney Channel's hit film "Camp Rock") and musician Taylor Swift.



"Jonas Brothers: The 3D Concert Experience," directed by Bruce Hendricks ( "Hannah Montana/Miley Cyrus: Best of Both Worlds Concert"), gave an inside look at the typical life of the three brothers. The group has been compared to the Beatles in popularity and the opening scene resembles "A Hard Day's Night," where the trio can be seen running from screaming fans and crawling out of limos to avoid the tween mob.

The day-in-the-life scenes were spliced together with the 3-D concert footage. Included in footage was the world premiere of the Jonas Brothers' newest video, "Love Is On Its Way."

In the premiere of "Love Is On Its Way," which was filmed in Central Park, the Jonas Brothers showed their humorous sides: Joe Jonas dresses as a police officer directing traffic, while Kevin Jonas is seen serving hot dogs out of a vending cart and Nick Jonas is seen driving a horse drawn carriage. The Jonas Brothers seduced the camera, fulfilling every tween girl's fantasy.

The cost of admission to the film is a major downside, especially with the lack of 3-D scenes. The "Real D" glasses, much sturdier and more fashionable than the cardboard red and

See JONAS on page 7

The Jonas Brothers' new film, "Jonas Brothers: The 3D Experience," captures the band in its element: soaking up screaming teen girls on the big stage. The concert movie's 3D effects fail to excite beyond flying guitar picks, making for a fans-only venture.

'Vagina Monologues' debuts at UMass

BY KATE OLESIN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A production performed around the world since 1998 is once again coming to the University of Massachusetts, bringing with it the three "Vs" – victory, valentine and vagina.

On March 6 and 7, The Vagina Monologues will be performed in honor of V-Day, a global movement to end violence against women and girls. Through V-Day campaigns, students and community members put on benefit performances – among those The Vagina Monologues – to "generate broader attention for the fight to stop violence against women and girls," according to the V-Day website.

In 2008, over 4,000 V-Day events took place around the world, and the charity has raised over $60 million in 10 years, according to its website.

"It's kind of amazing that over the years more women have gotten interested in doing this show," said Angela Bruns, one of the UMass show's producers and training and educational specialist at the Everywoman's Center.

The UMass production, put on by the Everywoman's Center and VOX: Student for Choice, will feature over 55 cast members, a much larger number than normal.

"You get a different experience with every show you see, but there's a common link between them all," said production crew member, senior and public health major Rachel Frank.

Bruns, Frank and Rosie Abraham are the three who make up the production team for The Vagina Monologues show at UMass. They've been practicing in Herter Hall four days a week since the semester started – and they're prepared with a cast who's been "fired up" for the production itself and the mission of the show, according to Bruns.

"You don't hear about [violence against women] a lot on campus," said Abraham. "It's something we just don't confront."

Frank agreed, tying the mission of informing women about violent acts against women to national events, like the recent controversy surrounding pop star Rihanna and boyfriend Chris Brown – a discussion which for many women, remains silent and "swept under the rug."

"A huge part of [not hearing about violence in the community] is the way the media is today," Frank said. "It's so important to remind women and men to respect one another."

Although the script of The Vagina Monologues remains static, every year there's a new spotlight piece, coordinated with the V-Day movement, which this year highlights the Democratic of the Congo.

According to a statement from the EWC, local Congolese estimate "over 200,000 women and girls have been raped since the war began." Also, the United Nations stated 27,000 sexual assaults were reported in just one province in 2006, and the United

See VAGINA on page 7

Rotten Tomatoes expands

BY CARY DARLING
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

Sign of the times in the '70s: two ink-stained newspaper movie critics – Gene Siskel and Roger Ebert – begin hosting a movie-review program on broadcast TV that consists of them showing movie clips and soberly talking to each other about things like the French New Wave.

Sign of the times in '09: two Internet-savvy comics – Brett Erlich and Ellen Fox – begin hosting an interactive movie-review program, "The Rotten Tomatoes Show," in conjunction with rottentomatoes.com, a Web site that aggregates all major movie reviews and gives a numeric score to each film.

Launching March 5 on Current, the pop-culture cable channel that utilizes viewer-generated content, the show features the hosts cracking jokes and viewers uploading their video critiques or texting three-word reviews. The French New Wave probably won't come up very often.

"When Siskel and Ebert were on TV, people looked to them and respected them. There isn't anyone like that anymore and Rotten Tomatoes exists because there is no definitive critic," says Erlich, who also appears on Current's mock-news show, "InfoMania." "We want to really capture the voice of everyone out there who's going to movies – from critics to normal moviegoers to comedians."

The idea for the weekly, half-hour series was hatched by Current executives nine months ago who approached Rotten Tomatoes. "They came to us with the idea of a branded show," says Shannon Ludovissy, RT's vice-president and general manager. "It felt like the perfect fit for our product and our brand."

While "The Rotten Tomatoes Show" might be rife with attitude and snark, Erlich and Ludovissy say they're quite serious about film. "My NetFlix queue is five or six screens long," says Erlich, who has also done stints in an improv group and worked in the games/interactive division of a talent agency.

"I grew up where movies played a special role in my life – 'Ghostbusters,' 'Real Genius.' Whenever I was sick, I'd watch 'Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles' and I'd feel better. As things progressed, I started to take a more critical eye to (movies) ... I always loved talking about movies and I always do talk about movies."

For example, Erlich's still angry that "Gran Torino" ("I wanted to kill myself every five minutes") and "The Curious Case of Benjamin Button" got so much acclaim. "We're going to be very honest, brutally honest," he says.

Ludovissy says the intention of the show isn't to try and put newspaper movie critics out of work.

COURTESY ROTTEN TOMATOES

The popular movie-reviewing website Rotten Tomatoes recently expanded its scope to a included a television show featuring its founders discussing new releases.

Jonas Brothers' first concert movie offers little 3D fun

3D from page 6

blue glasses of days past, were hardly needed throughout the film – and induced a headache after wearing them for duration of the concert. In fact, the previews before the film had more entertaining 3-D scenes than the film as a whole.

The most memorable scenes that showed the Disney Digital 3-D effects were guitar picks flying at the crowd, the foam shot from fire hoses at the audience and lastly, the most startling effect was pigeons flying toward the screen during the song, "Love Is On Its Way," which caused the audience to jump in its seats.

"Jonas Brothers: The 3D Concert Experience" raked in $12.5 million on its opening weekend, far less than Miley Cyrus's movie concert, which opened to $31.1 million a year ago. Trying to boost their opening night, the Jonas Brothers surprised fans on Feb. 27 at movie theaters around the country.

For the die-hard fan, the movie is perfect and highly recommended, but It's not for anyone else.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com

The Jonas Brothers movie concert earned far less than that of teen pop star Miley Cyrus, whose film earned more than $31 million.

"JONAS BROTHERS: THE 3D CONCERT EXPERIENCE"

★1/2

'Street Fighter' puts no emphasis on action

CHUN-LI from page 6

Chun-Li wander around the streets of Bangkok, Thailand because an old woman told her to do so. The movie is so bland at points that it simply leaves the viewer wanting to scream for someone to start fighting.

Fans of the franchise will be disappointed to discover that the movie only includes 10 characters from the video games. To make matters worse, a mere four of which are from the most widely-known installment, "Street Fighter II." These characters are Chun-Li, M. Bison, Balrog and Vega. The remaining six are lesser-known characters with even smaller fan bases.

Michael Clarke Duncan's performance as the bruising ex-boxer Balrog steals the show. However, the portrayals of antagonist M. Bison in a plain business suit and his subordinate Vega, who is only in the movie for a mere 45 seconds, do not do the characters justice.

The most frustrating aspect of the movie is the inclusion of characters Charlie Nash and Maya Sanee as basically useless detectives who are after M. Bison's criminal group, Shadaloo. Not only are these fringe character from the series, but they do nothing more than act – poorly – as detectives and bring out an annoying and unnecessary love plot.

Chris Klein, who plays Nash, offers up a performance that could be described as forgettable if not for the laughable uselessness of his role. The detective side plot is trite, predictable and only slows down a plot that involves Kreuk's character narrating while she wanders aimlessly to find a man named Gen who somehow knows how to help her get revenge for her family.

The movie ends by revealing a quest to find other fighters around the world to compete in a "Street Fighter World Tournament." This is torture for fans of the video game series as they were forced to wait through 95 minutes of one character's sappy tale only to be teased with a hint of the movie they wanted to see in the beginning.

However, "The Legend of Chun-Li" was so poorly made that a sequel of that nature would only further disappoint fans.

"Street Fighter: The Legend of Chun-Li" attempts to be both a fan-pleasure and a legitimate movie, but fails miserably on both levels. The story is uninteresting and the aspects that actually draw from the series are poorly done and, in most cases, inconsistent with the games.

This movie had only one job: make "Street Fighter" characters fight. This did not happen. The result? A boring "action" movie that leaves much to be desired – the exit, for one.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

"STREET FIGHTER: LEGEND OF CHUN-LI"

STARRING: KRISTIN KREUK, MICHAEL CLARKE DUNCAN

★1/2

Ensler's creation empowers women

VAGINA from page 6

National Population Fund reported over 700 sexual assault cases per month in 2007.

V-Day itself raises a number of issues concerning violence against women including rape, battery, incest, female genital mutilation and sexual slavery, according to the website.

Actress and activist Eve Ensler is both the founder of V-Day and author of The Vagina Monologues, which has been performed all over Broadway and translated into 45 languages.

"When I started doing The Vagina Monologues, I realized how impossible it was for women to say the word," Ensler told Time Magazine in 2006.

"I would see the disgust, the shame, the embarrassment. The vagina is smack in the center of our bodies, yet it is a place that most women felt ashamed of talking about. What did that say about the center of our beings? There's something in the uttering of the word that reattaches you to it. It's empowering. Now I turn on the television and I see vagina being used every where."

The show is being held at 7:30 p.m. on Friday, March 6 and also at 6 p.m. and 9 p.m. on Saturday, March 7. All three performances will be held in Bowker Auditorium in Stockbridge Hall at UMass. Tickets are $5 for students and low-income community members and $10 for the general public. Tickets can be purchased through the Fine Arts Center and will be available at the door. For more information visit www.umass.edu/ewc.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@dailycollegian.com.

Two girls in the Democratic Republic of the Congo wave a sign of peace. This year's performance of The Vagina Monologues, put on annually by volunteers around the world, highlights violence against women in the DRC.

BrEak Out.
ZANNA
downtown Amherst www.zanna.com
Become a fan of ZANNA on facebook.

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
BRING YOUR COLLEGE ID FOR COVER DISCOUNT!!!
SKYPLEX is NOW HIRING:
Bartenders
Cashier
Waitstaff
Doors open at 9 to party until 2 a.m.!
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq. Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

JANUARY 30 - APRIL 26, 2009
Documentary photography by noted American contemporary artist
Lauren Greenfield
THIN & GIRL CULTURE
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART
free!
Artist Lecture: Lauren Greenfield
Thursday, March 6, 2009 5 PM
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
Book-signing and reception in Museum immediately following lecture
Presented in conjunction with THIN & Girl Culture
www/smith.edu/srtmuseum

UMass needing to finish off games, plays

Penalties, inconsistent outcomes hurting UM

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Being a team that comes out strong in the first period is never a bad thing, but if after the first 20 minutes the team fails to perform to those standards it isn't going to win needed games.

The Massachusetts hockey team has been known to do just that.

Last weekend, the Minutemen (14-17-3, 9-13-3 Hockey East) went 0-2 against No. 1 Boston University. On Feb. 27, UMass was leading, 2-0, after the first. After the second period the score was tied, 3-3, and finished with UMass losing, 6-3.

The Minutemen have only allowed six first period goals in the last 16 games, but have allowed 51 total goals.

"That speaks to our ability to maintain a focus and to learn to manage the game as it comes to us," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "Our team has not demonstrated a consistency in managing the game as it's played out."

Finishing, something Cahoon has stressed since the start of the season, is essential in gaining consistency – finishing checks, shifts, periods and most of all, the game.

"I think for whatever reason [finishing] has been a struggle for us. We have to finish what we start," said Cahoon. "We have to have an absolute conviction by the way we play together so that the will to win is exemplified. Those are things that you can talk about, but knowing and doing it are two different things. Actions speak louder than words."

DISCIPLINE

Last weekend against Boston University the Minutemen allowed more goals in a single game than they had all season: all together, they allowed seven. First on Friday night, the Minutemen allowed six goals, then BU scored seven goals on Saturday to raise the total. Previously the Minutemen had only allowed five goals – three times by Cornell (Jan. 4), Providence (Jan. 16) and Northeastern (Feb. 13).

"The biggest reason is that we took a lot of penalties, dumb penalties and we took them at inopportune times," Cahoon said.

On Friday, the Minutemen were up by three goals and then took numerous penalties in the course of the next 16 minutes. The best team in the nation is going to, and did, capitalize on the weakness.

"From that perspective we self-destructed. The other side of this is that once we gave them momentum they take that and realize that, there's a reason they're the number one team in the country," Cahoon said.

The Minutemen showed a lack of discipline and let BU back into the game. Saturday was a different story, as it was a combination of misfortune and stupid penalties which brought the Minutemen down. Together, it was too much to overcome.

"We have to learn to manage our fears better and to become disciplined in terms of taking penalties or we're not going to go anywhere in the playoffs," Cahoon said. "It's just an absolute change in the way we play and that's going to start this weekend [against Merrimack]."

Because of the lack of discipline shown, the Minutemen spent much of the game a man down. The Minutemen's penalty kill have defended 140-of-167 chances (83.8 percent), but this past weekend UMass lacked its usual success, killing off 10-of-16 (62.5 percent) of Boston University's man-up advantages.

NET MINDERS

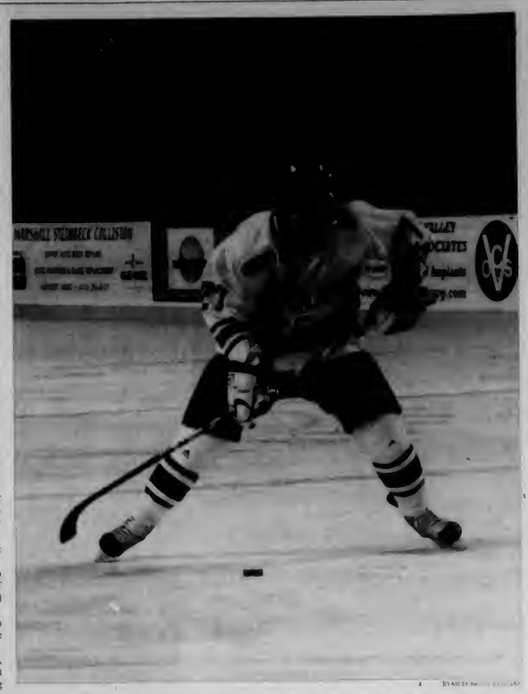
Goaltenders Paul Dainton and Dan Meyers split time in net this weekend. Dainton was between the pipes in Friday's 6-3 loss, while Meyers played Saturday in the 7-2 loss.



"I thought both of them had good segments of each game. They'll be the first to tell you there were pieces of both games that they'd like to redo," Cahoon said. "They both have given us good goaltending and our hope is that we'll find a way to get great goaltending."

Just as each area of the team is working to improve and play at their best in the final weeks of the season, Dainton and Meyers are working toward their personal best performances this weekend.

"If we get [every area] going in the right direction at the right time, I think we have something to be able to make a statement in the playoffs," Cahoon said.

In the last weekend before Hockey East playoffs, the Minutemen have a home-and-home series against Merrimack (8-20-4, 14-18-3 Hockey East) starting Friday night at Lawler Arena.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com.

Justin Braun leads all Minutemen defenseman with seven goals and 12 assists this season. Braun is one half of UMass' top defensive pairing with Martin Nolet.

Senior Night special

SENIOR NIGHT from page 10

Bonner, who played three years at UMass after transferring from West Virginia, has averaged 3.1 points per game, 2.4 rebounds per game, and shot 39.3 percent from the floor in his collegiate career.

"In terms of my experience here, it's been incredible," Bonner said. "I've had an unbelievable college experience. I like living in this area, I like the vibe of western Massachusetts, it suits me well."

In his senior year, the 7-foot-1 Bonner has more than doubled many of his career numbers (7.3 points and 5.4 rebounds per game) despite missing seven games due to injury. The senior also scored his first double-double of his career back on Jan. 21 against Charlotte when he tied a career-high 15 points and set a career-high with 11 rebounds.

While the entire Minutemen team is hungry to reach the NCAA tournament, Bonner may be the hungriest after tasting it his freshman year at WVU. As a freshman, Bonner and the Mountaineers made it all the way to the Elite Eight of the NCAA Tournament.

NO. 24 TONY GAFFNEY

Despite playing just two years at UMass – after transferring from Boston University after his sophomore year – this senior may have been one of the most integral parts of this season's teams, even when no one expected it.

After averaging 3.2 points, 4.8 rebounds and 1.7 blocks per game in his red shirt-junior season at UMass, Gaffney more than came out of his shell in his senior season. After never posting a double-double in his collegiate career, the forward has had 10 this season and averages a double-double with 11.7 points, and 10.3 rebounds (17th in the NCAA) per game. Gaffney also ranks third in the nation with four blocks per game.

"When I was at BU, I dealt with if I was even going to play Division I college basketball any more," Gaffney said. "I'm just grateful that I found UMass and I can call it my home away from home. It has just been one of the greatest experiences of my life being here."

The senior's play this season has received plenty of attention, as he has had some of his best performances on the biggest stages. When the Minutemen faced then-No. 13 Memphis on ESPN back in November, Gaffney was called the "best player on the court" by Memphis coach, and former UMass coach, John Calipari, when he had 16 points, 19 rebounds and five blocks.

DANIELLE ALVAREZ/COLLEGIAN

Chris Lowe had 14 points and eight assists in Wednesday night's Senior Night win over the Colonials.

Gaffney nearly recorded a triple-double four games later when UMass hosted Boston College and the forward had 15 points, 18 rebounds and nine blocks.

The forward also has gotten high praise from his former coach and now the head coach at Oklahoma State, Travis Ford.

"The greatest compliment I can give Tony is we sit here at Oklahoma State basketball and I tell my staff all the time that I need to find a Tony Gaffney, we need a Tony Gaffney on our basketball team," Ford said early this season. "That is the kind of player I would like to recruit, and to me that is an incredible compliment."

While Wednesday's night game is not the last for these seniors – they play at Rhode Island on Saturday and then head to the A-10 Tournament – it was their last game ever at the Mullins Center, and signified the beginning of the end.

"[Luke and I] were talking the other day and our whole lives, our dreams have been to play Division I college basketball. It has never been anything more than that, it has never been less than that. We've never looked past it," Gaffney said. "To see it coming to an end it is kind of surreal."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Tourney bid clinched

BASKETBALL from page 10

they're playing their roles. And when they do that good things usually happen," Kellogg said. "Chris is very fast and good in the open floor, Tony is kind of a jack-of-all-trades guy and Luke does a great job of anchoring the defense, getting some offensive rebounds and knocking down some 3-point shots."

But it wasn't just the seniors. Ricky Harris had a team-high 19 points, while Anthony Gurley (12) and David Gibbs (eight) hit key shots and free-throws down the stretch. Gurley and Harris had 10 consecutive points for the Minutemen during that key run.

The Colonials (10-17, 4-11 A-10) entered the game having won three of their last four to put themselves in a position to sneak into the tournament. Despite the loss, GW can still get in with a win over Temple and a Charlotte victory over St. Bonaventure on Saturday.

Bonner was just glad that the Minutemen clinched and now don't have to worry about any scenarios.

"That was one of the first games in a while where something significant was on the line and we didn't let that get to us," he said. "Guys came out and had great attitudes even though we were playing hard in the first half and found ourselves down at halftime. We didn't let that shake us."

UMass trailed 36-33 entering halftime. Harris hit two early 3-pointers in the second half to regain the lead for the Minutemen. The Colonials tied the score at 45, but Gibbs hit two of his own in a 58-second span to twice give UMass back the lead – the second of which gave the Minutemen the lead for good.

Lowe finished with 14 points and eight assists, while Gaffney had a double-double with 11 points and 10 rebounds. He also had three blocks and five steals. Senior Rob Diggs led the Colonials with 22 points and nine rebounds.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Readiness is the key to success for Minutemen

HOCKEY from page 10

Hockey East) as the Warriors will surely play the hardest they have all season.

"Winning games always leaves you with a positive mindset versus something that is destructive or difficult to overcome," said Cahoon. "We always want to win, I've said it before: winning games is crucial.

"Friday night's game at Merrimack poses a lot of problems: it's senior night, it's a huge weekend for them, they're a team that's real close but haven't found their way. That game is going to be the most meaningful game in the season for them.

UMass is coming off a disappointing previous weekend where BU seemed as if they were more determined throughout both games. The Terriers battled back from three goals down to turn their 3-0 deficit into a 6-3 win. The same happened Saturday night when UMass went up early, 1-0, only to have seven-straight goals scored against them – losing 7-2.

If anyone knows what UMass is up against, it's Cahoon.

"Merrimack is a very difficult team simply because people look at them and underestimate their abilities, yet they played everyone in our league right to the wall," said Cahoon. "They've lost 16 games in the [Hockey East] by one goal, most recently UNH ... so they can play with anybody.

"This is their playoffs, their season ends this weekend so this is their big, big opportunity. We need to be able to be prepared, we need to be excited or we don't win."

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Chase Langeraap has tallied five goals and 11 assists this season for the Minutemen. He is tied for third on the team with three power-play goals.

NEED AN APARTMENT?
PUFFTON VILLAGE III
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Crazy about Sports?
Then come write for the Collegian
Contact Eli Rosenwa
Sports@DailyCollegian.c

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

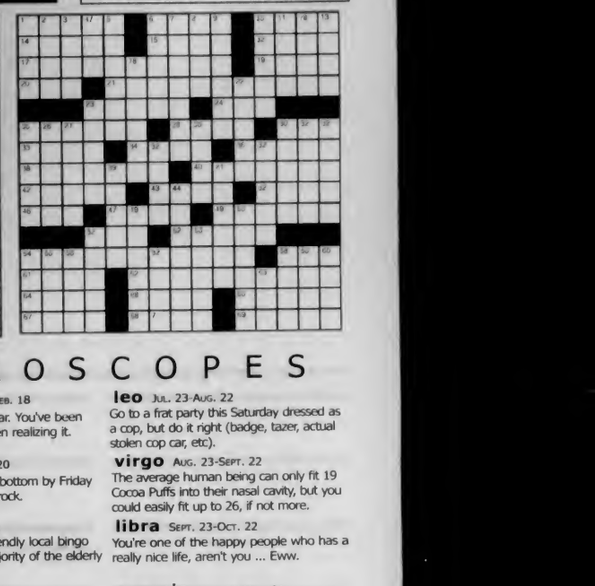
Dance steps - Do the twist.

| | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | 1 | 5 | | 3 | | |
| 8 | 3 | | | | | 2 | 4 |
| | | 3 | 9 | | 5 | 7 | |
| 7 | 6 | | | | | 8 | 9 |
| | | 4 | 7 | | 1 | 2 | |
| 1 | 9 | | | | | 3 | 2 |
| | | 2 | | | 6 | | |
| | | | 1 | | 6 | | |

amherst cinema
Fri Mar 6 - Thu Mar 12
WALTZ WITH BASHIR 1:45 4:15 7:00 9:15 + 11:45pm Sat & Sun
MILK 2:00 4:30 7:15 9:45 + 11:30am Sat & Sun
slumdog millionaire 2:30 5:00 7:30 10:00 + 12:00pm Sat & Sun
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri Mar 6 - Thu Mar 12
THE WRESTLER 4:45 7:15 9:45 +2:15 Sat & Sun +10:15am 2:15 Wed
The Reader 4:30 7:00 9:30 +2:00 Sat & Sun +10:00am 2:00 Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584 5848

WHAT'S ON TAP AT THE AMHERST BREWING COMPANY?
LOST UPSTAIRS AT ABC
SUNDAY BRUNCH 10AM 2PM
FREE POOL!
COME CHECK OUT THE NEW EXPANSION WITH COMFY BOOTHS & HDTV'S
29 NORTH PLEASANT ST AMHERST
www.AMHERSTBREWING.com



ACROSS
1 Woman with a book club
6 Fits with wonder
10 Secluded valley
14 Abdul or Vogel
15 Garner or swan
16 Room
17 Emphasized
19 Gershwin and Levin
20 Observe
21 Beatitude
23 Leave home
24 Scarlet, e.g.
25 Kathy Bates's movie
28 Peak in Thessaly
30 Blues top
33 Repast remnants
34 Sand fill
36 Peter and Franco
38 Most constricted
40 Missed the boat
42 Outer opposite
43 Jazz singer Fitzgerald
45 Lawn waterer
46 High-fiber fruit
47 Too
49 "Seinfeld" character
51 Sch. org.
52 Man-made fiber
54 Novel objects
58 Lie a little
61 Judah's son
62 Overly pompous
64 Money factory
65 Sicilian volcano
66 Painter Max
67 Milanese eight
68 Cloth scraps
69 Tint again

DOWN
1 Musical work
2 Window square
3 Impolite
4 Ginger
5 Safe haven
6 Farewell, Yves
7 Groom or Churchill
8 12/24 and 12/31
9 Passover recess
10 Pulverize
11 Folk tales
12 Tanguay and Gabor
13 Highland loch
18 ___ of London
22 College heads
23 "Beau ___"
25 Theme
26 Teheran man
27 Hurt by a hornet
29 Vend
30 Halloween ride?
31 Awaken
32 Star-like bloom
35 Shoshones
37 Hawke or Coen
39 Frost's Muse
41 Shaggishcoiler Annie
44 Plundering during riots
48 Anne Rice novel
50 List of team members
51 Painted pony
53 Garn and Moreno
54 Italian resort spa
55 Module
56 Talk wildly
57 Speck
58 Discovery
59 Teeny
60 Memory unit
63 Mineral deposit

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!
sunraise printing
Custom Printed Tees
Student Discounts
586-7133
sunraiseprinting.com
Hadley, MA 01035

It's always better on top!
COMICS @ DAILY COLLEGIAN DOT COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"I have seen the future and it doesn't work."

— Robert Fulford

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY KID SHAY

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Stop taking naps in your car. You've been "sleep driving" without even realizing it.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You'll know you've hit rock bottom by Friday night, when you're on the rock.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Try not to ruin another friendly local bingo game by convincing a majority of the elderly to go streaking with you.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
How badly do you want a good reputation? Badly enough to steal one?

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Today you'll realize that bringing up God is a great way to end conversations.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Your confusion at playing beirut with NBA Jam rules has led to yet another one of your friends getting second-degree burns.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Go to a frat party this Saturday dressed as a cop, but do it right (badge, tazer, actual stolen cop car, etc).

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
The average human being can only fit 19 Cocoa Puffs into their nasal cavity, but you could easily fit up to 26, if not more.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You're one of the happy people who has a really nice life, aren't you ... Eww.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You get a huge head rush from your new job: Gluing together model planes.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Backstabbing. Deceitful. Alcoholic. Sounds like you've found your soulmate.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
No matter what he tells you, it is not a "mouth-based video game."

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

Survey Takers Needed: Make $5 - $25 per survey. Do it in your spare time. www.GetPaidToThink.com

A GREAT JOB! Spend your summer in a lake-front cabin in Maine. If you're looking to spend this summer outdoors, have fun while you work, and make lifelong friends, then look no further. Camp Mataponi, a residential girls camp in Maine, has female/male summertime openings for Land Sports, Waterfront (small crafts, skiing, lifeguarding, WSI, boat drivers), Ropes Course, Tennis, H.B. Riding, Arts & Crafts, Theater, Cooking, Gymnastics, Dance, Videography, Group Leaders, & more. Top salaries plus room/board & travel provided. Call us today at 1-561-748-3684 or apply online at www.campmataponi.com

ANNOUNCEMENT

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-2337

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincoln-realty.com

Amherst 2, 3, & 4 Bedroom Apartments. Call for huge rent specials on both Immediate and Summer/Fall rentals! Beautiful property on the bus line to Umass. Air, washer/dryer hookups, dishwasher and 2 full baths. Free Heat! 2 BR $1200-$1250, 3 BR $1500-$1550, 4 BR $2250. www.MillValleyApts.com 413-253-7377 or stop by at 420 Riverglade Drive.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 5, 2009

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Senior moment

UMass finally bound for A-10 Tournament with home win

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Derek Kellogg never missed qualifying for an Atlantic 10 Tournament as a player, so he wasn't about to become the first coach in team history to have that distinction.

But the first-year coach of the Massachusetts men's basketball team certainly had to sweat it out.

A 13-0 run by the Minutemen down the stretch lifted UMass over George Washington, 77-62, Wednesday night at the Mullins Center to finally clinch a spot in Atlantic City, N.J., for the conference tournament.

It wasn't tough to sense the enormous relief of the UMass players after the game in an interesting sequence at the post-game press conference.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 77 |
| GW | 62 |

"We were not leaving tonight without a win – there was no way," began senior Luke Bonner.

"We probably would have all been ejected if something went wrong," interrupted Chris Lowe.

Then Tony Gaffney took it to the extreme.

"We would have had to bring in some ambulances for us, because I wasn't leaving alive if we didn't win," Gaffney said.

There was no need for that, as Gaffney and the Minutemen live to see another day until at least Wednesday, March 11, when the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament tips off. If UMass beats Rhode Island in the regular-season finale on Saturday, it would clinch the 10th seed. With a loss, the Minutemen would be No. 11.

Having lost eight of their last 11 games, it wasn't a lock for UMass to even make the tournament. The Minutemen (11-17, 6-10 A-10) entered senior night with no guarantee of a tournament berth – needing a win against either GW or URI.

That didn't look like a sure thing as UMass clung to a 5-point lead with 6 minutes, 25 seconds remaining – but monster defensive efforts from seniors Gaffney and Bonner sparked the Minutemen to a 13-0 run on the offensive end to seal the victory and clinch their spot.

"I thought [the seniors] were the deciding factor in the second half and they did a lot of things that seniors are supposed to do in the second half of an important game," Kellogg said. "I was over there battling with the guys and my voice is gone … it was the way senior night was supposed to be."

The seniors showed it over the final 6:25. Gaffney was blocking shots, Bonner was taking charges and grabbing offensive rebounds and Lowe was controlling the offense in the 13-0 run spanning 5:34 of the clock.

The Colonials had no answer for the shot-blocking duo of Gaffney and Bonner, missing 12 consecutive shots in that span.

"When you're players are doing what they do well, that means

See BASKETBALL on page 8

MARISSA SARKO / COLLEGIAN

Tony Gaffney scores in a 77-62 victory over George Washington Wednesday. The Minutemen clinched an Atlantic 10 Tournament berth with the win.

Seniors go out in style in final Mullins Center appearance

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For Chris Lowe, Luke Bonner and Tony Gaffney, Wednesday night's game at the Mullins Center meant a little bit more.

Not only did they need a win to make the Atlantic 10 Tournament, but also it was the final game at the Mullins Center for the three seniors on the Massachusetts men's basketball team. The three led a second half push to overcome George Washington, 77-62, and in turn, extended their collegiate careers by at least one more game.

Here is a look at all three's careers:

No. 14 CHRIS LOWE

This senior may go down as the greatest point guard in school history, even greater than his own coach. In all four seasons of Lowe's career at UMass, he has been an integral part of the team, including the team's two runs in the National Invitation Tournament.

With 1,097 points and 660 assists prior to the Minutemen's game against the Colonials, Lowe became the first player in UMass history to score 1,000 points and have 600 assists in their career, and just the seventh player in A-10 history to reach the feat. His 1,097 points puts him 31st in the UMass record books while the 660 assists puts him on top of the UMass greats and fifth all-time in the A-10.

After coming off the bench for the first 13 games of his freshman year, Lowe started the final 15 games of the season and has continued to be at the helm of the UMass offense since then. That year he was named to the A-10 Rookie team as well as leading the conference in assists (4.9 per game).

"I came here as a little scrawny freshman," Lowe said after UMass' win. "Everybody probably had their negative doubts about me when I came in."

If there ever were any doubts, they are gone now. Coming into his senior year, Lowe was honored by being named to the A-10 Preseason First Team as well as being named to the conference's All-Defensive team. Lowe has also been named the A-10 Co-player of the week back on Feb. 24, 2008, and been featured three times on ESPN's SportsCenter's Top Plays (No. 3 on Jan. 2, 2008, No. 3 March 13, 2007 and No. 2 Feb. 15, 2007).

Prior to the Wednesday's contest with GW, Lowe has posted career numbers of 9.1 points per game, 2.9 rebounds per game and 5.3 assists per game, and posted even higher numbers in all three categories in his senior season (11.8 points per game, 3 rebounds per game and 6.5 assists per game).

"I'm just happy that I have these players around me and the coaching staff around me to get me through college because it is not as easy as people think it is," Lowe said.

No. 31 LUKE BONNER

While many students need five years – sometimes even more – just to get their bachelor's degree, this senior has got a bachelors and a masters degree in five years.

In addition to taking more classes than you average college student,

See SENIOR NIGHT on page 8

Minutewomen upset No. 15 Dartmouth

Five players record hat tricks in back-and-forth thriller

BY STEVE LEVINE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team appears to be gaining steam after pulling off a stunning 13-10 upset against No. 15 Dartmouth at McGuirk Alumni Stadium on Wednesday.

The win gives the Minutewomen two straight victories and snaps an eight-game losing streak against Dartmouth, dating back to 1999. The game was hard fought, with each team not letting up an inch.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 13 |
| Dartmouth | 10 |

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos was elated over her team's performance.

"I have to give a lot of credit to Dartmouth, they continue to be one of the best teams in the country – going to the Final Four a few years ago," Venechanos said. "We knew this was going to be a battle, I'm very proud of our team and I give tons of credit to Dartmouth, they played a hell of a game."

The game began favorably for UMass, as the Minutewomen jumped out to a 4-1 lead within the first 10 minutes. The remaining minutes of the first half were more balanced as the two teams traded goals – a trend which would follow through to the majority of the second half.

Less than a minute later, UMass broke the tie with a goal from freshman attack Nina Sarcona, her first as a collegiate player. Throughout the next 13 minutes there were four ties and three lead changes, all with the Minutewomen scoring first.

Every time UMass took a one-goal lead, Dartmouth responded quickly to tie. This trend was finally broken with 8:57 remaining, when sophomore midfielder Jackie Lyons netted her third, which proved to be the game-winner for UMass.

Lyons, the reigning Atlantic 10 Player of the Week, added two assists for a total of five points. Her hat trick found company with other Minutewomen, as senior captain Holly Drown and sophomore Haley Smith added three goals of their own.

Following Lyons' goal, the Minutewomen had to keep Dartmouth at bay for the remaining nine minutes. They accomplished that and then some, as freshman midfielder Danielle Pelletier added a goal 27 seconds later at 8:30 – her second of both the game and her career. The rare back-to-back goals gave the Minutewomen room to breathe, but Lyons wasn't convinced.

"The two goal lead was nice but there was so much time left on the clock and we knew that we just had to fight harder, score more goals; we didn't want to let them come back at all," Lyons said.

At 7:23 remaining, Haley Smith put the nail in the coffin, with her third goal of the game to extend UMass' lead to 13-10. With little time remaining, the Minutewomen's game plan changed from scoring to clock-killing. Protecting the ball was important, as Venechanos realized that even a three-goal lead is never safe at the hands of a dominant team.

"The Harvard game gave us a lot of confidence as we came from behind and had to handle a lead," Venechanos said. "We never played with a lead all season and today we had one and I'm very proud of how the girls handled it during the last six minutes of the game."

The leading scorer for Dartmouth was Sarah Parks, who scored a total of four goals. Katherine Chiusano added two goals and two assists, while Kat Collins tallied three goals and an assist.

UMass hopes to add to this momentum on Wednesday, March 11, as they travel to New Haven, Conn., for a matchup against Yale.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu

PJ STASIEY/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Jackie Lyons scored three goals in UMass' 13–10 win over No. 15 Dartmouth Wednesday afternoon in its home opener. Lyons has 12 goals and four assists so far this season for the Minutewomen.

RYAN PUMO/COLLEGIAN

The Minutemen hope they will be celebrating come Sunday after UMass takes on Merrimack in a two–game set this weekend. UMass has already locked up the No. 7 spot in the Hockey East Tournament.

UM looking for momentum before upcoming tournament

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Well, this is it.

This weekend's two-game, home-and-home match up with Merrimack is the last pair of games before the Hockey East Tournament begins on March 13. The Minutemen, though, already know they've claimed the seven seed in the upcoming tournament.

UMass finds itself four points ahead of Maine and four points behind Boston College, but the points don't matter. Even if the Minutemen (14-17-3, 9-13-3 Hockey East) lose both games this weekend they will still sit in the No. 7 spot because UMass owns the head-to-head tiebreaker.

Despite the significance of these two games this weekend, the Minutemen don't have any idea who they're playing against once the tournament starts. If the tournament started today, the Minutemen would play No. 2 Boston University – not exactly who UMass would like to open the tournament playing.

"We're not focused on that series," UMass coach Don Cahoon said referring to whoever their future opponent will be. "All that we do leading up to this weekend, or in preparation to this weekend is about winning games this weekend, which in turn will give us the impetus to prepare and get ready for what is the most crucial weekend of our year: that first playoff series.

"It's a combination of playing well and using this weekend properly to set the stage to do the unthinkable or what people aren't going to predict, what we most want to do as a group of people and that's to have a very successful playoff weekend."

The Minutemen come into this weekend looking for a spurt of momentum, which they hope they can ride into the tournament. Cahoon knows that the Minutemen can't afford to look past Merrimack (8-20-4, 4-18-3

See HOCKEY on page 8

the daily collegian

MARCH 6, 2009

inside this issue:

SPORTS

SEE PAGE 13

ARTS&LIVING

SEE PAGE 8

NEWS

SEE PAGE 5

SEE PAGE 2

DESPITE ECONOMY, TICKET SALES FLOURISH

OLIVER SCOTT SNURE COLLEGIAN

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 28

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Waszczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Leigh Greaney
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenswaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor P.J. Stanley
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolneirz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Koczwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo Matthew Harrison
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. SULLIVAN

COPY EDITOR
MICHELLE FREDETTE

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHAEL SARKES

The 'experience' worth the price

By Jessica Kemp
Collegian Staff

Though many businesses, restaurants, stores and major corporations are suffering through the nation's economic downturn, one industry seems to be doing just the opposite.

The live music industry has proven itself to be quite invulnerable to the national recession by keeping ticket sales up and resisting the decrease in consumer spending as much as possible.

In 2008, concert ticket sales across the nation reached new highs, increasing by about 7 percent, and raising total revenue to a tremendous 4.2 billion dollars.

Many major venues across the country, including Connecticut's Mohegan Sun and Dodge Music Center, had an exceptionally great year.

According to Jim Koplik, Northeast chairman for Live Nation, the Dodge Music Center had their best year since 1999, and Mohegan Sun acquired the greatest amount of gross revenue in the establishment's history.

Some of the world's most famous artists, including Bon Jovi, Billy Joel, Pearl Jam, Kanye West, John Mayer and Kenny Chesney, were among the many performers touring the two venues.

In addition to larger concert arenas, smaller, more local venues received their share of success in 2008 as well. The Mullins Center, the Calvin Theater, the Iron Horse Music Hall and the Pearl Street Nightclub were also able to see ticket sales rise throughout the year.

The Mullins Center, located at the University of Massachusetts, experienced a year full of exciting events. From a performance by Carrie Underwood to an extraordinary show by Cirque du Soleil and a nearly sold out arena for the Celtics vs. 76ers preseason game, ticket sales at the Mullins Center soared for the first three quarters of 2008.

"Cirque du Soleil's 'Saltimbanco' was the highest-grossing show in the history of our venue," said Scott Sasenbury, director of marketing at the Mullins Center. "It was very successful from our standpoint and we were very impressed with the ticket sales."

It was not until the end of fall that economic troubles seemed to interfere with the previously rising ticket sales.

"We had a strong start this fall, but as the year progressed and as the economy started to deteriorate we have seen a little bit of a decline," said Benjamin Weiss, general manager of the Mullins Center.

However, a deteriorating economy was not the only factor contributing to a decline in sales.

"On our side we see the decline more in terms of artist touring. There are less

See TICKET SALES on page 4

Biden: middle class success is key

By Alfonso Chardy and Evan S. Benn
McClatchy Newspapers

MIAMI — Vice President Joe Biden told a group of labor leaders Thursday that he and the president are committed to helping U.S. workers and the middle class.

"We will judge the success or failure of our administration ... based on whether or not the standard of living of the middle class has increased," Biden said to the AFL-CIO Executive Committee plus about a hundred other labor supporters. "Neither one of us believes it can get better without you getting stronger."

Biden received a rousing ovation when he mentioned the Employee Free Choice Act that the Obama administration has proposed and took a swipe at corporate executives.

"It's just not right when the average CEO makes $10,000 more every day than what the average worker makes every year," Biden said.

"We're not asking for anything we don't deserve. We just want to level the playing field again. I have a simple, basic belief: If a union is what you want, a union you're entitled to have."

Persuading Congress to pass the act is one of organized labor's top priorities. The proposed law would require companies to negotiate with a union if a majority of workers sign cards for that purpose.

It also would allow for binding arbitration if the two sides were unable to reach an agreement on wages and working conditions. And it would increase the penalties for companies that violate labor laws by, for example, firing or harassing union supporters.

Vice President Joe Biden stands with President Barack Obama. Biden spoke earlier this week about the importance of middle class Americans to the success of the country.

Supporters say the law would make a more level playing field between unions and employers; make it easier for workers to form a union; increase union membership and therefore increase wages. But business groups are fighting the law, saying it would create government intrusion into the private sector and that increased unionization would lead to hundreds of thousands of jobs being eliminated.

Biden spoke for about 45 minutes before taking questions from labor leaders in a conference room at the resort.

The union's executive council meetings are traditionally closed to the press, but "as part of its unprecedented commitment to transparency, Vice President Biden's office asked that a change to the policy be made so that a pool of print reporters would be allowed to cover the speech," spokeswoman Elizabeth Alexander said.

(Miami Herald staff writer Scott Andron contributed to this report.)

SGA debate leaves out the real issues

Will McGuinness

I haven't had the chance to give the entirety of Tuesday night's Student Government Association (SGA) debate my full attention just yet. Granted, I was on the panel that questioned the candidates; but frankly, I zoned out during most of it.

No one claims the Student Union was the most renowned building finished in 1957, but my wandering eyes nonetheless found objects of interest as candidates answered my questions with sentences from their campaign websites.

It's understood that candidates should do all in their power to promote themselves despite what the question calls for, but I was looking for slightly more originality. These issues aside, the candidates performed well. Anyone who watched might wonder exactly what each candidate would do while in office, but that's custom in politics.

Sitting at the table with the microphones, I hoped a great number of students were viewing from home because the crowd was paltry. The large majority, a term used very loosely here, consisted of students already associated with the SGA. Worse was that these members had picked their president and trustee long before the debate.

Following questions from representatives of The Daily Collegian, WMUA and UVC-TV 19, the debate opened up to questions from those who sat in the first few rows of chairs. After several respectable questions, the scene was reduced to the members of one candidate's Facebook group trying to trap the other candidate with a "gotcha" question. As a member of the reportedly biased media, I felt that I could learn much from this crowd.

I thought the point of any debate should be to inform those who haven't already made their decision.

Chancellor of Elections Sean McNair said each of the candidates were cordial people who he could see being friends.

This is a major difference from last year, when sitting SGA President Malcolm Chu ran against Senator Derek Khanna – who came from the opposite side of an ideological spectrum. Since losing, Khanna has been a vocal opponent of Chu's administration. On the stage, the candidates seemed like rather nice, if a little nervous, people who found themselves caught in a fight of leading questions and eye rolling. Tension and animosity weren't coming from the candidates but from the crowd.

Each side of the spat brought its notes Tuesday night in an attempt to discredit the other's candidate. Anyone who had his or her face on a campaign sign was likely wishing those who asked these types of questions were seniors.

William McGuinness is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at wmcguinn@student.umass.edu.

Online college classes are more than a craze

By Paul Brubaker and Kathleen Carroll
The Record (Hackensack, N.J.)

HACKENSACK, N.J. — The global reach and flexibility of the Internet is fueling brisk growth in online college classes, and those numbers are expected to grow as the recession encourages workers to continue their education.

"The courses can be accessed from any place, at any time," said Ken Vehrkens, dean of Anthony J. Petrocelli College of Continuing Studies of Fairleigh Dickinson University in Teaneck, N.J. "That type of flexibility really fits into many adult learners' schedules, balancing full-time employment and family commitments."

Nationwide, the number of students taking at least one online course jumped by nearly 70 percent between 2002 and 2007, from 1.6 million to 3.9 million, according to a study released in November by the Sloan Consortium, a nonprofit advocacy group for online learning.

Better technology and bigger bandwidth have made the trend possible. When online classes were introduced in the mid-1990s, educators and students were often frustrated by slow log-on times (remember dial-up?) and static messaging programs.

Now, new software and cheaper, faster computers allow students to chat with one another and a professor in real time, share video and audio clips and conduct online research around-the-clock.

If there is a typical student, she is Jessica Marmolejos of Wayne, N.J. Marmolejos, 32, is a busy single mother of two and administrative assistant who starts her school day after work.

Her office skills have helped her land temporary jobs at companies such as NBC Studios and Morgan Stanley. But when those businesses downsized, she was among the first to be dismissed because she lacked a degree, she said.

So in the evenings at home, she boots up her computer and cracks open a Western Civilization textbook while her 9-year-old son, Brandon, plays with a puzzle and her daughter, Victoria, 11, is in her room.

"This is basically the only way that I feel that I can actually do it," she said.

Online classes are popular with colleges because they can expand the potential universe of students, from active members of the military to faraway workers seeking a specialized program.

Take Erica Ulman of South Carolina. She's a student at Passaic County Community College in Paterson, N.J., although she has never set foot on campus.

Ulman, 30, hopes to trade her paralegal career for work in medical records, a growing field. A contact at a hospital near her home referred her to Passaic County Community College, which offers an online associates degree program in health information technology. She registered last July and hopes to complete her degree during the spring 2010 semester.

For the lastest science and research news at UMass: check out the NEWS research blog (www.dailycollegian.com)

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911
OPEN LATE NIGHT TILL 4 AM!

Ticket sales steady as ever

TICKET SALES from page 2

shows going out on the road, so it is difficult for us to get the shows to come in so we can even sell the tickets," added Weiss.

Just down the road, the Calvin Theater, the Iron Horse, and the Pearl Street Nightclub, a group of popular venues located in Northampton, are also full of entertainment.

Jim Neill, director of marketing at the Iron Horse Entertainment Group (IHEG) said that though no increase in ticket sales were noticed at these places, there hasn't been as much erosion as they thought there might be.

Performances by David Archuleta, Ray LaMontagne, Jeff Tweedy, Fountains of Wayne and Lewis Black were only a few of the many shows that sold out or were close to selling out.

"We bring in great talent, as well as up-and-coming artists, at affordable prices," said Neill. "Plus, we're in bloody Northampton! What other town this size pulls this kind of national talent?"

Despite the fact that many consumers are buckling down when it comes to finances, it seems that nothing will get in the way of a few shows once the warm weather approaches.

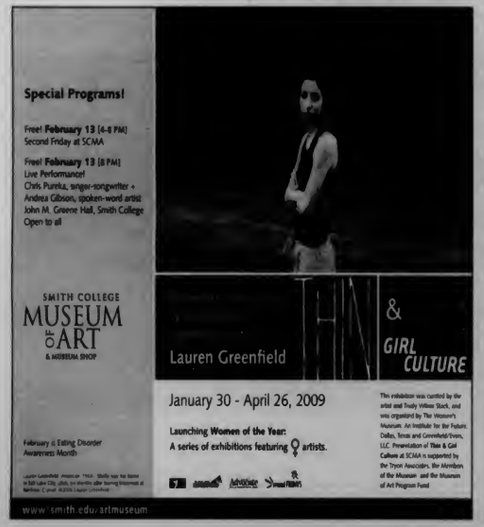
Mohegan Sun has a current lineup of 19 concerts, 10 of which are already sold out. Top performers include Britney Spears, Keith Urban, Sugarland, Nickelback, Fall Out Boy and Kenny Chesney. Ticket prices range from $35 to $250.

The Broadway in Amherst Series will be presenting "Lord of the Dance" on May 2, as well as a production of "Annie" on May 14 at the Mullins Center. In addition, Willie Nelson will be performing on April 17.

"We are expecting these shows to sell out," said Sasenbury.

The Mullins Center, along with the IHEG, has high hopes that ticket sales will prosper for the remainder of 2009.

It may seem strange that so many people are still willing to spend a small fortune on a concert or event ticket in this economy, but to many it's all about the experience.



"I think people will continue to come out for their favorites. Until it gets to the point that we're hoarding rice and potatoes, people will still want to go out and get that lift that music, comedy and dancing provide. When the big picture starts to look bleak, the small picture, the moment, is even more important to savor. We provide experiences, not products, and there's no substitute," said Neill.

Jessica Kemp can be reached at jmkemp@student.umass.edu.

RYAN FUNG/COLLEGIAN

A local band sets up to play for its audience. Despite the economic crisis, ticket sales to concerts at local venues such as the Mullins Center and the Iron Horse Music Hall have remained steady.

Facebook gets facelift

By Scott Duke Harris
San Jose Mercury News

SAN JOSE, Calif. — Facebook, the fast-growing social network that claims more than 175 million users worldwide, unveiled product changes on Wednesday that it said will help enhance communications for both rank-and-file members and business, political and institutional entities that use the platform to convey messages to a broad audience.

"We are going to continue making the flow of information even faster and more customized to those you want to connect and communicate with, no matter how broadly or privately," Facebook founder and chief executive Mark Zuckerberg said in blog posting.

The announcement comes in dynamic period for the 5-year-old Palo Alto, Calif.-based company, which Zuckerberg said is on pace to reach 200 million users "in the next couple of months." The new changes come within days of an announcement that it would ask users to review, comment and vote on a set of "Rights and Responsibilities" in the wake of a user concern over changes in its terms of service.

The new product changes, which began to roll out at noon Wednesday, would over time enable user "Profiles" to serve more as individual Web pages that could convey messages far beyond the current 5,000 "friend" limit, executives said.

At the same time, the current proprietors of Facebook "Pages" _typically commercial, charitable or political interests _ will be able to provide richer material into their stream of information to their followers on the site. Entities such as President Barack Obama and California Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger, CNN and The New York Times, "The Colbert Report" and Britney Spears, the band U2 and the American Red Cross will be able to contribute to the "stream" of information available to users.

A "tour" of the coming changes showed, for example, that users will be able to more easily categorize their Facebook "friends" into separate and sometimes overlapping subgroups, such as "family," "close friends," and "co-workers."

Another change will enable users to more easily post links, photos or videos with their comments into the "stream" of information to and from the Facebook site.

The goal, Facebook executives said, is for a "convergence" of Profiles and Pages that creates a more dynamic user experience while maintaining privacy controls through better filters controlled by the user.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Professor studies podcasting lectures

UMass professors and students comment on effects of learning

By Jessica Kemp
Collegian Staff

Podcasting, one of the easiest ways to listen to the morning news, follow up on your beloved sports teams and catch missed clips of your favorite TV shows, may have potential for becoming the newest way to attend class without actually attending.

Dani McKinney, a psychologist at the State University of New York at Fredonia, has been conducting research showing that students who listen to their class lectures via podcast have scored significantly higher marks on their tests than students who attended the lecture in person.

In the beginning phases of her study, McKinney created a podcast from an Introduction to Psychology lecture on perception to test the effectiveness of computers in education.

The podcast included both audio and visual content, similar to what students would be hearing and seeing if they were to actually attend the lecture.

While about half of the class (32 out of 66 students) attended the lecture, the other 34 students were asked to listen to the podcast. Both groups received a printed handout of the material as well. One week later both groups of students were tested on the teachings.

According to McKinney's research, students who attended the class in person obtained only a 62.47 average on their test. The students who listened to the podcast, however, obtained a 71.24 average, and students who listened to the podcast and took additional notes averaged a 76.23.

Through her research, McKinney argues there are advantages to using podcasts as an educational tool in the classroom.

Along with scoring better grades on their tests, the use of podcasts offers students easy accessibility to lectures at their own convenience.

Students would be able to listen to their lecture any time, anywhere and anyplace. They could replay it as many times as they want, rewind back to points where confusion may have arisen, and even take advantage of the pause button to stop and take notes.

"I think that it would be a good idea to have lectures available on podcasts in addition to going to class, because many students catch themselves daydreaming or not paying attention. It would be nice if I could go back to my room later and hear everything for a second or third time," said Hope Chayer, a sophomore psychology major at the University of Massachusetts.

Bridget Pinsonneault, a teaching associate in the Department of Languages, Literature, and Culture at UMass, also believes the use of podcasts could be beneficial to students.

"This would help students notice any mistakes they make in the language and this awareness may help them to more actively notice these same mistakes if they make them again, which would help them to learn the correct form" said Pinsonneault.

Though education through podcasts may seem like the perfect solution to boost grade point averages across campus, one must take into consideration that McKinney's research was only conducted on one sole lecture.

Students from each group were given the incentive of winning an iTunes gift card if they scored the highest grade on the test.

Furthermore, students did not receive any extra class credit, another factor that may have contributed to their performance.

Many small classes also contain only a fraction of the students that are in a typical lecture hall, where a lot of student-student and student-teacher interaction occurs. Listening to the lecture through a podcast could be detrimental to the learning taking place in this type of classroom.

"If you listened rather than attending class I think it would hurt learning. There is a lot that happens in lectures that can't be captured via a podcast. I always posted lecture notes online, but the students who came to class always did better than students who depended on getting the lecture notes online" said Dr. James Royer, an educational expert in the Department of Psychology at UMass.

"Going to lecture just adds another dimension of learning that I cannot get just by reading or hearing the notes," said Oleg Kamenetsky, a UMass junior and kinesiology major.

Though McKinney has only conducted her studies on one class, she plans to continue her research.

"We are doing a follow-up study that will include other disciplines, such as history and biology," she said. "Now we are looking to see which disciplines lend themselves better to studying this medium."

In the future students at SUNY Fredonia will be able to get podcasts through iTunes University, a website that holds a vast number of downloadable educational podcasts.

"Our campus is in the process of using iTunes U, but we don't have it currently" McKinney said.

Using iTunes University, students can access their own lectures, as well as lectures from over 150 top universities nationwide, including Harvard, Yale and Georgetown.

A substantial amount of research and testing would need to occur across campuses nationwide to see if podcast learning truly is effective. Every teacher has his or her own style of teaching, just as students have their own ways of taking in information.

"If this new assistive technology can help people learn, then I think that it is a great asset," said Jen Daigle-Matos, an education instructor at UMass..

Jessica Kemp can be reached at jmkemp@student.umass.edu.

CAITLIN COUGHLAN/COLLEGIAN

UMass students sit in a lecture hall. Some professors and students argue that lectures can be distracting, while others argue that students get more out of them.

A professor uses an iPod to implement a podcast into his lecture. A professor at SUNY Fredonia conducted a study to see if podcasting provided more effective learning than lectures.

editorial&opinion

"KNOWLEDGE SPEAKS, BUT WISDOM LISTENS." - JIMI HENDRIX

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Don't fret undergrads, a raise in fees isn't all bad

Evan Haddad

With the arrival of spring, many students feel that protesting spirit boiling in their blood again.

Last week, state-collegiates from across the Commonwealth rallied together to face an issue both near to heart and contemporaneous with national troubles. Excited scholars packed into the University of Massachusetts' own Cape Cod lounge and manned their cell phones, hating forth a wordy but otherwise unified harangue at the secretaries of Massachusetts' governor, Deval Patrick; bumped up fees were the bad business this time.

The controversial fee increase of 15 percent, for which Trustee's voted a 12-4 last Friday in Dartmouth, Mass., undoubtedly remains one of the more unpopular measures in UMass history – but for many unjustified reasons.

Hiked fees for UMass students aim at countering the corrosive elements inherent in gargantuan statewide budget cuts, which now bubbles close to a gruesome $100 million. The argument of the university, including President Jack Wilson, maintains that eliminating the budget deficit through spending cuts and fees will save jobs and preserve integrity – for both faculty and students.

In the opinion of this humble and fortunate columnist, things could be worse. But consistently, other students have overlooked several aspects of the plan – for instance, the reformed financial aid program which will be coupled with the fee spike.

According to university officials, roughly $7 million – or one third of the money – raised by next year's fee will go back to students of low to moderate income; perhaps more, if Massachusetts is dealt a large enough slice of the $747 billion federal stimulus package.

Regardless, the millstone hanging about the university is made lighter, and we are better off with an increased fee. The revenue generated from students, when supplemented with state allowances, promotes a greater fiscal autonomy for UMass Amherst.

You can be sure that the money allotted to UMass from the federal stimulus will not be delivered without a tough stamp on it. That is, without raising fees, stimulus dollars will truly reveal the gravity of the situation, which would come at the cost of both larger-scale hiring freezes and spending cuts.

Students forget that in Massachusetts, the students who are hit hardest – and in turn who shall profit most from heightened university tariffs – come from families falling below the comfortable income of $78,500. President Wilson's plan accounts for these students, who will receive enough grant and scholarship money to attend school 100 percent tuition free.

The revenue generated from students, when supplemented with state allowances, promotes a greater fiscal autonomy for UMass Amherst.

But there are some who are unsure of the idea, and ponder over what the stimulus money might mean for the UMass system.

Randall W. Phillis, president of the Massachusetts Society of Professors, holds that recycling fees represent a deviation from the original idea of public education. He told The Springfield Republican that the proposal indicates "a further privatization of the university." Phillis believes that higher education "should be a shared responsibility" with the citizens of the Commonwealth.

However much I commend – even partly agree with – Mr. Phillis' democratic belief, I don't believe that the matter is that simple.

Nor do I believe that I am alone in my confusion over the ever-generalizing term "higher education," which seems to be confronting the wallets of good New Englanders. Strangely, from out of Massachusetts' crumbling public high schools, mediocre students have been pushed directly into "higher education," to make up crumbling state colleges.

In my opinion, what is lacking is any degree of privatization whatsoever. The university should utilize their power to reduce certain expenditures.

Mr. Phillis, like many students, likens the state college to any other bureaucracy, within which there is a "fundamental program" necessary for state citizens to maintain at all costs.

While a degree of this is true, it is not necessary to maintain a broadly based regime, which blankets core academics with pseudo-academics. I say cut the hospitality and turf grass programs to save money and space, and give aid to stronger – but needier – applicants.

I am sympathetic, however, to the concerns of students who may verge upon this amorphous figure termed "median income." For such people, the fear of an arbitrary fee increase is not unfounded – they cannot afford to sacrifice $1,500 more to careless outlay.

Some even feel that raising the cost of in-state education borders on exploitation, noted carefully on protest signs this past Friday in Dartmouth. Student labor powers several branches of UMass almost exclusively, and does so at a whopping 8 bucks an hour.

Yes, tough times bear upon the UMass student, and the dollars are always coming up shorter. Nevertheless, it remains essential to understand the long term issues which will not go away. But don't worry undergrads, when and if the levee does break, it's the classics and English professors who'll be getting the boot – not you.

Evan Haddad is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ehaddad@student.umass.edu.

Double standards in Amherst underage drinking

David Brinch, James Fetcho and Ben Moriarty

Despite only being a stone's throw away, the differences in how campus police at the University of Massachusetts and Amherst College handle alcohol-related offenses seems like black and white.

On Friday and Saturday alone this past week, 13 University of Massachusetts students were arrested for underage alcohol related offenses, according to the UMass Amherst Police Department's website. There was no crime log data on the Amherst College website.

However, according to several Amherst College students, who asked that we not use their names, this is probably because there are hardly any arrests for underage drinking.

"How the police work at Amherst College is that if there is a complaint about a party or whatever, the police come and say, 'all right, everyone who is under 21 has to leave now,'" an Amherst College student said. "Either the party continues," she said, or people just disperse and the party ends."

Another Amherst College student confirmed this, saying that he has never seen anyone or heard of anyone being arrested for underage drinking. The worst thing he has ever heard happening to someone is that they were written up and had to meet with the dean. "But nothing ever comes of it," he said. He said he knows one person who had to leave school, because he was in possession of cocaine, and it was only for a semester.

It is no wonder that Amherst College doesn't have a crime log and the University of Massachusetts does.

This is in complete contrast with how the police operate at UMass. One student detailed an experience of his encounter with UMass Police Department (UMPD). He claimed to be in possession of only one unopened alcoholic beverage in his backpack as an officer took him under arrest.

It is no wonder that Amherst College doesn't have a crime log and the University of Massachusetts does. When you don't arrest people for having one beer, your website can be filled with photos from "Memory Lane" like Amherst College's.

But more than that, Amherst College also goes into excessive detail about their bike patrol, informing us that their "polo shirts have an embroidered badge and the word 'Police' on the back" and "The Yamaha Majesty is white with blue lettering and equipped with emergency lighting." They also make sure students are aware the bike can't sled.

Clearly, Amherst College has more worrisome troubles than underage drinking.

Amherst College is, however, following in the footsteps of UMass, which runs advertising campaigns touting that the majority of UMass students don't binge drink. Amherst college officials claim students handle alcohol in a responsible manner when they attend gala-type events on the college website, saying "71 percent of Amherst College students drink zero to four drinks when they party." This statement, it seems to us, is frankly not true.

While at Amherst College last weekend, one of our compatriots had a couple of drinks outside of Hamilton House. Only two of the students were of legal age when an Amherst Police officer rolled by on patrol. He looked directly at them before continuing on. Imagine this scene in Hobart, Puffton or the townhouses.

The officer would've exited the vehicle, asked us to get out our licenses and our life would be over. You cannot say that because Amherst College is a private school it is not subject to the same rules and regulations of a public university in the same town.

It doesn't take long to notice that at UMass, policy against underage drinking is strictly enforced, while at Amherst College – the school immediately next to it – the rules are lax and the police don't seem to care about it – as long as a UMass student isn't stabbing an Amherst College student.

Even though UMass is a larger school – and it seems logical that the police need to crack down on underage drinking more than at a smaller school like Amherst College – this doesn't seem to be the case. The campus itself is divided up into 5 sections which all are comparable in size to Amherst College, so it doesn't make any sense as to why there is a larger need for one school to be so much stricter about the same issue.

As David Brinch, a one-hit wonder aficionado says: "Same town, same rules."

David Brinch, James Fetch and Ben Moriarty are Collegian contributors.

'Higher education' is not a synonym for 'better'

Greg Collins

Your inherent dignity is not shaped by how much money you make. It is not shaped by the size of your house. And it is not shaped by the level of your education.

Unfortunately, President Obama's call last week for Americans to "commit to at least one year or more of higher education or career training" reveals a fundamental misconception of the purpose and value of education.

This misconception is that you need to be "educated" – educated in the sense of attending college and earning college degrees – to acquire the skills and habits necessary to achieve the American Dream. A look into the history of immigrants in America shows that by no means is it necessary to "commit to at least one year or more of higher education or career training" to do so, even at times when institutional discrimination severely impeded any further progress of immigrants.

Immigrants have been so successful in America not because their levels of higher education allowed them to be promoted to higher positions within firms and businesses. If this were the case, very few immigrants would have advanced.

Uneducated and illiterate Chinese immigrants who arrived in the 19th century worked as coal miners, railroad builders, laundrymen and agricultural field laborers, taking jobs that whites felt were below their dignity. Labor unions led persistent efforts to exclude the Chinese immigrants and kick out the ones already there, because the Chinese were typically harder workers than their white competitors. The Chinese Exclusion Act of 1882 significantly restricted immigration.

Eastern European Jews who arrived in the 1880s lived in the slums and poverty in New York City. Their occupations ranged from sweatshops workers and pushcart peddlers to craftsmen and garment store owners, from grocers and bakers to butchers and small business owners. Anti-Semitism at the time was rampant and half of these Jews could not read.

However, the Chinese and Jewish people are some of the most highly educated people in America today and are overrepresented in white collar, professional fields. These are just two of the many examples of historically marginalized groups in America who have been able to advance, despite a lack of formalized education. Similar trends occurred among blacks following World War II, German immigrants in the latter half of the 19th century and Indian immigrants in the last 50 years.

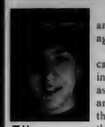
What all of these groups have in common is not that they committed one or more years to higher education and career training, but that they had little to no formal education at all. What they do have in common is that they built up human capital – habits of hard work, discipline and frugality – by doing jobs that most of us would scoff at.

My four grandparents were teachers, factory workers, secretaries and engineers. Some of my closest friends were the first or second people in their families to attend college. We can all point to the previous generations of our grandparents and great-grandparents, who labored under squalid working conditions, low wages and cramped living areas to create more opportunities for their children and grandchildren. These immigrants did not have anywhere near the level of formal education that we are fortunate enough to have today.

Think about that. In the face of conscious, subconscious and institutional discrimination by the white majority, countless immigrant groups and blacks started off with little money, high illiteracy rates and uncertain futures. Yet, they learned skills and habits that any human being can acquire: hard work, responsibility, accountability and discipline. And let it be clear – they did so without being "educated" in the sense of having college degrees.

But what is the deeper meaning behind the notion that you don't need formal education to develop the human capital necessary to achieve the American Dream? It is that America, more than any other nation on Earth, is what our founding fathers called an aristocracy of virtue? Immigrants have been so successful in America not because their levels of higher education allowed them to be promoted to higher positions within firms and businesses. If this were the case, very few immigrants would have advanced.'

Instead, immigrants have been able to achieve the American Dream because merit – through hard work, reliability, responsibility and integrity – is valued more than what your family lineage is. It is valued more than how big your house is and it is valued more than how much money your parents make.



In essence, it is pure elitism to order all Americans to commit to at least one year of higher education by dismissing the reality that people have been able to achieve the American Dream without the formal education that President Obama feels is necessary to survive in today's economy.

And make no mistake – those people who are not as educated as Obama are most definitely his equals.

Because your inherent dignity is not shaped by your level of education.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins @student.umass.edu.

Invest, don't divest

Eli Gottlieb

Well, it appears that the annoying hippies are at it again.

Apparently, they just can't let damned Israel live in peace. Oh – no, as long as Jews anywhere "oppress" any Arabs anywhere, they have to do something. So, now the Student Government Association has considered a bill to divest the University of Massachusetts from Israeli businesses.

I'll start with the moral issue. Divestment proponents claim that Israel continues to oppress Palestinian Arabs and to prevent higher education from operating in the West Bank.

Those of us who see what's really there know that if Israel had ever just "been nice" to the Arabs, there would be no Israel.

Oh, and the University cited in the SGA bill that repressive Israel is a hotbed of terrorism, where a Hamas student representative once won a school debate by bragging about how many Jews Hamas had killed for the cause of Palestine and Islam. Excuse those of us with little sympathy for such folk.

Personally, I think that if someone really wants to help free Palestinian Arabs, they should not divest from Israel, but invest in the Arab side of the conflict.

Divestment proponents further compare Israel to South African apartheid and claim that the type of economic boycotts that brought down the South African regime can bring down Israel. They underestimate the Israeli economy. Anyone who has seen one of the Student Alliance for Israel's "Share the Value" posters can now name at least one major product, service or innovation created by Israel.

The country has a First-World economy based primarily on agriculture, tourism and high technology – specifically medicine and computing. It is in direct contrast to apartheid South Africa's economy, based chiefly on using semi-slave labor to pull natural resources out of the ground – a model that many of the oil-exporting Arab countries share.

I guess a person or university could divest from the entire Israeli economy, but I don't think they'd really have a significant effect.

Of course, I don't think divestment advocates expect to have a significant effect. Their philosophy comes from annoyingly persistent New Leftism – political beliefs that tell them their personal moral purity is more important than political effect or accomplishment.

It also philosophizes that the entire world will inevitably agree with them and rise up against whoever the great barrier to human happiness is today.

Such philosophies always claim to hold the secret to universal human happiness and the dramatic dissonance with reality must then be explained by something that holds the imperfect real world in place.

We've seen this attitude before in Medieval Christianity, every form of Marxism, New Leftism and Islamism. In anti-Zionist thought, we see a bizarre syncretism between all those based upon their common thread: a great Shaitan who holds humanity back from paradise, almost always in the form of the Jews.

Personally, I think that if someone really wants to help free Palestinian Arabs, they should not divest from Israel, but invest in the Arab side of the conflict. Taking away with one hand accomplishes nothing in such a conflict if the other hand does not give.

As I recall, Muhammad Yunus of Bangladesh won the Nobel Peace Prize for introducing microfinance – the practice of giving loans small enough to finance a business, but not large enough to encourage corruption, as a way to spur economic development in Third World countries.

The Muslim Middle East has a thriving Islamic banking sector that has managed to avoid the sickness of the world economic downturn because they work based upon a principle of Islamic – and Jewish – religious law forbidding usury. Combining these two things in the Palestinian territories could work to foster economic development – and therefore peace – in harmony with the local culture.

Islamic finance (this is an extreme simplification) works by giving a debtor a fixed sum to pay off as their lender's profit instead of a fixed or varying percentage of their loan.

For example, to finance a new business, Islamic bankers would buy a stake in the business; to finance the purchase of a house, they would buy the house and rent it to its new occupant until the occupant had paid off the price of the house and the bank's fixed profit margin.

The occupant would then gain proper legal ownership of the house. This system does not offer the large returns on investment that Western finance allows, but it's just the thing for starting a grocery store, a shoe stand or a water-purification plant that will build a life for Palestinians to choose over the values of death offered by thugs like Hamas.

In particular, the high-involvement approach to finance encouraged by Islamic finance would give investors a direct incentive to see that the people they invest in don't fall victim to terrorist harassment or threats.

As a Palestinian-Islamic business sector grows, so will the kind of middle-class society that will value stability and peace with Israel over a pyrrhic "victory" against the Jews.

Once that happens, we would finally see the Israeli-Palestinian conflict solved, because both sides would finally have the same goal: peace for Israel and peace for Palestine.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu

WEEKEND MOVIE PREVIEW

THE HIGHLY-ANTICIPATED GRAPHIC NOVEL ADAPTATION "WATCHMEN" HEADLINES THIS WEEKEND'S PREMIERES.

PG. 10

COURTESY JEMLAB RECORDS

The Books open their covers

Avant-garde locals to play North Adam's Mass MoCA

By Alex Butler
Collegian Staff

This Saturday marks the triumphant return of Western Massachusetts' own aspiring musicians, The Books, to Mass MoCA. The eclectic duo have been working in their North Adams, Mass. studio since 2002, where they have produced some of the most groundbreaking and innovative music over a span of eights years and four albums: "Thought for Food," "The Lemon of Pink," "Lost and Safe" and "Music for a French Elevator."

The Books are planning to unveil a new album later this year.

Paul de Jong, a Dutch cellist, and Nick Zammuto, a guitarist and bassist, met in 2000 to form The Books in Manhattan, N.Y.

What resulted was something extraordinary.

In a culture where most popular music is comprised of neatly categorized genres, The Books seek to tear down musical borders. What some might perceive as a total barrage of nonsensical noise, The Books find a comfortable and inventive medium of expression. No sound is taken for granted in any of their albums, and yet the product remains remarkably simple and un-abrasive.

Take "Enjoy Your Worries," the first track off of their breakout album, "Thought for Food." What starts out as a simple guitar riff quickly cuts out to incorporate samples from birds, radio broadcasts and an audience from a sporting event. "Tokyo," which is featured on a later album, uses samples from an airplane en route to Japan. Another, "Thank You Branch," uses a rhythm solely supplied by, – you guessed it – a fresh tree branch.

In terms of sampling, this is not Girl Talk.

The Books take time. This is the best way to advise the intake of this music, which blends, distorts and slices various samples of music, speech and sound. Voice samples, in particular, are used heavily throughout the bands' discography. Zammuto explained in an interview on The Books' website, "Voice is the most sonically heavy sound that people can make use of. It is so complex as a sound in itself, and at the same time it is capable of carrying literary meaning and personal identity. Human ears evolved around using it and understanding it, so it is a powerful tool in music."

Arranged in a manic sort of fashion, the songs certainly don't seem to lend themselves much radio time. In 2007, however, two songs did manage to get some television attention, featured during a Hummer commercial and an AIDS awareness plug ("Getting the Done Job" and "Tokyo," respectively). Q magazine explained, "When the fragile mixture of field recordings, samples from radio broadcasts and twanging folk instruments come into focus, the results are quietly fascinating."

If you're wondering how easily The Books fit into a live performance, the answer is: Not easily. In the past, the Books have more conveniently played at Northampton's Iron Horse. Their set consisted of acoustic performance with a backdrop of electronic beats and video. The venue was ideal – small and intimate, not too commercial. But this time around, they have their sights set on North Adams' Museum of Contemporary Art, which seems like an even better fit. In a gallery, the eclectic arrangement of sampling will fill the Hunter Center mezzanine with ease. Mass MoCA is their launching pad for the 2009 tour, then the band moves to New York City, Chicago, Boston, and Cincinnati. This is the best chance to experience some of the most ground-breaking music in some time.

No, The Books don't seem worthy of much radio time, but then again, maybe radio isn't worthy of The Books' music.

The Books are playing Mass MoCA in North Adams, this Saturday at 8 p.m. Tickets are $15 for students with IDs, and $22 for everyone else. The museum's galleries are open until 7 p.m.

Alex Butler can be reached at ajbutler@student.umass.edu.

the source

PLANNING YOUR WEEKEND SO YOU DON'T HAVE TO.

TONIGHT

THE ALCHEMYSTICS

LOCAL FAVORITES THE ALCHEMYSTICS WILL BRING THEIR UNIQUE BLEND OF REGGAE, HIP-HOP AND SOUL MUSIC TO NORTHAMPTON'S IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL TONIGHT AT 10 P.M.

VENUE: IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
DOORS: 10:00 PM
PRICE: A: $8.00 - D: $10.00

LOUIS CK

THE WRITER AND STAR OF HBO'S SITCOM "LUCKY LOUIS," LOUIS CK, WILL PERFORM AT NORTHAMPTON'S CALVIN THEATRE TONIGHT AS PART OF HIS "LOUIS CK: HILARIOUS" TOUR.

VENUE: CALVIN THEATRE
DOORS: 8:00 PM
PRICE: $25.00 - $35.00

The National Acrobats of China will perform this Monday, March 9, at the Fine Art Center concert hall.

Asian acrobats at FAC

Award-winning troupe set to perfrom at concert hall

By Michelle Fredette
Collegian Staff

Want to find juggling, cycling stunts, plate spinning and martial arts all in one place?

No, the circus isn't in town – it's the National Acrobats of China.

The group will perform this Monday, March 9, at the Fine Arts Center concert hall. The Fine Arts Center is working in tandem with the University of Massachusetts' Asian Arts and Culture Program to present the acrobats.

The troupe consists of 35 members and was founded in June 1956. The training to be part of the group is intense, requiring on average eight years of practice.

Acrobatics are a part of ancient Chinese culture, and the blending of various performances with folk art has roots dating as far back as the Western Han Dynasty, which ruled from 206 B.C. to 204 A.D. Acrobats performed at village festivals during this reign.

As acrobatics developed in China, they began being performed at more prestigious venues, like the royal court. These performances continued from the seventh century through the 10th. Today, acrobatics is still one of the most important art forms of Chinese variety art.

When people hear the word "acrobatics," gymnastics and trapeze work might come to mind, but the term covers much more than that. Acrobatics can actually include any sport that requires the use of one's entire body. Think of diving – the spins and twists required of one's body are very similar to those used in gymnastics.

When acrobatics first became popular, it was customary for parents to teach their children, making the art a familial cultural tradition. However, as stunts and tricks have become more complicated, it has become necessary for acrobats to be professionally trained in schools dedicated to the art form.

The performers of the National Acrobats of China are skilled in more than just the contortionism and flips that most people expect. Their feats of balance and strength rely heavily on the use of household objects. Props like chairs, tables, ladders, poles, bottles, jars, plates and bowls feature prominently in their acts.

Fame has followed the National Acrobats of China wherever they go, and they have performed in over 30 countries across Europe, North America and South America.

The troupe tours regularly and spent seven months out of each year from 1997 to 2007 touring in various cities throughout Europe.

When not touring, the National Acrobats of China are often busy with international acrobatic competitions. They began competing in the 1980s, which is when they first began to gain a reputation of greatness.

Although the troupe as a whole has gained recognition worldwide, the acts often perform individually at competitions. The act "Benches Juggling with Feet," for example, won both The Golden Clown Award at the Tenth International Circus Festival of Monte Carlo in December 1984 and the Silver Award in the Second National Acrobatic Competition in September 1993.

The acts "Clownish Straw Hats," "Cycling Stunts," "Dream Step Dance – Plate Spinning," "Kick Bowls on Running Circle" and the "Icarian Boys," among others, have also won awards.

Year after year the National Acrobats of China receive recognition for their work, and have won awards in 1993, 1994, 1995, 1997, 2000, 2002, and 2007. Their performances have been judged in cities such as Moscow and Paris and countries like Monaco and China.

The performance is much more than simple gymnastic acrobatics and involves aerial silk acts, juggling, drumming, dance, and much more. The National Acrobats of China's performances add up to create one two-hour long variety show.

The National Acrobats of China will perform on Monday, March 9, at 7:30 p.m. Tickets are available at the FAC Box Office and are $35, $25 and $15. Youth and Five College student tickets are $15.

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredet@student.umass.edu

RISD, UMass artists unite for show

By Caroline Scannell
Collegian Correspondent

It seems that the only thing uniting the work of the eight Rhode Island Sschool of Design (RISD) graduate printmaking students involved in the UMass/RISD Exchange Show opening on Sunday is the medium itself, and even that is not executed in a traditional way.

The exchange between the graduate programs at the two schools springs from the students' desire to showcase the various ways printmaking is practiced today to audiences in different communities.

According to their mission statement, "These young artists utilize printmaking not only as a method of reproduction, but as a point of departure, implementing it as a tool that extends into the realms of sculpture, performance and mixed media."

The range of subjects and techniques that the pieces involve is broad. Kara Dunne, for example, creates prints that stand alone as artwork in addition to using many of these works as props in her often-hilarious performance pieces. She will be displaying a work titled "Mary's Mighty Maids," in which she prints the image of the Virgin Mary on vacuum bags to be used in a holy cleaning service performance.

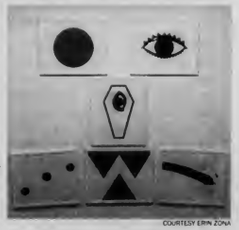
Through the pairing of religious iconography with a common vacuum bag it becomes a "holy receptacle of sin."

"Each vacuum bag has an inventory list on the reverse side, and this list basically takes account of what has been collected in the bag after cleaning, what sins, etc.," she writes.

The work serves as "a commentary on how we often rely on other services, other people, other THINGS to do our work for us, do the dirty work. Clean up the mess we made … They are outsourcing all the real work they have to do on themselves."

In terms of her source of inspiration for this and other religious-themed pieces she writes, "I have always been a curious little Catholic" and likens her practice to that of a trickster that Lewis Hyde describes as a "boundary-crosser," making light of deeply held and often ridiculous social values.

"If my work were to take on a physical human action it would be a wink. It winks at you," she writes. And in turn the viewer smiles or even snorts with laughter.



In the show, the playfulness of Dunne's work is offset by Cooper Holoweski's somber video work. With deep political undertones, his two videos on view offer a critique of contemporary American society.

"My work is about contemporary structures of power. I use a variety of media to examine the inherent distance between the rhetoric and reality of late capitalism," he writes.

In this current body of work, he's "used computer-generated 3-D modeling as an allegory for the free market fundamentalism of the global economy."

"In my world," he writes, "infrastructure bombards the landscape, theory suspends reality, and machines propagate and proliferate this system."

His video "The Limits of Models I: Invisible Hand Holding" makes reference to the self-regulating mechanisms of the free market. The work presents an inverted landscape of New York City's Financial District in a chilling, post-apocalyptic survey of the skyscrapers and

COURTESY ERIN ZONA

Erin Zona utilizes stark, geometric, symbolic imagery in her work.

SeeART on page 10

Wide spectrum on display

ART EXCHANGE from page 9

streets that he describes as "a lush and nauseating picture."

His second video "The Limits of Models I: Alpha and Omega" refers to the importance of the automobile in modern economics using religious subtexts pointing to the second coming of Christ.

He presents an automobile engine-like form that morphs into itself explaining, "The automobile engine represents a human, it represents a global economic system, it represents an inescapable closed circuit into which we have placed our faith."

The work of Erin Zona, on the other hand, takes a more aggressive approach in presenting similarly urgent issues for the viewer's contemplation. She works boldly, "without fear of appearing angry, emotional, unpopular, nonsensical, or potentially insane. I have always been comfortable living outside of society," she writes in her artist statement.

As a passionate supporter of gay rights, many of her works deal with highly-charged socio-political themes as seen in "Lesbian Wedding: Legalize It" and "Two Black Boxes Lezzin' Out."

However, the work she presents in this show, "Untitled Face," is much tamer. It taps into a sensation of mystery and awe at the order and purpose of the universe using symbols such as the three perfectly aligned stars of Orion's Belt, precise concentric circles and her frequent use of the black box.

Her stark, geometric, symbolic imagery "metaphorically represents these calculated accidents." "Each of these visual aspects of the work acts to symbolically represent the unfortunate, but vital mystery of life. They each speak of its beauty and its sadness."

When it opens on Sunday, the RISD/UMass Exchange show will feature many more works that engage with similarly disparate themes. The works of Allison Sloan Roberts take us back, functioning as souvenirs of forgotten aspects of American history. Luke O'Sullivan's work focuses on urban environments in a "celebration of contemporary life."

Through the wide spectrum of subjects explored in the show and the distinct techniques used, the exhibit conveys the very different directions in which printmaking is heading.

The RISD/UMass Exchange Show will be on view from March 8 to March 13. An opening reception will be held on Sunday from 4:00-6:00 p.m. Participating artists include John Adimando, Amy Diaz-Infante, Kara Dunne, Elizabeth Ferrill, Cooper Holoweski, Luke O'Sullivan, Jesse Shaw, Allison Sloan Roberts and Erin Zona.

Caroline Scannell can be reached at ccscanne@student.umass.edu.

CINEMARK®
The Best Seat In Town
Advance tickets & showtimes available online at cinemark.com
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. • 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp 1118#
EARLY BIRD SPECIAL M-F, 1ST MATINEE SHOWTIME $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)
$5 Tuesdays are back!! All shows all day are $5!!

◆ WATCHMEN [R] 1200 145 330 515 700 845 1030 (1215am Friday only)
◆ JONAS BROTHERS 3D CONCERT MOVIE [G] 12:30 2:40 4:50 7:00 9:10 - Tickets $15
◆ STREETFIGHTER: THE LEGEND OF SHUN-LI [PG13] 1:35 4:10 7:35 10:25
◆ TYLER PERRY'S MADEA GOES TO JAIL [PG13] (120 430- no shows 3/7) 710 940
◆ FIRED UP [PG13] 150 440 745 1005
◆ FRIDAY THE 13TH [R] 955
◆ CONFESSIONS OF A SHOPAHOLIC [PG]145 430 725 1000
◆ HE'S JUST NOT THAT INTO YOU [PG13] 100 400 705 1010
◆ CORALINE [PG] 140 420 650 920
TAKEN [PG13] 110 425 730 1020
◆ PAUL BLART MALL COP [PG] 125 445 720 945
◆ GRAN TORINO [R] 115 415 705

Friday Night Rewind 3/6/09
TRAINSPOTTING
MET OPERA 3/18/09
MADAMA BUTTERFLY Encore 7PM
Senior Show 3/12/09 10am
TYLER PERRY'S MADEA GOES TO JAIL
CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

What to 'Watchmen'

COURTESY WARNER BROS. PICTURES

"Watchmen," one of the year's most highly-anticipated films, will finally be released this weekend. The film is an adaption of the critically-acclaimed graphic novel.

Film only notable weekend release

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

Quality certainly wins over quantity at the cinema this weekend with only one notable film hitting the screen: "Watchmen." Arguably the most highly-anticipated film of 2009, the movie finds itself released exceptionally early in the film season, despite its summer blockbuster appeal.

The film takes place in an alternate 1985 U.S. where superheroes have been outlawed. When a former hero is viciously murdered, old colleagues join together to find out who killed him and why. In doing so, they find that the answer is much more convoluted than they could have imagined.

"Watchmen" is based on what many critics consider the greatest graphic novel of all time, written by Alan Moore and Dave Gibbons. Many attempts have been made to make the graphic novel into a movie, but these have never made it past pre-production. Director and former member of Monty Python, Terry Gilliam, took a crack at it, but eventually gave up. He claimed, "Reducing [the story] to a two or two-and-a-half hour film... seemed to me to take away the essence of what 'Watchmen' is about."

It took director Zach Snyder to come up with a screenplay that was adequate and would receive the funding needed to create the film. Snyder is known for his innovative and artistic style from the success of his other graphic novel adaptation, "300." While "300" won over audiences, it received much harsh censure from critics, similar to the early reviews of "Watchmen." On Rottentomatoes.com, it has received only 65% fresh ratings from 124 reviews. The critics claim that the movie is relatively true to the novel, but its complexity and length might not be as enjoyable for those who have not read it.

Author Alan Moore has been vocal about his detestation for the adaptation of his novel into a movie, and said, "I'm never going to watch this thing." The film, like the novel, should prove to become a cult classic with a vast fan base (See: Snyder's "300"). The real question is: In the end, will the quantity of ticket sales surpass the actual quality?

If "Watchmen" just isn't your bag and you're still itching to get out to the movies this weekend, Cinemark at the Hampshire Mall shows classic movies the first Friday of every month at midnight. This week Cinemark is presenting Danny Boyle's "Trainspotting." Boyle recently won the Oscar for Best Director for his Best Picture-winning film, "Slumdog Millionaire." "Trainspotting" follows a group of Scottish youths who take heroin as a means of coping with their issues. They soon find out the consequences of their actions through an interesting dark dramady that provides some intense, wonderfully shot sequences.

Be sure to check out Justin's "This Week's DVDs to See" blog in the Arts & Living Blog at dailycollegian.com.

Justin Gagnon can be reached at jegagnon@student.umass.edu.

Tough 3-game set awaits Minutemen

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team hasn't had a winning season since 2003.

But with victories over Northwestern and Fairfield last weekend, the Minutemen (2-1) look to build on their success when they travel to Arizona to take on the Wildcats in a tough three-game series that begins Friday night.

UMass opened its 2009 season at the RussMatt Central Florida Invitational last Friday, defeating Northwestern, 4-3, in its first victory in a season opener since 2004.

Senior infielder Sam Boone, who was the designated hitter against the Wildcats, hit his first career home run, a two-run shot in the second inning. The rest of the Minutemen registered 12 hits throughout the contest en route to the win.

Along with the offense, UMass' pitching was impressive, as junior right-hander Jared Freni threw six complete innings for the Minutemen, giving up just one hit and one unearned run in the fifth inning while registering three strikeouts on the day.

UMass led 6-3 going into the seventh inning of Saturday's rematch with the Wildcats, but an impressive pitching staff performance Friday could not hold off a four-run rally in the seventh and eighth innings by NU.

Senior second baseman Adam Tempesta and freshman catcher Tom Conley had two hits each for the Minutemen, but it was not enough, as the Minutemen dropped their first game of the season, 7-6.

Conley his started behind the plate in all three of the Minutemen's contests this season, posting a .333 batting average with an RBI and a run scored, with his first collegiate RBI coming against Fairfield on Sunday.

A lot of UMass players had RBIs against the Stags, as the Minutemen's offense returned on its way to a blowout 25-4 victory.

The Minutemen destroyed the Stags' pitching, pounding out 20 hits, including five doubles and a UMass single-game record four triples in the contest.

After back-and-forth run-scoring by both teams, UMass broke open the game with an 11-run fifth inning, following up with a seven-run sixthia inning and adding three more runs in the seventh.

Sophomore first baseman Peter Copa was a perfect 4-for-4 at the plate, including a team-best six RBI's, along with a double and a triple.

Don't expect that amount of run support this weekend, where the Minutemen will be facing a young Wildcat rotation loaded with talent.

The Wildcats are led by senior right-hander Preston Guilmet (0-1, 5.19 ERA), who returned to the team after turning down professional offers from the Oakland Athletics, who drafted him in the 22nd round of last year's Major League Baseball Draft.

Guilmet is one of the top strikeout pitchers in Arizona history and has the possibility to break several Wildcat all-time records with another strong season.

Freni will face Guilmet and will look again for another strong outing on the mound.

MICHAEL THILL/COLLEGIAN

Senior left-handed pitcher Mitchell Clegg will draw a start this weekend as UMass takes on Arizona. The Minutemen are 2-1 so far this season entering the three-game series.

After facing Guilmet on Friday, UMass will face another strong arm in freshman Donn Roach late Saturday afternoon. Like Guilmet, Roach was selected out of high school in the MLB Draft by the Anaheim Angels in the 40th round.

Senior Mitchell Clegg, who didn't earn a decision in the loss against the Wildcats, will start against Roach.

The final game of the series is slated for 3 p.m. on Sunday, and will see the Minutemen go with Mike Dicato, who had enough run support for four games Sunday against the Stags.

This is the first-ever meeting between the teams.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Elite events next for track

By Mike Mastone
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's track and field team looks to end its season on a high note as the year's top performers are set to compete at the IC4A Indoor Championships in Boston.

Seven individual track athletes and three relay teams will be representing the Minutemen at this weekend's meet at Boston University.

The latest to qualify for the competition is the 4x800 meter relay team. At last week's New England Championships, the team of Ryan DiOrio, Peter Fortunato, Scott VanderMolen and Sean Duncan finished the event with a time of 7 minutes, 43.23 seconds. Fortunato, VanderMolen and Duncan have also qualified as individuals.

Fortunato earned a spot in the final indoor meet of his collegiate career after posting a time of 4:11.48 in the mile at the Boston University Valentine's Invitational. He has been one of the top milers in the Atlantic 10 this season and has been a key contributor to the UMass mid-distance attack throughout his career.

Other mid-distance runners that will be competing are Duncan, Sam Lorenza and Philip Weltman. Duncan matched the IC4A qualifying time of 1:54.90 at the Valentine's Invitational. At the same meet, Lorenza and Weltman each posted their best times of the season. Lorenza finished the 500-meter run in an A-10 best 1:03.93. Weltman ranked second in the conference after finishing the 400-meter dash in 48.45.

VanderMolen and Jonathan Pierce will be representing the Minutemen in the distance competitions. VanderMolen will compete in the 1000-meter run after posting a time of 2:28.88 during Valentine's Day weekend. Pierce qualified for the 3000-meter run by posting a team-best time of 8:20.75.

Tyler Cotto looks to finish his stellar season with another strong performance in the 55-meter hurdles. Cotto qualified for the IC4As at UMass' first meet of the season. The junior finished with a time of 7.74. Also competing this weekend for the Minutemen will be the 4x400 and distance medley relay teams. Both teams finished in the top five in the A-10, posting times of 3:18.78 and 10:05.39, respectively.

"Our goal is to get everyone primed for their opportunity and take what we can get," said UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien. "We match up the best kids with their best events."

On the women's side, three individuals and one relay team will be traveling to the Reggie Lewis Center for the ECAC Indoor Championships.

All three of the individual qualifications have come in the field events.

Sophomores Ida Okkonen and Stephanie Aguguo have proven to be top-tier competitors in the A-10 and look to end their breakout seasons on a high note. Senior Kristen Bakanowski also looks to finish strong in the final indoor meet of her career.

Okkonen qualified for the ECACs in the Minutewomen's second meet of the season. The long jumper placed third overall at the Great Dane Classic with a mark of 18-09.25. That mark places her fourth in the conference. Aguguo qualified two weeks ago at the A-10 Championships en route to her best performance of the season. She posted a mark of 38-6.00 in the triple jump, placing her fifth in the conference and third on the UMass all-time list.

Bakanowski also posted her best mark of the season at the A-10 Championships with a mark of 12-07.25 in the pole vault. Her sister, Brittany, will team up with Deanna Julian, Ros Murphy and Holly Henrricher to compete in the 4x400 meter relay. The relay team qualified with a time of 3:53.70.

Mike Mastone can be reached at mmastone@student.umass.edu.

2 meets for UMass tennis

By Steve Levine
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's tennis team was dealt a hard loss on Tuesday from Brown, the top team in the Ivy League. The Minutewomen came into the match hoping for a win, but realized that mission would be hard to accomplish against a team coming off two straight 7-0 victories.

Despite battling throughout, UMass (6-6) came up with just one victory, coming from the No. 2 doubles team of senior Laura Danai and junior Maude Lecluyse. The duo remains undefeated in doubles for the season, as they improve to 8-0.

Freshman Magdalena Ploch, UMass' No. 1 player and two-time Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week, played a tough match against the reigning Ivy League Rookie of the Year, Bianca Aboubakare. Regarded as one of the hardest-hitters on the team, Ploch fought hard in an attempt to send the match to a third set. Ultimately, Aboubakare proved to be too much to handle, as Ploch dropped the match 7-5, 6-4.

So far UMass' schedule has been anything but easy and according to UMass coach Judy Dixon, the defeat at Brown can be considered a blessing in disguise.

"Our schedule has been very rough up to this point, and right now we're all tired," Dixon said. "But I'm glad we were on Brown's schedule because they gave us valuable individual experience."

Tired but determined, the Minutewomen hope to take full advantage of the easier schedule ahead of them. They will face both Hofstra and Siena this weekend.

"I'm hoping to come away with two wins that are much needed this weekend," Dixon said. "Hofstra is beaten up and they will be forced to forfeit some matches. I still feel really good about our team and I'm relieved to be done with the hard part of the schedule."

UMass is scheduled to host Hofstra (7-3) at 1:00 p.m. on Saturday, March 7, at the Bay Road Tennis club located on the campus of Hampshire College. Hofstra's limited roster frequently forces them to forfeit at least one singles match and one doubles match, a handicap they have played with all season. These freebies will not be taken for granted, however, as UMass hopes to come away with a weekend sweep.

On Sunday, the Minutewomen will travel to Londonville, N.Y., for a noon match against Siena. Although dropping their previous four matches, the Saints do boast a very strong singles player in senior Sarah Mayer. Mayer, Siena's No. 1 player and all-time wins leader, will battle Ploch this weekend.

At 6-6, UMass expects to improve a great deal as the season progresses. The challenging schedule up to this point has given the players valuable experience to gain more wins against less challenging opponents. It all starts this weekend with two matches that can get the Minutewomen back where they want to be.

Steve Levine can be reached at slevine@student.umass.edu.

A–10 Tournament time

FJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

The Minutewomen are the No. 11 seed in Friday's Atlantic 10 Tournament first-round matchup against sixth-seeded Duquesne. The winner will play No. 3 Charlotte in round two.

FJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

UMass sophomore forward Teya Wright, left, will play a pivotal role for the Minutewomen this weekend. Wright, the the only true inside presence for UMass, will have to step up.

UMass draws red-hot Duquesne

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

When the Massachusetts women's basketball team started off 1-6 in Atlantic 10 play, it seemed as though the team's postseason chances were doubtful. After going 4-4 to close out the conference schedule, though, the Minutewomen are playing their best basketball of the season as they go into Friday's first round matchup against Duquesne in the A-10 Tournament.

As UMass (12-17, 5-9 A-10) heads into the tournament, the difference between the young, inexperienced team that started the season and the battle-tested team they are today is significant.

"When you look at who we played in the A-10 early on, it was three of the top four teams in the conference," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said. "So we were coming out of the preseason still trying to get this offense going … I think we are peaking at the right time. I just hope the kids know that it's a new season and the kids know to leave it out on the line. Because right now, it's one-and-done."

The Minutewomen enter the tournament as the No. 11 seed and will take on No. 6 seed Duquesne (19-10, 9-5 A-10). The Dukes emerged victorious in the teams' first meeting back on Feb. 14, winning 75-61 at the Mullins Center.

That victory was part of Duquesne's six-game winning streak to close out the season and part of an 8-1 stretch overall. Dacko knows that, as good as her team is playing, the Dukes are currently the hottest team in the conference.

"They've been playing very good basketball. Duquesne has won eight of their last nine games, so they're on a good roll now," Dacko said. "We competed the first time, so we should have enough anger inside of us to go out and play hard."

Leading the Dukes in their second matchup against the Minutewomen is Kristi Little. The 5-foot-4 guard averages 14.9 points per game, but it is on the defensive end of the floor where she really shines. Little earned her second consecutive A-10 Defensive Player of the Year earlier in the week.

Despite Duquesne's success, Dacko still likes her team's chances. The Minutewomen had a good start in their first matchup, opening up a 10-point lead in the first half, but cooled off in the second half.

"We match up well with them. They're smaller in the post, but they're very aggressive. For us, it's another shot at them," she said. "They beat us, and our kids have to have enough incentive to go out and really take them down at a neutral site."

UMass' success will hinge greatly upon the performance of Teya Wright, who is only one game removed from a concussion that forced her to miss a game. In her first game back, an 82-66 win over La Salle, Wright notched 14 points and seven rebounds. But against the Dukes, the sophomore will have to step up from a subpar effort in the teams' first meeting.

"Teya's going to have a huge impact," Dacko said. "She was 1-for-6 the first go-round, [Kristina] Danella was 1-for-9 the first go-round. So we didn't really get scoring form the two of them and those are our significant post players.

"It's a huge game for her and it's kind of a coming-of-age party now. She's got to step up now. [Her] sophomore year's over, [she's] got to play like an upperclassman."

Should the Minutewomen win in their first round game, their next opponent would be No. 3 seed – and host team – Charlotte. That game's winner will go on to face one of three teams: Saint Joseph's, St. Bonaventure or Temple.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Size inside could play key factor

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 Tournament promises to have high-scoring, high-intensity games.

Some teams will excel in these games and others could be embarrassed by what they should've done better.

The Massachusetts women's basketball team has had an up-and-down season in which it showed greatness and its young players showed promise. Many times, though, the team faltered when it mattered most.

Taking care of the basketball has been a problem for the Minutewomen (12-17, 5-9 A-10), who accumulated a conference-worst 550 turnovers in the regular season. Their inability to take care of the ball has been one of their biggest problems all season. They averaged 19 turnovers per game, well above some of the better ball-handling teams in the conference.

Against Duquesne (19-10, 9-5 A-10) in particular, UMass coughed up the ball 18 times. Dukes guard Kristi Little relentlessly went after almost all Minutewomen on the floor at one point or another. This surprised the UMass post players.

Forward Teya Wright had four turnovers in the contest and all were in the vicinity of the basket.

UMass is usually undersized compared to its opponents, so each player has to find ways to compensate. Wright uses her quickness to become a huge problem in the passing lines for opponents when they are in the post. Wright's 48 steals led all UMass players during the regular season.

UMass coach Marnie Dacko believes that Wright has stepped up for the team in this respect and also won't let next season enter her mind until after the Minutewomen officially end this season.

"Teya Wright got minimal time last year because she was always someone who went in and got into foul trouble," Dacko said. "We are a very young team and hopefully we have used that this season to mature as we go into the tournament. Next year's season starts when this year finishes. I'm not looking at next year yet, I'm looking at the tournament."

Intensity will be another important factor for UMass going into the tournament. But intensity needs to be coupled with focus for it to be utilized successfully. At times during the regular season it seemed as if the Minutewomen were getting pushed around under the basket when they went up for a rebound.

The UMass post players are some of the smallest in the conference and it's difficult when you're 6-foot-1 going up against a player who's four inches taller than you. But there are things that can remedy this. Quicker jumps on a missed shot can do wonders for many of the younger Minutewomen, who sometimes seem hesitant to contest the shot.

Many of the post players in the A-10 are big, physical players, but this comes at a cost. The UMass post players are some of the quicker bigs in the conference, which means they can get a better position than their opponents before the shot is even taken.

The smaller players on the team are using their speed well and are putting the Minutewomen into good position to move the ball down the court well in transition. Against Saint Joseph's, 5-foot-5 guard Kim Benton grabbed a career-high six rebounds against a Hawks team whose smallest player is two inches taller than Benton.

Guard Sakera Young (5-foot-7) was just as physical, tying Benton for the team-lead in rebounds and adding a career-high 23 points against St. Joe's. Both Benton and Young are physical, high-energy players who have the ability to provide a spark on offense or defense for the Minutewomen.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Commonwealth battle: UMass, Harvard

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Always tough to beat at home, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team is sometimes known as the "Garber Guerillas" when playing in Amherst.

Considering how dominant UMass is when playing on the road against Harvard, maybe they should be referred to as the "Cambridge Chimpanzees" over there.

"I don't know, man," said UMass coach Greg Cannella. "If we're chimps we're probably not going to play at a high level."

Cannella laughed at the joke, but this run of dominance by the Minutemen over the Crimson in Cambridge can't be funny to anyone affiliated with Harvard. And considering that the run goes back a while, that accounts for a lot of players, a lot of fans and three coaches.

"I don't know," answered Cannella, unsure of how UMass has won 12 straight and 18 of the last 19 meetings at Harvard. "Every time you go down there, you got to throw that out. I'll never mention that to our guys."

Second-year Harvard coach John Tillman has never played the Minutemen in Cambridge. In fact, he's 1-0 in his career against UMass – an 8-5 victory last year – but if he's looking for some bulletin-board material, he needs only to show his team the scores of the past 12 home meetings.

Saturday afternoon's game between the Minutemen and the Crimson isn't about defending home-field advantage for the first time since 1983. It's about two teams, No. 12 Harvard (2-0) and No. 19 UMass (2-1), battling for a marquee victory that will put one of these teams among the nation's elite.

For that to be the Minutemen, Cannella insists it all starts with preparation.

"John Wooden always said, 'Failing to prepare is preparing to fail.' And Jack Emmer, who was a great lacrosse coach at Army, would say, 'Proper preparation prevents piss-poor performance,'" Cannella recited after practice on Thursday.

"And we talked about that with our guys this week – we have to prepare the right way in order to go down there and play at a high level," he continued. "It's not going to be easy to go to Harvard – 2-0 record and No. 12 in the country – in their first home game this year. If our guys are preparing the wrong way and think it's going to be a cake walk, we'll be in a lot of trouble."

If No. 7 Duke thought it would be a cake walk against Harvard on Feb. 22, the Crimson proved otherwise. Harvard shut down a strong Blue Devils attack, taking its season opener, 9-6, in Durham, N.C. Harvard proved how good it was six days later, dominating Stony Brook in a 12-4 win.

Cannella has seen enough tape on Harvard that he doesn't need any more convincing.

"They have a lot of experience, great athleticism and unbelievable speed," he said. "They have such a strong and skilled group at attack with Dean Gibbons, Jeff Cohen and Kevin Vaughan. And [Jason] Duboe is probably one of the best midfielders in the country and Max Motschwiller is not far off of him."

"They have guys everywhere. And perhaps Harvard's strength is that they play with a great level of intensity every second they're out on the field. And that impresses the hell out of me and scares the hell out of me too."

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

Bobby Hayes and No. 19 UMass face a huge test Saturday afternoon at No. 12 Harvard. The Minutemen have won 12 straight meetings in Cambridge over the Crimson.

UMass had trouble offensively last year against Harvard and goalkeeper Joe Pike. The Minutemen had a 2-1 lead at halftime, but the Crimson scored six straight goals to open the second half en route to a decisive victory.

This year's Minutemen have had no such problems this season on offense. UMass torched Yale in its game last Saturday, scoring a season-high 18 goals. That came after a 10-goal effort against then- No. 13 Hofstra in a 1-goal loss and 15 tallies in the season-opening win over Sacred Heart.

UMass scored 10 or more goals only once last season. With star Jim Connolly back on the Minutemen, that isn't likely to happen again. Harvard is just hoping something else doesn't happen again.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Minutemen can clinch 10–seed with win

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

With the disaster of missing the postseason averted, the Massachusetts men's basketball team can breathe a sigh of relief, but must now refocus on securing a higher seed in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

This will be the second meeting between the teams this year; the Rams (22-8, 11-4 A-10) defeated UMass, 71-59, at the Mullins Center on Feb. 18. During that game the Minutemen held a 31-19 lead in the first half, but a sluggish second half combined with a career-high 26 points from URI reserve Keith Cothran sank UMass.

FJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Tony Gaffney and the Minutemen take on Rhode Island in the regular-season finale Saturday night. UMass will be the 10-seed in the Atlantic 10 Tournament with a win.

With an A-10 Tournament berth clinched with the win over George Washington on Wednesday night, the Minutemen (11-17, 6-9 A-10) will try to improve their tournament seeding when they face Rhode Island on the road this Saturday in the team's regular-season finale.

UMass coach Derek Kellogg will look to avoid a repeat by trying to push the tempo against URI and in the A-10 Tournament.

"There may be some times when we go to Atlantic City where we have to back off a little bit because it's four games in four days," Kellogg said after Wednesday night's game. "But I think we can wear some other teams down and push tempo and get some free easy baskets if we play fast."

If UMass defeats Rhode Island, it will earn the 10th seed in the tournament. A loss drops them to the 11th seed.

The Minutemen have made some adjustments since that game, particularly in the starting lineup. Matt Glass started the first game at Rhode Island, but Wednesday against George Washington gave David Gibbs his first start of the season and received a strong performance with eight points in 17 minutes.

"This is a young man with unlimited potential, and as soon as he realizes how good he can be, he'll continue to get better and better," Kellogg said.

Anthony Gurley had the worst game of his career against the Rams the first time around, getting shut out on the stat sheet in his first game coming off the bench in 15 minutes of action. Since then he has adapted to his new role as a reserve and has scored double digits in each of UMass' last three games.

Point guard Chris Lowe started off strong in the first meeting with URI with five assists in the first half, but he had zero in the second half and finished with nine turnovers. The Minutemen will need him to be more consistent to win a tough road test against a hot Rhode Island team.

Lowe is happy with the new up-tempo style of play that Kellogg has been preaching, and feels it makes the Minutemen a better team.

"It's the end of the season now, no reason to hold back. He told us to give everything you got and he's just throwing the dogs out there now and letting us play," Lowe said. "I think we're just running with it, we like to do that so everyone is happy. Everyone's not going to play as many minutes, but we're going to be a better team offensively and defensively."

One aspect of the first game UMass hopes to repeat is the defense it played against Rhode Island's top scorer Jimmy Baron. Baron was held to six points, 10 below his average of 16.6.

A win Saturday would give UMass its first winning streak since it won four games in a row Dec. 10-27; it would also halt URI's six-game winning streak.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

comics

JORNALISM AT ITS FINEST

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

ANNOUNCMENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstrealty.com 253-7879/ 781-979-0076

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass. Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

FOR RENT

Worship at Dwight Chapel on Sunday mornings at 9 or 11. For rides and information please call us at 256-8059 or visit www.dwightchapel.org

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com, Montrealexpress.net. 781-979-9001/ 781-979-0076

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog
Sex: Male & Female
Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks)
Champion Bloodlines: No
Champion Sired: No
Show Potential: Yes
What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

ACROSS
1 Pop's partner
4 Tonsorial tool
9 Mont of the Alps
14 Wedding vow
15 Wonderland heroine
16 Of the ear
17 Reed or Rawls
18 Last inning
19 BYU city
20 Dada artist Max
22 Big shot's paramour
24 Hun
26 ___ Bryn
27 Wapiti
28 Suit toppers
30 Compose a funeral poem
33 Fo'c'sle bed
34 Prognosticator
35 Dark periods
39 Produced artificially
41 Join a hootenanny
42 Gleefies
43 "Dharma & ___"
44 Lennon's widow
45 Japanese garments
47 Memo acronym
48 Well-chosen
51 Rimmodel
52 Carryall bag
54 Watchful state
57 Kingly
60 Yellow gem
61 Lieu
63 Mineral deposit
64 Come together
65 Burn superficially
66 Sebaceous cyst
67 Like leaves and grain
68 One in a cast
69 Heavy-hearted

DOWN
1 5,280 feet
2 Olfactory stimulant
3 Sicilian sight
4 Harangues
5 Title role for Will Smith
6 Silvery metal
7 Halloween month
8 Suspended anew
9 Christening
10 Attract
11 Surfaced
12 Part of USNA
13 Low, dull sound of impact
21 Help!
23 Superlatively showery
25 Sowers
28 Highest point
29 Wheedle
31 Spike of items
32 Ovum
34 Ridiculed with parody
36 Slammers
37 Bluefin or yellowfin
38 Desist
40 Jan. honoree
41 Full theater sign
43 Of spiritual knowledge
46 Black Sea port
47 Had a bite
48 Throw a scene
49 Graph starter?
50 Animal with a long snout
53 Sequence
55 Schedule figure
56 Dispatched
58 Region
59 Advance, as money
62 Time past

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

www.dailycollegian.com

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach
THINK AHEAD
Two 6-week summer sessions
Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net
Registration begins March 9
SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

follow the breadcrumbs

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

CAUTION:

ENTERING REDUCED THOUGHT AREA

SOME NEVER RETURN

Zesty number burrito.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 3 | 9 | | | | 8 | 5 | |
| | | 8 | 3 | | 4 | 6 | | |
| 6 | 4 | | | | | | 3 | 1 |
| | | | 4 | 2 | 3 | | | |
| | | | | 8 | | | | |
| | | | 1 | 5 | 6 | | | |
| 8 | 6 | | | | | | 9 | 3 |
| | | 7 | 9 | | 8 | 4 | | |
| | 9 | 4 | | | | 1 | 7 | |

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You always knew that when you met your future spouse they would be driving a RedBull Mini Cooper.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Attempt to throw money at all of your problems today.
Insert $0.50 for more advice.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
"Hugging it out" is not going to resolve the car accident you just caused.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Your dreams are more like a cheesy Hollywood blockbuster than you'll ever admit.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
If just being stranded on a desert island won't be bad enough, you'll soon realize that the nicotine withdrawl will really suck.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Fall of the American Empire, Reason #211: We owe $10,948,508,091,124.82 in back due rent.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Deadly bear rampages are not one of your top concerns, but maybe they should be.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Whatever you do, don't ask the homeless fellow why he has been staring at that empty park bench for two straight hours.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If this were a hockey game, at this point you would be in the penalty box, and fans would be urinating on you from above.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You've got a bad feeling about that dollar burger for a reason.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Convince your friends that you can make it rain for added popularity. If you intimately know Weather.com this will be no problem.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Buy a new boat to fulfill your destiny as a douchebag with a boat.

QUOTE OF THE WEEKEND

"The surest way to make a monkey of a man is to quote him."

— Robert Benchley

BLISS By Harry Bliss

"Too 'Master of the Teutonic Order'-ish?"

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

CHILLY MIX HIGH: 37 LOW: 22 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | MONDAY, MARCH 9, 2009

Elections to start Tuesday

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

The University of Massachusetts Student Government Association (SGA) will hold its spring, general elections on March 10 and 11 to elect next year's SGA president and student trustee.

Juniors Christopher Faulkner and Ngozi Mbaquike are running against each other for the position of president. Sophomores Emily Bloch and Joshua Davidson are in the running for student trustee. Graduate students can also vote in the student trustee elections.

The campaign period lasted from March 2 to March 11, including the two days of elections. But, the bylaws prevented it from lasting any longer.

"I think we have a lot of qualified people," said Chancellor of Elections, Sean McNair. "Unfortunately, in my opinion, the bylaws do not provide for a long enough campaign period. This prevents the average student from getting to know the candidates."

Some of the candidates agreed, saying the bylaws didn't give them enough time to prepare for critical campaign spotlights, including the debate.

"It really stinks because ten days is not really enough time to get our names out to the student body," said Faulkner. "The problem with the bylaws is it limits what Sean can actually do. For example, Ngozi, Emily, Josh and I were only notified 24 hours in advance as to when the debate would be held. But it wasn't enough time to be well-prepared."

Online elections, which McNair circulated as a possibility during February, fizzled out due to lack of time. But candidates are hopeful that their efforts will have made an impact on students.

"Unfortunately, online elections were not possible for this election cycle, but hopefully, students get a feel for the candidates from the fliers and campaigning we've put forth

See SGA on page 3

Rally pushes for peace

Opinions clash on Common ground

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

Hundreds of students and community members gathered on the Amherst Common yesterday in support of peace in the Middle East – but with two different solutions.

The initial rally, planned by University of Massachusetts organization Student Alliance for Israel (SAFI), supported Israel's right to be an independent state as well as a two-state solution for the Israeli-Palestinian conflict.

The rally was counteracted by a smaller but equally vocal group of protestors, including members of UMass' Campus Anti-War Network, calling for an end to alleged oppression of Palestinians.

Originally, a peace rally favoring Israel's right to exist was the brainchild of Hampshire College freshman Danielle Lubin. After studying and volunteering for a year in Israel, she was shocked at the amount of anti-Israeli sentiment on her campus.

Through a connection with her father, she worked with Rebecca Kahn, campus coordinator for the Jewish National Fund, to get the word out on the other side of the issue of a two-state peace solution, which would involve Jews and Palestinians each having their own country. Lubin enlisted the help of SAFI on the UMass campus, and they did the rest of the work in putting the event together.

"This voice has been silent for a really long time in this area," Lubin said. "Both sides are important, both sides should be examined. . . . Hopefully this will create more dialogue, and will make people think about the issue a little bit more."

She continued by providing her views on the issue.

"I don't think there's anyone [on either side] who doesn't want peace," Lubin said. "Jews need a homeland, a place they can be accepted. Every people are entitled to a land and a place where they can feel at home, at peace and comfortable to express their religion and identity freely."

Protestors against the cause were vehemently against the rally's cry for two states.

"The slogan that Israel is for a people without land is not true," said protestor Mike Firrentino, a second-year student at Holyoke Community College. "It doesn't acknowledge that Palestinians exist."

UMass' International Socialist Organization was also part of the counter protest.

"Socialists are against the oppression of any people and whenever land is forcefully seized," he said. "We are asking for Palestinians to have equal access to land that is historically theirs … personally, I support the intifada, and I am always on the side of the oppressed."

SAFI President and UMass senior Mike Feder responded to protestors' arguments with information directly from the country in question.

"[Non-partisan] polls show no one wants one state; both groups of people want to preserve their national identities," Protestors filled the Amherst Common yesterday asking for peace between Israel and Palestine. Two student groups, however, had opposing views on just how that peace should be delivered.

See COMMON on page 3

Fashion show, Hilfiger show students to dress for success

By Josh Walovitch
Collegian Staff

Commencement is fewer than 80 days away, and many seniors are undergoing the tedious process of interviewing for jobs. With the economy in a recession, jobs and interviews are harder to come by, making the first impression that much more significant.

On Friday, Jewish Leaders in Business (JLB) hosted their second annual "Dress for Success: Fashion Show" with special guest Betsy Hilfiger. The event discussed the importance of dressing and presenting oneself in the best light during interviews.

According to the United States Department of Labor, both the number of unemployed people, and the unemployment rate now at 8.1 percent, rose in January.

"You only have one chance to make a first impression," said Director of Community Affairs for Tommy Hilfiger, Betsy Hilfiger. "My belief is that students should dress to present their best self to the potential employer, no matter what field they are in. A conservative, clean and polished look is always a winner."

Betsy Hilfiger owned a retail clothing store for nine years and has interviewed many people during that span of time. The one interviewee she remembers most was a young man who came in looking for a sales position.

"I could not concentrate on what he was saying because of all the rings, etc. He also had very poor hygiene and needed a bath and some deodorant in a big way," said Hilfiger. "I always tell people looking for tips on interviewing success to remember good hygiene and to have clean, fresh breath. Many young people I interviewed smelled like cigarettes and alcohol … they never got the jobs."

Hilfiger remembers her first interview with Wyeth Labs for a pharmaceutical representative position. It was held in a local restaurant in Elmire, N.Y. where she remembers wearing a navy blue suit.

"I had about five interviews trying to get the job. I had to wear

See FASHION on page 3

DANIELLE AUGERI/COLLEGIAN

A model works the runway in the Flavin Auditorium on Friday night. The "Dress for Success" fashion show featured guest Betsy Hilfiger.

CHOC gets off ground

New group links volunteers with good causes

By Ian Edward Detlefsen
Collegian Correspondent

Right now, the Community Health Outreach Coalition (CHOC) is little more than a paper cut-out situated around a Blue Wall dining table, but for any student seeking volunteer work with the immediate community, CHOC might seem like a good idea.

The start of CHOC occurred to President Olga Deshchenko and co-founder Nick Druar while studying under the Citizens Scholars Program and through watching other students voice their thoughts concerning different ways of promoting community outreach. After some time and many ideas, CHOC emerged.

The Coalition functions much like a liaison between prospective volunteers and the community that needs them.

"Our desire is to extend a hand to the community while helping those who want to be involved to do so," said Druar, a psychology major. "The community wants this. We're just … making it the symbiotic relationship it should be."

Both said students would not have to do very much service. "We do six hours of [volunteer] service minimum each. You could probably do one hour; we just want to get the two together," said Deshchenko, a journalism and legal studies double major.

Other activities of the group would include a possible movie screening advocating medical security programs to the unemployed.

CHOC would like to have a little bit of everything. There's the community service outreach, but wanting to reach into promoting education about health and access and going political is all in the works.

Deshchenko and Druar said if they could make anything happen tomorrow, universal health care would be an ultimate goal.

See CHOC on page 3

Harvard study finds link between porn, political views

By Sean McDonough
Collegian Staff

A study done by the Harvard Business School concluded states that have passed conservative legislation on sexuality tend to have higher subscriptions to web pornography than those that have not.

Conducted by Benjamin G. Edelman, professor at the Harvard Business School, his study found "subscriptions are slightly more prevalent in states that have enacted conservative legislation on sexuality," and "in the 27 states where 'defense of marriage' amendments have been adopted (making same-sex marriage, and/or civil unions unconstitutional), subscriptions to this adult entertainment service are weakly more prevalent than in other states."

A table was created in the study that recorded the "difference, in subscriptions per thousand broadband households, between a hypothetical state where all residents disagree with the quote versus one where all residents agree with the statement." Communities that agreed with strong religious statements such as "AIDS might be God's punishment for immoral sexual behavior," and "I have never doubted the existence of God" had higher subscription rates.

Donald Tomaskovic-Devey a Sociology professor at the University of Massachusetts Amherst said that states that are more conservative on sexuality issues have always had higher pornography consumption. He also noted that states that more liberal states tend to have "lower divorce rates and teen pregnancy, higher rates of civic participation in voting and public service, and lower violence and inequality." He noted that Barbara Tomaskovic-Devey, another Sociology professor at UMass helped with his insights on the mater, stating that she is quite knowledgeable on the topic.

"That's really funny. Maybe it's

See PORNOGRAPHY on page 3

ARTS & LIVING
NOT SO PRIVATE

Bowker Auditorium played host to this year's presentation of "The Vagina Monologues" last Friday night. The event was a benefit for the charitable organization V-Day.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
LAX ATTACK

For the 13th straight time, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team beat rival Harvard in Cambridge. It was a huge road win for the No. 19 Minutemen over the No. 12 Crimson.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORAL & OPINION
COLUMN | SAVING THE DAYLIGHT

Nick O'Malley lost an hour of sleep this weekend, and his column looks to Daylight Saving Time for a reasonable explanation.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
VIDEO | RALLY IGNITES ON BOTH SIDES

Our camera was in the middle of the Amherst Common catching both sides of yesterday's rally. Catch the coverage on DailyCollegian.com.

Feed your future

See the difference 100 PwC interns made in Belize.

Begin at www.pwc.tv

PricewaterhouseCoopers

© 2009 PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP. All rights reserved. "PricewaterhouseCoopers" refers to PricewaterhouseCoopers LLP or, as the context requires, the PricewaterhouseCoopers global network or other member firms of the network, each of which is a separate and independent legal entity. We are proud to be an Affirmative Action and Equal Opportunity Employer.

A push for peace

COMMON from page 1

Feder said. "The fact that a state has been offered and extremists demanded more at this point shows that they don't speak for the general Palestinian population."

UMass senior Dan Keefe commented that the current situation, as well as a two-state solution, leaves Palestinians without basic human rights.

"They're trying to make a life for themselves, to regain what's been lost," Keefe said.

Many rallying in favor of Israel were motivated by their personal experiences in Israel – both good and bad.

Some SAFI members openly shared experiences they had while visiting Israel, both for family and education.

"When you go there, everyone is so connected," said UMass junior Josh Lutch, SAFI's tabling coordinator. "It's a place where everyone shares a common religion, a common culture. It's a place where you can live among people and not have to justify what you're doing."

Karen Sokolow, a freshman at UMass and SAFI's public relations coordinator, visits family in Israel every summer but considers both Israel and the U.S. her home. She described situations where she risked her life just to visit family members, and emphasized the pride that Israelis have in their homeland.

"I've never seen more pride towards a country," Sokolow said. "They're filled with joyous sentiments about how much they love their country."

She also stressed that yesterday's rally was a "first step in a long journey" to peace.

Both Keefe and Firrentino of the counter protest, said their motivation in their activism comes from a disagreement with occupation and injustice, which strongly leads in to their views on many issues.

Keefe emphasized that, in his view, any nation that functions as a "mechanism of oppression" needs to be "destroyed." Destruction, in this sense, refers to a radical change in a country's government and society.

One of the rally's speakers, Steven Grossman, a former chairman of the Democratic National Committee and the American Israel Public Affairs Committee, shared his sentiments toward a group of students working towards Sokolow's "first step."

"Today a group of young people committed to a strong Israel and the peaceful national aspirations of another people showed that they believe that these two things can happen simultaneously," Grossman said. "I hope that dialogue can happen with shared ideals and responsibilities."

With both sides equally charged, not everyone involved was entirely optimistic.

UMass freshman Elana Sable offered that even though she supports the cry for a two-state solution, it is most likely far into the future.

"We're both so passionate about it," Sable said. "It's a center for both religions. There's no way either of us will ever let it go."

Mike Fox contributed to this article.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu.

Dan Keefe (microphone) and Mike Firrentinto (peace sign) protest the two-state solution in a rally on Sunday afternoon.

SGA elections to be held on 10th, 11th

SGA from page 1

and that the students will be able to make a choice on a candidate that is most representative of them and their ideas," said Faulkner.

Undergraduate students will also vote on several residential area government officers.

Central Residential Area governor candidates are freshman David Robertson and junior Michael Weintraub. Central's lieutenant governor candidates are freshman Ashley Auger and sophomore Sarah Moffatt.

Running for Northeast Residential Area governor is unopposed candidate and junior Stephen Brown. In addition the candidate for Orchard Hill Residential Area governor is freshman Shalini Jayarama, also running unopposed.

Orchard Hill has the largest number of officer positions available during this election. Sophomore Heather DeRoy, currently the secretary of Orchard Hill is running unopposed for lieutenant governor of Orchard Hill.

Sophomore Matthew Coppellotti and freshman Kevin Truong are competing for Orchard Hill treasurer. Freshman Emily Warnock is running for Orchard Hill secretary.

Sophomore Michael Allatta and freshman Maria Burden are running for Southwest Residential Area governor. Freshman Taryn Bausch is vying for the position of Southwest treasurer.

Sophomore Michael Urbanowski is running for Sylvan Residential Area governor, and freshman Silvana Melo is running for Sylvan's lieutenant governor. Sophomore Christine Avery will be running for treasurer.

Students will also vote on two referendum questions. The first of which is in regard to the continuation of funding MASSPIRG through the $11 line item on UMass' student tuition bill. Currently, although it is a line item, it can be waived upon student request before paying the student's bill.

The second referendum question involves switching the location of student union's bike co-op with the student union's mini-store.

Absentee ballots will be available at the polls.

Comment from Mbaquike could not be reached in time for publication.

Students can vote at all dining commons and in UMass' Campus Center from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. A license or student ID is required to cast a vote.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu

Hilfiger highlights Dress for Success show

FASHION from page 1

the same suit a few times but did wear different blouses each time," said Hilfiger. "I ended up getting the job and buying several suits with my first few paychecks. I was young and probably talked too much, but it must have been okay, as I ended up with the job."

Many students who attended last year's event were graduating seniors who took advantage of Hilfiger's tips.

"The event gave me insight on real world situations, and I was able to apply what I learned while I interviewed," said UMass graduate Grisha Maziya, who now works in finance.

President of JLB, Sam Akiba said, "I think this event is going to be a great opportunity to talk to a woman who is obviously very well established in the fashion industry about how to make a great impression with your outfit. Just the chance to interact with someone who is so successful is reason enough to come to this event."

Hilfiger fielded questions from all the attendees. Students from the University of Massachusetts modeled during the event, which was in room 137 of the Flavin Auditorium in the Isenberg School of Management.

On April 7, JLB will host a culture in the workplace panel discussion with UMass professors about how their culture affects their career paths. Additionally, on April 24, a networking trip to New York City will be held where Jewish professionals will give career advice and help with networking.

Josh Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu

(Above) Courtney Ellison wears a warmer weather outfit. (Below) A student model goes casual during the "Dress for Success" fashion show.

Group connects volunteers, needy

CHOC from page 1

"I'm really more hopeful now because of who's in office now," Deshchenko said.

"I think that it's especially crucial to engage in discussion and work around health care issues in the current economic and social climate," said Deshchenko. "I hope that students of all majors and backgrounds join the group to share their different perspectives on the concepts of healthcare and what it means to them."

Currently, Deshchenko and Druar are putting out flyers advertising the group, talking to friends who might join, frequenting Facebook and giving short pre-lecture speeches.

But many larger groups start from such humble places. The idea, Deshchenko said, is to bring valuable learning experience from the classroom and apply it to causes of worth.

"Doing service with a local health organization definitely enhances my learning beyond the classroom," said Deshchenko. "So far, no textbook can match the learning I've done while volunteering."

"We know there are numerous students out there interested in these things. I think we can do more together," said Druar.

CHOC will apply for official Registered Student Organization status later this semester.

Ian Edward Detlefsen can be reached at idetlefs@student.umass.edu

Study: pornography, politics are linked

PORNOGRAPHY from page 1

even hypocritical," University of Massachusetts senior Dan Roy said. "[These types of restrictions cause] people to look for some sort of outlet. It makes me wonder if the people passing these laws are the ones who have the subscriptions."

UMass junior Max Lienchits agreed.

"If that's what the data shows, it has to be correct," Lienchits said. "If you restrict sexual activity you move people in the direction of pornography because it is more accessible."

Although the study does conclude that pornography subscriptions are higher in hypothetical communities that would agree to conservative religious statements and in states that have passed conservative legislation on sexuality, it does not indicate a divide in voting differences.

"I found no significant relationship between subscriptions to this adult entertainment service and presidential voting in 2004, based on poll data by congressional district," Edelman wrote. However they did find differences in the type of subscriptions people from "blue" states and "red" states.

Despite all these differences found, the study stated that interest in online adult entertainment was fairly consistent across the country and that "there's little sign of a major divide."

Dr. Tomaskovic-Devey said, "Clearly conservative politics does not produce sexually conservative behavior. It is more likely that socially dysfunctional communities produce conservative politics in an attempt to control behavior."

Sean McDonough can be reached at smcdonou@student.umass.edu.

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 29

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Waszerak
Production Manager Michael Surkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Leigh Greaney
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenwaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor P.J. Stanley
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kocxwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Leonard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo Ryan Fung
Assistant Photo Matthew Harrison
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Wellner

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently owned, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1907, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Bi-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kate Olesin

COPY EDITOR
David Humphreys

PRODUCTION TEAM
Brandon Silvia

your week ahead on Daily Collegian

Monday

NEWS
Our camera captures both opions from Sunday's Amherst Common rally on how to reach peace in the Middle East.

Wednesday

SPORTS
Collegian sports editors preview what the UMass Men's Basketball team faces this year as they head into the A-10 Tournament

NEWS
News Editor William McGuinness volunteers to have biopsies on his legs for UMass Research this Week. Catch pictures, audio and more as he goes under the knife.

NEWS
Catch a round table discussion about this year's SGA election with input from Collegian politics reporters and their editors.

Thursday

NEWS
Watch footage from "Hate Crimes (It's not what you think)."

HATE CRIMES
(IT'S NOT WHAT YOU THINK)
Conservative activist and author Don Feder on
"Hate Crimes Laws
and other Forms of Censorship"
The Left's Assault on Free Speech

Wednesday, March 11 at 7PM in the Cape Cod Lounge
Umass Republican Club and Young America's Foundation

ARMY NURSING
A CAREER PATH TO SUCCESS
WHO: ALL NURSING STUDENTS/ FACULTY INVITED
WHAT: ARMY ROTC NURSING SCHOLARSHIP INFO SESSION
WHERE: SKINNER HALL RM 012
WHEN: MON. MARCH 9, 12:15-1
WHY: LEARN ABOUT THE ARMY NURSE CORPS AND HOW TO RECEIVE A SCHOLARSHIP FOR FREE TUITION/FEES/BOOKS FOR REMAINDER OF YOUR DEGREE
FREE LUNCH!
University of Massachusetts Amherst Army ROTC
413-545-2321 – www.umass.edu/armyrotc

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 9, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

No need to spring ahead

Nick O'Malley

I lost an hour of sleep this weekend and someone's going to pay for it.

Like many other Americans, I fell victim to the wondrous bi-annual time warp known as Daylight Saving Time. Commonly referred to as Daylight Savings Time, because people care so little for it to actually look it up, the practice involves us changing our clocks because the government tells us to.

This will not stand. The U.S. government cost me an hour of sleep. And for what exactly? The ability to frolic in the park for another hour? To save electricity? Yeah, OK. People are going to leave their lights on all day and if you outside in a place where you can't get it lit or start a campfire, I don't want to be there.

If you're really a rebel, though, just keep the same schedule. You may fail all of your classes because you were an hour late for all of them. But you'd still be a wicked sweet anarchist.

This year marks the 93rd anniversary of the people of Europe being the first ones to arbitrarily change their clocks. Despite popular belief, it was actually the Germans to first implement the system. No, this is not an Anchorman reference. It was Germany.

Politics aside, I still want to exact sweet chronological revenge on whoever's idea this thing was.

My first reaction is to blame Benjamin Franklin. You know, because Nicholas Cage told me that the thing was Franklin's idea in "National Treasure." The truth is, Franklin presented the idea as mostly a joke and, in the end, really didn't do anything.

The real culprit here is Englishman William Willet, who, besides having a goofy name, was the first one to seriously lobby for the institution off Daylight Saving Time. However, Willet did not fight for Daylight Saving Time for any real benefit. He was just some rich guy who was tired of his rounds of golf getting cut short and people sleeping in on summer days.

Unfortunately, Willet spent his fortune trying to make Daylight Saving Time a reality and died before it was ever implemented. So time-based redemption probably won't be necessary.

The biggest issue here is not the implementation of Daylight Saving Time; it's the fact that the idea is really dumb.

If Daylight Saving Time is so awesome, then why do we change back to the miserable normal time every year? I mean, it must be awesome, it's capitalized and everything.

If Daylight Saving Time is so awesome, then why do we change back to the miserable normal time every year? I mean, it must be awesome, it's capitalized and everything.

In fact the only good thing that's ever come out of Daylight Saving Time is the idea that you're travelling through time. Think about it, when it was 1:55 that night, it was going to be 3 a.m. in five minutes.

Nothing reflected this better than that one episode of Pete and Pete where everyone got ready to go back through time and got ready for it by buying space-themed cereal and glow-in-the-dark stuff. Upon further reflection, this is exactly what I should have done early Sunday morning.

Instead, I was merely limited to matching the clock on my computer jump directly from 1:59 a.m. to 3 a.m. An hour of sleep - vanished. It is true that we'll all get that hour of sleep back in November, but it'll be cold then and I'll be sleeping in anyway.

You can try to sugarcoat the change by saying we'll get it back or trying to use black lights and glow sticks. But Daylight Saving Time is a terrible practice that makes people angry and late for classes because they forgot about it.

Fortunately, there's one state in the country that realizes the ridiculousness of this practice – Arizona. The state experimented with the time change for a year but later repealed the decision. The Navajo Indian Reservation that covers the northern part of the state, oddly enough, does still observe it.

This is the state that borders New Mexico, the only place where Pluto is still a planet, so I guess the people in the Southwest know what they're doing.

There have been other attempts to abolish Daylight Saving Time in Colorado, Florida, Alaska, but the bill has failed to pass in each instance. The country is not quite there yet in terms of realizing how dumb this policy is, but we're getting there.

For now though, forget you guys. I'm going to Arizona.

Nick O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Send Letters to the editor easily with Dailycollegian.com. Here's how:

1. Go to www.dailycollegian.com
2. Find the letter box
3. Click "Send to the Editor"
4. Write letter!

It Works, we swear!

Irish peace hangs in the balance

Paul Payer

Late Saturday night, two men parked outside the Massereene Army barracks in Country Antrim, Northern Ireland attempted to reignite the deep political, social, and religious divisions which tore apart a nation and people for centuries.

At approximately 9:30 p.m. GMT, the two men gained entrance to the base through the main gate by a following a pizza delivery car on a routine delivery. Armed with automatic machine guns, the two men opened fire on nearby military personnel, killing two British soldiers and injuring four more individuals.

The attack resulted in the first casualties associated with the conflict since the signing of the 1998 Good Friday Agreement in Belfast. That agreement granted Northern Ireland a devolved central government in Belfast which encouraged participation of all political parties committed to the peace process. The agreement set the future of Northern Ireland's constitutional status in the hands of the voters by requiring any decision on independence or inclusion into the Irish state to be made through a national referendum.

The agreement was widely qualified as a success and viewed as a validation of the commitment to the peace process by all sides involved in the conflict. The period of violence between 1969 and 1998 in which over 3,500 people were killed as a result of Republican and loyalist violence had largely came to an end.

Splinter groups on both sides of the conflict remained, but with their support and influence significantly decreased. Although the past decade has seen isolated attempts by these groups to reignite the tense emotions of the Troubles, they have largely failed to bring back the agonizing sectarian memories.

That changed early Sunday morning as citizens of Ireland and Northern Ireland awoke to news images which had been so painfully common during the Troubles. Instantly, concern spread through the island's Catholic and Protestant communities and throughout the halls of Dáil Éireann in Dublin and the Northern Ireland Assembly in Belfast.

What was uncommon, compared to the political and religious climate during the Troubles, was the overwhelmingly positive response by many in the Catholic and Protestant religious community. In Antrim, where the attacks occurred, Catholics and Protestants walked from their respective churches to the site of the attack of offer an interfaith prayer of reconciliation and desire for peace. Tony Delvin, a Catholic priest, proclaimed to a mixed faith crowd numbering in the hundreds.

The true test for continued peace will be how leaders of Sinn Féin and the Democratic Unionist Party ... react to the attack.

"We don't want those years of the past. They were horrible years for everyone," he said.

Although the initial reaction from the religious community in Ireland has been encouraging, the true test for continued peace will be how leaders of Sinn Féin and the Democratic Unionist Party (DUP), two of the largest political parties in Ireland, react to the attack.

Sinn Féin has increased its electoral success in the past few years, despite controversy over a historical association of some members with the Provisional Irish Republican Army (IRA).

During the past decade, they have proved that a commitment to the peace process is not mutually exclusive with a desire for a united Ireland. Their challenge following this attack will be to categorically denounce the attacks as obscene and counter-productive to the peace process, a stance that Gerry Adams, the President of Sinn Féin, wisely took on Sunday afternoon.

Failing to distance themselves from radical splinter groups such as Real IRA, which claimed responsibility for the attack Sunday evening, would ultimately undermine the party and its mission for peaceful progress on a unified state.

On the other side of the political equation rests Unionist politicians who must quell anger and dissent among militant loyalist groups which may seek retribution for Saturday's attacks. The response by the Police Service of Northern Ireland (PSNI) will significantly affect how the attacks are perceived and responded to by the general public.

The PSNI has been viewed with skepticism by many within the catholic community in Northern Ireland due to the historical association with unionist views, and was only recently accepted in January 2007 by Sinn Féin. A forceful and militant response by the PSNI would do far more harm than good, and may reestablish historical divisions between the catholic community and Royal Ulster Constabulary from which the PSNI was derived following the Good Friday Agreement.

Ireland has changed significantly since the height of the Troubles in the 1970s. This observation must be taken into consideration in the calculated responses by members of the political and religious oommunity in Northern Ireland, lest destructive sectarian violence consume the progress made across Ireland throughout the past decade.

In about a week, President Barack Obama will meet Sinn Fein leader Martin McGuinness and DUP leader Peter Robinson at the White House for a previously planned meeting. The meeting poses an unexpected foreign policy challenge for President Obama and will be certainly watched closely across Ireland and Europe.

Paul Payer is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at ppayer@student.umass.edu.

To seek the truth, seek the unknown

Eric Magazu

University of Massachusetts students are a creative bunch. Admittedly, there are a large portion of us who have so much to do in our classes and in our personal lives that we do not have much time to focus on larger causes. At the same time, there are many among our ranks that will eagerly join one or more student groups in order to advance certain issues or interests.

If one of us are among the latter, the more publicly engaged group, there seems to be a natural desire to win over our fellow students and fellow human beings to that way of thinking.

We often do this out of a sincere love for our neighbor. But it is important to examine both our own motivations, along with the hopes and desires of our fellow man, if we hope to make any headway.

There is an important story from world history that stems from a holiday that is little known in the secular world. This holiday is called Lag B'Omer.

The events surrounding this day occurred in the second century, several decades after the Romans destroyed the Second Temple in Jerusalem. At this time, Rabbi Akiva had founded an academy, or yeshiva, for the study of Jewish law.

The guiding principle of Rabbi Akiva's yeshiva was the commandment from Leviticus 19:18, "v'ahavta l'reacha kamocha," which teaches you should "love your neighbor like yourself."

According to tradition, Rabbi Akiva's students took this commandment quite literally to mean that each student should love his fellow-student so much that he should want his fellow to think exactly like himself. The tragic result was that, during a period known as the Omer, God sent a plague that wiped out nearly all of Rabbi Akiva's students.

The lesson we can take from this is that bearing the good news of our particular philosophical, religious or ideological belief system is fraught with danger. A comprehensive belief system, usually incorporating one or more of these elements, is sometimes referred to as a worldview.

Nevertheless, if your conscience demands a certain action, you are not free to give up on your work. Simultaneously, you cannot be afraid that you yourself may learn new information that transforms your own thinking on the subject.

The ideal student is not one who is looking for information simply to validate his own understanding of the world. We have to be prepared to challenge our own worldview. We ought to approach our search for knowledge not simply to confirm our worldview, but with a desire to teach ourselves the truth.

In our pluralistic and tolerant world today, it is sometimes hard to affirm the idea of truth as a fixed concept. But God and our consciences tell us that there is one truth.

It is essential to examine the way in which we can go on a quest for truth and simultaneously bring others along for the ride. To find truth, it is important for us to break out of our current place of comfort. With the right attitude, it can become fairly easy to make new friends, even within cliques and in places in which we were previously uncomfortable.

The ideal student is not one who is looking for information simply to validate his own understanding of the world. We have to be prepared to challenge our own worldview.

It is by engaging with the unknown that we will either strengthen our resolve in our current beliefs or otherwise abandon them for what we now realize is the truth.

Even before considering the relative merits of individual philosophies of life, it is remarkable just how similar the hopes and dreams of human beings are – even among Muslims in the Middle East. Americans would be vastly surprised to find that Muslims, similar to the biblical patriarch Abraham, are very friendly, quick to offer hospitality to strangers and share many of the same values as traditional America.

When it comes to approaching our fellow-man, especially if we do so with a desire to teach, it is critically important that we take on this task with complete humility and self-abnegation.

We must meet our friend right where he stands. This is not only because our own philosophy could be completely wrong, but because if we truly love our friend rather than wanting to make our own desires his desires. We do just the opposite.

A true friend will take on the yearnings and dreams of his friend as his own and seek to assist him in making these dreams into reality.

If you know your friend will stumble into a serious error, then you cautiously correct him with love. Otherwise, you must start right at the point where our friend is at. Not only will he realize that you are a true friend, and begin to recognize that your advice comes through sincere love for him, but you might just realize that, in fact, it was your friend who was right all along, and it was your worldview that needed correction.

Throughout your life, both in learning for yourself and in teaching others, it is important to acknowledge that there is only one truth, and that the search for truth is the most essential mission of every human life.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

War: good for absolutely nothing

Violence erupts when two different ideologies go head-to-head in an effort to declare one victorious and supreme and the other vanquished and lowly.

When I think of war, I think of the year 1776, Prohibition, Civil Rights in the 1960s, Iraq, Nazis, drugs, religion and fee increases. This undertaking that we call war may slaughter thousands with bombs, bullets and blades. It may also change the way millions think about the world in the aftermath.

Eric Tripoli

Still, war may also be seen simply as a way of life. US policies in Latin America have insured that, somewhere, there is a military conflict. This has been going down regularly since the 1840s. It is the most serious consequence of natural human contradiction that we know. Very little has changed. There is nothing new under the sun. So it goes.

Last week, I watched "Death in Gaza," a documentary that ends with the death of the directing journalist by Israeli forces. Before we see the flashlight fall suddenly to the ground, we're told the stories of several children caught up in the battle between the Israelis and Palestinians. To me, they seemed to be regular sorts of kids, with a dichotomous understanding that the war hasn't been waged forever, despite the fact it is all they have known.

Death of friends and family appeared to be a sickeningly normal occurrence. Bursts of gun violence, bodies in the streets, tanks crouched on street corners. The machine of war chewed up their cities and their homes and spit out the bones of the dead day after day and week after week.

Some Palestinian children wanted to grow up to fight and kill the Israelis. At this point, is it politics, revenge or tradition? My notion of truth would say that it is all of these and much more than any one person could conceive.

While war is not always a direct threat to many people, in reality it is a constant threat to every person in the world. The simple knowledge that war is possible between people should be the single scariest prospect we have to face. We have all seen the effects in history books, films, the news and our families.

A good friend of mine, Jeff Braun, who was with the 82nd Airborne in Iraq, died when the truck in his convoy rolled over and detonated an improvised explosive device (IED). A military funeral like that in small town like mine is a big deal.

The simple knowledge that war is possible between people should be the single scariest prospect we have to face.

To get back to my point, the threat of war is an absolute terror, whether it is the thought of barrel of a gun against your head or a devious ghost that lurks in the back of your mind.

War as a practice goes though an intense and contradictory metamorphosis. Wars are fought over property, politics and people. But what begins as an ideological matter is instantly dumbed down to a case of who has the biggest gun.

I see no honor, no glory and no purpose to a fight that comes down to a twisted and sick phallic comparison. I am sure that Latin America would love to have a break from our constant torments all in the name of "democracy" and "justice," two principles America was built upon but has had very little practice with since the beginning.

These days, it is not just good guys and bad guys; cops and robbers. The lines are made of fading gray. They are constantly forming and reforming. Being objective sounds like idealist talk, but one has to believe the best is possible when witnessing the worst of it all.

The international political climate has changed little since our elections – and why should it? North Korea has shown little interest in our presidential "changing of the guard," but that is of little surprise. Week after week, I am slowly becoming convinced that Kim Jong-Il was born with the 'cojones' to push the button and blow half the world into the sun.

Israel is still occupying Gaza and terrorizing the Palestinians. Mexico's drug cartel war is responsible for thousands of deaths in a surprisingly short period of time, inspiring vigilante groups to assemble and protect their own towns because of the corruption running rampant in the police and military. Don't forget about the arrest warrant issued for Sudanese president Omar Hassan Al-bashir, the Kenyan death squads and anything going on in China.

Oh, Barack Obama, why can't you just give the world a Coke and keep it company? Oh, that's right. He's still picking up the pieces left by his infantile predecessor and trying to superglue them back together in some sort of mosaic reminiscent of what we thought we used to be.

When all is said and done, it is nice to sit back, put up your feet and have some hot and fresh domestic policy again. I sincerely hope he has as much pizzazz on the international stage as he has had here at home.

Eric Tripoli is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at etripoli@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 9, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Between a woman's legs

'The Vagina Monologues' a delight at Bowker Auditorium

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

Private parts were not quietly referred to in Friday night's performance of "The Vagina Monologues" – in fact the words were yelled, screamed and cheered – to the delight of a near-sold out crowd in Bowker Auditorium at the University of Massachusetts.

"The Vagina Monologues," written by Eve Ensler, founder of the charity V-Day, is a compilation of women's stories about sexuality, their vaginas and their life experiences. Ensler interviewed over 200 women with questions ranging from "What would your vagina say if it could talk?" to "What was your experience being a 'comfort woman' for the Japanese army?"

Overall, the cast created a memorable experience and all seemed as though they had some dramatic training – if not, everyone was certainly fooled into thinking they had.

The performance was a benefit for V-Day – a worldwide campaign to stop violence against women and girls – costing students and low-income community members $5 and other community members $10. The show, put on by VOX: Students for Choice and the Everywoman's Center, raised a number of issues concerning violence against women including rape, female genital mutilation and sexual slavery.

However, the show wasn't all serious.

The performance had little in terms of set. A scrim ran down the back, highlighted with colored lights, with the 55 cast members behind it, creating a silhouette scene reminiscent of a weekend party. The girls would dance between scenes, which featured music by Katy Perry, Britney Spears and The Spice Girls, while making room for the two, three or four girls who would emerge to introduce or participate in each monologue.

The show started out on a slightly humorous note, with Emily Ayotte and Ali Wilson-Pierce playing the role of a woman whose husband wanted her to shave her pubic hair.

"There was no protection, there was no fluff. I realized then that hair is there for a reason. It's the leaf around the flower, the lawn around the house."

Women gave their opinion on what their vagina smelled like, looked like, what it would wear, what it would say and griped about tampons, "duck lips" and intercourse itself.

There were also monologues that

See VAGINA on page 6

Daniella Bordonaro, Amanda Molina, Jennifer Hudon and Jeidy Fernandez perform the monologue "The Vagina Workshop" in which a woman discovers while using a hand mirror, the many layers of her vagina during Friday night's performance of "The Vagina Monologues."

Calvin green with Irish

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

St. Patrick's Day brings many things to Massachusetts – parades, copious amounts of green attire, more marketing of the infamous Guinness Irish stout and the timely display of special musical talents.

The Saw Doctors, from Galway, Ireland, will travel to the Calvin Theatre in Northampton for a special holiday show.

"All of the countries [we play in] are different," lead singer Davy Carton said of playing in the U.S. "We just like playing nonstop. It's nice to be able to move around to different places - it's one of the nice things about touring."

The Saw Doctors, though, didn't start coming to the U.S. until 1997, nine years after they were discovered in the back room of Quays Pub in Galway, Ireland. The audience that came to see the band in those years were mostly Irish immigrants, which Carton says, "aren't around anymore. Most of them went back to Ireland."

"[Leo Moran], the guitar player, came to me and suggested that we could try writing a few songs," recalled Carton. "I was in a band back then called Blaze X and we had some few songs lying around and one of them was 'I Useta Lover.'

"The two of us kind of started writing songs together and got [some gigs]," said Carton. "It was one of those Tuesday nights [that we used to play in the Quay] in which we were discovered."

After juggling guitarists and drummers the band found immediate success.

"I Useta Lover," the bands most popular song, still holds the record for the best selling Irish single. For most of 1991, the bands first album, "If This is Rock and Roll I Want My Old Job Back," stood at No. 1. Also on the album were two other major hits for the band: "N-17," written after the main road that goes from Galway to the hand's hometown of Tuam and "Hay Wrap."

The band followed up their No. 1 album with another, "All The Way From Tuam." After following the release of their third album, "Same Oul' Town," the band decided to take its first major U.S. tour in 1997.

Playing in the U.S. near the Irish holiday, the band expects the crowd to be more energetic than usual especially with the new announcement of special guest, Maryland governor, Martin O'Malley. O'Malley has deep Irish roots and played in a Celtic rock band, O'Malley's March, in his earlier years.

"I think [the show] will have a bit of an extra kick about it because the guest of honor is Governor Martin O'Malley," said Carton. "One of the reasons we are playing in Northampton on that particular day is because O'Malley is the guest of honor in Holyoke. He'll join us for a song or two."

If you attend the show you'll surely see what made this band such a big hit back in Ireland: a lively atmosphere, encouraging a lively audience to sing along to each meaningful song about their lives and country that they adore so much.

Tickets can be purchased at the Calvin Theatre Box Office at 413-586-8686.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

COURTESY STEVE GERTICK

The Saw Doctors, from Galway, Ireland, will travel to the Calvin Theatre in Northampton for a special holiday show this St. Patrick's Day.

Cornucopia on campus

Farmers markets are appearing on many campuses, including the University of Southern California. The events promote a sense of an eco-friendly community.

By Mary MacVean
Los Angeles Times

A growing number of colleges are finding that campus farmers markets are a great fit, tapping into students' interest in sustaining the planet with an appealing combination of food, music and lots of people hanging out.

The idea is to be "better environmental stewards, to put a focus on where our food comes from, who grows it, how it gets to our plates," said Kevin Chang, a student leader of the Trojan Fresh Market, a monthly market of farm foods and other products at the University of Southern California.

At a recent market, the choices included fruit (Asian pears, Satsuma tangerines, apples), vegetables (multiple colors of carrots, potatoes, squash), flowers, bread and cheese. There were plenty of dorm-friendly choices: dried fruit and trail mix, dips and cookies. More than 2,000 shoppers showed up, said Scott Shuttleworth, the university's director of hospitality. The January market added a student jazz quartet.

USC is attentive to sustainable practices such as recycling, and the market provides a responsible, easy way for students, faculty and staff to buy food at a place that also promotes a sense of community, he said.

"It's really convenient to have good food, local food, here," said Marissa Ritchen, a freshman from Denver who was buying a pomegranate and a container of organic hummus at the November market. "It's kind of what I am used to."

Chang, who begins medical school at the University of Washington in the fall, said that because many students live in dorms without kitchens, it is important to offer bread, cheese and other foods that don't require cooking. Another issue has been convincing farmers that the market would be lucrative enough for them to spend time on campus, Chang and Shuttleworth said.

To address that, USC adjusted the usual farmers market model: The university buys the products from Southern California farms such as McGrath Family Farms in Camarillo and Santa Barbara Pistachio Co. and sets up the stands. The market accepts university dining cards as well as cash, and the university's dining-services operation takes any left-over food.

At the November market, John Kiddie of Nojoqui Farms in Lompoc, Calif., was invited to campus to talk to shoppers. "I was very pleased to see that the students were interested and want better food," he said later. His farm normally sells its wide variety of produce mostly to natural-foods distributors.

Shuttleworth said that having at least one farmer at the market was important to give shoppers a chance to talk with someone about "eco-friendly agriculture and organic and natural farming practices."

"It's part of being true to the spirit of farmers markets," he said.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture doesn't keep count of college farmers markets, said Debra Tropp of the agency's Agricultural Marketing Service. But she said she believed there were not many – yet.

"In my mind, there are two incredibly big, awesome components" to campus farmers markets, said Kathryn Andersen, a founder of the Princeton University market, which opened in 2007 and is run by students.

The first is that students at the market can meet faculty and staff, and with coffee for sale and student musicians performing, people stick around. The second, she said by telephone from Italy, where she was on a Fulbright scholarship, is having an on-campus connection to agriculture.

"Students can really understand where their food comes from," said Andersen, who grew up on a Pennsylvania farm and started a market with her family. "You can ask questions that you can't ask in a grocery store. What type of apples are these? ... Why would I want to eat a Stayman Winesap rather than a Pearmain?"

Other colleges with markets include the University of California, Davis, UC Santa Cruz and UC San Diego, as well as Stanford. Harvard, Brown, Portland State, the University of Minnesota, the University of Maine and the University of Arizona. Some markets are run by outside organizations, some with a combination of on- and off-campus sponsors.

At UC Davis, a campus book project inspired the farmers market. A committee planning events around a group reading of Michael Pollan's "The Omnivore's Dilemma" proposed the market. Funding from a Department of Agriculture grant and support from several campus groups, including health and dining services, led to the opening of a market in 2006, said Laura Rubin, a health educator in student health services. It now runs Wednesdays in the fall and spring quarters.

"The idea is really to change the environment around what foods are available," Ruhin said, citing surveys in 2005 and 2007 showing that more than half of UC Davis students ate two or fewer servings a day of fruits and vegetables. "Before the market, it wasn't very easy, necessarily, for students to choose to eat healthy on campus."

What's in a name? Facebook has the answer

BY MONICA HESSE
THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON – What Caitlin wanted did not seem that hard. She had signed up for Facebook after she married, as Caitlin Shaw. Now, to make it easier for old friends to find her, she wanted to add her maiden name. Her maiden name is Batman.

Facebook's name-change procedure suddenly required superhuman effort.

Because after Caitlin Batman Shaw, a mental health therapist in Arlington, Va., submitted the brief online form, she received an automated response rejecting her. The faceless gatekeepers of Facebook had decided her name could not possibly be real.

Batman Shaw appealed, and was rejected. Appealed, rejected. "The process took me three weeks" and several e-mail queries, she says, before she was finally able to use her full legal name.

She can join the Yodas, the Christmases, the Beers, the Pancakes and all of the other wannabe Facebookers whose online rejections represent the latest in a lifetime of name shame. And really, what's the point of Facebook if you can't be yourself?

"Try making a reservation at restaurants," says Tim Six. "I'd like a table for Six at 5 for three." His life reads like an extended "Who's on First?" routine, so the Springfield, Va., software developer was hardly surprised when Facebook rejected his application for an account.

The sad, sad stories of the denied.

"I've heard every Superman joke known to exist," says Becky Super. "People misspell it. People mispronounce it. People say it 'Supper.' " People say they've never met anyone else with that last name — and how could they, when Facebook denied the existence of not only Super, a Lorto, Va., landscape designer, but her extended family?

"I think they think we're trying to run a breakfast scam or something," says Bess Pancake, who, along with her sister and father (a former Washington Post editor) spent days trying to convince customer service that she was not a waffle shop on the prowl (Relationship Status: It's sticky).

Super, Six and Pancake were all eventually awarded accounts after appealing their rejections with Facebook, but that doesn't address the real indignity.

People like them have endured decades of name-related annoyance (No, clever sir, No one else has ever suggested that it would be funny if my first name were Five. You are a genius.

Perhaps they experienced childhood ostracism or contemplated name changes. And when they accepted their own quirky identity – to share it with the world and connect via Facebook like 175 million other people – they were prevented from joining the virtual sandbox. Grade school all over again.

"You don't grow up with a last name like Kisser without developing a sense of humor and an appreciation for the absurd," says Keith Kisser, an Oregon librarian. Facebook, however, is "clearly not in touch with the sometimes eccentric names that people have."

Facebook, via e-mails (of course), won't say how many names are on its blocked list or how often names are rejected. It occasionally happens when it appears the chances of fraud are greater than the chances that someone is really named, say, Seymour Butts. A name like Batman gets flagged by Facebook because, writes spokeswoman Meredith Chin, the number of real Batmans is probably "fewer than the number of people who could potentially misuse the name on the site." Applications coming from official-sounding e-mail addresses (batman@harvard.edu) are less likely to be rejected than those from random ones.

The network is based on "real people making real connections," according to a statement from another spokeswoman, Kathleen Loughlin, and so the company has various safeguards to prevent those saboteurs of the online world – impersonators and trolls.

There have been examples of deceit on Facebook. Last year, a university dean created an account under the name "Pedro Amigo" to spy on students, and a Moroccan engineer was arrested for impersonating Prince Moulay Rachid.

But really ... Pancake?

Often, the rejection can be overturned with a few e-mails to customer service, sometimes resulting in a nice explanation and apology: "The name 'Yoda,' also being the name of a popular Star Wars character, is on this list of blocked names," read a helpful e-mail sent to author Hiroko Yoda after her name was finally accepted.

But sometimes the back-and-forth seems too daunting, and Facebook users resort to evasive tactics:

There are several Facebook users with the pathetic, crippled surname "Lchristmas," because "Christmas" is sometimes a blocked name. Jeff College, a student at Messiah College in Pennsylvania, craftily became "Jeff College" in order to join "Facebook Hates My Name," a Facebook group containing College and a guy going by "Chris Blue."

After several failed exchanges with customer service, Miranda Batman – no relation to Caitlin – of Indiana decided her real name wasn't worth pursuing. Facebook had requested she fax a copy of her driver's license, and she worried about security.

Instead, Miranda signed up for an account as "Miranda Stewart," using her husband's bachelor surname. (He took on Batman when they got married because, well, wouldn't you?) Facebook immediately accepted the fake name. "Which is so ironic," the nursing student says, "Because that's what they're trying to" prevent. The only way for Miranda to overcome accusations of fraud was by ... committing fraud.

The longer that Miranda held onto the fake-name account, the more ridiculous it seemed. Her friends – the ones she'd joined Facebook to reconnect with – knew her as Miranda Batman, and were searching for her under that name. As Miranda Stewart, she couldn't connect with anyone. Finally, a lawyer friend agreed to intercede on her behalf, and after a few legalese e-mails, Miranda was awarded the right to use her own name.

It felt like a coup, but anyone who has spent much time on the site will wonder how it could have become such an ordeal to begin with. For all its safety walls, Facebook appears to be home to some people with very ... interesting ... names: Starkiller Unleashed. Dennis Ilovfakemiddlenames Lewis. Mojo Martini. Heywood Jablomie –more than 30 of them.

In a tucked-away Facebook forum, dozens of users complain that they are having trouble altering their names. Many protest that Facebook won't accept their real, legal names. But then there are also complaints like this: "Recently, my friend got into my account and changed my name to Bonquiqui Shiquavius," writes one forlorn user. "I have no idea why Facebook accepted this."

Indeed.

Vaginas take center stage

VAGINA from page 5

ran along a logical plot line as women related tales of their past.

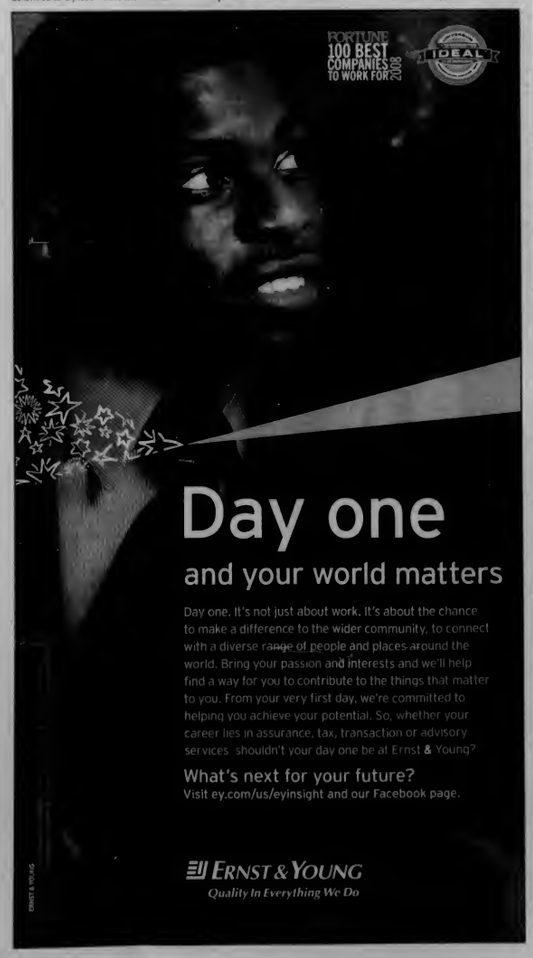
For instance, an interview with an elderly woman's experience in her dating years constituted an embarrassing moment where she was kissed. What ensued was "a flood," which got all over her date's new, leather car seat. After that, the woman – played by both Sandy Pagan and Kelly Lough – refrained from anything sexual, except in her dreams, where Burt Reynolds often appeared.

Most of the first half of "The Vagina Monologues" consisted of creating an understanding about women's private areas, how women are brought up to perceive it and how women feel about it.

"Because He Liked to Look at It," described as a piece where the woman had a good experience with a man, was a heartfelt story about a woman who considered her private parts very private. However, upon meeting ordinary Bob –who wasn't anything special – she learned to feel beautiful – even about the place between her legs.

After the intermission, the spotlight piece was introduced. "Baptized" The Democratic Republic of Congo (DRC) was shed light on during the show, a place ravaged with civil war and a fight for columbite-tantalite, or coltan (an ore present in every cell phone, laptop and many electronic devices), with many of the victims being women and young girls.

The four who introduced the spotlight were obviously incredibly struck by the horror in Africa, having an emotional effect on the actresses.



"Baptized" told the tale of Ensler's visit to a hospital in the DRC where she held a young girl. The girl had been raped so many times by soldiers that they had created another hole inside of her, which caused her bladder to be uncontrollable.

Although there were scenes depicting horrors of the past and in modern times, the show did tie in a great deal of laughter with the sadness. The audience reacted especially to references to different groups' orgasm noises such as the dorm room sexual experience, UMass girls (high pitched screams to "Go UMass!"), Catholic school girls and Disney princesses. The show did not hesitate to reference UMass and the surrounding community – with laughter and cheers emanating from audience members.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@dailycollegian.com

This year's presentation of "The Vagina Monologues" featured 55 cast members. The performance was a benefit for the charity V-Day.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.potterauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-insitutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

NEED AN APARTMENT?
PUFFTON VILLAGE
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

www.dailycollegian.com
more arts & living @

Godoi, UMass cracks Harvard

LACROSSE from page 10

victory – and 19th out of 20 – over Harvard in Cambridge. But more importantly for the Minutemen, they proved that they can compete with any team, anywhere. After failing to hold a four-goal lead and losing 11-10 on a last-second goal at then- No. 14 Hofstra on Feb. 21, a road win over a good team was exactly what UMass needed.

"We beat two good teams that we're very good teams, but teams that I guess you could say we were supposed to beat," Schneider said of the victories over Sacred Heart and Yale. "But to come down as an underdog again, on the road, and beat a very, very good Harvard team like that – it's going to give all of us a lot of confidence."

Entering the second half with a 4-1 lead, UMass' confidence could have been shaken in the third quarter – as the Crimson cut the lead to 5-3, constantly peppering Schneider with shots from all directions. Harvard outshot UMass 14-4, but none of that mattered when Connolly scored a crucial goal with 13 seconds left in the quarter to push the lead back to three.

Connolly made it look so easy, spinning away from a Crimson defender to launch a shot past goalkeeper Joe Pike.

"That was crucial and a huge goal for us," said UMass coach Greg Cannella, referring to weathering Harvard's offense and Connolly's tally in the third quarter. "Anytime in the game when you can fight something off and then take a step forward, as we did, that's positive energy going into the fourth quarter."

The Minutemen turned that energy into an early goal in the final period. Balise rifled a shot for his second tally to extend UMass' lead to 7-3 with 12 minutes, 25 seconds left in the game. Harvard never scored again: Schneider kept making spectacular saves, Godoi kept layering people out and the UMass offense played keep-away to run out the clock and seal the win.

The Minutemen led 2-0 10 minutes into the game. Harvard answered back, but UMass scored the only two goals of the third quarter to enter halftime with a 4-1 lead.

The Minutemen relished the victory and what it means for their team, but with a tough game upcoming against Albany on Tuesday, Cannella isn't celebrating for long.

"It builds confidence. To me it just means the team bonds together a little bit more and players can trust each other out there," he said of the win. "But we have a quick turnaround and you have to play another game. You continually have to prove that."

GAME NOTES

Rory Pedrick, Bobby Hayes and Art Kell each scored one goal for UMass. ... Connolly, Hayes and Pedrick all had one assist. ... The last time the Minutemen only allowed three goals was in an 8-3 win on March 22, 2005 against Sacred Heart. ... Godoi was called for four penalties, including a rare two-minute infraction for an illegal body check. ... UMass was 0-for-4 on the man-up, while Harvard was 1-for-6. Harvard won eight of the 12 face-offs.

Eli Rosenwaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

DIGAN TEAGUE/COLLEGIAN

UMass defender Diogo Godoi, right, approaches a Harvard player in last season's meeting. The Minutemen avenged the 2008 loss, defeating the Crimson Saturday afternoon in Cambridge behind spectacular defense.

UMass exits in 1st round of A-10s

W. BASKETBALL from page 10

Young scored the final four points of the half, pulling UMass within eight points of the Dukes, 33-25.

Just like in their previous matchup, the Minutewomen could not play team defense in the second half, as the 8-point lead would be as close as they would get.

Less than a minute into the second half, junior Keri Pryor put the Dukes up for the rest of the game with a jumper, as four players went on to score in double figures, with Prior leading the way with 16.

Guard Kristi Little added 13 points, including a game-best seven assists to go with her six rebounds and three steals.

"She really did a great job extensively and put a lot of pressure on our guards and between Sakera and Steph, we turned the ball over about five times," Dacko said.

The Dukes led in points off turnovers, 22-14 and fast break points, 18-7.

Forward Eve Pyle had 12 points while forward Samantha Prunier recorded a double-double with 10 points and a game-high 10 rebounds.

UMass was not impressive from the field, shooting just 31.1 percent. The Dukes were able to get to the line, and were 7-of-9 from the free-throw line.

The Minutewomen were impressive from the line, but could not buy shots from beyond the arc. Sophomore forward Ocie Mesgrino was just 1-of-4 from beyond the arc and Danella went 2-of-10.

The two teams met back on Dec. 14, as the Dukes came to Amherst and beat UMass 75-61 as Prior posted her sixth 20-point game of the season.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

The Minutewomen came up short in their Atlantic 10 first round meeting with Duquesne Friday night in Charlotte, N.C.

Seniors carry UM

HOCKEY from page 10

everyone got involved in the scoring except Scotty [Crowder], and Scotty isn't out there to be a scorer really, he gets a chip in now and then, but he's out there to make himself physically felt and he did a good job of doing that," Cahoon said. "All the seniors had a really good night which is a great way to be sent off."

Senior Cory Quirk scored the game-tying goal at 4:40 in the first after senior Alex Berry controlled the puck in the air and took a shot; Quirk deflected it into the goal while on the power play.

Senior John Wessbecker scored his first goal of the season and the game-winning goal at 10:53 in the first. Wessbecker stepped into the slot to pick up a loose puck and wristed a shot high past net-minder Andrew Braithwaite (32 saves). Quirk was awarded an assist in the game-winning goal, which was his 100th point of his career.

"Yeah I kind of planned it out," Quirk said jokingly about tallying his 100th point on senior night. "It's great that we played so well as a team, that's what we really need going into the playoffs and just as seniors I think its gratifying to go out in this building like that. I think it's a complete game that we played, there wasn't really any time we didn't have momentum or anything. It's a great victory for us."

Just 29 seconds after Wessbecker's goal, Mark Concannon tallied UMass' third goal after making a move past Merrimack's defense and shot high for the score. The Minutemen scored two more goals in the second from Berry and James Marcou and a Casey Wellman goal in the third.

The Minutemen were successful on aspects of the game they've struggled with, as of late. They didn't get into penalty trouble, as they have been known to do after taking a lead early on in the game (6-3 loss to Boston University on Feb. 27). UMass was called for seven penalties compared to Merrimack's nine.

"The team's ability to be able to compete at the highest level is predicated on its discipline and minimizing opportunities to proven power play units," said Cahoon. "We've struggled with that on a consistent basis and when we do exhibit the discipline that keeps us out of the box in a big way it makes all the difference in the world."

UMass went 3-for-6 on the power play, taking 13 shots while being a man up. Merrimack (9-21-4, 5-19-3 Hockey East) was 0-for-4 on the man advantage and took eight shots.

"The power play obviously threw the puck around pretty well, got some good looks, scored a couple of nice goals," Cahoon said. "It was a good night for us in terms of transition play, puck movement, taking control of the game and having the seniors lead the way."

The variation between Friday night's loss and Saturday's win was the team's ability to create chances on offense and finish them.

"The difference was we put six on the board and made it look like it was something we do a lot and the fact of the matter is sometimes goals come hard for us. In this league, goals come hard," Cahoon said. "We played 80 percent of [Friday] night pretty well, the way we wanted to play. But, 20 percent we took ourselves out of the game. [Saturday] night we didn't have a real 20 percent lapse, we might have had a 10 percent lapse."

GAME NOTES

Quirks 100th career point makes him the seventh Minutemen to reach the total. He had a goal and two assists on Saturday ... Paul Dainton was in goal on both Friday and Saturday, making 28 saves on Friday and 36 on Saturday ... UMass outshot Merrimack 38-37 on Saturday.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com.

Three Minutemen converge to celebrate a goal in UMass' 6-1 victory over last-place Merrimack on Senior Night. Six different players scored a goal for UMass, which will face Northeastern in the Hockey East Tournament.

Clegg dominant in Saturday's victory

BASEBALL from page 10

Dicato gave up three runs on six hits – three for doubles – in five innings. Nick Serino relieved Dicato after the fifth inning and things didn't get any better. Serino faced five batters, allowing four earned runs on three hits and one walk.

That put the game out of reach for UMass. Mitchell Eilenberg pitched the beginning of the eighth inning for the Minutemen, allowing a double and a triple and the final two runs of the game.

UMass played a strong game on Saturday, behind the stellar pitching of senior Mitchell Clegg (1-0). Clegg went seven innings, striking out nine and walking two while giving up only one run.

Catcher Tom Conley paced the Minutemen at the plate, driving in three while going 3-for-4. First baseman Peter Copa was second behind Conley with two RBI and two runs.

The bullpen almost cost Clegg the victory, despite heading into the eighth inning with a 9-1 lead. Relief pitcher Bryan Leigh faced just seven batters before he exited the game after allowing three earned runs. Mitchell Eilenberg gave up the same run total while also facing seven hitters.

Mike Gedman came in to face the final batter of the game to earn the save in a gut-wrenching 9-8 victory.

Speaking on the defense of his team overall, Stone noted that the final score on Saturday was far closer than it needed to be.

"We had a real good ballgame on Saturday," Stone said. "[But] it should've been a much easier victory for us. We made things more difficult than they really needed to be. We won the game 9-8 and we were just kind of holding on [to the lead]."

A win of this magnitude is important because beating a team like Arizona from a well-known conference like the Pac-10 is a confidence-booster to the younger players on the team.

On Friday, Arizona welcomed UMass to Tucson with a 13-4 assault on the Minutemen. Five different players drove in two runs for the Wildcats. Right fielder Matt Presley had two hits, a triple, two runs and three RBI. Starting pitcher Jared Freni (0-1) gave up five runs in five and two-thirds innings and earned the loss for UMass.

Garrett Butt relieved Freni and gave up four runs in one inning, followed by Glen Misho who gave up two runs in one inning of work. Freni recorded the lone strikeout in the game for the Minutemen.

Next on the schedule for the Minutemen is a meeting with Monmouth in Annapolis, Md on March 14 at 11 a.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Lowe beats buzzer for big win

PI SIGOUIN/COLLEGIAN

Chris Lowe goes up for a layup in UMass' first matchup with Rhode Island this season. Lowe hit the game-winner in Saturday's victory.

M. BASKETBALL from page 10

and grabbed two rebounds to lift the Minutemen in the final 2:06 of the game.

"I was proud of our seniors. I thought they really stepped it up. They took the team over down the stretch," Kellogg said.

After Baron's 3-point shot, Gaffney (six points, 10 rebounds) hit 1-of-2 free throws and Lowe hit two of his own to take the lead back, 67-66, with 1:46 remaining. But Baron answered back with another 3-pointer.

"There were some times down the stretch where Baron would hit a 3-pointer and this place would erupt and they went up a couple. I was a little nervous for awhile," Kellogg said.

Lowe, UMass' leading scorer with 18 points, would quiet the crowd on the next possession when he hit a jumper to knot the game at 69. Bonner added another on a free throw to give the Minutemen the one-point lead with 38 seconds remaining.

While Bonner gave UMass the lead with the free throw, he nearly gave the win to the Rams when he was called for a foul, his fifth of the game, with six seconds remaining. The foul put Marquis Jones on the line for two, which he made to take the one-point lead.

With six seconds remaining and the game on the line, Kellogg turned to his senior point guard.

"I gave it to Chris because you put the ball in your senior point guard's hands so they can make a play," Kellogg said following the victory. "I gave him the ball and said make a play."

Lowe would come through, but not without the help of Matt Glass.

"That was a blind pick [and] [Glass] did a heck of a job of finding Chris Lowe's man," Kellogg said. "That was the way the play was designed to get him and to give [Lowe] a look to make a play. It was a product of a designed play and those guys executed it.

"[Lowe] went through some guys and that was a good player making a good play."

Glass, as well as Tony Correia, would be huge off the bench for UMass, especially in the first half. Glass scored nine of his 13 points in the first half while Correia scored nine of his 12 points while going 3-for-5 in the first half from 3-point range.

GAME NOTES

UMass shot 37.5 percent (9-for-24) from 3-point range while holding URI to just 24.2 percent (4-for-19), including an 0-for-12 showing in the first half. ... UMass shot 53.8 percent (7-for-13) from 3-point range in the first half but just 18.2 percent (2-for-11) in the second half. ... The Minutemen were outrebounded 48-35, including 16-7, in offensive boards. UMass' bench outscored URI's bench 27-25 including outscoring URI's 24-15 in the first half.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

INTERSTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERENCE?

THE COLLEGIAN IS ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF BUSINESS MANAGER.

COME TO 113 CAMPUS CENTER TO PICK UP AN APPLICATION.

Flip out.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | | | 5 | | 3 | | | |
| | | 1 | | | | 3 | | |
| 8 | 3 | | | | | | 2 | 4 |
| | | 3 | 9 | | 5 | 7 | | |
| 7 | 6 | | | | | | 8 | 9 |
| | | 4 | 7 | | 1 | 3 | | |
| 1 | 9 | | | | | | 3 | 2 |
| | | 2 | | | | 6 | | |
| | | | 1 | | 6 | | | |

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Eighty percent of married men cheat in America. The rest cheat in Europe."

— Jackie Mason

WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK BY KID SHAY

CHEAP CITY BY MICHAEL CAPOZZOLA

LABRAT. BY RICHARD MARTELL

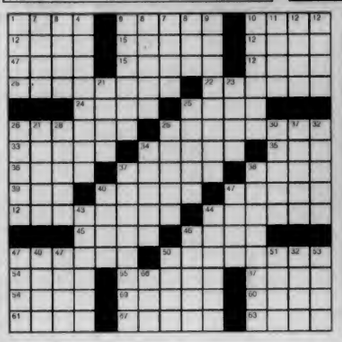
ACROSS
1 Garb for Nero
5 Hitchhike
10 Swear, casually
14 Baldwin of "Malice"
15 Clay or Frick
16 Perched upon
17 Half a Jim Carrey movie
18 Diameter halves
19 Okinawa port
20 Seven Cities of Cibola seeker
22 Tax Max noun
24 Engaged
25 Get an eyeful of
26 Stock capital
29 Party workers
33 Very angry
34 Beginners
35 Fetch
36 Drags behind
37 Type of closet
38 Morally low
39 Bay State cape
40 Hot and sticky
41 Candidate Ralph
42 Affecting the entire body
44 Go downhill
45 SWAT attack
46 Hey!
47 River to the Bristol Channel
50 Australian city
54 Lena of "Alias"
55 Limber
57 False god
58 Move laboriously
59 Of the kidneys
60 Have an opinion
61 Minced and Magliozzi
62 Abominable snowmen
63 Give lip to

DOWN
1 Drying powder
2 Hodgepodge
3 Toothed device
4 Gymnasts
5 Toss and turn
6 Intoxicating
7 Dismantle
8 Med. procedure
9 Old-time actress Spring
10 Zodiac sign
11 Flaming Gorge locale
12 NYC district
13 Hot tubs
21 Au naturel
23 Pub quaffs
25 Rowed
26 Glam and Moreno
27 Literary device
28 Sleepy signals
29 Skeptical sort
30 Euphemistic path
31 View twice
32 Howard or Isaac
34 Faint-hearted
37 Silver screen star
38 Waitresses in taverns
40 Listen to
41 Coward of theater
43 Prevailing movements
44 Steering devices
46 Dwight's rival
47 Bribes
48 Ms. Rutgerald
49 Orchestra member
50 ...and that __ hity!
51 Suggestion
52 Performs
53 Shade trees
56 Holy cow!

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach



THINK AHEAD

Two 6-week summer sessions

Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net

Registration begins March 9

SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
It may seem like your mind is teeming with new ideas, but in reality those are just common head lice.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
The UMass football team has gone too far in signing Terrell Owens to a one-year, $6.8 million contract.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Every time you play a game of Risk lately you channel the spirit of Alexander the Great in the heat of battle.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
It's about time you just coffed up the $25 donation to support the Amherst 65+ volleyball league. You go to every game.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
The stars collectively apologize for giving you such a crappy weekend, and will make it up to you with doughnuts.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Warning: Listening to Insane Clown Posse again might just wipe out your remaining seven brain cells.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
The phrase "when in Rome..." should never apply to doing crystal meth in Parkerville, Nebraska.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Do not, under any circumstance, agree to add the new "CIA Fun Facts" Facebook application.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Stop patronizing everyone (although I know that you try your best, considering how hard it is for you to, you know, do things and all).

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Go window-shopping for a new religion this week. I hear they have some good offers right now.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Attempting to drive off the top of the parking garage is a poor method of escaping payment.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You're going to be left wondering how the hell a trained surgeon could manage to leave an apple core in your chest cavity.

HAVE YOU SEEN THIS MAN?

Call the 24-hour Comics Page Hotline at

1-800-MDC-COMX

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

ANNOUNCEMENT

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblow-out.com or Montrealex-press.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900

FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St: 6 bed-room house- 2 baths, living room eat in kitchen, pantry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 miles to campus! www.amherstlin-colnrealty.com 253-7879

FOR RENT

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass. Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent start-ing June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

SGA ELECTIONS

VOTE

TUESDAY MARCH 10 & WEDNESDAY MARCH 11

SOUTHWEST SOUTH RESIDENTS:
BERKSHIRE DINING COMMONS 11:00 AM – 1:00 PM & 4:00 PM – 8:00 PM

SOUTHWEST NORTH RESIDENTS:
HAMPSHIRE DINING COMMONS 9:00 AM – 1:00 PM & 4:00 PM – 8:00 PM

CENTRAL AND ORCHARD HILL RESIDENTS:
FRANKLIN DINING COMMONS 9:00 AM – 1:00 PM & 4:00 PM – 8:00 PM

SYLVAN, NORTHEAST, AND NORTH RESIDENTS:
WORCESTER DINING COMMONS 9:00 AM – 1:00 PM & 4:00 PM – 8:00 PM

COMMUTER RESIDENTS & GRADUATE STUDENTS:
CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE 9:00 AM – 1:00 PM & 4:00 PM – 8:00 PM

ABSENTEE VOTING:
ALL POLLING PLACES

NOTE: DRIVER'S LICENSE OR STUDENT I.D. REQUIRED TO VOTE

Sean McNair - Chancellor of Elections
(413) 545 - 0341 - electionscommission@ stuaf.umass.edu

ELECTIONS COMMISSION UMASS
THE STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION AMHERST

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 9, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Led by a stellar performance from senior goalkeeper Doc Schneider (14 saves), the Minutemen shut down No. 12 Harvard, 7-3, in Cambridge Saturday afternoon. UMass has won 13 straight games over the Crimson on the road.

Rival, No. 12 Harvard no match for UMass

Godoi, Schneider set tone in impressive win

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Jim Connolly sniping in goals; Doc Schneider denying everything in net; and a No. 18 flattening anyone in his way – sound familiar?

With each game, the 2009 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team looks more and more like the 2006 version that finished one win short of a national championship. That's bad news for the elite teams in college lacrosse.

Harvard saw first-hand Saturday afternoon.

Behind three of their stars, the No. 19 Minutemen dominated the No. 12 Crimson in Cambridge, leading from start to finish in a 7-3 victory in a meeting between two heated rivals and nationally-ranked teams.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 7 |
| Harvard | 3 |

"I get pretty angry – nothing against Harvard or anything," said UMass defender Diogo Godoi, who set the tone for an extremely physical game with a number of bone-crunching hits. "I'm from New Hampshire lacrosse-wise, I don't really bring lacrosse skills to the game per-se – so I try to bring what I can and being physical is definitely one of my strengths."

Whenever Harvard (2-1) managed to avoid getting leveled by No. 18, Schneider (14 saves) further demoralized the Crimson by stopping shots one after another. Harvard easily oulshot the Minutemen 39-21, but UMass' All-American candidate at goalkeeper denied virtually every attempt en route to a career-best three goals allowed.

"He really bailed us out a couple of times," junior midfielder Bobby Hayes said of Schneider. "A couple of big saves always sparks us on offense."

And per the norm for the Minutemen (3-1), it was Connolly and Tim Balise that provided it. The senior attackmen each scored two goals, giving UMass all the offense it needed with Schneider and Godoi – who plays a lot like former No. 18 Jack Reid – anchoring the defense.

Saturday's game marked UMass' 13th consecutive

See LACROSSE on page 7

High point, low point

FJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Chris Lowe's layup with 0.6 seconds left gave the Minutemen a 72-71 win over Rhode Island Saturday afternoon in the regular-season finale. UMass will play Duquesne in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament Wednesday.

FJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Junior point guard Kim Benton and the Minutewomen fell to Duquesne, 72-51, in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament Friday night in Charlotte, N.C. UMass finished the season at 12-18.

Lowe's last-second shot clinches 10-seed

BY JEFFREY R. LARNARD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Chris Lowe's layup with 0.6 seconds remaining, in Saturday's 72-71 victory over Rhode Island did more than just steal a victory from the Rams.

For the Massachusetts men's basketball team, it moved it from the No. 11 seed in the upcoming Atlantic 10 Tournament to the No. 10 seed, prevented URI from clinching a share of the A-10 regular season title and severely hurt its chances at an at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament as well as give UMass more momentum than it has had all season long in conference play.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 72 |
| URI | 71 |

"Rhode Island played very well and put themselves in a position to win the game at the end," UMass coach Derek Kellogg said after the game. "In college basketball, it's funny. Some games the ball goes in, some games it doesn't."

This time the ball went in for the Minutemen (12-17, 7-9 A-10), unlike so many other times this season, and it gave them two straight wins in conference play for the first time this season. And just in time for the A-10 Tournament.

UMass will face seventh-seeded Duquesne Wednesday at 6:30 p.m. for a first-round matchup in Atlantic City, N.J. The Minutemen fell to Duquesne, 94-77, earlier in the year at the Mullins Center.

For the first 17 minutes, 36 seconds of the second half, UMass looked on course to take the upset. But after the Rams' Jimmy Baron hit a 3-pointer to give URI (22-9, 11-5 A-10) a 66-64 lead, its first lead of the half, it appeared the Minutemen would fall down the same path they have for most of the season – letting a game slip from their grasp in the final few minutes.

But just as the Minutemen's three seniors took over Wednesday's game against George Washington, they did the same against the Rams. After Baron, the game's leading scorer with 22 points, hit the 3-pointer for the lead, the combination of Lowe, Tony Gaffney and Luke Bonner scored the final eight points for UMass

See M. BASKETBALL on page 7

Dacko and Co. fall to Dukes, season ends in A-10 first round

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Experience and a tied scoring record were not enough, as the Massachusetts women's basketball team found a way to lose its second match-up of the season with Duquesne Friday night.

| | |
|---|---|
| Duquesne | 72 |
| UMass | 51 |

The Minutewomen (12-18, 5-10 A-10) fell to the Dukes (20-10, 10-6 A-10), 72-51, in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament despite a combined 29 points from senior guards Sakera Young and Stefanie Gerardot.

"I thought we were extremely prepared going into the game and we knew what to expect, but we just couldn't put the ball in the basket," UMass coach Marnie Dacko said.

Young added 16 points and two steals, while Gerardot contributed 13 on 4-of-4 shooting from the free-throw line.

Danella, the next highest scoring player for the Minutewomen, had six points, two blocks and a steal.

Sophomore forward Teya Wright was again a big post presence, leading UMass with nine rebounds and three steals while freshman forward Nicole Jones matched her career high with eight rebounds in 22 minutes off the bench.

However, the Dukes were just too big on the glass, holding a 51-31 rebounding advantage throughout the game.

"They really destroyed us on the boards, and that can't happen going into championship play," Dacko said.

Duquesne generated most of their offense in the lane, holding a 36-22 advantage in points in the paint.

Five minutes into the first half, the Minutewomen fell behind 14-7 before scoring 10 straight points to pull in front of the Dukes, 17-14, thanks in part to a pair of 3-pointers by Danella and Gerardot.

Danella's 3-pointer was the 58th 3-point shot this season for the freshman which tied the program record set by guard Katie Nelson during the 2004-2005 season.

"I think she has a huge future with our team and we wanted to get her working on her post game and she really wants to work hard," Dacko said.

A field goal by Young with just over 10 minutes to go in the first half gave the Minutewomen a 1-point lead, but over the next seven and a half minutes, the Dukes responded and took a 33-21 lead.

See W. BASKETBALL on page 7

Arizona takes series over Minutemen

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At the beginning of a season, most teams need time to get back into the rhythm of playing regularly. Sometimes players just don't have enough energy to finish a three-game road trip off strong – especially on teams that have to start the season later than most due to New England weather.

| | |
|---|---|
| Arizona | 9 |
| UMass | 0 |
| UMass | 9 |
| Arizona | 8 |
| Arizona | 13 |
| UMass | 4 |

The Massachusetts baseball team dealt with all of that this weekend, dropping two of three games against Arizona.

The Wildcats outscored the Minutemen, 31-12, throughout the weekend series. The Arizona bats were never silenced, scoring at least four runs in each of the three games this weekend.

UMass coach Mike Stone believes that, even though his team lost this series, the weekend wasn't completely full of negatives.

"I think that we handled it pretty well," Stone said of playing a team as well put together as Arizona. "I think our approach through all three games was all business and we weren't intimidated at all. I was impressed and I feel good about that part."

Sunday's game wasn't a positive for UMass (3-2). The Wildcats blanked the Minutemen, 9-0, and UMass mustered only four hits in the game and struck out nine times. Minuteman pitchers didn't have that kind of production. Stone used five pitchers during the game but only starter Mike Dicato (1-1) managed to strike a batter out.

See BASEBALL on page 7

Senior Night dominance

Mass Attack splits weekend pair with last-place Merrimack

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The last weekend of regular season play didn't matter for the Massachusetts hockey team to receive a berth to the Hockey East playoffs, but it did provide momentum for the upcoming tournament.

The Minutemen played a home-and-home series with Merrimack, losing in overtime 3-2 on Friday and coming back on their senior night to win, 6-1 on Saturday at the Mullins Center.

| | |
|---|---|
| UMass | 6 |
| Merrimack | 1 |
| Merrimack | 3 |
| UMass | 2 |

While the two games over the weekend meant nothing for UMass' seed for the upcoming tournament, other games over the weekend had serious implications.

Prior to the weekend, it was unknown whether the Minutemen would play Northeastern or Boston University in the first round. But after BU swept Providence and NU went 1-1 against Boston College, the Huskies fell to the No. 2 seed in the tournament and will face UMass.

The Minutemen will have one week of practice before taking on Northeastern on Friday.

"[Saturday's win] gives you some momentum and confidence, but I think the post season is completely different and we're really going to have to buckle down next week in practice and use the momentum from [Saturday] night and harness that into something that we can build off of going into Friday night," said UMass coach Don Cahoon.

FJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Justin Braun and the Minutemen finished the regular season with a 6-1 victory over Merrimack Saturday night at the Mullins Center.

Saturday's game began with a breakdown of UMass' net-front defense and a goal by Merrimack's Joe Cucci 1 minute, 30 seconds into the game. Ryan Flanigan had the puck low on the goal line and passed it to the slot where Cucci was left open at the back door for the score.

After Merrimack's goal the Minutemen (15-18-3, 10-14-3 Hockey East) came back and didn't let up – they scored six unanswered goals from six different players, including points from six of the seven seniors that were honored that night.

"Great night for the seniors,

See HOCKEY on page 7

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HI: 46 LO: 33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MARCH 10, 2009

Candidates face off in SGA election

Faulkner, Davidson aim to better inform and involve students, work with administration

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The time for the University of Massachusetts spring general elections for the positions of Student Government Association (SGA) president and student trustee have arrived.

In the running are partners Chris Faulkner for president and Josh Davidson for student trustee.

Since his freshman year of college, Faulkner has been involved in student government. He began as a member of Washington Hall's house council in the Southwest Residential Area, and became lieutenant governor of Southwest Area Government in the beginning of his sophomore year. During his spring semester, he earned the position of governor, which he still holds.

Faulkner, a junior biology major, believes it is the experiences he has dealt with in these positions that qualify him to be SGA president.

Davidson, a resident assistant at John Adams Hall, was appointed senator by Faulkner earlier this year. This standing motivated him to run for trustee.

"Being in the senate, and seeing the problems we have with the SGA, opened my eyes," said Davidson, a sophomore pursuing a double major in political science and economics. "I think there are things that need to be fixed, so I decided to step up."

Both candidates stress that the SGA has not had a positive relationship with the administration, which is something they hope to change.

This will be done by having a higher focus on looking at the SGA internally and how it benefits students and by reshaping the kind of culture of the SGA, he said.

"The SGA has been lacking in creating a voice for students on campus," said Faulkner. "We want to increase the ability of students to have their voice heard."

They plan to make this new reform happen by creating more relationships with Registered Student Organizations (RSOs), formulating a list of priorities of what students are interested in, and efficiently proposing that to the administration.

"Student government should be a resource for students on campus, but the SGA hasn't done enough of that," said Davidson. "The SGA should provide resources for all students to advocate about their events, not just to focus on their own advocacy."

Candidate for SGA President Chris Faulkner, left, stands with his running mate Josh Davidson, who is a candidate for Student Trustee.

By reevaluating and re-tasking positions in the executive cabinet, Davidson said he hopes not only to improve the SGA as a whole, but to create a position that deals only with RSOs as well. This way, he said, more attention and focus can be given to those students.

A more accessible and up-to-date website is also something Faulkner and Davidson plan to accomplish if elected. Information about the SGA, what it does and a place for RSOs to advertise their events and activities will be present on the new site.

An effort to form better involvement of the SGA with area governments and house council is another important part of their campaign. Increasing communication between the groups will allow for the SGA to be more informed of current events, and of any issues that transpire.

Davidson hopes that a regular contribution to The Daily Collegian, written by the executive branch, can be published to inform students of what's going on in the SGA.

"[The Collegian] is a tremendous resource to take advantage of," he said.

Faulkner stresses that he and Davidson are students, just like any other on campus, and intend to focus on providing students with things they need.

This will be done by working closely with the administration, and improving educational and social experiences of students on campus, such as bringing wireless Internet to the dorms, and creating a better relationship between students and the UMass Police Department (UMPD), so that UMPD is looked at as more of a resource than something to fear.

Overall, Davidson wants students to be less apathetic toward the SGA, and encourages its members to be more involved in student government.

"More than us winning, or any plan we have, we want a higher voter and student participation in student government," said Davidson. "A lot of students don't know what the SGA does and that absolutely has to change."

The SGA elections will be held today, March 10, and tomorrow, March 11, in campus dining commons and in the Campus Center.

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu.

Mbawuike pushes for 'student empowerment,' Bloch promises affordable higher ed goals

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University of Massachusetts students Ngozi Mbawuike and Emily Bloch have decided to campaign together as Mbawuike runs for student government president and Bloch for student trustee in this year's Student Government Association (SGA) elections.

MBAWUIKE

Mbawuike is a junior and a microbiology/pre-medical major from Boston. Though not entirely sure of her future career plans, she is looking at different graduate schools to pursue after college.

A resident assistant in Cance Hall in the Southwest Residential Area, Mbawuike is the current vice president of the African Students Association on campus, a member of the Cape Verdean Student Alliance and the Black Student Union, and is involved with the newly developed UMass Registered Student Organization (RSO), FaceAids.

Mbawuike's leadership positions in these organizations led to her decision to run for SGA president.

"I thought that I had the qualities that are necessary to be SGA president, and I have led RSOs. And I want to make students more aware of what the SGA can do for them," said Mbawuike. "The SGA is where the students' voices can be heard."

Among the highest priorities of her platform is the strengthening of the relationship between the SGA and the student body.

"What I feel very strongly about is the point of student education and empowerment, and what this means to me is getting students involved in the SGA. This includes doing and building better communication between the students and the SGA," added Mbawuike.

Mbawuike cited a new SGA website, bi-monthly SGA newsletters, regular contributions to media outlets and a plan to restructure the secretary of public policy into the secretary of outreach and education as part of the campaign's plans to become more accessible to the student body.

On the lack of student involvement, both in terms of voting and with the SGA itself, Mbawuike said she believes neither is to blame, only the lack of communication between the two.

"It's not that [students] don't want to get involved, it's that they don't know how to get involved. I work in a freshman dorm and many of them want to get involved but aren't sure how. Its not that the SGA has been doing something wrong, but I think that communication can be improved," said Mbawuike.

Emily Bloch, left, candidate for Student Trustee, stands with her running mate, Ngozi Mbawuike, candidate for SGA President.

Another issue she feels is of great importance is student safety on campus.

"I definitely feel that we need to increase student support and safety that make our campus a lot safer," explained Mbawuike. "Instances of rape, hate crimes and threats, students need to be informed of. What we plan on doing is creating a bi-monthly meeting to help develop this and reduce these occurrences on campus. We also currently want to work with the administration to develop a hate crime policy, as there is no current policy for them."

BLOCH

Mbawuike's running mate and candidate for student trustee, Emily Bloch is a sophomore from Brookline, Mass. Currently undeclared, Bloch plans to be a public health major and hopes to some day work in health care.

With one of her most important campaign promises being a pledge to keep UMass affordable for all, Bloch is involved with Center for Education Policy Advocacy, an agency of the SGA, and Massachusetts Students United, a non-profit organization working for more affordable higher education.

"I decided to run because I have been doing work for education affordability, and I know that the board of trustees has a lot of power with making education affordable. I would like to be a strong student voice for more affordable education," said Bloch.

Bloch emphasized her belief in UMass as a public institution, with its affordability reflecting that sentiment.

Of her own hopes for the election, Bloch cited the importance of student involvement, especially with voting in the SGA elections.

"Of course, I hope many students will vote. Real student leadership is important," said Bloch.

The SGA elections will be held today, March 10, and tomorrow, March 11, in campus dining commons and in the Campus Center.

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebenedictis@dailycollegian.com

Ferraro to speak on Obama's policies

BY MATT ROCHELEAU
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Mount Holyoke College professor Vincent Ferraro will tackle the question of whether President Barack Obama's foreign policies are realistic or idealistic during a lecture Tuesday night in Campus Center room 65 at 7 p.m.

The Ruth C. Lawson Professor of International Politics at Mount Holyoke, Ferraro will speak about how the commander in chief has pursued foreign policy so far in his presidency.

Ferraro's talk will focus on the paradoxes of what some feel is a realist handling of policies in Pakistan, Afghanistan, Iraq and Russia by Obama versus the president's more idealistic set of policies on Iran, China and North Korea.

"He will pretty much speak on what Obama has done already in terms of foreign policy and what Obama will do in the future," said Ashley Coulombe, a senior journalism major and press director for the UMass Democrats, which is hosting the event. "I'm looking forward to seeing him because I've been busy watching what's going on with the economy and what's going on domestically."

Ferraro is a specialist in changes in international relations since the end of the Cold War and American foreign policy.

"His expertise is foreign policy, but if the topic [of domestic policy] comes up, I'm sure he would share his thoughts," said Coulombe.

In 2007, Ferraro came to UMass to speak with former National Security Advisor Anthony Lake, who was then serving as chief foreign policy advisor to Obama when he was a senator, and tonight will speak shortly about his support for the senator's bid for the White House.

"Everyone that was there just loved him," said Coulombe recalling Ferraro's previous visit to UMass. "He's really a great speaker."

Ferraro is completing a college textbook covering such topics as imperialism, balance of power, global poverty, causes of war, deterrence, terrorism and global environmental problems.

Ferraro's scholarly work in international relations includes several articles on global poverty, Third World development and global debt in such journals as the World Policy Journal, the International Journal of Social Economics and the Journal of Interdisciplinary History.

He has also written articles on global interdependence and the politics of energy and served as a local media resource during the oil embargo.

Ferraro teaches world politics, American foreign policy and international political economy at Mount Holyoke, and world politics at UMass.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrochele@dailycollegian.com.

Vincent Ferraro is an International Relations professor at Mount Holyoke College, and teaches World Politics at UMass.

ARTS & LIVING

IT'S STILL U2

U2 released its first album in five years on March 3, "No Line On The Horizon," but it fell short of the bands previous records.

SEE PAGE 6

SPORTS

UMASS AT ALBANY

The Minutemen travel to Albany, N.Y., to take on Albany at 4 p.m. UMass is coming off an all-important win against Harvard last Saturday.

SEE PAGE 12

EDITORAL & OPINION

SGA PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES CHRIS FAULKNER AND NGOZI MBAWUIKE DISCUSS THE ROLE OF THE STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION IN THE DAY-TO-DAY LIVES OF UMASS STUDENTS.

SEE PAGE 5

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SGA STUDENT TRUSTEE CANDIDATES EMILY BLOCH AND JOSH DAVIDSON EXPLAIN THE ROLE ACTIVISM WOULD PLAY IN EXPRESSING THE CONCERNS OF STUDENTS TO THE UMASS ADMINISTRATION AND STATE OFFICIALS UNDER IF THEY WIN THIS WEEK'S ELECTION.

SEE PAGE 5

HATE CRIMES

(IT'S NOT WHAT YOU THINK)

Conservative activist and author Don Feder on

"Hate Crimes Laws

and other Forms of Censorship"

The Left's Assault on Free Speech

Wednesday, March 11 at 7PM in the Cape Cod Lounge
Umass Republican Club and Young America's Foundation

your week ahead on Daily Collegian

Monday

NEWS
Our camera captures both opions from Sunday's Amherst Common raliy on how to reach peace in the Middle East.

Wednesday

SPORTS
Collegian sports editors preview what the UMass Men's Basketball team faces this year as they head into the A-10 Tournament

NEWS
News Editor William McGuinness volunteers to have biopsies on his legs for UMass Research this Week. Catch pictures, audio and more as he goes under the knife.

NEWS
Catch a round table discussion about this year's SGA election with input from Collegian politics reporters and their editors.

Thursday

NEWS
Watch footage from "Hate Crimes (It's not what you think)."

Campus Perspectives
What is your opinion on this matter?

Are you planning on voting in the Student Government elections tomorrow? Why or why not? Did you vote in the SGA elections last year?

By Alyssa Creamer, Collegian Staff

sophomore
Kinesiology major

"No, I don't plan on voting. I don't know much about the elections. If I had an interest, I guess I could find that sort of information. That's not good that the candidates only have 10 days to campaign. I did not vote this past fall because I did not know about the elections."

-Ben Studley

sophomore
Design and Architect major

"Yes I do plan on voting Tuesday. I feel it is important for the campus community to be involved in the outcome of elections, because the people that are elected will have a huge impact on what goes on at our school. Voting is a small way for us to voice our opinions in a large way. I voted last year, I was happy with the outcome. The person I voted for won."

-Jose Cotto

freshman
History and Education major

"I am probably not going to vote on Tuesday. I don't really know who the candidates are. Some girl knocked on my door, but I don't remember who she is. I don't even really know what SGA is. I did not vote in the fall, because I didn't think it was really that important."

-Marta Maietta

sophomore
Sociology and Spanish major

"I didn't vote, and it is not because I don't care about the issues on campus. I do care about the various dynamics of campus life and I know SGA is important. However, I am involved in a lot of other things, and the politics on campus is something I just have not been interested in. I am not planning on voting today. I also did not vote last year because of similar reasons."

-Rachel Condry

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 30

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Wanczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olsein
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Deemer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Leigh Greaney
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenzweike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor P.J. Stanley
Web Editor Victor Jaerk
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolniere
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kocrwarn
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Assistant News Lian DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo Matthew Harrison
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Weliver

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1996. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Joe Meloni

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION TEAM
Dan Centola

Escape For An Evening To Japan

Sample Contemporary and Healthy Cuisine and Explore the Culture of Japan

Meet Guest Chef/Cookbook Author,
Hiroko Shimbo

Tuesday, March 10
from 4:30–8 pm

Exclusively At The Oakroom
Worcester Dining Commons

- Japanese Tea Ceremony
- Food Demonstration

UMass Dining partnering with IPO (International Programs Office)
Jones Library
Japan National Tourism Organization
House Foods America Corporation

House Foods America Corporation

RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Awards
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 10, 2009

"FREEDOM OF SPEECH IS OF NO USE TO A MAN WHO HAS NOTHING TO SAY..." - FRANKLIN DELANO ROOSEVELT

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The U.S. government under SGA-style law

Jon Peterson

What would the nation be like if the Student Government Association was the actual government of our nation?

The presidential debates would be less than 1/100th as popular as they are now, for one thing. There wouldn't have been 70 million people watching the candidate's debates, as The Daily Collegian attended the SGA's presidential and trustee debates and counted about 50 people present, out of a voting body of more than 18,000 eligible voters.

Voting would largely be arbitrary and many voters would just decide who they would vote for when they actually went to cast their vote.

The elected officials would be figureheads who couldn't actually do nearly as much as people they would claim would vocally make remonstrations against. Many student leaders recently were active in protests in opposition for what is to be a $1,500 raise in the student tuition and fees during the next academic year.

Currently, such an objection, if taken before the Student Senate and passed, would merely be noted as the student body's opinion to the members of the Universities Board, who actually deal with the financial issues that are necessary to keep the school running.

In reality, our government can do much more to persuade certain groups into giving their money, such as having the power to send them to jail. This leads to the next difference: If the Student Government Association ran our nation, they would have what political philosophers now call a monopoly on the legitimate use of force. That is, as the government they would have control of military and police forces to enact their will.

The SGA has no such power now.

But if the SGA actually was a government power, we would come to think of it as oppressive to some parts of the population while it was also unduly benefiting certain constituents, namely the people who they knew had and who would probably vote for them again in the future.

At a recent protest of the fee hike in which student leaders participated, Student Trustee Lindsay McCluskey said of the fee increases, "We feel that it is an unnecessary fee increase because we know that money is coming in from the federal stimulus package that will hopefully alleviate UMass' operating budget."

If the SGA was our government, we would be taking on massive debt that we would not be willing to pay now, specifically to appease the people who were voting for the candidates.

Minorities of people would be expected to pay for comforts and hard decisions that we would not be willing to make now.

If the SGA was our government, we would be taking on massive debt that we would not be willing to pay now, specifically to appease the people who were voting for the candidates.

If a politician focused on getting students to vote for them, many would campaign saying they would try to get perks – like a mortgage on money not yet created.

This way, they wouldn't have to make tough decisions like calling for cuts in school funding of activities, faculty or any of the things which were easier to afford in better financial times.

Large majorities of people would be forced by government power to subsidize the educations of these aristocratic students, while they would rely on other people to pick up the tab at the end of the day.

Like slaves, the producers of the wealth would be subject to the whims of politicians who did not want to face the fact that financial crisis's meant pain.

Like aristocrats, students would see their subsidized education as a right, as they would be to the enslaved producers and taxpayers the aristocrats by virtue of being in a state school, like aristocrats of the sword, and aristocrats of birth.

And if it was a nation in which most people were willing to take on huge amounts of debt that they couldn't and wouldn't pay, betting that their children would do that for them on threat of the handcuffs and prison, then it wouldn't be a huge leap of faith to say that many of them wouldn't be very interested in keeping something as impersonal as their state running by giving all their income after taxes as donations, or through a life given to military or public service.

Unfortunately, that is what our government is.

Huge numbers of undecided and independent voters, who can't hold a steady conviction, swing many states – making these states primaries so unpredictable that this majority of some of these states' voters can represent those people who couldn't care one way more than the other until Election Day. Our government does seek to subsidize the core of its voters, saying that 95 percent of households won't see a dime in increased taxes.

If we could wait until the first interest payments on the $2 trillion President Barack Obama spent and plans to continue spending on a nationalized health care system and public funding for everyone through college – in his first 50 days in office – then perhaps in 10 years from now, 95 percent of taxpayers would start to see how unrealistic relying on 5 percent of taxpayers to pay 200 percent of our government's budget last year was.

And when our children are still making the interest payments 30 years from now on government bonds that we sold to Chinese and other more financially responsible bankers, then we will know just how wrong it was to chain them to pay for our indecision and not while not being able to make their own brighter future.

That would be the time when we could see that the choice had come between pain now, or chains then.

The decision is here now though, and statements like Trustee Lindsay McCluskey's, while disheartening, show that unfortunately, the more things change, the more they stay the same.

Jon Petersen is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpeterse@student.umass.edu.

A cookie for your thoughts

Kevin Mele

There is never more commotion in the Murray D. Lincoln Campus Center than during the week and in between classes. The Chi Alpha Christian Fellowship presided over not one, but two tables on Friday. As you hustled across campus center, if you happened to be hungry enough to accept a cookie from one of them, you felt somewhat obligated to acquiesce when the following favor was asked: "Can you answer the Question of the Day?"

Put yourself in the hungry person's shoes.

This exchange – which turned from accepting a free cookie into reporting to the table to voice your answer – is happening mid-gallop.

You're forced to slow down. That "free" cookie that caught the attention of your appetite now tugs on your conscience. But, despite what the stranger that accosted you may want you to think, your decision to go to the table or continue on your way will not be the measure of your civility or your character.

It will be the measure of your shrewdness. The shrewd passerby will recognize the deceptive strategy employed (they give cookies with the expectation that you will give your time and attention in return) and carry on as living validation of the cries that promise "Free cookies."

The only reason they are, there and the only reason they offer cookies, is because they want you to answer the Question of the Day: "Who is Jesus to you?"

Though this reaction smacks of revenge, it seems a fitting way to respond to a person that is scheming to make you feel guilty. Make no mistake, inspiring guilt is Chi Alpha's primary tactic.

The only reason they are there and the only reason they offer cookies, is because they want you to answer the Question of the Day: "Who is Jesus to you?" So, hapless wayfarer, in choosing your course of action, be careful not to confuse reluctant compliance – a result of pity or personal weakness – with courtesy, respect given of your own volition.

Respect a scheming stranger? For my part, no thanks – and I hope the cookie tactic is not a metaphor for Christian kindness.

But the Chi Alpha team had intentions that redeemed and perhaps justified its strategy of deception. The Question of the Day was: "Who is Jesus to you?" Strewn about the table were other students' answers jotted down on scraps of paper. Few – if any – of these scraps of paper reflected earnest thinking.

One reason for this may be that students felt duped by the cookie bait and so avenged themselves with snide responses (e.g. someone drew a complex, involved matrix, another arrogantly wrote "a man," another merely drew a cross in two strokes).

These answers are indicative only of resentment and wit – not of genuine opinion. Had Chi Alpha approached students with sincerity, perhaps they would have received sincerity in return. There's a definite difference between "Excuse me, do you have time to answer the Question of the Day?" and "Here's a cookie, can you answer the Question of the Day?"

When I went to the table, I went voluntarily and free of the spite that others felt at being reeled in like a fish. A remarkable thing happened. My response to the question was "a mediocre example of morality."

At first glance, this answer probably appears just as arrogant as the others. When asked to explain, I agreed to do so – unlike most other students. To my surprise (and delight), I discovered I had two keen listeners. I could see they were eager to discuss their own opinions. I was willing to listen.

The conversation continued over a table in the Blue Wall Café and lasted nearly two hours. We discussed everything we could think of, all without pride or irony. I learned from them that the question "Who is Jesus to you," was in their eyes only a prompt.

The overarching purpose of the question was to break the silence, to start a dialogue and to inspire an exchange of ideas outside of the classroom. This is an admirable endeavor.

The only reason they are, there and the only reason they offer cookies, is because they want you to answer the Question of the Day: "Who is Jesus to you?"

Though this reaction smacks of revenge, it seems a fitting way to respond to a person that is scheming to make you feel guilty. Make no mistake, inspiring guilt is Chi Alpha's primary tactic.

The only reason they are there and the only reason they offer cookies, is because they want you to answer the Question of the Day: "Who is Jesus to you?" So, hapless wayfarer, in choosing your course of action, be careful not to confuse reluctant compliance – a result of pity or personal weakness – with courtesy, respect given of your own volition.

Respect a scheming stranger? For my part, no thanks – and I hope the cookie tactic is not a metaphor for Christian kindness.

But the Chi Alpha team had intentions that redeemed and perhaps justified its strategy of deception. The Question of the Day was: "Who is Jesus to you?" Strewn about the table were other students' answers jotted down on scraps of paper. Few – if any – of these scraps of paper reflected earnest thinking.

One reason for this may be that students felt duped by the cookie bait and so avenged themselves with snide responses (e.g. someone drew a complex, involved matrix, another arrogantly wrote "a man," another merely drew a cross in two strokes).

These answers are indicative only of resentment and wit – not of genuine opinion. Had Chi Alpha approached students with sincerity, perhaps they would have received sincerity in return. There's a definite difference between "Excuse me, do you have time to answer the Question of the Day?" and "Here's a cookie, can you answer the Question of the Day?"

When I went to the table, I went voluntarily and free of the spite that others felt at being reeled in like a fish. A remarkable thing happened. My response to the question was "a mediocre example of morality."

At first glance, this answer probably appears just as arrogant as the others. When asked to explain, I agreed to do so – unlike most other students. To my surprise (and delight), I discovered I had two keen listeners. I could see they were eager to discuss their own opinions. I was willing to listen.

The conversation continued over a table in the Blue Wall Café and lasted nearly two hours. We discussed everything we could think of, all without pride or irony. I learned from them that the question "Who is Jesus to you," was in their eyes only a prompt.

The overarching purpose of the question was to break the silence, to start a dialogue and to inspire an exchange of ideas outside of the classroom. This is an admirable endeavor.

A crime is a crime of hate is a hate crime is a crime of hate

Greg Collins

If only it were that simple.

Conservative intellectual Don Feder's speech this Wednesday about hate crimes raises the issue of the limits of free speech. In regard to those on campus who support hate crimes legislation, perhaps they should take a closer look at what hate crimes laws actually are.

Essentially, a hate crime is a crime in which the motivation behind the hostile's attack is based on hatred of the victim's sexual orientation, race, ethnicity or religion. If a black perpetrator assaults a white victim person on the victim's skin color, the perpetrator should not only be prosecuted for the assault, but he should also receive additional penalties for the racist motive behind the attack.

Of course, one of the obvious problems with hate crimes laws is judging whether the crime was indeed an act of racism, homophobia or anti-Semitism.

Did the black perpetrator carry out the attack because the victim was white? Or was it because the victim had harassed the perpetrator's sister previously? Or was it because the victim was getting more playing time on the basketball team? Or was it because the victim showed the perpetrator up in front of his friends?

Psycho-analyzing someone's mindset lends itself to all sorts of difficulties in trying to find out what the perpetrator was thinking at the specific moment in time in which he committed the crime; what he was thinking leading up to the crime; and what he was thinking immediately after the crime was committed.

Did a racist thought flash through his head when he was assaulting the victim? Did not one racist thought even enter his head when committing the crime? Did he think racist thoughts only after the crime was committed?

Even more so, states cannot even agree on what constitutes a hate crime. Eve Gerber of the liberal Slate magazine writes, "The definition of a hate crime varies. Twenty-one states include mental and physical disability in their lists. Twenty-two states include sexual orientation. Three states and the District of Columbia impose tougher penalties for crimes based on political affiliation."

The tough answer that few politically correct people want to acknowledge is this: regardless of what one thinks and no matter how racist, homophobic or anti-Semitic it is, the state should not criminalize thought.

But what if the perpetrator – as Justice For Jason supporters assert – has a history of racism and yelled racist epithets at the time of the crime? What if it is crystal clear that the perpetrator committed a crime because of the victim's race?

The tough answer that few politically correct people want to acknowledge is this: regardless of what one thinks and no matter how racist, homophobic or anti-Semitic it is, the state should not criminalize thought.

The state, through common-law statutes, judicial court decisions and other law enforcement mechanisms, should not punish people merely for thinking something.

Freedom of thought – enshrined in the Bill of Rights – is something that citizens enjoy in the United States far more than anywhere else in the world.

Take a look at European countries that criminalize the denial of the Holocaust. While the Holocaust is an undeniable historical fact, the United States does not prosecute academics or bishops merely for saying it did not happen or was exaggerated, even though there are American academics who have said so repeatedly, including at least one who has spoken here at UMass.

Instead of punishing private thoughts, what American criminal law does is criminalize actions. What if a white perpetrator committed assault against a white victim, and a black perpetrator committed assault of a lesser degree against a white man? And what if a court determined that the second act was not only assault, but also a hate crime, so that the black perpetrator, in the end, would get more jail time than the white perpetrator?

The result would be that the state would be punishing someone more for committing a less severe crime than someone else. Such unequal standards undermine the very purpose of the American legal system: equality before the law.

In relation to hate crimes, equality before the law means that a crime is a crime is a crime.

Assault and battery is as equally damaging to a victim of a non-hate crime as it is to a victim of a hate crime. However, hate crime laws demean the level of criminal brutality by explicitly suggesting that a victim suffers less than another victim because the perpetrator of one crime does not hate the victim as much as the perpetrator of another crime.

This is nonsense.

It is safe to say that all crimes resulting in assault, battery, murder and other vicious crimes are "hate crimes" in one sense or another.

The famous death of Matthew Shepard, who was gay, by two homophobes was horrific not because of the murderers' opinions about sexuality, but because of the utterly brutal nature in which they attacked him.

Because more than anything else – more than even being gay – he was something that our unique American legal system of equality recognizes as being paramount in determining the severity of the crime: a human being.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

SGA presidential candidates debate

Voter turnout has been an issue for the student government in recent elections. Many students do not know when elections are happening, even those who do don't seem interested in the entire process. Part of the reason they're not interested is that students don't consider the position to be one of great importance. What measures would you take to improve student involvement in the Student Government Association and increase awareness of the body's significance?

Ngozi Mbawuike

From the day I became confirmed as a candidate I have talked to many students in the different housing areas announcing to them my candidacy. Granted many of them were not aware of the upcoming elections, they were drawn in as soon as I talked about what the Student Government Association (SGA) is and does.

Students are concerned about issues surrounding support, safety, student fees and most importantly, the interactions between the SGA and the student body. Students may not be aware of the current elections going on right now, but with the personal contact that Emily and I have been making with the student body, they have become increasingly interested in the issues we have been campaigning on and invested in seeing a more educated and empowered student body.

There is not one day when I am not talking to students about issues concerning the student body that they brush me off or seem disinterested; on the contrary many of them end up talking with us for hours at a time and by the end of the night exchanging contact information to further continue the conversation.

This, to me, is the way that we get the students involved, excited and interested on what is going on at UMass.

If Emily and I are elected into office one of the core issues that we will be working on will be on outreach and education. Emily and I plan to revamp the SGA's commitment to educating and empowering students across campus in order to enhance students' ability to create change.

Emily and I plan to revamp the SGA's commitment to educating and empowering students across campus in order to enhance students' ability to create change.

Emily and I want to ensure that students are adequately informed and represented at the decision-making table, and we will work with Registered Student Organizations (RSOs), Residence Life (ResLife) and the faculty and administration to expand and strengthen communication between the SGA, its constituents and allies.

In doing this, we plan to publish a bi-monthly SGA newsletter that will be sent out to the students to inform them of what the SGA is doing and ways that they can get involved.

This bi-monthly newsletter will be a resource that the students can look to, to get and remain involved whether directly or indirectly.

We want the students to understand that we want to use the SGA as a resource for the students while making it a safe space where they can come and discuss the issues that they feel are important to them along with the issues we plan to work on.

To do this we plan on restructuring the secretary of public policy and relations by creating co-secretaries of outreach and education so that we can actively engage with the student body on a weekly basis.

With this instituted we will be able to develop a new program called the SGA Dorm Leadership Program headed by the co-secretaries that will actively recruit and train residents throughout the dorms to work with ResLife, peer mentors and resident assistants to carry out educational and empowering activities in the dorms, and to foster stronger communication between students and the SGA.

This, along with many other programs, is one way Emily and I plan to work to ensure the involvement and communication between the student body and SGA.

Ngozi Mbawuike is a candidate for Student Government Association President. She can be reached at smbawuike@student.umass.edu.

Chris Faulkner

This University has a responsibility to its students. So does this Student Government Association (SGA). With the recent budget cuts, the SGA has an even greater obligation to meet the needs of the student body. Very plainly, we are in the time of an economic crisis. This is something we cannot ignore. With this in mind, the SGA, and the campus at large, must re-evaluate how best to pursue student initiatives.

There is no reason not to vote. We have entered a vortex of change, but it is in our power to control our destiny, to create a legacy of individuals who would not, did not settle for the status quo. It is your money. It is your education. It is your choice.

I am not asking for your vote. I am asking you to vote. Voice your opinion. Choose the candidate that best represents your interests. I have made my platform clear: If I am elected president of the SGA I will institute online elections. I will increase the transparency of the SGA. I will improve representation of Registered Student Organizations (RSOs). I will enhance communication between the SGA and the student body, creating blogs where students can make their voices heard, launching a website similar to change.gov, where students will rank the issues that concern them.

As president, I will ensure that your money is funding you, not the few individuals that run the SGA. Your money should benefit you.

As president, I will ensure that your money is funding you, not the few individuals that run the SGA.

Your money should benefit you. Once funds are re-allocated, once funds are not being diverted to programs that do not promote the University of Massachusetts undergraduate experience, the SGA will be in a position to advance community development, hosting campus-wide events and dialogues that reflect the interests of the student body. The campus will begin to resemble the environment students envision. No longer will students be able to claim that their government is insignificant, but that it is necessary.

As many of you are aware that there has been much heated debate concerning the bill to divest from Israel. However, such a bill should never have been proposed. It is not the jurisdiction of the SGA to dictate national matters, especially on a campus that has so many differing views and opinions.

It is, however, in the capacity of students to express themselves as individuals or as members of an RSO. With increased funding, organizations such as the Campus Anti-War Network (CAN) or the Student Alliance For Israel (SAFI), to name a few, will have a greater freedom to publicize their views on national and international policy.

Diversity, too, will flourish as RSOs gain more independence. Community service organizations such as the Push America Club will have a greater capacity to build ramps for people with physical disabilities.

Sporting clubs such as the Outing Club and the Ski Club will be able to plan more trips for their members. Even my opponent Ngozi Mbawuike's African Students Association (ASSA) would benefit from increased funding and would be able to better promote cultural awareness and education.

Of course, the SGA itself works on such a broad scale. In order to reach out to students on a personal level, under my leadership, the executive cabinet will work closely with area governments and house councils, ameliorating communication among the various bodies of student government.

Thus, the power dynamic on campus will shift from top-down to bottom-up. Students will be inextricably connected to their government. Student interests will inevitably be paralleled by government decisions.

I ask you for your vote. I ask for your honesty and your willingness to put your government in check. We need your help in creating a government that you will proudly stand by and support. Thank you, and I hope to see you at the polls.

Chris Faulkner is a candidate for Student Government Association President. He can be reached at cfaulkner@student.umass.edu.

Trustee hopefuls: Which is more trustworthy?

In recent years, the activism of the Student Government Association has been both a positive in the eyes of its supporters and a burden to its detractors. It has forced attention onto issues that effect UMass students, but has done very little in the way of changing any of the issues that forced the mobilization. As president, would you continue the level of activism or explore different ways to express the concerns of student and improve the overall educational experience at UMass?

Emily Bloch

The broad variety of activism undertaken by the Student Government Association (SGA) and other student organizations serves two purposes. The first is the goal of the immediate campaign, whether it be lower fees, increased student support services, more accountable police practices or any of the many issues that we, as students, face. The second is student empowerment. The activism that has been undertaken by the SGA takes many different forms.

As the Statewide Core Team Leader for the Center for Education Policy Advocacy (CEPA), I have worked closely with students from across the state advocating for affordable and accessible public higher education. For the last year I have been working closely with Massachusetts Students Uniting (MSU), a budding statewide student association that brings students from community colleges, state colleges and the University of Massachusetts system together to increase state funding for higher education. Last year MSU, in coalition with the Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts (PHENOM), won a tangible and significant victory. Students, faculty and staff from across the state successfully lobbied the state legislature for a $3 million increase in the Massachusetts Assistance for Student Success Grant (MASSGrant) program, the primary need based financial aid program in Massachusetts.

In the last few years we have seen that the administration sometimes does not listen to students when we use conventional means to express our needs.

If elected I will keep students first. This means making sure that students are heard and listened to. I think it is important for student leaders to work with the administration. There are many things that student leadership and administration can agree on, but there are also places where the administration and students will disagree. I believe firmly in going through the traditional methods to support students, but I also know that these methods do not always work, and that frequently students have to work outside the normal channels to be heard. In the last few years we have seen that the administration sometimes does not listen to students when we use conventional means to express our needs. The student body voted last year in a referenda question to allow the use of Your Campus Meal Plan (YCMP) at People's Market, a student-run business located in the Student Union. The administration backed food services in its refusal to consider making this simple change, claiming that it is concerned that students cannot get a "complete meal" at the People's Market, despite the fact that the People's Market sells a far larger variety of food than businesses where you can use YCMP, such as the Procrastination Station.

Sometimes it takes unconventional tactics to get the administration to recognize our rights. After years of using conventional means to lodge complaints about warrantless police searches, increasing restrictions on student use of student space, rising fees and unaccountable use of funds, the leaders from the SGA and several other student organizations called a student strike. When 800 students entered the Whitmore Administration Building, representatives of the administration agreed to meet with elected negotiators to work out agreements on the issues. At the end, the two sides announced a set of agreements, including the creation of a police advisory board and a review of funding practices. Unconventional tactics yielded concrete results.

In this current climate of economic crisis many people's attention has shifted to budgetary concerns, funding for public higher education and worries about the $1,500 fee increase. I am currently working with MSU, PHENOM and a coalition of students from all four undergraduate UMass campuses to build a student movement and ask the board of trustees to roll back student fees and make UMass more affordable. There is currently $300 million in the federal stimulus bill allotted to Massachusetts specifically for public higher education. Ngozi Mbawuike and I believe that this money should be used responsibly to help struggling students and families in this time of crisis and keep the cost of higher education as low as possible. We are currently asking Gov. Deval Patrick to use the stimulus money to restore campus operating budgets. We are currently collecting students' stories from across the state with the twofold purpose of building student power and making the University administration and our state elected officials understand the burden this fee increase places on students.

I believe that it is the responsibly of student leaders to keep the needs of students at the forefront of their minds and to work tirelessly to get student needs met. I believe this involves going through both the normal channels of decision making and looking beyond those channels to make sure student voices are heard.

Emily Bloch is a candidate for Student Trustee. She can be reached at ebloch@student.umass.edu.

Josh Davidson

We all know that protest and activism are two of the favorite things for residents of the Pioneer Valley to do. The causes and motivations for these activities vary greatly, but the theme of active protest by average citizens is definitely prevalent in this area. It is a testament to the community that people stand up and get involved and it is one of the things that make this country, this area, and this campus a great place to be.

However, I always find myself wondering how effective some of these activist movements are in achieving their goals, especially in the area of student governance and representation. The message is communicated, but is the goal of the protest actually accomplished? In the area of student representation, I would argue, based on the reaction of the UMass board of trustees last week, student interests are actually hurt by demonstrative protests such as the one last week. Trustee Jennifer Braceras, one of the trustees that voted against last week's fee increase, said of last week's protest, "Your behavior disgusts me." While she obviously got the message that students weren't happy with the fee increase, the protest didn't seem to have the intended effect, even on someone who voted against the increase. The heart of the demonstration is in the right place but we, as students, need to express ourselves in a more professional and mature manner in order to accomplish our advocacy goals.

The heart of the demonstration is in the right place but we, as students, need to express ourselves in a more professional and mature manner in order to accomplish our advocacy goals.

So the question becomes: How can students effectively express their concerns and questions to the administration? There are many different ways, such as e-mailing various members of the administration, calling elected officials or helping to formulate alternatives to a proposed policy. These are just a few of the ways to get in touch with people who actually make the high level decisions regarding the University system.

There are, however, three essential characteristics of an effective student advocacy movement. The first is a high percentage of involvement by members of the student body. I'm not talking about the people already involved in student government or advocacy campaigns. I'm talking about the average student who has some vague idea of the situations on campus and on the state level. Without this level of interest and involvement by the student body, any attempt at advocacy will fail. The administration knows when a majority of students is directly invested in a movement as opposed to one driven by a few, highly motivated and involved individuals. This is one of the primary shortfalls of the current Student Government Association (SGA). There has not been enough effort to encourage student participation and awareness of SGA events and actions. This will be a tough, consistent battle but it needs to be fought. The SGA needs to institute online elections, keep an up-to-date and easily accessible website, provide some type of monthly communication with the student body, possibly through a letter to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, and establish continuous communication with leaders of Register Student Organizations (RSO). Also, the same means used to facilitate online elections could be used to poll the student body on various campus issues. These measures and more are essential, considering the significance of higher student participation in the SGA.

The second characteristic is an understanding and acceptance of a give-and-take relationship. Students often have an abundance of passion for a subject but a lack of willingness to negotiate and offer alternatives. Isn't it better to accomplish some of your goals than none at all? We cannot go to the administration with all kinds of varying demands without being willing to accept some type of compromise.

Certainly there are some areas where the issue is very black and white, but the vast majority of campus issues have some type of middle ground. In negotiations, showing the other side you are willing to compromise can change the atmosphere of the meeting from that of high tension and mistrusts to one of mutual interest and cooperation. We need to remember the administration has its own agenda and interests and we need to be willing to reconcile our agenda with theirs instead of demanding they immediately succumb to our wishes.

The last characteristic is possibly the hardest to achieve but it is also the defining characteristic of many successful movements.

Our student advocacy has to be defined by logic and reason. Passion, determination, perseverance and many other qualities are important but without a logical argument at the heart of the movement, it will fail. So what does this mean for students? We need to actually analyze situations on campus and offer alternatives that benefit student interest more than those proposed by the administration. What we say and do has to make sense otherwise our goals, whatever they may be at the time, will never be accomplished.

Josh Davidson is a candidate for Student Trustee. He can be reached at jpdavids@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 10, 2009 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NoHo native to perform

Nite Jewel to play at Smith College

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

To return home after a span of time abroad is always a strange experience, forever curious as to what has changed, what is new and what the future will bring.

Northampton electronic composer and performer Eric Hnatow recently returned home after a string of shows down the East Coast and will perform at Smith College Wednesday night with Los Angeles multimedia artist Nite Jewel and Providence's Triangle Forest.

Ramona Gonzalez, also known by the stage name of Nite Jewel, is a philosophy student at Occidental University in Los Angeles. She strictly chooses to record on an 8-track cassette deck, intent on playing around with layers of tape. She meshes styles, ranging from sultry R&B backbones and euphoric disco rhythms to gauzy, effervescent pop and always laid back.

Gonzalez's vocal wafts in and out of echoes, at times delicately placed between minimal synthesizer tones, though she occasionally rises in the mix, showing off her true talent as a singer.

Her record "Good Evening," released last year on Human Ear Music, touches on both of these aspects. The first few tracks, including the late-night dance jam "What Did He Say," features Gonzalez squirming between deep bass grooves and fuzzy atmospherics. However, the next song, "Weak For Me," finds her singing a strong note in the more straight-forward dance chorus.

The highlight of "Good Evening" doesn't come until the second-to-last piece, "Chimera," which sees Gonzalez busting out a Madonna-like vibrato. "Chimera," like many other tracks off the album, seems to draw from some aspect of 1980s production methods, achieving a backward-thinking sound that succeeds in its nostalgic properties.

On the local end, in a recent e-mail interview with The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, Hnatow talked about his recent tour, his philosophies regarding music-making, and the lack of true music venues in the area.

Massachusetts Daily Collegian: With regards to the recent tour, how necessary is it for an artist to walk out of their comfort zone – zone meaning either a geographical area or style?

Eric Hnatow: I have never done an official tour before. A few of the shows were a bit strange, but for the most part I had an awesome time playing most of the places I went to. At one show I played to about six people all sitting on bar stools in a huge room and all of them thought every piece of [merchandise] I had. At other shows I would play for 60 people and sell nothing at all. It really helps drive home the notion that you should do what you are doing as best as you can all the time, no matter who is watching.

MDC: You must be absorbing a whole lot of stimuli traveling around and getting lots of feedback. How are your shows abroad going to inform your upcoming shows in the area?

EH: How well I am received is always different. The show in Atlanta was particularly awesome due to the fact that my pal, Witt, who used to go to Hampshire [College], set it up. He started a killer community arts space down there called WonderRoot, so he put together a really great show for me. I guess that is a huge part of the success of any show – attention to detail from both the performers as well as the person curating the event. That said, I did roll up into an impromptu show in Asheville, N.C., and drop two songs, like a six-minute assault. That was great. I brought this light jacket on tour with me that I have been using in my set for a bit around here. That night I ended up jumping up on the bar with the light jacket going and people totally lost it. I didn't pay for any drinks after that stunt.

MDC: There's always people getting into your sets around here, though I'm always suspicious that it's because you play so much it's like people know you and humans love what they're familiar and comfortable with. While this may be true, my fascination with your shows is how unfamiliar each set truly is, since it is forever changing and moving beyond what I saw and heard the last time. What's the philosophy behind it all?

EH: Yeah, I am always suspicious of any success I have with my music. I don't really have a specific musical idea of what I am doing. I don't make music to fulfill any sort of musical goals I have. It is more to move people to think differently about stuff. When I make music to be performed in a live setting, the first thought I have is usually: "How will people react to this?" I enjoy embracing the effect that other people have on the process of creation. This is why I say the music I make is for you, not me. Of course, I am getting some stupid ego trip from the whole thing, but I am not one of those folks who say things like 'I do this for me, and don't care what you think about it.' I totally care what you think. Maybe that is why people are so reactive to what I have been doing lately. It is familiar to them because, in a way, they

HNATOW See on page 7

Los Angeles multimedia artist Ramona Gonzalez, also known as Nite Jewel, will perform with Eric Hnatow and Triangle Forest on Wednesday at Smith College.

Bono and the rest of U2 released their 12th studio album on March 3. "No Line On The Horizon" is the groups first album in five years.

Album falls short, but still U2

'No Line On The Horizon,' band's first album in 5 years

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The title of the second track on U2's new album, "No Line On The Horizon" couldn't encapsulate the quality of the song more perfectly. "Magnificent" is, at the very least, as good as the name suggests, but as far as U2's 12th studio album is concerned – the bottom line rests below that horizon.

That is not to say the latest effort from the world's biggest and best rock 'n' roll act isn't good. The best collection of talent you will ever see in a band made sure of that. Bono, The Edge, Larry Mullen, Jr. and Adam Clayton delivered another great album with last Tuesday's release of "No Line On The Horizon."

It's just not the masterpiece we've grown accustomed to over the last 20 or so years.

And considering it's been almost five years since "How To Dismantle An Atomic Bomb" came out – making it the band's largest gap between albums – we all expected that Bono and Co. had plenty of time to match the quality of their last two efforts.

But whatever lies in the future for U2, as good as they are, it won't be easy to top their newest epic tune.

"Only love, only love can leave such a mark / But only love, only love can heal such a scar," proclaims Bono during "Magnificent", while Mullen and The Edge provide the guitar mastery in the background.

But that's the only track that truly leaves its mark on the album. And that's the problem.

"No Line On The Horizon" falls short of "Atomic Bomb," which had "City of Blinding Lights," "Vertigo" and "Sometimes You Can't Make it On Your Own."

And it doesn't reach the album before that, "All That You Can't Leave Behind," which is graced by "Beautiful Day," "Stuck In A Moment You Can't Get Out Of" and "Elevation."

But no album, particularly any by U2, should be judged solely on how many songs end up as classics. What made the last two CDs so impressive was the overall quality and depth, as songs like "Miracle Drug" and "Original Of The Species" on "Atomic Bomb," and "Walk On" and "Kite" on "All That You Can't Leave Behind" were all beautiful songs that were underrated and underappreciated.

Fault U2 for only having one standout on "No Line," but credit them for having some of that depth the other albums had – because most of the other 10 songs are strong.

Most notable are "I'll Go Crazy If I Don't Go Crazy Tonight," "Stand Up Comedy"

See U2 on page 7

Less is successful for Elbogen

'Oohs & Aahs' do-it-yourself recording anything but disaster

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For his fifth release, and first on the ever-evolving Barsuk Records, Eric Elbogen sticks with what he already knows: less is more. The result is another thoughtfully crafted record that has plenty to make noise about.

Elbogen is the brainchild behind the home based-recording outfit Say Hi (formerly known as Say Hi to Your Mom). Originally formed in Brooklyn, N.Y., Elbogen recently relocated to Seattle where he self-recorded his latest offering, "Oohs & Aahs," at his home.

The album – much like his past work – is minimal in its layering and scale as a result of this do-it-yourself recording methodology. This can typically be a recipe for disaster, but Elbogen has made a career of creating art using very basic tools. "Oohs & Aahs" is cut from the very same mold.

Elbogen's mumbled delivery and the juvenile charm of his tongue-in-cheek vocal narratives propel a recording that consists of, what is by all means, a barebones instrumental backing. Droning guitar and bass work are generally accompanied by little more than generic sounding synthesizer melodies and rudimentary drum beats.

No one has ever accused Elbogen of being a virtuoso and "Oohs & Aahs" will do little to propagate otherwise.

Where succeeds on the record – and has always historically – is in his eloquent-yet-undemanding lyrical content.

His topics range from sultry radio DJs to car chases to all-too-identifiable insecurities with females. His broad subjects are all delivered with a sense of simplified grace that saves the record from growing haplessly stale in a hurry.

"November Was White, December Was Grey" is a timely and largely autobiographical portrait of an artist exhausted by the winter months. Both Elbogen's penchant for recording out of his own home and the album's spring release date combine to make it one of the album's more memorable selections.

"Oh these three months / I've been inside the house / My pacing has worn / All of the carpet out," he sings during the song's second verse.

"I'll feel better when the winter's gone," he concludes.

See SAY Hi on page 7

COURTESY BARSUK RECORDS

Eric Elbogan self-recorded his fifth album, "Oohs & Aahs," which succeeds with its lyrical content and is backed by strong instrumentals, synthesizer melodies and drum beats.

Cohen plays 100th with more to come

BY GEOFF BOUCHER
LOS ANGELES TIMES

NEW YORK — Bathed in the indigo light, Leonard Cohen leaned forward like a man eager to feel the wind on his face and, as the crowd at the Beacon Theatre in New York cheered, the 74-year-old singer narrowed his eyes and delivered another one of his unhurried, deep velvet threats:

They sentenced me to 20 years of boredom

For trying to change the system from within

I'm coming now, I'm coming to reward them

First we take Manhattan, then we take Berlin

In mid-February, Cohen performed his first U.S. concert since 1993 at the restored and resplendent Beacon, which instantly became the stuff of legend – at least in the music circles where Cohen is regarded as one of the great living titans of songwriting. It didn't hurt, either, that the Montreal native arrived backstage with tantalizing mysteries tucked in that guitar case.

This is the man, after all, who in the 1990s walked away from show business to wear monk's robes at a Zen monastery near the resort village of Mount Baldy, in the San Gabriel Mountains east of Los Angeles. Then, after returning to his old fedora, he announced in 2005 that he had been robbed blind by his longtime manager.

Either of those life experiences might have led the poet and troubadour to the Beacon stage with a humorless severity. They did not.

"It's been a long time since I stood on a stage in New York," Cohen told the adoring, star-studded crowd. "I was 60 years old then. Just a kid with a crazy dream."

The marathon concert (almost three hours) at the Beacon was the 99th performance by Cohen and his supple band during their recent tour of the world, but just the beginning of a major return to America that includes an appearance in April at the massive Coachella Valley Music and Arts Festival in the Southern California desert. There, the dapper songsmith will share a bill with Paul McCartney, Morrissey and Paul Weller, but also with the bands the Killers, the Cure and My Bloody Valentine.

The day after the Beacon show, Cohen clearly was pleased with the warm ovations from the night before. His suite at the Warwick Hotel afforded him a view of a Manhattan afternoon that was as crisp as his tailored suit and, when a visitor arrived for an interview, he turned down the twangy country music from his laptop computer and offered a cup of coffee.

"It's been a great trip, man, a lovely time," he said. "Have a seat."

Cohen had a considerable contingent of family and friends at the New York show (as well as recognizable fans including Harvey Keitel, Rufus Wainwright and Richard Belzer), and he said that "all of us felt a sort of special edge on the night, all of us wanted to do good."

Cohen looks fantastic, trim and graceful, which is worth pointing out not just for reasons of chronological age, but because of the previous night's late labors and the long touring road that led up to it – beginning in Canada and then going on to Ireland; Bucharest, Romania; and other European stops, before a run through New Zealand and Australia. "The next one, in Austin, Texas, in four weeks will be our 100th show," Cohen said, "and it's just grand. And

See COHEN on page 7

U2's newest album, "No Line On The Horizon," doesn't compare to the band's previous albums, but songs like "Magnificent" and "I'll Go Crazy If I Don't Go Crazy Tonight" make the release successful.

Not quite 'Magnificent'

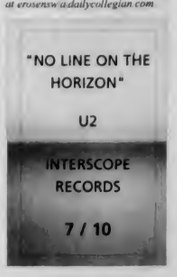
U2 from page 6

and "Moment Of Surrender," The first of which is a cross between "Kite" and "Stuck In A Moment," in one of Bono's best performances of the album.

"Stand Up Comedy" is a fun song dominated by Mullen and Clayton, who are always terrific in their own right, but always overlooked and overshadowed by Bono and The Edge. "Moment of Surrender" is a bit long, running for 7 minutes 26 seconds, but The Edge keeps you in it the whole time, proving he's the best in the business on the guitar. That's no surprise.

But U2's selection for the first single on the new album is. "Get On Your Boots" is similar to what "Vertigo" brought to the table, an up-beat song that has somewhat-outrageous lyrics ("Sexy Boots / Get on your boots, yeah / Not right now / Bossy boots") and would fit much better on the album "Pop," which was released in 1997. It's almost as if U2 wasn't sure which direction to take the album.

Also of note on the album are "Breathe," which is lyrically the most impressive track ("Have to find the courage / to war down / into the street / with arms out / gotta' love you can't defeat") and the title track, which is a good mix of guitar, drums and vocal in a song that opens the album and precedes "Magnificent."



The remaining four tracks on the album, "Unknown Caller," "Fez - Being Born," "White As Snow" and "Cedars of Lebanon" are all fair, but considering this album is made up of only 11 songs, they hurt the album and bring it down a notch.

Without the multiple signature songs and choruses that you'll want to bellow along with Bono to, a la "Where The Streets Have No Name" or "City Of Blinding Lights," this album can't help but be a bit of a disappointment.

That said, it's still U2 - and it's still magnificent compared to everybody else.

U2's "No Line On The Horizon" was released on March 3 on Interscope Records

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Crafty lyrics in Elbogen's 5th album, 'Oohs & Aahs'

Elbogen from page 6

"Maurine" is the standout track of the album. Low-key and droning instrumentation leads into some downright hokey synthesizer. The song is another prime example of Elbogen's lyrical craft.

"I guess that I should have kissed her / I won't deny it when she was leaning in / I guess I should a lot of things, huh?"

"One, Two ... One" Is a welcomed upbeat track sandwiched in the heart of the album. It pairs new wave-inspired claps with some cheeky-synth and a familiar-sounding rhythm section to create easily the record's liveliest number.

The album is not without its faults, however. "Oh Oh Oh Oh Oh Oh Oh Oh" is about as substantial a song as its title suggests, while "The Stars Just Blink for Us" does little more than weigh down the albums finale, the mesmerizingly morose "Sallie's Heart Is Stone."

Ultimately, "Oohs & Aahs" may not illicit the kind of response its title implies, but listeners will be hard-pressed to keep it out of their stereos.

Say Hi's "Oohs & Aahs" was released March 3 on Barsuk Records.

Brian Wood can be reached at bwood@dailycollegian.com

Seeking Buddhism

COHEN from page 6

then we'll do another 100."

Cohen's music career was a second-chance affair. His childhood home in Canada was alive with music, and despite the cultural distance, he found a gripping emotion in the forlorn rhymes of Hank Williams and other country heroes; he had a band as a teen with a sort of buckskin sensibility. But at McGill University in Montreal, his attentions turned to the written page, and he gained national attention for his poems and two novels. When the money didn't follow, he reached for the guitar.

His big break came when Judy Collins recorded his "Suzanne" for a 1966 album and made it one of her signature songs. More followed, but John Hammond, the esteemed music executive with Columbia Records who had been a key figure in the careers of Bob Dylan and Billie Holiday, believed in Cohen not just as a composer but as a performer.

His songbook, though, has towered far beyond his singing, and a staggering list of artists have interpreted his classics, such as "Bird on the Wire," "Sisters of Mercy," "Hallelujah," "Everybody Knows" and "First We Take Manhattan."

Cohen, these days, has the mien of a profoundly centered man. Part of that comes no doubt from his studies of Buddhism, which date to the 1970s and the period of time in the 1990s that he was ordained as a Rinzai Zen Buddhist monk so he might serve in an austere setting as the personal attendant to his teacher, Kyozan Joshu Sasaki Roshi.

"The first and most discernible lesson is to stop whining," Cohen explained. "And I don't really need to go much beyond that. It was sort of like boot camp. It's a rigorous life; it's cold, and it's above the snow line. Four-thousand feet was the snow line, and we were up around 7,500 feet. A lot of it is involved in surviving the winter. There's a lot of shoveling of snow. There is very little private space. There's a saying in Zen: 'Like pebbles in bag, the monks polish one another.' Those rough edges get smoothed out."

Cohen never went to Buddhism seeking enlightenment - it was more about survival, he said. He came in as a patient, not a pilgrim. "I needed something. Things weren't working in my life. I had drugs and promiscuity, many things. I wasn't happy. I needed a new way. But it wasn't about anything holy."

And what about the more recent financial calamity? A court judgment has awarded him more than $9 million – the touring is not a desperate lunge to pay his bills, and when he holds out his hat on stage there's a smile on his face.

Cohen had a question for his visitor: "I've never been to Coachella. How do you think our band will go over there?" Told that his band will find a smart and eager audience and desert splendor, Cohen smiled but still held on to a bit of distance.

"We'd played festivals in the past, and I'm not crazy about the setup. You're on a roster with a whole lot of other people. You don't have the evening. I like to be in a room with people for three hours, have a beginning, middle and an end. We can't do our whole set; it's not our rhythm. But we have heard it's a special hospitality there. We'll play our best and look forward to it."

He launched into an extended explanation of where the stage magic lies for him, the sweet spot between the practiced and the unexpected. Then, unhappy with the long route to an answer, the poet shrugged and took a four-word path: "There is a flicker."

Cohen turned to his computer to play some new music, a somewhat ghostly shuffle called "Amen," a song laced with religious imagery and heartache, as so many of his compositions have been through the years. Cohen said he is more interested in the next song than pondering the legacy of his past work. He talked about how puzzled he was by McCartney's decision a few years back to change the credits on certain Beatles classics to "McCartney & Lennon" as opposed to the familiar "Lennon & McCartney," as if anyone didn't know who wrote "Yesterday."

Cohen said he views his work from a different vantage point - his most famous songs now belong as much to the audience and to other singers as they do to him.

"I find I'm feeling much friendlier to my earliest work than I ever did," he said. "There was a certain time when I knew that the audience wanted to hear Suzanne' and Hey That's No Way to Say Goodbye,' but I didn't want to play (them). Now I really do.

"I think that contrary to Sir Paul's experience, my sense of proprietorship weakens as I get older. I'm happy the songs exist and that I know them and I know the chords and how to sing them."

The subject clearly stirred up something for Cohen.

"A poet, one of my closest friends, Irving Layton, probably the best Canadian poet and one of our best North American poets, he was very concerned with his legacy. He was very concerned with his immortality and what would become of his work. I loved the man, so I listened attentively and also with a sense of curiosity. I could never locate that appetite for posterity within myself or think what it means anyhow."

After a pause, he chuckled, his mind considering all the poets that his late friend Layton would have to conquer to achieve his hoped-for perch in the history books. "You're up against some heavy competition: King David, Homer. You're up against Shakespeare, Dante, Donne. You're up against Whitman. It's like going up against Muhammad Ali if you're a pretty good neighborhood boxer, and that's what I think of myself as. I'm just a pretty good neighborhood boxer. Legacy? I never thought that it would mean anything to me when I'm dead. I'm going to be busy."

Unique stage presence

HNATOW from page 6

helped make it.

MDC: I'd like to know how you feel your evolution as an artist has gone, whether it's encapsulated within your music strictly, or whether it stretched further back into, say, visual mediums.

EH: I don't really separate it all that much. To me all the stuff that I do links back to sound. That is just the language I began speaking through. Whether it is fliers, album artwork, movement, food or whatever, I always start with sound ... even if the sound is silence. I took lots of art classes in high school and stuff, but still don't really consider myself an "artist." I just work on stuff, that's all. I think of it all as work, not art.

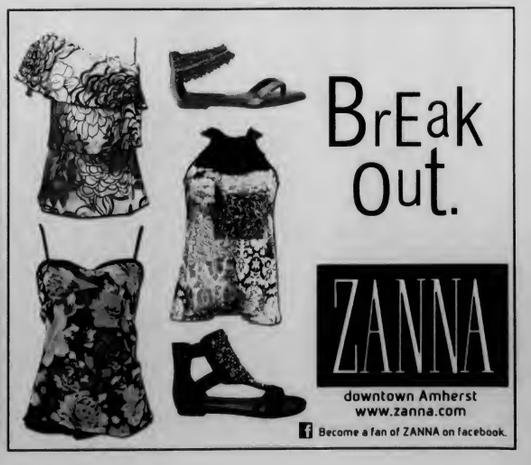
MDC: Surely you started playing house shows, or something similar to that, and now you're playing named venues with more well-known artists. What's that shift like?

EH: Playing with bigger names is always cool, mostly because I get to be in a show that I would otherwise probably be at anyway. As far as the venues go, I don't really think there are any true music venues around this area, especially in Northampton. Aside from The Elevens and Sierra Grille, there are no other venues that care about the most important thing – music! Unfortunately, they all care about the other word that starts with 'M.' I actually much prefer to perform in alternative venues like houses, cafes, art spaces, warehouses and, of course, colleges. The college shows around here are my absolute favorite shows at the moment. Talk to me after Flywheel opens again and I might change my tune on that.

MDC: Who's your favorite band or artist you've played with this tour?

EH: My favorite band that I have played with on tour would probably be this band called Maple Kitten, from Philly. They are an all-Casio-keyboard band who make video projections and play on the floor.

MDC: Who's your favorite artist you've ever performed with? Anyone you'd be eying to play with in the future?



EH: Best yet ... Crush Cloud. Future . Pink Floyd.

Nite Jewel will perform with Eric Hnatow and Triangle Forest Wednesday, March 11 at the Davis Ballroom on Smith College campus. Doors open at 7 p.m. with the show to begin at 7:30. Tickets are $3 in advance, available in the Smith College campus center, and are $5 at the door

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

Northampton native Eric Hnatow returns from a tour down the East Coast to perform Wednesday at Smith College. Hnatow believes there is a lack of true music venues in the Five College area.

SGA ELECTIONS

D'TIE

TUESDAY MARCH 10 & WEDNESDAY MARCH 11

SOUTHWEST SOUTH RESIDENTS:
BERKSHIRE DINING COMMONS 11:00 AM – 1:00 PM & 4:00 PM – 8:00 PM

SOUTHWEST NORTH RESIDENTS:
HAMPSHIRE DINING COMMONS 9:00 AM – 1:00 PM & 4:00 PM – 8:00 PM

CENTRAL AND ORCHARD HILL RESIDENTS:
FRANKLIN DINING COMMONS 9:00 AM – 1:00 PM & 4:00 PM – 8:00 PM

SYLVAN, NORTHEAST, AND NORTH RESIDENTS:
WORCESTER DINING COMMONS 9:00 AM – 1:00 PM & 4:00 PM – 8:00 PM

COMMUTER RESIDENTS & GRADUATE STUDENTS:
CAMPUS CENTER CONCOURSE 9:00 AM – 1:00 PM & 4:00 PM – 8:00 PM

ABSENTEE VOTING:
ALL POLLING PLACES

NOTE: DRIVER'S LICENSE OR STUDENT I.D. REQUIRED TO VOTE

Sean McNair - Chancellor of Elections
(413) 545 - 0341 - electionscommission@stuaf.umass.edu

ELECTIONS COMMISSION UMASS
THE STUDENT GOVERNMENT ASSOCIATION AMHERST

Quick turnaround concerns Cannella

LACROSSE from page 10

Cannella said. "He's not a big guy either, just an overall really strong player skill wise, very strong lacrosse sense wise. [The Great Danes] are looking for him to get going."

Besides Small on attack, Albany (2-1) has freshman Joe Resetarits and sophomore Brian Caufield who combine to create a very strong attacking unit that has scored 32 goals off of 96 shots (33.3 percent) this season.

Defensively, Albany is backed by four-year starter Garrett Pedley and sophomore Mike Banks, who is a highly regarded defenseman for the Great Danes. In goal is freshman John Carroll, who has allowed 29 goals (9.43 goals-against average) this season.

"They've lost a big-time goalie and big energy guy in Brett Queener and now they have a freshman in goal, makes them a little bit different," said Cannella.

The quick turnaround isn't preferred by Cannella but in order to play the crucial matchup, Tuesdays are the only days that work for both teams' schedules. With Saturday's game at Harvard, the Minutemen got Sunday off and had practice Monday before traveling to Albany on Tuesday. Cannella stressed to his players to get enough rest, to hydrate themselves and to stay off their feet as much as they can get their leg strength and stability.

"Hopefully you can recover in time to play, and if you can't, these guys are young [so] they can bounce back," said Cannella. "[At practice on Monday] we walked through some things that Albany does to try and prepare for them and we can't do too much because it's too much on the guys."

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com

Freshman Steve D'Amario has seen a great deal of time off the bench for UMass. So far this season he has tallied one point (assist) and one ground ball.

Hill becomes catalyst in wake of surgery

Redshirt sophomore explains emotions during ACL rehab

By Nick Bush
Collegian Staff

With the sound of a single loud pop, a player's career can change irrevocably in an instant. When just a second ago you were a dangerous scoring threat, a young athlete in peak physical condition, now you are left to clutch at your wounded knee and wonder where things went so horribly wrong.

Massachusetts women's basketball guard, Diatiema Hill, had such an experience last season, after tearing the anterior cruciate ligament in her right knee while practicing.

She ended up missing the entire season, but has returned to the Minutewomen's bench as a redshirt sophomore this season.

Like many victims of an ACL injury, Hill never had a knee issue occur in her past.

"It just happened, and before I had even started the season everything changed," said Hill.

An ACL injury will end a player's season in almost every case.

It's possible for everyday citizens to go without surgery on certain types of ACL tears, but athletes often have no choice but the scalpel if they want to regain their previous form and level of play.

That alone is a strong indication of how critically important the ligament is to jumping, cutting and changing directions in sports.

With proper physical training, those who sustain ACL tears can return to their pre-injury form.

Unfortunately but it is far from easy.

"When I first got my surgery done, I couldn't move," said Hill. "I cried like a big baby. My knee was so swollen that it was bigger than my quads somehow. Going here and there was a big issue.

"Everyone always says that I'm a spoiled brat, but I really was acting like a brat then. My mother was a big help," Hill continued. "She is the reason that I got my surgery done in New York. I couldn't have done it without being near her the whole time. Whatever needed to be done, she did it, no questions asked."

Hill then recalled how her coach's attitude toward her injury helped her along the way.

"Coach [Marnie] Dacko was also really good to me ... We would talk here and there, and she would encourage me with any little thing she could see in my improvement, like when I went from not really moving to walking a little and then from that to starting to jog," Hill said. "It was nice to hear 'I'm not going to lie, I was upset when she asked me about redshirting. Now I understand that it was because she wanted me here, helping the team, and I'm glad that I did it."

Females are up to 10 times more likely to tear an ACL than men, according to recent studies.

The injury also accounts for almost half of all women's sports injuries that require surgery.

The NCAA has stated that females can be expected to tear the ligament about one time out of every 300 games or practices.

The New York Times reported that during the 2001-2002 athletic season at least 95 women out of the 318 NCAA Division I schools tore their ACLs, which equates to about one in every 40 players in the league that year.

"I guess I got unlucky," said Hill. "I'm not worried about it happening again, though. You can't play scared, because that's when you get hurt."

Medical researchers are still debating why exactly women tend to receive so many more non-contact knee ligament injuries than men.

Theories range from the idea that different hormones may cause women's ligaments to lose flexibility, to the thought that women may play sports in a more upright posture, which is the typical position of athletes when they injure their ACL.

The fact that females have differently-shaped and smaller ACLs may also come into play, since it could limit the stress they are able to put on their joints.

Basketball players, such as Hill, are especially vulnerable to knee injuries, due to the amount of pivoting and jumping the sport requires.

"The ACL prevents the tibia from sliding too far forward," said Jonathan Cluett, an orthopedic surgeon at North Adams Regional Hospital.

"Without ligaments to stabilize the knee, the joint would be unstable and prone to dislocation."

Hill now wears a black knee brace at every practice, and in every game.

"Ever since the day I left the hospital, I've had some sort of knee brace on my leg," said Hill.

"The first one was enormous – it went from hip to foot," Hill said.

"They got shorter and shorter, to the small one I use now. I've gotten so used to having it on that it seems weird not having something on my knee. Shooting free throws even seems a little strange without a brace on it, like something's missing."

"When I first got hurt, I started working with [UMass assistant athletic trainer] Lacy Yager. She is very good, and got me to where I am now. I couldn't bend it at all at first, it was so swollen. I had to work so hard to get it to bend even 90 degrees," Hill recalled. "I did a lot of squats to strengthen my quads, and work on my ability to pivot around. It was really tough. Lacy would push me to ride the arm bike for cardio work, even when I couldn't even get up on the real bike. I did a lot of stairs. Last spring I practically lived on the Mullins Center's stairs."

Hill and her family even rented a "Gameready," an expensive device that wraps around the knee, and surrounds the injury with consistent pressure and ice water to keep down swelling after having surgery.

"All of that stuff worked though," said Hill. "I'm back. I finally feel like I'm getting back to 100 percent these days. I've got bigger problems than an achy knee on most nights. I've never been a fan of running, but once I was able to do it again, I was so happy.

"You would have never seen a happier person running suicides for coach [Dacko]."

Like many modern athletes, Diatiema Hill managed to successfully return from a serious injury that would have ended any athlete's career 20 playing years ago.

The odds are high, however, that it won't be long before another Minutewoman is struck down on the court with this traumatic and life-altering injury.

When it does occur, the long process of healing will begin once again, and someone else will inhabit the Mullins Center stairwells.

Nick Bush can be reached at nbush@dailycollegian.com.

Dixon juggling spots and finding success

TENNIS from page 10

After beginning the season at the No. 1 spot, Boney was moved down to No. 2 to allow her to work on her confidence and skills. Now, Dixon feels Boney is a better fit at No. 2 with Ploch at No. 1, giving the Minutewomen a formidable one-two punch.

"I like Boney at No. 2, it took her a while to get her confidence back but she finally is back to where we expected," Dixon said. "What you see now is much different than what you saw three weeks ago. If I keep her at No. 2, it allows her to feel stronger and more comfortable with her game.

"Ploch is a very solid No. 1 and that allows us to have a very strong combination at the top two singles positions," she said.

The weekend ended UMass' indoor portion of the schedule as it heads into the outdoor season. The Minutewomen will play their next home match at the Mullins Courts when they host the Rhode Island on April 9.

UMass will next be back in action when it travels to Florida to face Barry University on March 16 and Florida Atlantic on March 17.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu

USA drops Venezuela, 15-6, in opening round of WBC

By Mark Herrmann
Newsday

TORONTO — It took much longer than 10 minutes, much longer than it supposedly was going to take for the Mets to straighten out Victor Zambrano, to complete the top of the sixth inning. By the time it finally was over, Team USA had taken care of Zambrano, his Venezuelan team and any worries about the first round of this World Baseball Classic.

The Americans took the sixth, scoring eight runs, including four off the struggling former Mets pitcher, and went on to a 15-6 rout at Rogers Centre Sunday night. The whole night fit right into manager Davey Johnson's goal of making this tournament "a good experience" for everyone on his roster. The experience will last at least into next weekend as Team USA clinched a place in the second round, to be held in Miami.

And it will play one more game here Wednesday, for seeding. It won't hurt Johnson's goal of ensuring that every American player gets a good taste.

Johnson said before the game that he does have a shortstop coach, Barry Larkin is in charge of when Derek Jeter and Jimmy Rollins play, and he told Johnson in the middle of the opener against Canada on Saturday that the two would split that game. "Well, you know, I had a plan going in," Johnson said.

Sunday night, Rollins started, went 2-for-3 and was replaced by Jeter in the fifth (after Jeter had started, gone 2-for-3 and left in the fifth against Canada).

A much trickier proposition is the one faced by pitching coach Marcel Lachemann. Everybody on the staff needs work, but their major-league teams are adamant that they not get too much.

As it was, Johnson had to bring in Matt Lindstrom one batter earlier than he had hoped. Starter Roy Oswalt was out of gas with two outs in the Venezuela fourth, having turned a 2-1 lead into a 3-2 deficit by allowing two walks and two hits. A run-scoring single by Gregor Blanco was Oswalt's final pitch. Lindstrom, incidentally, was superb, firing in the high 90s and retiring all four batters he faced.

Aside from being the winning pitcher, he performed the near impossible: He temporarily quieted the Venezuelan fans. This U.S. opponent's crowd was about one-fifth the size of Canada's on Saturday, but just as fervent. People waved flags, rattled noisemakers, chanted and sang.

They had to overlook the fact that Luis Sojo, the manager and former Yankee, has much greater bullpen problems than Johnson does. Notably, he had to use Zambrano. Bringing him into a game might be one of the international signs of distress.

He was both spark and gasoline for the U.S. offense, although he did begin the eight-run sixth with a strikeout. Kevin Youkilis reached on a wild third strike. David Wright (3-for-5) singled, Adam Dunn walked and Mark DeRosa (two innings removed from a two-run triple) walked to force in the tying run.

Lefthander Carlos Vasquez was summoned to face righthanded batter Chris Iannetta, and that resulted in a three-run double. Before the inning was over, Dustin Pedroia had hit a two-run double, Youkilis had a two-run home run and the United States was up by seven. Said Dunn: "With that lineup, I don't see a reason why we don't have a few of those innings a night."

In the top of the ninth, after Ryan Braun's homer off Victor Moreno put the United States ahead by 10, the fans were chanting in Spanish for Sojo to pitch.

The American dugout was as pumped as the Venezuelan crowd, fulfilling Johnson's mission statement. "Basically, I need to have everybody have a good experience here."

Dustin Pedroia, left, and Kevin Youkilis drove in two runs each in the United States' win over Venezuela in the WBC.

Crazy about Sports?

Then come write for the Collegian

Contact Eli Rosenwa
Sports@DailyCollegian.c

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR FALL 2009

The Writing Program Placement Test will be offered on:
Wednesday, March 11, at 7:00pm in Bartlett 310

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing).

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

NEED AN APARTMENT?

PUFFTON VILLAGE

• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Mixed results end UM indoor season

Men and women determined to improve on outdoor tracks

BY NOAH STEINBERG-DI STEFANO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's and women's track and field teams competed on their biggest stage of the season so far at the ECAC and IC4A Championships on Saturday. The Minutemen sent seven athletes and three relay teams to the Reggie Lewis Center in Boston while the women sent three athletes and two relay teams to Roxbury, Mass., for the ECAC championships. It was the last competition of the indoor season for both teams.

The event pitted both teams against some of the premier track and field athletes in the nation. The day's top performance came from sophomore standout Scott VanderMolen, who ran a season-best 2 minutes, 26.81 seconds in the 1,000-meter run for the fifth-fastest time in UMass indoor track history. The time was good enough for an 11th-overall finish as VanderMolen put an exclamation mark on an impressive sophomore campaign. Also contributing was freshman Phillip Weltman, who ran the 400-meter in 48.89 to finish 16th overall.

Junior Jonathan Pierce followed up his performance last weekend at the New England Championships with a 19th-place finish in the 3,000-meter run with a time of 8:29.69. Fellow junior Sean Duncan recorded a time of 1:57.33 to put him in 27th place. In his final indoor meet, senior Pete Fortunato ran the mile in 4:22.40 for a 31st-place finish.

In the sprints, sophomore Darius Velez, from nearby Cambridge, Mass., ran the 55-meter dash in 6.55 for a 23rd-place finish while junior Tyler Cotto finished 22nd in the 55-meter hurdles with a time of 7.78.

The relay teams hovered around the middle of the pack for the Minutemen, who sent three teams to competition. The distance medley team – consisting of Zach Gordon, Daniel Schwartz, Andrew McCann and Ryan Diorio – ran the event in 10:06.44 for a 19th-place finish. The 4x400-meter squad of Schwartz, Matt Gulino, Andrew O'Donnell and Jason Dwyer placed 21st with a time of 3:21.18. In the 4x800-meter event, Fortunato, Josh Boone, Mark Mariano and Alex Tarlow finished with a time of 7:58.98 to finish 23rd.

The Minutewomen sent three individuals – fewer than most teams – to compete in the ECAC's, they finished 35th out of the 50 competing. Redshirt senior Kristen Bakanowski scored the lone six points for the Minutewomen on the day, vaulting a season-best 12-09.50 to land a third-place overall finish.

Also in the field for the women, Stephanie Aguguo triple-jumped a mark of 37-03.75 to finish 21st in the event, while Ida Okkonen long-jumped 17-04 to finish 23rd.

Members of the distance medley team put forth outstanding performances for a time 12:19.19 and a 15th-place finish. Bakanowski, Deanna Julian, Rosalind Murphy and Holly Heinricher teamed up to run the 4x400-meter relay in 3:55.72 to finish 23rd.

Both teams will be able to enjoy some much-needed time off before competition resumes with the outdoor season on April 4.

Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano can be reached at steinber@student.umass.edu

KEITH KNIGHT/COLLEGIAN

Scott VanderMolen ran a season–best two minutes, 26.81 seconds in the 1,000–meter run. His time was also the fifth–fastest time in UMass' indoor school history.

Schneider honored, streak at 13 after win

SCHNEIDER from page 12

followed three goals and made 14 saves in UMass' win.

This is the second straight week Schneider has won the award. He earned it last week for his role in the Minutemen's 18-6 win over Hofstra in which he recorded 14 saves and four goals allowed.

Schneider is currently fourth in the NCAA in both save percentage (64.31) and goals against average (6.30). His ability to swallow up outside shots and deny any cheap goals makes it very difficult for opponents to score.

"A lot of their shots were outside shots. That's what we're going to give up and Doc, the quality goalie that his is, he will soak those up," Cannella said.

Schneider has been lauded for his work ethic and attention to detail. As a senior with a great deal of experience, he has become one of the team's most dependable players.

"Doc's amazing, he's played for me with four years now, and he starts everything, he motivates me more then anything, he's always on my ass all week for everything," Godoi said. "His actions speak for themselves, he works harder then anyone else I know, it definitely rubs off on me and the team."

CRIMSON KILLERS

UMass has won the last 13 games it has played on the road against Harvard, and 19 of its last 20. This is impressive, especially considering that the Crimson is typically one of the better teams in the nation.

No one could agree on an explanation for why the Minutemen are so good against Harvard. One reason mentioned by Hayes is that the team gets fired up because so many UMass players are from the Boston area and they have a great fan base. Another reason is that the in-state rivalry just brings out the best in UMass.

Of course the most popular answer is "Who knows?" It's also the answer Canella prefers because he knows that despite history, every game against Harvard will be a challenge.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

KEITH KNIGHT/MASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior goalkeeper Doc Schneider currently ranks fourth in the NCAA in both save percentage and goals-against average.

As skiing ends both teams looks to add depth next season

Three seniors graduate, teams looking to bolster depth

BY ADAM MCGILLEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After four days of events at Winter Park Resort in Winter Park, Colo., the Massachusetts women's ski team cemented a sixth-overall finish out of 20 teams competing for the national title.

The Westminster College (Salt Lake City, Utah) women's team left no room for improvement, winning the 2009 USCSA National Championship in its inaugural season.

The Griffins' men side faired just as well, winning the men's national championship.

Alex Zahoruiko, a senior co-captain, was the only Minuteman invited to the competition.

He placed 15th in the giant slalom and 17th in the slalom. Zahoruiko also shared Second Team All-American honors with junior Emily Shilletto, co-captain of the Minutewomen.

Shilletto, Heidi Skinner, Amy Gifford and Jamie Taloumis were named Academic All-American's after their solid performances during the week.

Events began on Wednesday, March 4, with the women's giant slalom. Shilletto led the Minutewomen with a 13th-place finish, followed by Gifford in 20th and Abby Nolan in 30th. Each skier improved her time on the second run of the day to propel the team to a sixth-place finish for the event.

It set the tone for Friday's slalom event, where Skinner made her mark on the competition.

"Heidi made an incredible jump from the first run to the second," said UMass coach Skip Fox. "She was 46th after the first run and made a big jump up to 28th place with a great second run."

Shilletto kept the momentum going with a combined time of 1 minute, 28.20 seconds on the slalom, placing 12th, followed by teammate, Taloumis, in 20th, and then Skinner.

The team's combined score of 269.4 placed it in sixth for the event.

The event marked the end of the women's season. The young team, who will lose Emily Zimmerman to graduation in May, will have a chance to make another run at the national title next year.

Zahoruiko followed the ladies' example by improving dramatically on his second run at the giant slalom event on Thursday.

He posted a time of 1:05.54 in the early run, but came back later and cut his time to 56.08, catapulting himself to a 15th-place finish.

The men's slalom event on Saturday proved one of the most challenging at the national championships.

Of the 109 individual skiers that attempted the run in Colorado's Rocky Mountains, 37 did not finish and another six were disqualified.

Zahoruiko posted a combined time of 1:44.15 at the event, earning 17th place.

The men's team loses two seniors in Paul Lewenberg and Zahoruiko. Andrew Hawes, who shared captainship of the team this season with Zahoruiko, will assume leadership of the team as a senior next year.

Adam McGillen can be reached at amcgille@student.umass.edu.

With win North Carolina regains top spot

BY ROBIN PICKERAL
ASSOCIATED NEWSPAPERS

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — After every big victory this basketball season, North Carolina's seniors tempered the accomplishment with the reminder that there's still more to do.

Yet Sunday, after beating seventh-ranked Duke 79-71 in their regular-season finale, they could finally take a moment to appreciate all they have done so far.

By topping the Blue Devils for the sixth time in their four-year careers, Tyler Hansbrough, Danny Green, Bobby Frasor and Mike Copeland won their third regular-season ACC title and second outright enabling them to cut down the nets at the Smith Center once again.

That gives the second-ranked Tar Heels (27-3, 13-3 ACC) the top seed in this week's league tournament for the third straight season (they'll play the winner of Thursday's Virginia Tech-Miami game at noon EDT on Friday). It also likely earned them a No. 1 seed in the NCAA Tournament for the third straight time as well.

All after starting the conference season 0-2.

"I think it's very important for seniors to go out on a good note and have a good memory going on their home floor," said Green, who played in his 116th victory, the most of any Tar Heel. "... And to go out with a winning record against Duke, that's a great feeling."

UNC coach Roy Williams said he always puts pressure on his underclassmen to make sure the seniors do, indeed, go out the "right way." Doing that against the Blue Devils (25-6, 11-5) looked like a challenge, though, considering Duke had won five straight games and the Tar Heels' starting point guard, Ty Lawson, was questionable to play after jamming his right big toe on Friday.

In the end, Lawson (13 points, nine assists, eight rebounds) and fellow juniors Wayne Ellington (16 points) and Deon Thompson (14 points, including a key three-point play in the final minutes) did their parts. They helped their team shoot 52.8 percent for the game while cracking down on Duke's early sharpshooting in the second half (32 percent).

But many of the key moments came from the Tar Heel seniors, too:

With 17:45 left, Green buried his first 3-point basket of the game, giving Carolina a 43-41 advantage. Duke cut it to a field goal on several occasions, but UNC led the rest of the way in part because of another Green 3-pointer, with 3:13 left, that gave the Tar Heels a five-point cushion. He finished with a dozen points.

With 55 seconds left just after Lawson made a three-point play to give the Tar Heels a 76-69 lead Frasor made a key steal, thwarting Duke's final comeback attempt. He also made a 3-pointer in the first half, only his second connection from behind the arc since the last time the Tar Heels played Duke.

And Hansbrough, as usual, was a dominant force in the lane, leading his team with 17 points and eight rebounds before he fouled out for only the third time in his career. Six of those points came on 3-pointers, another fun memory to file away.

"Winning was important to me for the simple reason that it's my last time playing here," said Hansbrough, who has already qualified to have his No. 50 jersey retired. "And you always want to beat Duke ... and win the ACC; that's important, too."

Blue Devils coach Mike Krzyzewski said his team which got 24 points from Jon Scheyer and 23 from Kyle Singler played better defense, had better shots and competed better than when it lost to UNC on Feb. 11.

"But they're really good," Krzyzewski said of Carolina. "You know, if they're not the top team, they've got to be one of the top two or three."

Mostly because of the seniors, a rebuilding block class that finished with a 57-8 record in at home. The seniors said they would enjoy their latest accomplishment until midnight and then refocus on trying to achieve more.

"It'll be back to business," Green said. "In practice, we'll keep pushing each other. . . . We know what we're capable of doing, and hopefully we'll continue to do that."

BRIEFLY: Copeland, who started because it was senior day, committed two personal fouls before going to the bench. None of the three walk-ons started, but before the tip, J.B. Tanner, Jack Wooten and Patrick Moody each went to mid-court with the rest of the starters before going back to the bench.

2X Tuesday
Domino's Pizza
Buy any large pizza, get second one FREE
413-256-8911

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Dubious.

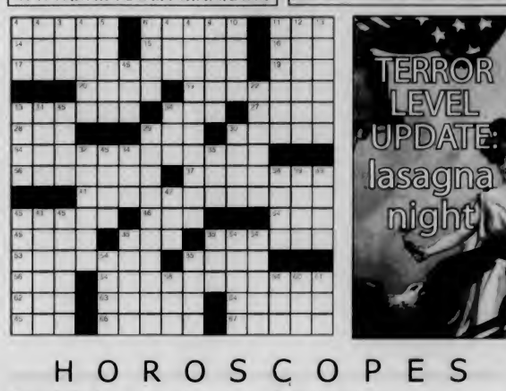
| | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1 | | 6 | | | 9 |
| | | 7 | | 4 | | 1 |
| 8 | 4 | | 5 | 2 | | |
| 8 | | | | | 2 | |
| | 4 | 8 | 3 | | 9 | |
| | 9 | | | | | 3 |
| | | 8 | 3 | | 7 | 1 |
| 1 | | 5 | | 8 | | |
| 4 | | | 2 | | 3 | |

ACROSS
1 San Antonio shrine
6 Marine ray
11 ___ Angeles
14 Backless sofa
15 False name
16 Trajectory
17 Prison beacon
19 ___ Grande
20 Composition for two
21 Slammer
23 Conan or Pat
26 Picnicked
27 Cry out
28 ___ Paulo, Brazil
29 NASA orbiter
30 Curvy letters
31 Fuddy-duddy
36 Semitic fertility goddess
37 African-American poet Maya
41 Much-anticipated event
43 Hit hard
46 Spike or Christopher
47 Slippery creature
48 Lot measure
49 Pull behind
50 Early '60s dance
53 Dance party
55 Rover's pal?
56 Downswing
57 Practical
62 Samuel's mentor
63 Wintery forecast
64 Physicist Curie
65 Hideout
66 Examines
67 Biblical verb

DOWN
1 Commercials
2 Whopper
3 Gardner of "On the Beach"
4 ___ Grad
5 At the right moment
6 Whiskey ingredient
7 Muhammad
8 Poisonous shrub
9 Nevada resort
10 Haggadah
11 T shirt sizes
12 Baseball bird
13 Disapproving faces
18 Bixby
22 Methodology
23 Peak in Thessaly
24 Dugout stack
25 Resounding defeat
26 Bonehead
29 Sets of beliefs
30 Cogito ___ sum
32 Do up
33 Liberate
34 Oh-used abbr
35 Business abbr
38 In ___ of
39 Biffed liter
40 Hybrid fruit
42 Innovative
43 Mouthed off
44 TV role for Borgnine
45 Beginning
49 Book datum
50 Comic
51 West and Ant
52 Synagogue scroll
54 Gold powder
55 Is just the right size
58 Tennis do-over
59 "Silver" author Levin
60 Feel poorly
61 Bottom-line figure

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



go to dailycollegian.com/comics or else this monkey will be shot into space immediately

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"The only reason some people get lost in thought is because it's unfamiliar territory."

— Paul Fix

DREAM NATION BY LOUIS COPPOLA

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

CHEAP CITY BY MICHAEL CAPOZZOLA

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Make a list of projects that you want to complete, and then burn that list. Now your expectations will be sufficiently low.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
The minute anyone finds out what's really in your "cheese" fondue, you'll be turned into a social outcast.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
The time has come to start planing all the pointless crap you're going to do over spring break.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You've been clashing with authority figures lately, but mostly just with Lord Steve, the most dominant of your multiple personas.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Warning: Smoking cigarettes may be dangerous to your bank account.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You're finding it easier and easier to facilitate miracles at a moment's notice, but you still can't swipe your Ucard correctly the first time.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
If your life had a musical score, it would consist solely of jazz flute.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You've been dominating your friends in video games your whole life, but that is little restitution for being born with four thumbs.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You can't dig in the garden without a hoe.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Start working out the details ahead of time. That way you won't get stuck hitchhiking with horny truckers like last summer.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You are hotter than the sun on a mildly overcast May morning.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Your arm will fall asleep this evening, completely and utterly bored with what you are asking it to write.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominiums
Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

ANNOUNCEMENT

Montreal Party Weekends from $69 Montrealblow-out.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900

FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St: 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room eat in kitchen, pantry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 miles to campus! www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

FOR RENT

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass. Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms, hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

House for rent. 2 bedroom, kitchen, 2 bath. $1000/month. On bus route 413-549-6091

FOR RENT

3 br, 1 b, laundry hookups + appliances, 5 min. to UMass, 3-share max. No pets. Available now, $1000/mo. 1st + last + security + references: 413549-7308

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 10, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

After big win, No. 14 UM takes on Albany

No time for rest as Minutemen face another tough road test

BY MELISSA TORTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Ideally, a coach has a week to prepare between games, but Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella had one day of practice to get his team ready to play Albany Tuesday afternoon.

The UMass-Albany game has been played on a Tuesday for seven of the eight games the teams have faced each other. The series is tied, 4-4, with the Great Danes leading 2-1 the series in games played in Albany.

The No. 14 Minutemen (3-1) are coming off a 7-3 victory against then-No. 12 Harvard on Saturday. Senior goalkeeper Doc Schneider, named the Eastern College Athletic Conference's Defensive Player of the Week, had a career-low three goals against and made 14 saves in the game.

"It's a tough mental and emotional battle to get yourself ready to play again for both teams and hopefully we can travel well, get there and go out there and play a good game," Cannella said.

Since 2004 every game between the teams has been decided by one goal, the first four were in favor of Albany, but UMass took a 9-8 win on March 11 of last year.

"Anytime you're in a game with them it's going to be a dogfight," Cannella said. "In the last five years they've all been one-goal games. I wouldn't expect anything different. I hope it's different on our side, but I wouldn't expect anything different."

Albany, a team that sits just outside the top 20 (receiving two votes last week), also has momentum from the weekend, coming off a 15-12 win over Delaware last Friday.

"Albany is a team that is very similar to UMass: both state universities, both have guys that work very hard and never give up," Cannella said. "They've built a great tradition over the last six or seven years. [Albany coach] Scott Marr has done a great job. They are a very talented team."

In the Great Danes' win on Friday, senior attacker Corey Small tallied a career-high eight goals, to bring his total to 12 on the season.

"[Small] is a great finisher, a great all-around player. A lefty [that] has a cannon of a shot,"

See LACROSSE on page 9

ANDY WESTERVELT/COLLEGIAN

Defensive midfielder Dennis Lynch and the No. 14 Minutemen take on Albany today at 4 p.m. UMass will have to focus in on Albany's Corey Small, who tallied eight goals in his last game.

ANDY WESTERVELT/COLLEGIAN

Bobby Hayes has scored four goals and assisted on five others so far this season. The junior midfielder has helped the Minutemen to a 3-1 record so far this season, with their only loss coming to nationally-ranked Hofstra, 11-10, on Feb. 21.

Godoi's huge hits, energy, lifting team

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

There's a fine line between playing aggressive and playing reckless and for a player as intense as Diogo Godoi, it can be tough to stay on the right side of that line.

As a defender on the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, Godoi has earned a reputation for his extremely physical play and his bone-rattling hits. His skills were on full display in the Minutemen's 7-3 win over then No. 12 Harvard on Saturday, when he decked any opposing player that dared enter his territory.

UMass Lacrosse

The hard hits certainly energize his entire team and intimidate the opposition.

"Diogo's a beast. He's a big boy and he's just playing so hard, he's one of our best defenders and he had a good game today," said midfielder Bobby Hayes.

But with Godoi's ferocious style of play comes a price. Godoi drew four penalties totaling 4 minutes, 30 seconds more than the Harvard team had all game. It can be hard to for him to keep his emotions under control.

"I have a hard time calming myself down," Godoi said. "I'm a real quiet guy in the locker room, so I try to save [my anger] for the field; sometimes it's a bit much and it kind of hurt me in the beginning [of the Harvard game]."

The penalties occasionally frustrate UMass coach Greg Cannella, who often has to calm Godoi down, but he has faith that his player knows when to keep himself in check.

"He was pretty pumped up and a little bit tight," Cannella said. "We were concerned about Diogo, but at halftime he told us to trust him ... and fortunately we had his back and things worked out well."

Still, a pretty every now and then is a small tradeoff to get a player who can take over a game on defense.

DOC HONORED

Goalkeeper Doc Schneider was named the Eastern College Athletic Conference Defensive Player of the Week for his performance against Harvard. He

See SCHNEIDER on page 10

UMass dominates weekend matches

BY JAY ASSER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After completing the majority of the season, the Massachusetts tennis team heads into spring break with momentum on their side after trouncing both Hofstra and Siena by a 7-0 score this weekend.

On Saturday, Hofstra (7-4) traveled to Amherst plagued by injuries, bringing only five players. This gave UMass a default point for a forfeited doubles match.

However, UMass coach Judy Dixon felt Hofstra's injuries put her team in a difficult situation rather than at an advantage.

"The Hofstra team was really struggling with injuries and illness, which makes the match hard to play," Dixon said. "We had to get beyond the fact that they showed up with only five people. That immediately raises expectations, putting the pressure on us."

The Minutewomen (8-6) had little trouble though, as they split in doubles play and swept all five singles matches to defeat the Pride 7-0.

The No. 1 doubles team of Magdalena Ploch and Tanisha Hodgson faced UMass' only difficulties of the day, falling 8-6 to Hofstra's Stacey Kent and Lauren Clifton.

At No. 2, Maude Lecluyse and Laura Dinai defeated Brooke Sailer and Christie Gattelaro, 8-6, earning the doubles point for the Minutewomen.

UMass was led in singles play by its top two players, Ploch and Candynce Boney, who claimed two decisive wins.

Ploch continued her strong rookie campaign, defeating Clifton 6-1, 6-1 to give her four wins at the No. 1 position, and an 8-6 overall record in singles matches.

At No. 2, Boney played well on her way to claiming the first set 6-2, and then earned the victory after her opponent, Gattelaro, retired.

Dixon was satisfied with how her team performed, knowing the circumstances were different than most matches it had played this season.

"We did well enough in an unusual situation and played through the distractions," she said.

On Sunday, the Minutewomen carried over the momentum from the previous day to defeat Siena (2-5) by another 7-0 score. UMass failed to concede a set on the day, winning all three doubles matches and all six singles matches.

The duo of Dinai and Lecluyse moved up to No. 1 doubles and pulled out a tough 8-6 win against Sarah Mayer and Danielle Crill. With the victory, the pair improved its undefeated record to 10-0.

The highlight of the day came from Boney, who played in place of Ploch at No. 1 singles. Boney defeated Mayer, the two-time Metro Atlantic Athletic Conference (MAAC) Player of the Year and reigning MAAC Player of the Week, in straight sets, 6-4, 6-3. Boney, who has played much better as of late, has now raised her singles record to an even 11-11.

See TENNIS on page 9

COLLEGIAN - MAYA MEHTA-KELATOS

Tanisha Hodgson has recently been paired up with UMass standout Magdalena Ploch in the No. 1 doubles pairing. This season the sophomore has earned a 12–9 overall record and a 5–2 record in tournament play.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

RAIN HI: 52 LO: 25 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 2009

SGA campaign suspended

Mbawuike/Bloch to halt efforts for one-hour on final day

BY MIKE FOX
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The SGA election commission issued a one-hour suspension of campaigning near polling places for the Mbawuike/Bloch campaign after learning of alleged misuse of SGA resources.

The charge was filed against the Mbawuike/Bloch campaign by the FaulknerDavidson campaign.

The SGA election commission held a meeting yesterday afternoon to address the grievance filed in regards to the election, which concludes today.

Trustee candidate Emily Bloch and SGA presidential candidate Ngozi Mbawuike will have their campaign suspended for one hour today.

The grievance contained six sections, but not all were deemed to have merit.

The Mbawuike/Bloch campaign issued a statement offering an explanation of one of the charges deemed to be true.

"Two members of our campaign had campaign materials with them to be used later in the day and placed them face-down while attending their Senate committee meeting in the SGA office," the statement read. "The Elections Commission determined that none of the other charges were valid. We abided by the penalty. We find it regrettable that the Faulkner-Davidson campaign decided to shatter the civil tone of the elections, especially considering that all but one of the complaints were determined by the Elections Commission to be baseless."

Trustee Candidate Josh Davidson said the one-hour suspension could have different effects on the election depending on when it is carried out. Most students vote during meal times, and visibility then is important.

He added the grievance was filed with the intention of having a fair election.

Speaking on the meeting and how the decision was reached, Chancellor of Elections Sean McNair said all candidates involved with the complaints remained mature and maintained their full integrity during the proceedings.

Speaking of the suspension, Trustee Candidate Emily Bloch said, "We are glad that campaigning can resume, and we respect and support the decision of the election commission. We hope for a fair election and that students will continue to turn out tomorrow."

Trustee Candidate Josh Davidson echoed Bloch's statements, "We are most concerned with having a fair election and will stand by whatever the election commission decided."

Both campaigns mentioned that they will continue to stay concerned with getting out their messages and that they hope for voter turnout to continue and increase today.

William McGuinness also contributed to this article

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

Hate crimes to be talk's focus

Conservative Boston media pundit Don Feder will speak on hate crimes in the Cape Cod Lounge at 7 p.m., hosted by the UMass Republican Club.

Feder speaks at UMass tonight

BY SAM BUTTERFIELD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Conservative pundit Don Feder will speak tonight in the Cape Cod Lounge on hate crimes, a topic of particular significance given recent claims related to the Justice for Jason campaign by the UMass Republican Club, which is hosting the event.

Feder, a former columnist for the Boston Herald and editorial director of sports radio WEEI, states on his website, "I believe in God, America and the family," and that "I believe in Biblical morality, often designated Judeo-Christian ethics." Further, Feder states that "any attempt to separate America from God is a betrayal of our Republic."

Feder contends that the very notion of hate crime is "lib speak" or rhetoric crafted by liberals to ensure speech is politically correct and make conservatives feel ashamed of their views.

On the topic of hate crime, Feder said, "It's being used as a wedge issue in order to punish people for politically incorrect thinking. Hate crimes are thought crimes, ultimately you're not just punishing peoples' actions, you're punishing their thoughts, you're punishing their motivations," he said.

Though he declined to comment on the Jason Vassell case, citing the pending litigation and the fact that the case has not been deemed a hate crime, Feder said various hate crimes should simply be labeled crimes, that hate is too ambiguous a word and that it can serve prosecutors and the justice system.

"It's too amorphous; it can mean anything the prosecutors, courts and interest groups want it to mean," Feder said.

Jason Vassell supporters have accused the UMass Police Department and the Northwestern District Attorney, Elizabeth Scheibel, of institutionalized racism, claiming that the charges against Vassell are more severe than those of his white attackers.

Feder alleges this is impossible, as he claims that labeling anything a hate crime is a suppression of free speech and free expression.

On Monday, the Republican Club said it was excited to see Mr. Feder address "the myth of hate crime laws and the liberals who propagate it."

Club President Greg Collins said that the group is bringing Feder to Amherst specifically to challenge Vassell supporters' claims of hate crime.

"We brought Don Feder, first and foremost, to challenge the assumptions of Justice for Jason supporters and politically correct liberals on campus that hate crimes are legitimate forms of crimes," he said.

"I think legislating hate crimes infringes on free speech because it allows government to shape how people think," Collins continued. "Any crime, in one sense or another, is a hate crime. 'Hate crimes' demean the severity of actual crimes."

The UMass GOP has accused Justice for Jason of "legally questionable fundraising techniques," and "corruption and wrongdoing," in its publication, The Minuteman, and has levied personal attacks on leaders of the Justice for Jason movement such as Dan Keefe, whom Minuteman co-managing editor Brad DeFlumeri referred to as "Danny 'The Tranny' Keefe."

DeFlumeri, the Republican Club vice president, said in a statement that the political left is responsible for misleading the public on what hate crime is and that he hoped Feder would right this misconception.

"The political left's dishonest hijacking and distortion of this issue has left many a college student in the dark, clueless and confused over what constitutes a hate crime," he said. "Mr. Feder will bring much-needed rationality and an infrequently heard yet invaluable conservative perspective to this topic."

DeFlumeri said the Republican Club expects liberal students to protest Feder's speech.

"These same students are threatening to undermine the aforementioned Don Feder speech by disrupting it with 400 protesters," he said. "This club is well-accustomed to UMass leftists' lies, threats and attempts to denigrate the United States Constitution," he said.

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sjb09@hampshire.edu

UM degree ranks among best long-term values in country

BY GARY TARANTINO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts is ranked as one of the nation's best long-term values for students, according to the January 2009 issue of SmartMoney magazine, which ranks colleges across the country based on the cost of attendance and average salary after students graduate.

SmartMoney ranks UMass 18th in the nation out of a study of 50 leading colleges, placing it ahead of Ivy League schools such as Harvard, Yale, Dartmouth and other schools like Swarthmore and the University of Michigan.

Overall, "public universities turn out to be a far better deal than virtually all the privates we surveyed" in providing return on investment, according to the magazine.

"Families and students increasingly recognize that UMass Amherst is an outstanding value, and this survey highlights the excellent opportunities offered here," said campus spokesman Ed Blaguszewski. "As the state's public research university, we distinctly offer undergraduates a broad array of majors and the chance to engage in high-level research, preparing students for professional success."

Along with consultant PayScale.com, publisher of an alumni salary survey, SmartMoney researched what graduates from the top 50 public and private schools had earned in their early and mid-careers. The study then factored in up-front tuition and fees to calculate a "payback ratio" for each school. UMass has a payback ratio of 152 percent, with median salary calculated to be $46,600 and $88, 200 three years after graduation and 15 years after graduation, respectively. This year, tuition and fees for in-state undergraduates total $10, 232.

The top five public universities on the SmartMoney list are Texas A&M, University of Texas at Austin, Georgia Tech, University of Georgia and University of Washington.

The top five Ivy League Schools are Washington and Lee, University of Richmond, Lafayette College, College of the Holy Cross and Bucknell University.

The top five liberal arts schools are Princeton, Dartmouth, Yale, Harvard and Penn. The complete list of top 50 colleges can be found at SmartMoney.com.

Gary Tarantino can be reached at gtarant@student.umass.edu

COURTESY IMAGE

The University of Massachusetts Amherst ranks 18th in a study looking at the top 50 long-term value colleges in the country.

Amherst College gets hit by economy, school issues $100 million in taxable debt

BY DOMENIC POLI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The nation's economic recession is starting to hit high-tier private schools, as Amherst College last month issued $100 million in fixed-rate, taxable debt to try to preserve the asset allocation of its damaged endowment.

The liberal arts college, which started the fiscal year with $1.7 billion in its endowment, was down 26 percent, or $442 million, to $1.258 billion in December.

Amherst College Treasurer Peter Shea told The Daily Hampshire Gazette the $100 million will go toward the school's operating budget, adding that it is "doing this sort of thing now to give the endowment time to stay where it's at with the asset allocation, so it can be there for the recovery."

Shea, who said this type of financial strategy is becoming more and more common, also mentioned that a positive turn in the stock market would help the college recover some or even all of its lost endowment money.

"It relieves the endowment from the obligation of providing operating support," he said.

Other institutions of higher education with large endowments – such as Harvard, Duke and Princeton – have also sought out debt to help support their endowed investments.

Since December, Duke has issued $500 million in bonds, Harvard has issued $1.5 billion and Princeton $1 billion, according to The Duke Chronicle.

By taking on this new debt, Amherst College's annual debt payments may consume up to 11 percent of its annual operating budget. The standard of the industry is to not allow debt payments to account for more than 10 percent of the budget.

According to The Gazette, Shea said that while the college is aware of the increasing debt burden, he is confident in its financial stability.

Domenic Poli can be reached dpoli@student.umass.edu.

ARTS & LIVING

BALANCING ACT AT FAC

The National Acrobats of China performed at the FAC Monday night, stunning the crowd with bizarre contortions, balancing acts and aesthetic beauty.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

A-10 PREVIEW

For six straight seasons, the Massachusetts men's basketball team has lost its first game in the conference tournament. The Minutemen will look to avoid that fate tonight vs. Duquesne.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION

Columnist Ben Moriarty warns of the dangers of Spring Break – beyond Mexico's drug wars.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

WATCH VIDEO | both opinions from Sunday's Amherst Common rally on how to reach peace in the Middle East.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 31

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Waszczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Surkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COPY EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenwaike
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR P.J. Stanley
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zolnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kerrware
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Tortinen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Leonard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Asaperi
ASSISTANT PHOTO Ryan Fung
ASSISTANT PHOTO Matthew Harrison
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Weiber

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION TEAM
Nick Guanno

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

TODAY

NEWS

VIDEO:
OUR CAMERA CAPTURES BOTH OPINIONS FROM SUNDAY'S AMHERST COMMON RALLY ON HOW TO REACH PEACE IN THE MIDDLE EAST.

BLOG:
READ THE LATEST IN UMASS RESEARCH, POLITICS AND STUDENT LIFE FOR THE WEEK ON THE COLLEGIAN'S NEWS BLOGS. NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS TELLS OF GOING UNDER THE KNIFE FOR UMASS KINESIOLOGY.

PODCAST:
CATCH A ROUND TABLE DISCUSSION ABOUT THIS YEAR'S SGA ELECTION WITH INPUT FROM COLLEGIAN POLITICS REPORTERS AND THEIR EDITORS.

VIDEO:
SEE MORE OF WHAT THE SGA CANDIDATES HAD TO SAY AT LAST WEEK'S PRE-ELECTION DEBATE.

VIDEO:
COLLEGIAN REPORTER AND UVC-TV 19 CORRESPONDENT GISEL SAILLANT HOLDS LITTLE BACK WHILE SOLICITING REAL STUDENT OPINION ON A VARIETY OF ISSUES.

THURSDAY

NEWS

VIDEO:
WATCH FOOTAGE FROM DON FEDER'S TALK, "HATE CRIMES (IT'S NOT WHAT YOU THINK)."

SPORTS

PODCAST:
COLLEGIAN SPORTS EDITORS PREVIEW WHAT THE UMASS MEN'S BASKETBALL TEAM FACES THIS YEAR AS THEY HEAD INTO THE A-10 TOURNAMENT.

Credit cards vulnerable to wireless

BY WALLIN WONG
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

CHICAGO — Richard Rushing has walked the Champs-Elysees in Paris and strolled an underground mall in Seoul. But he's not a shopper. He's a wireless security expert who scans the airwaves in busy retail areas to study how stores are protecting your data.

"Retailers have always taken security very seriously," said Rushing, senior director of information security for mobile devices at Motorola Inc., noting the common use of security cameras and guards.

"But they're not looking at the airwaves to see what's leaking out of their stores wirelessly. You don't need the merchandise if you can steal a credit card number and buy a gift card," Rushing said.

Most consumers don't think about what happens to their credit card information when they swipe their plastic at the cash register.

The reality is that large retailers have wireless networks that connect cash registers, bar code scanners and store computers. Those networks can be vulnerable to breaches by hackers or thieves.

In some high-profile cases, thieves plucked not just one card number, but tens of millions.

In 2007, discount retailer TJX Cos. said a computer breach exposed 45.7 million credit and debit cards to account information theft. The group accused of stealing the TJX data was believed to have hacked into several stores' weakly encrypted wireless networks. Last year, supermarket company Hannaford Bros. reported a data breach, saying customer accounts at stores in the Northeast and Florida were compromised.

Stan Schatt, a vice president at ABI Research, said some retailers are bracing for an uptick in crime because of the economic downturn, whether it's increased shoplifting or employee theft. "What I'm hearing is that some retailers are cutting back in opening new stores and instead are plowing some money into security."

His research shows 77 percent of retailers with 500 or more employees use wireless networks.

"Retailers work on very thin margins, and even a small increase in theft can wipe out their profit margins completely," Schatt said.

In February, Rushing conducted a "war walk" simulation along Chicago's Magnificent Mile, ambling up the sidewalk with a laptop that had an antenna affixed to the side. Proprietary software collected information about active wireless devices and the level of encryption for those networks.

In Rushing's brief circuit, which took him four blocks on Michigan Avenue before he turned around, he passed about 80 stores and detected 140 "access points," or devices that connect wireless gadgets such as computers to the network. Close to one-third of the access points counted during his walk used an older encryption standard called WEP that can be broken in 90 seconds, he said.

The retail industry shares responsibility for security with others in the payment chain, including credit card processors.

In January, payment processor Heartland Payment Systems announced it had found malicious software in its systems that potentially put at risk customer information associated with the 100 million card transactions it handles each month.

Dave Taylor, founder of the PCI Knowledge Base, which helps members of the payment card industry meet security standards, said the financial liability in data breaches makes the issue of security a hot potato. TJX had to set aside $24 million in a settlement with MasterCard Inc.

"TJX and Hannaford had retailers running around like crazy," Taylor said. "Since the big breaches with payment providers, you have retailers pointing their fingers."

Taylor and Rushing emphasized that protecting wireless networks involves more than proper setup and encryption.

Retailers must be careful about employee access and keeping track of portable devices shared among workers.

In many cases of fraud, "the wireless is just the getaway car," Rushing said.

Richard Rushing, senior director of information security at Motorola Inc., walks down Michigan Avenue in Chicago using his laptop to test the security of financial information on wireless Internet used by retailers.

Magnets keep crocodiles away

BY CURTIS MORGAN
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

MIAMI — Veteran trapper Todd Hardwick, who has hauled hundreds of alligators and crocodiles out of neighborhoods over the years, tried something strange earlier this year.

To the puzzlement of onlookers, Hardwick pulled two colored magnets from his pocket and taped them atop the nubby noggin of an 11-foot croc he'd caught in Coral Gables.

"I was quite embarrassed the first time I did it," he said. 'People were like, 'Todd, what are you doing? What is that?'"

That was the start of a modest but fascinating experiment by state wildlife managers, aimed at short-circuiting the homing instincts that often lead captured reptiles right back to the spot that got them in trouble.

The hope is that magnets, removed just before an animal is freed in a far-away spot, might disrupt a primitive but powerful navigation system the lets crocs follow the earth's magnetic fields, almost like a Global Positioning System satellite guides drivers.

With only two crocs magnetized so far, it's far too early to say if it will work. But if it does, the technique could give captured animals a better shot at surviving in the wild and help reduce increasing conflicts between people and South Florida's small but spreading population of crocodiles.

"If there is a way we can break that homing cycle on some of these crocs, maybe there will actually be some validity to relocating them," said Lindsey Hord, a biologist with the Florida Fish & Wildlife Conservation Commission.

Right now, relocating wandering North American crocodiles usually proves futile. Most transplants get killed in territorial fights, crushed by cars while crawling back home or recaptured soon after. They tend to return quickly, within weeks or even days, beelining back from 30 to 50 miles away.

"Anything that slows that down or prohibits it from happening is good," said Hardwick, owner of Pesky Critters and one of the state's best-known reptile wranglers.

Hord said he was inspired to try magnets by a recent journal article that detailed how biologists in Chiapas, Mexico, reported good success relocating 20 crocs. That wasn't exactly a rigorous test, however, using magnets yanked out of scrap truck horns and uncertain techniques to verify the crocs' identities.

Still, scientists who study the reptiles say the idea has potential.

"It's not a loony suggestion," said Gordon Rodda, a zoologist with the U.S. Geological Survey in Colorado, who authored one early study on the magnetic sensitivity of juvenile gators.

Similar tests have had disorienting effects on ocean-ranging tuna and the homing pigeon, which earned its name for a reason, Rodda said. Though they don't look alike, birds are the most closely related relatives of crocs and gators and they share navigational ability.

The prevailing theory, Rodda said, is that sensors in crocs' brains detect small geomagnetic deviations to guide them across distances. The process is not fully understood and may rely on other guideposts as well, such as the sun or smells.

Rodda's 1984 research found homing power developed with age, turning from basic compass to magnetic map. Though undetected by humans, gators and crocs can follow the subtle forces almost like a GPS satellite.

Rodda speculated that more sophisticated gear using high frequencies to "degauss" a croc's magnetic sensors, a process similar to erasing a music tape, could be more effective, but said magnets also could do the job.

An 11-foot salt water crocodile in Florida was the first that the state placed a magnet on to track its movement in 2006. It recently died.

Q&A: Today vs. Depression

BY KEVIN G. HALL
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

WASHINGTON — When President Barack Obama nominated Christina Romer to head the White House Council of Economic Advisers, he picked one of the world's foremost academic experts on the Great Depression. Now she's busily trying to prevent the very circumstances that she has spent much of her adult life studying.

The National Bureau of Economic Research, to which Romer belonged until recently, is the official arbiter of the beginning and end of recessions, generally defined as two successive quarters of contraction in economic activity.

There's no similar textbook definition for an economic "depression." It's generally shorthanded as a greater than 10 percent contraction in economic activity over a period of 12 months or more.

In a lively address and forum Monday at the center-left Brookings Institution, the former economics professor at the University of California-Berkeley drew some eerie parallels between the Depression era and today. She also highlighted some very important distinctions.

Here's some of what she said, edited into a question-and-answer format.

Q. Are we nearing a shift from recession to depression?

A. Friday's employment report showed the unemployment in the United States has reached 8.1 percent – a terrible number that signifies a devastating tragedy for millions of American families. But, at its worst, unemployment in the 1930s reached nearly 25 percent. And that quarter of American workers had painfully few of the social safety nets that today help families maintain at least the essentials of life during unemployment.

Q. What does today have in common with the Depression era?

A. Most obviously, like the Great Depression, today's downturn had its fundamental cause in the decline in asset prices and the failure or near-failure of financial institutions. In 1929, the collapse and extreme volatility of stock prices led consumers and firms to simply stop spending. In the recent episode, the collapse of housing prices and stock prices has reduced wealth and shaken confidence, and has led to a sharp rise in the saving rate as consumers have hunkered down in the face of greatly reduced and much more uncertain wealth.

Q. Any other similarities?

A. Another parallel is the worldwide nature of the decline. A key feature of the Great Depression was that virtually every industrial country experienced a severe contraction in production and a terrible rise in unemployment. This past year, there was hope that the current downturn might be mainly an American experience, and so world demand could remain high and perhaps help us through. However, during the past few months, we have realized that this hope was a false one.

Q. You've written that fiscal policy didn't end the Great Depression. Does that mean you don't think it won't work now?

A. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Q. But you've said that President Franklin D. Roosevelt's spending didn't end the Great Depression?

A. The key fact is that while Roosevelt's fiscal actions were a bold break from the past, they were nevertheless small relative to the size of the problem. When Roosevelt took office in 1933, real GDP (gross domestic product) was more than 30 percent below its normal trend line. For comparison, the U.S. economy (today) is somewhere between 5 percent and 10 percent below trend.

Q. So what does that mean for today?

A. This is a lesson the administration has taken to heart. The American Recovery and Reinvestment Act, passed less than 30 days after the inauguration, is simply the biggest and boldest countercyclical fiscal action in history. The nearly $800 billion fiscal stimulus is divided roughly equally between tax cuts, direct government investment spending and aid to the states and people directly hurt by the recession.

Q. Any other lessons learned from the Depression?

A. Despite the devastating loss of wealth, chaos in our financial markets, and a loss of confidence so great that it nearly destroyed Americans' fundamental faith in capitalism, the economy came back. Indeed, the growth between 1933 and 1937 was the highest we have ever experienced outside of wartime.

Q. So once things turn around, they could really turn around?

A. This fact should give Americans hope. We are starting from a position far stronger than our parents and grandparents were in 1933. And the policy response has been fast, bold and well-conceived.

Q. Today's financial system is so much more sophisticated and complex than the 1930s. Doesn't this limit the application of lessons learned from the Depression era?

A. This is the kind of situation and the kind of instruments ... (that) are just infinitely more complicated, and that's part of why this is hard. It's part of why coming up with a financial stabilization plan is not a one-week thing and it's a monumental task ... All of the modern innovations, we know they are a complicating factor ... and one I think we will just power through.

Washington man suspected of pointing laser at airplanes

BY STEVE MILETICH
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

SEATTLE — A Burien, Wash. man held for unlawful discharge of a laser told police he was pointing the device in multiple directions during a party and might have "lasered" a plane approaching Seattle-Tacoma International Airport Feb. 22, according to court documents.

Christopher Charles Saunders, 24, was arrested Friday by Port of Seattle police after a series of incidents in the past two weeks in which a laser beam was aimed at planes making evening landings at the airport. All of the flights landed safely.

No formal charge has been filed. Prosecutors have until Wednesday to file a charge against Saunders, who was being held Monday in lieu of $100,000 bail for investigation of first-degree unlawful discharge of a laser, a felony.

Saunders appeared in court Saturday, where bail was set.

The incidents began Feb. 22, when the airport's Federal Aviation Administration tower reported 12 flights had been hit by a laser, according to probable-cause documents filed in court.

An Alaska Airlines pilot told police during his approach to the airport, his plane was hit five to seven times with a laser, as the jet descended from about 3,000 feet to about 200 feet after coming out of clouds heading south.

As the plane got closer to the airport, the pilot reported, the laser illuminated the cockpit in a green color for a few seconds.

The pilot told police he saw someone standing in the front yard of a house and, after examining a Google map, narrowed the location to the 2300 block of South 132nd Street, according to the probable-cause documents.

The pilot "did not mention he had any injuries, but in his opinion the lasering did cause an impairment of the safety or operation of the aircraft, interruption or impairment of service rendered to the public by negatively affecting him," the documents say.

Later on Feb. 22, a Horizon Air flight reported being hit by a laser and the FAA tower said it came from the area of South 136th Street and 24th Avenue South.

On March 1, a laser was pointed at another Horizon flight, and Wednesday crews aboard four planes reported seeing a bright laser, officials said.

Port police received a tip Friday afternoon that prompted a detective to contact a renter in the 2200 block of South 136th Street, according to the probable-cause documents.

The renter told the detective Saunders, while a guest at a Feb. 22 party at the home, had a green laser pointer. The renter said Saunders was pointing the laser at their horses until he was asked to stop, the documents say.

As the interview was taking place, Saunders arrived at the residence. He stated he pointed the laser in multiple directions during the party and said there was a chance he might have "lasered" a plane, according to the documents.

Saunders surrendered a pen-style green-light laser, the documents say.

Court records show Saunders pleaded guilty to forgery in 2005 and was sentenced to 10 days in jail, and he pleaded guilty to second-degree robbery in 2004 and was sentenced to three months of work release.

Suspect marked 'death day' on calendar

Man plotted massacre with personal planner

BY BRIAN BRUEGGEMANN, ELIZABETH DONALD AND BETH HUNDSDORFER
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

MARYVILLE, Ill. — The top prosecutor in the Illinois county where a man is accused of gunning down a pastor in Maryville said Monday the man had marked Sunday as "death day" in his personal planner and took enough firepower to the church for a massacre.

Madison County State's Attorney Bill Mudge said investigators found the planner in the Troy, Ill., home of Terry J. Sedlacek (pronounced SEHD-lack), who was charged Monday with murdering the Rev. Fred Winters.

The prosecutor said Sedlacek had with him enough ammunition to kill 30 people and that it appears Sedlacek arrived at First Baptist Church Maryville early in the morning.

Sedlacek's attorney said his client's mental condition was deteriorating as a result of Lyme disease, and the attorney issued an apology on behalf of Sedlacek's family.

"They're very sorry for the pastor's congregation," said Edwardsville, Ill., defense attorney Ron Slemer, who has been hired by Sedlacek's family to represent him. "They want to express this sympathy for everyone."

Slemer said Sedlacek's family is "very sorry for the loss of Rev. Winters."

Winters was shot to death Sunday morning during a worship service. Sedlacek is charged with two counts of first-degree murder in Winters' death and two counts of aggravated battery in the stabbing of two congregation members who subdued him. Madison County Chief Judge Ann Callis ordered that he be held without bail.

Slemer said Sedlacek, 27, contracted Lyme disease through a tick bite several years ago, and that his physical and mental health have suffered as a result.

"That's what it's all attributed to so far. You can see how he's deteriorated over the years. They've struggled with this," Slemer said. "I just know that it's caused his body to physically deteriorate and also his mental condition."

Mudge said Sedlacek had three magazines with 10 rounds each for the .45-caliber Glock he carried into the church. His gun jammed after his fourth shot. He also had a knife.

"The only thing I can really comment on is he came armed with many rounds of ammunition and a knife, and I think we can surmise that more bloodshed may have occurred," Mudge said Monday.

The Associated Press reported that Mudge said it appeared Sedlacek may have arrived at the church, located about four miles from his home, as early as 5:30 a.m., partly because his Jeep was in a parking space close to a door in the crowded parking lot.

"We think he intended to do this," Mudge told the AP.

But neither Mudge nor Illinois State Police could say Monday whether Sedlacek knew Winters, a married father of two who had led the church for nearly 22 years.

Mudge confirmed police took other weapons from the Troy home Sedlacek shared with his mother and stepfather, but declined to comment on his possible mental state.

"We'll have to see what happens with his medical condition," Mudge said.

Mudge said Sedlacek was a hunter and had previously held a firearm permit, but officials were still investigating its status. There were no prior acts of violence on his record, Mudge said.

He called the shooting a "horrible tragedy."

"Our thoughts and prayers go out to the victims and their families," Mudge said.

Sedlacek remained in serious condition Monday at a St. Louis hospital, but Slemer said his injuries are not considered life-threatening.

One stabbing victim, 39-year-old Terry Bullard, underwent surgery at St. Louis University Hospital. Bullard remained in serious condition there Monday.

The second stabbing victim, Keith Melton, was treated and released from a Granite City hospital.

Mark Jones, an assistant pastor at the church, said Monday the congregation appreciates the literally thousands of e-mails and calls of support it has received from the community. The church intends to compile the e-mails into a "book of love" to give to Winters' wife Cindy, he said.

"Words cannot express our appreciation for this type of support," Jones said. "Quite frankly, it has been overwhelming."

Jones said the characteristics of strong leadership were "inherent within Pastor Fred's DNA."

Jones said he had asked Winters' wife, Cindy, if there were any statements about her husband she would like him to pass on to the public. He said she told him: "He died doing what he loved – communicating the hope found in Jesus Christ. God is so much bigger than this situation, and trust is in Him."

Jones said the church has contacted Sedlacek's family and is praying for them and for Sedlacek. As far as any connection between Sedlacek and Winters, the church or whether he had ever visited the church, Jones said members have no idea.

The church developed a security plan 12 to 15 months ago, Jones said, but he declined to give details. "Unfortunately I think other churches will need to follow that example," he said. "But we will not live in a state of fear."

Churches and foundations have volunteered grief counseling for church members, which is being coordinated through the Gateway Baptist Association, Jones said.

Visitation for Fred Winters will be from 2 to 8 p.m. Thursday at First Baptist Church of Maryville, and the memorial will be 10:30 a.m. Friday at the church. Jones said the burial will be a private, family-only ceremony.

Winters and his wife have two daughters, one in sixth grade and one in high school. The church has established the Winters Family Memorial Fund at Scott Credit Union in Collinsville.

Church members continued struggling with their emotions Monday, and said they're praying for Winters' family.

"We also pray for the man who shot Pastor Fred," congregant James Groves, of Belleville, said. "Pastor Fred would want him to come to a faith in the Lord Jesus Christ so that he too would be changed and would feel the love and warmth of his Savior's embrace."

Police said the gunman walked into the church shortly after 8 a.m. Sunday, exchanged some words with Winters and then pulled out a handgun and began firing. The first shot deflected off Winters' Bible, sending a spray of paper into the air that church members said resembled confetti. Some of the 150 attending the worship service initially thought a drama was being enacted.

Three more shots were fired. Two missed, but one hit Winters in the heart, fatally wounding him. Winters, 45, managed to run from the pulpit halfway down a side aisle, where he collapsed and lay dying.

After the fourth shot, the gun malfunctioned. Two church members tackled the gunman as he brandished a 4-inch knife, and all three suffered stab wounds.

Winters was taken to nearby Anderson Hospital, where he was pronounced dead on arrival, spokeswoman Natalie Head said. The gunman and one victim were flown to St. Louis University Hospital, where both underwent surgery. The other victim was treated at Gateway Regional Medical Center and released.

The worship music pastor at First Baptist Church of Maryville, addresses the media after the fatal shooting of Rev. Fred Winters.

Mourners stand in front of the First Baptist Church in Maryville, Ill., after the fatal shooting of the church's pastor on Sunday, March 8. The shooter had marked the date as "death day" in his personal planner.

HATE CRIMES

(IT'S NOT WHAT YOU THINK)

Conservative activist and author Don Feder on

"Hate Crimes Laws
and other Forms of Censorship"

The Left's Assault on Free Speech

Wednesday, March 11 at 7PM in the Cape Cod Lounge
Umass Republican Club and Young America's Foundation

MEET UMASS PASTRY CHEFS:
Simon Stevenson & Pam Adams

Indulge In Decadent DARK CHOCOLATE FONDUE

SAMPLE LUSCIOUS CHOCOLATE FONDUE WITH:
- Fresh Strawberries
- Pineapple
- Marshmellows
- Angel Food Cake
- And more...

Wednesday
March 11
5 – 9 pm
All DCs

RESTAURANTS OF DISTINCTION Ivy
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
www.umassdining.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Free speech is for all

Look at the space at the top of this editorial page, and there you will see a quotation. It might be something new, but most often in the recent past it has been one of the following:

"'Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself' – Sir Salman Rushdie."

"'I disapprove of what you say, but I will defend to the death your right to say it' Voltaire."

Ben Rudnick

These are both superb quotes. Rushdie's succinctly conveys the importance of free speech in society, while Voltaire's reminds us that it is the opinions that we abhor the most that demand our defense most fervently. However, there is one quote above all that most eloquently expresses the place of import held by free expression in America:

"Congress shall make no law... abridging the freedom of speech."

Thus does the First Amendment to the Constitution enshrine our fundamental right to express ourselves. Second only to religious freedom, the framers specifically enjoined the government from taking any action that might limit free speech. Such was their belief in its importance.

Yet the meaning of these seemingly simple words was clouded from the beginning – at their ratification in 1791 as part of the Bill of Rights. Initially, they were thought to prevent only "prior restraint," meaning that the government could not stop you from speaking out, but could still prosecute you afterwards. Through over 200 years of judicial review, we have greatly expanded that ideal of freedom, and University of Massachusetts political science professor John Bingham, among others, has noted how our struggles have created a "free speech tradition" in our society.

Whether it be the aforementioned idea of "prior restraint," or Oliver Wendell Holmes' "falsely shouting fire in a theater and causing a panic" test for restricting speech in cases of "clear and present danger," our conception of what constitutes free expression has broadened dramatically since our country's infancy. And this effort to reconcile free speech with our ever-advancing culture continues in the courts, and in our lives, to this day.

But there are signs that the hard-fought gains of freedom are in jeopardy, and perhaps some have already been surrendered without complaint. For example, justified by the precepts of "political correctness," and in the guise of things such as campus "speech codes," we have all been witness to the erosion of free speech.

Whether or not you believe these accommodations to "sensitivity" are justified, there is no denying they constitute a partial surrender of our rights. I submit that it is how tyranny advances – in tiny steps that seem so innocuous that nobody bothers to object. But next thing you know, you are being hauled into court for political dissent.

> Justified by the precepts of "political correctness," and in the guise of things such as campus "speech codes," we have all been witness to the erosion of free speech.

Perhaps the high-water mark was the 1977 Skokie case. When the Nazi Party wanted to march through Skokie, Ill., the large number of Holocaust survivors who lived there objected. The Illinois Supreme Court, after being ordered to hear the case by the U.S. Supreme Court, allowed the Nazis to march. While the Illinois court empathetically allowed the town to ban displays of the swastika, the Nazis' right to express themselves outweighed the Holocaust survivors' desire not be reminded of their ordeal. Here we see the truth of Voltaire's aphorism, that it is the ideas that we disagree with most strenuously that require the most vigilant protection.

Which brings me to the Fairness Doctrine. If you honestly think that the recent push for something resembling the Fairness Doctrine is not driven by some Democrat's desire to silence their political critics, then you are denying reality, and it only remains to determine whether you are doing so intentionally. Just last week, a far-left pundit suggested on Larry King Live that a certain prominent critic of the Democrats should be brought up on charges for treason. She later tried to make a joke of it, but anyone who has read the transcript knows that she was serious before she was kidding.

Prosecuting political dissenters for treason? Are you bleeping kidding me?

To be sure, President Obama has stated that he does not believe the Fairness Doctrine should be reinstated. However, many other Democrats, including Bill Clinton, Speaker of the House Nancy Pelosi, and our own Senator John Kerry have expressed their desire for a return of the Fairness Doctrine.

Yet, even more frightening is the fact that so large a segment of the American people would accept limits on free speech in the guise of "fairness." In August of 2008, a poll indicated that 47 percent of the electorate would support something like the Fairness Doctrine, while only 39 percent opposed it. It is sad to see such clear evidence of how far we have fallen from the days of Skokie.

If you don't like Rush Limbaugh just do what I do when I see Keith Olbermann, and change the channel. The alternative is to let the government decide who we are forced to listen to.

The Fairness Doctrine must not be allowed to return, no matter what friendly language the politicians might use to define it.

"Congress shall make no law... abridging the freedom of speech."

Ben Rudnick is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at brudnick@student.umass.edu.

ED

Watch your cup

Ben Moriarty

The gym is overcrowded, and all the bros are doing bicep curls, bench and crunches. If you have ever gone to the gym, you know what this means.

Spring break is coming. The people flooding the gym for the first time since exactly a year ago realize it's the perfect time to sexy up your important body for all the hot babes you'll strut past on the beaches – as if it only takes two weeks to get huge arms and a sizzling six pack.

You shall be the envy of all the other males.

So, considering spring break's dawn is upon us, it's time to pack up and head down South, where there is no shortage of places to go.

If you want to hang out with your old Jewish grandmother, Florida is great. If you want to live out your dream of seeing naked girls dancing and kissing on boats and beaches, Cancun is wonderful. And if you want to try to help people, go to New Orleans and rebuild some houses.

But the cool place this year is not St. Thomas, Sicily or my house – it is Mexico.

Recently, the U.S. Department of State issued a travel warning for those who are planning on going to Mexico for their spring break or for other travel. They stated that "violence in the country has increased recently" and "in recent years, dozens of U.S. citizens have been kidnapped across Mexico. Many of these cases remained unresolved."

Well, talk about a damper on those people's spring break.

According to former FBI hostage negotiator and now crime analyst Clint van Zandt on Newsvine.com, estimates are that around 500 people are kidnapped in Mexico every month, with over 1,000 people being killed in the first two months of this year alone.

"Many of the murder victims were tortured with their limbs cut off and their bodies dissolved in vats of acid.

Other less violent crimes see locals and tourists alike as victims of 'express kidnappings,' ones where the victim is carjacked and immediately driven to a bank ATM where they are forced to withdraw cash after which, hopefully, they are released."

> The real worries of spring break aren't being kidnapped in Mexico but what you could do to yourself by having "too much fun."

I like to be a damper too, but I'd say that the most valuable item here is clearly your body and life.

When it comes down to it, getting kidnapped and murdered in Mexico is most likely not going to happen. This belief is evidently held by many, considering that pretty much no person is cancelling the trip to Mexico.

But the saying that has transferred from Vegas to the March vacation, "What happens during spring break stays during spring break," speaks a lot more of the dangers than any travel alert could.

In case you don't know what that means, it means that on spring break, drinking is bountiful and sex is just as commonplace. Being on spring break allows you, like Halloween does, to do anything you want without giving anyone the right to criticize you.

The real worries of spring break aren't being kidnapped in Mexico, but what you could do to yourself by having "too much fun."

It is obvious what some of these dangers are. If you don't protect yourself, you run the chance of getting a sexually transmitted disease with your newly-met Fabio or even having a little Fabio of your own, a gift which will surely remind you of that amazing night during spring break for the rest of your life.

But there is something even worse than that, and it's something which no one thinks will happen to them.

Over one in five college-aged women are said to have been forced to have intercourse, but the percentage that report it is so low that it is hardly spoken of or thought to be an issue.

A victim from the University of Madison-Wisconsin recently spoke with the school's paper, The Badger Herald, about the issue after being raped. She stated that after getting a roofie tester, her drinks have been found positive on occasion and said that, "maybe girls think they got blackout drunk. No, you got roofied, and I think people don't really realize that."

That is not to say that every time you black out, you got roofied. But, it is to say that it is very possible for it to happen, especially during spring break where you will never see the guy again and you know he doesn't care about what happens to you afterwards.

So during spring break, make sure you keep your eye on your cup, you have friends who won't leave you with some pervert, and you are safe and smart.

Oh, and have fun too.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

Gazans stripped of care

Abdullah is a seven-year-old with a weak, yet sweet, smile. In the beginning of 2008, he was diagnosed with kidney cancer in its early stage. Chemotherapy could have helped defeat the cancer, but Abdullah was unable to get treatment. This is because Abdullah lives in Gaza, where nothing gets in and nothing gets out – including chemotherapy drugs.

Zamil Akhtar

Since January 2006, the Gaza Strip has been under a total blockade enforced by its only neighboring countries, Israel and Egypt. People, food, medicine and general commerce are not allowed in or out of Gaza as part of a policy by said countries to "stop arms smuggling." Sporadically, aid from humanitarian groups is allowed to trickle through, though the people mainly rely on tunnel networks to smuggle in life's necessities.

The outcome is that Gaza's 1.5 million residents are living a humanitarian crisis. What this means is that hospitals don't have basic medicine, food is hard to find, clean water is scarce and electricity is sporadic.

For Abdullah, this has dire consequences. Speaking at the Islamic Center of Boston on Feb. 28, Dr. Ismail Mehr described Abdullah's plight. A member of the American Medical Mission to Gaza (AMMG), Mehr treated Abdullah when he went to Gaza with a team of doctors in the aftermath of Israel's destructive bombing campaign.

"A normal kidney is the size of a fist," Mehr said, holding up his fist. "Abdullah's kidney was the size of a watermelon."

A picture of the boy's kidney was shown on the projector, covered in char and bubble-like spots.

"All I could do for him was drain the bile that had built up. So his last few months could be less painful," Mehr said as he displayed a photo of Abdullah, smiling sweetly, as if there was nothing wrong with the world. "We'll never forget him, he touched us all."

Cancer will most likely kill Abdullah within the year.

"In any other country in the world, whether Sudan or America, he would have survived. He could have found treatment. The sick are not even allowed to leave Gaza to get treated," Mehr said.

The doctor described how only 0.5 percent of Gazans seeking treatment last year had been granted permission to leave – the rest have to deal with Gaza's under-staffed and under-supplied hospitals already running beyond capacity. "It's one big open-air prison," Mehr said.

AMMG arrived in Gaza only a few days after Israel suspended its bombing campaign that killed 1,300 people and injured over 5,000 in just three weeks. Mehr described what he witnessed, with pictures to compliment his words.

A photo of a sandy field of rubble appeared on the projector. "This was once a playground," Mehr described, flipping to a picture of a boy holding a large metallic object. "These kids, just like any other kids, like to play outside. Here they are showing us an unexploded tank shell they found. These things have become their toys now."

Though Mehr spent most of his time in Gaza performing surgeries at Al-Shifa Hospital; his team also gave check-ups to children at an orphanage. Photos of smiling children lit up the projector, as Mehr described them.

"Children are the same everywhere, the children of Gaza are just like other children. But what we found was that despite their smiling faces, these children had deep psychological wounds resulting from watching their loved ones die in front of them," he said.

A picture of an elderly man flashed onto the projector. "I'll never forget this man. They told us that he always came to the orphanage everyday to spend time with the children. But then during the war, he lost his wife and all his children," Mehr said. "He still continues coming to the orphanage every day, saying that all the orphans are his children too."

> Only 0.5 percent of Gazans seeking treatment last year had been granted permission to leave – the rest have to deal with Gaza's under-staffed and under-supplied hospitals already running beyond capacity.

An emotional woman in the audience asked Mehr a question, "What can we do? I'm willing to accept one of these orphans in my home."

Another member of the AMMG team responded, "I asked one of the children if he wanted to come back to New York with me. They don't want to run away. He said he wanted to stay there, saying he wanted to defend his land."

Mehr played a YouTube video of the once-flourishing Gaza Zoo. In it, the caretaker of the zoo gave a tour of the now destroyed facility. "This zoo was once the best kept animal enclose in Gaza. It was for all Palestinians and their children. Who are the ones who forced us to leave our homes? The Israeli occupation. And let me tell you this, the Israelis still came here to destroy it," the caretaker said.

Bodies of dead camels and monkeys appeared on screen, followed by two majestic lions, still alive, calmly sitting in their cage. The caretaker continued, "The first thing the Israeli army did was shoot at these lions. They ran outside of their cage. They shot at them again. They missed and the lions ran away. They won't break our spirit. All of us are strong. And we will build again."

Zamil Akhtar is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at zakhtar@student.umass.edu.

BACK IN

The medical dream,

Matt Kushi

Imagine a world where diseases could be halted in their tracks. Imagine a world where suffering and pain fall to the side of the road to make room for hope and joy. Imagine a world where the world's greatest problems could be cured.

Such a world will probably never exist, but we have moved a step closer to realizing a dream that so many have only wished to exist.

On Monday, March 9, President Barack Obama signed off on a piece of legislation that effectively overturned President Bush's decision to ban federal funding for stem cell research. It is a decision that ends an era of lost hope and dreams for many.

Stem cell research has always been a touchy subject, as two sides of the argument claim moral ground. The supporters of stem cell research say that it is necessary in order to improve the quality of life for those that have been stricken with disease or have a disability. The critics claim that using stem cells is immoral, calling it nothing short of murder to breed stem cell lines to improve life and not let the embryo become life itself.

These days, old embryos are used to create the stem cell lines. Many view this as murder of innocent life. What is often left out of this side of the argument is that these embryos are usually from fertility clinics and would be destroyed anyway.

Instead of wasting an embryo that wouldn't develop, stem cell lines allow the embryo to be something.

How would this work? According to a news report on Yahoo.com, "Scientists hope to harness them so they can create replacement tissues to treat a variety of diseases – such as new insulin-producing cells for diabetics, cells that could help those with Parkinson's disease or maybe even Alzheimer's, or new nerve connections to restore movement after spinal injury."

While the use of stem cells used to be an issue that fell along the party lines, it is no longer that way. Many years ago, the supporters were Democrats and the critics were Republicans.

However, things have changed. Life taught us the lesson that life itself does not operate on the basis of party lines.

One example of this is the case of the late President Reagan. Reagan was a Republican. However, when Reagan developed advanced Alzheimer's disease, former First Lady Nancy Reagan argued in support of stem cell research. She would continue to do so throughout the Bush presidency.

> The question that must be asked is: how valuable is life? We are compromising a person's life that we know is definitely alive for the sake of something that is scientifically alive.

I am all for stem cell research. The question that must be asked is, how valuable is life? We are compromising a person's life that we know is definitely alive for the sake of something that is scientifically alive.

If given the chance, would I utilize stem cell therapy so that my brother could walk, talk and see? Yes, I would. If given the chance, would I utilize stem cell therapy to see Muhammad Ali and Michael J. Fox be rid of Parkinson's disease? Yes, I would. Would I take a chance on stem cell therapy to help ease the suffering of so many that silently beg for their lives to be given back to them? Yes, I would.

Having grown up in an environment where I dealt with the issue of disabilities, I paid close attention to the story of Christopher Reeves. If you are not well-versed with his story, you should be.

Reeves was a well-known actor, most notable for his role as Superman in the TV series. In 1995, Reeves fell off of a horse and was paralyzed. His efforts to regain even the slightest amount of movement in his body is one of the most courageous fights I have ever seen a human give. There was even a tear-jerking commercial in which Reeves walks onto a stage, a symbol of hope. Tragically, Reeves died in 2004 before his dream could be fulfilled.

We don't know what the future holds, but we can try to foresee what it will look like. If the path towards stem cell research continues, we may see a future where people with Parkinson's disease, diabetes, cerebral palsy or paralysis can once again live out their lives to the fullest extent. As President Obama noted, "Medical miracles do not happen by accident."

What has been achieved here is progress. However, as Robert F. Kennedy once stated, "Progress is a nice word. But change is its motivator. And change has its enemies."

Though the legislation has been enacted again, there is still a long road ahead for stem cell research. It is a fight that many are willing to take part of.

Matt Kushi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mkushi@student.umass.edu.

OP

BLACK AND WHITE

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Chinese acrobats do balancing act at FAC

By Michelle Fredette
Collegian Staff

For the National Acrobats of China, it's not enough to be able to do a trick. They have to be able to do it while standing on someone else's shoulders or while someone is standing on their shoulders. And that's at the very least.

Diablo? They created a two-person Diablo-ing tower. Bicycling? One acrobat pedaled while other acrobats flipped and tumbled atop them. Juggling? A tower of three men all juggled straw hats in unison.

The stunts themselves would be enough to keep one entertained, but the performance by the National Acrobats of China this past Monday at the University of Massachusetts' Fine Arts Center did much more to prevent any lulls in the action.

Turnaround between acts was practically instantaneous as the single hand-balancing performer finished her piece, the hoop divers were already setting up for their act. Even during acts, it was clear that the acrobats had planned each section strategically. As large tricks were being set up toward the back of the stage – like the construction of what was nearly a human skyscraper – other performers did smaller tricks at the front. There was always some action for the eye to focus on.

They even kept the performances going throughout the bows. A few acrobats from each act came out and did a mini-encore before lining up for their applause.

Not only did the acrobats attempt amazing tricks – like having 14 girls riding on one bicycle – they also did them completely in sync.

The girls in the first act, spinning plates, flicked their wrists to keep their plates moving while performing dance moves influenced by step dancing. Their feet stomped the stage in unison, keeping perfect tempo.

Each girl spun five plates in her left hand and five in her right. As if keeping track of 10 plates and step dancing in time weren't enough, they added somersaults and more complex acrobatic tricks.

Performers climbed atop other plate-spinners with no help from spotters or their hands, still managing to stick to the beat.

The paralleled movements of the women in "Acrobatics of Five" didn't have a beat to keep them on track, yet the pairs mirrored each other exactly. They bent legs, swept arms and went into handstands with the same movements and pace.

Even as early as the first act, gasps and comments of "Wow!" or "Oh my god!" from other audience members were common. The spectacle of the performance made them unable to contain their amazement.

During the contortionist piece, however, the interjections of wonder were replaced by general sounds of awed disgust. The unnaturally twisted positions of performer Xue Muyuan, while incredible, were a bit too much for those closest to the stage. The poses looked almost as though someone else's disembodied legs sat atop Muyuan's head.

Yet Muyuan's warped movements were graceful, and the National Acrobats of China emphasized their grace with dancers in elegant traditional Chinese costumes. The dancers held lanterns as well as tall reeds, which swayed and curved as fluidly as Muyuan.

Though the acrobats looked delicate, their show Monday night revealed that they also have incredible strength. In the piece "Single Hand Balancing," Ye Mingzhu supported her own bodyweight on just one arm, bending and curving her body for a

See ACROBATS on page 6

The National Acrobats of China performed their near-flawless routine at the Fine Arts Center on Monday night. Their act featured spectacular balancing acts and stunning contortionists.

The Books find home for their experiments at MASS MoCA

By Alex Butler
Collegian Staff

Nick Zammuto and Paul de Jong of The Books performed a sold-out show at the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art (MASS MoCA) last Saturday night. The show, held in the Hunter Center, lasted about two hours but will be remembered for quite some time.

"We're astonished," Paul explained as he peered out over the large audience, "And visibly shaken."

And for good reason. Saturday marked the first concert in two years for the duo.

The Books are currently the musicians-in-residence at MASS MoCA, and have been working out of their North Adams, Mass. Apartment, building new material for a 2009 album release. "Building" is precisely how the band goes about their music – pulling out, layering and mashing voice samples on top of acoustic guitar work and cello accompaniment. It sounds tricky enough to do in a studio, let alone for a live performance. The two modestly sat down and plugged away at their instruments while synchronized video consistently played as a backdrop.

Now, MASS MoCA is set in a quiet nook of North Adams, a bit out of the way for anyone used to concerts around the Pioneer Valley. Along Route 2, there is a hairpin turn that will leave anyone asking, "Where are we, exactly?" Things get even more confusing when you arrive at the museum, and you see trees being grown upside down. "Tree Logic" is a piece dedicated to showcase the dynamic nature of trees and absolutely sets the mood of the museum.

Enter, and you're met by a wide array of gifts and trinkets, coffee and sandwiches, and Herrell's ice cream. As 8:00 p.m. approached, more and more people filed into the warehouse-style lobby, concert-goers ranging from tight-knit college hipsters to families with young children.

The museum's Hunter Center featured open seating for about 200 people and produced amazing acoustics for the set. The room is reminiscent of a movie theatre but became something else entirely when the concert began.

The set started off with "Group Therapy," from the pile of new material, which will wind up on the upcoming album. Inspired by hypnotherapy, the song was synchronized with a film of floating heads quietly massaging the listener with their voices.

Next was "That Right Ain't Sh*t," from the band's sophomore album, "The Lemon of Pink."

See BOOKS on page 6

'Beware': Will Oldham

By Margaret Wappler
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — In a small, shadowy room at the Moroccan-themed Figueroa Hotel, Will Oldham sat cross-legged on the floor, dressed all in black with slashes of kohl under his eyes, capitulating to one of his most dreaded tasks, the interview, with the sweet agitation of a little boy. He fidgeted with a small silver vessel when he wasn't stroking his profusion of wheat-colored facial hair.

Based in his hometown of Louisville, Ky., Oldham is one of the most prolific, idolized and enigmatic figures of American indie folk. At 39, he's an elder of sorts to the New Weird Americana scene, based on a credo of lyrical reflections cast in bare-boned acoustics, and often steeped in the natural world. But Oldham's version is leavened with the element of surprise – lascivious songs that would make R. Kelly blush, and maverick moves like covering the output of his former band with Nashville, Tenn., session musicians on "Sings Greatest Palace Music."

The neo-troubadour spends half of his year traveling, playing from dozens of albums released under various monikers, including Palace, Palace Brothers and, for the last 11 years, Bonnie "Prince" Billy. He roams to far-flung locales such as Reykjavik, Iceland, where he recorded "The Letting Go," his delicate album from 2006.

While on a three-month tour through North America and Europe that kicks off this week for his new album, "Beware," Oldham will leave behind a fledgling romance and his recently widowed mother. And although he'll be traveling with a band of good friends and musicians, including guitarist Emmett Kelly and percussionist Michael Zerang, he has adopted a coping philosophy.

"I can't consider any of that time as time away," Oldham said, "because you don't want to spend half of your life being away or where you shouldn't be. I choose to think of all the time as being present. I'm always home."

But home doesn't always mean comfortable. Oldham, who enjoys an intimacy with listeners by playing unplanned shows or releasing albums and one-off songs with no announcement, does not enjoy conveying his thoughts to the media.

Nevertheless, he's back at it for "Beware," his collection of warm-current folk that will be released March 17, fulfilling a promise to the labels that he'd relent to a veritable junket after skipping media for last year's "Lie Down in the Light."

What's so bad about being interviewed? "The side effect of it is that I get very upset, self-loathing kind of upset," Oldham said. "There's a limit to how much going over stuff can help you in your life. Just plowing things up, it's strange ... and then it's in print, where it becomes a new reality, a new truth for other people, who will then draw conclusions from something you didn't mean at all."

For all of his reluctance, he fully engaged in his own way, with long pauses and sometimes skittery eyes. He spoke animatedly about a residency he completed last spring in Sausalito, where he worked on

See BEWARE on page 6

Cartoons for newspapers alive on web after publications go under

By Michael Cavna
The Washington Post

It's D-Day for the Seattle Post-Intelligencer. With Hearst's stated 60-day window to find a buyer set to close Tuesday, the storied, historic P-I faces the shuttering of its print newspaper – short of a Microsoft billionaire or some other money-bagged hero galloping in at the eleventh hour.

The newspaper's editorial cartoonist, David Horsey, however, is better situated than most of his newsroom colleagues – as well as many newspaper cartoonists. Largely because of the structure of Horsey's employment setup, the two-time Pulitzer winner knows this: His job, in some form, is safe.

Horsey talks with Comic Riffs about the print P-I's likely last chapter, the future of an online-only P-I, and how he created a highly trafficked website (it reportedly gets more than a million page views monthly) that has positioned him well on a rapidly shifting media landscape.

MICHAEL CAVNA: Given your perch from the inside, David, what do you think will unfold for the P-I in the days ahead, and how will that affect your job?

DAVID HORSEY: I'm in an unusual situation, unlike (cartoonist) Ed Stein, whose job ended (when Denver's Rocky Mountain News closed). ... The print version of the P-I is probably going to see its final edition in the next (eight) days or less. The Web site is hiring (some). As for me, in the last few years, I've ... been employed directly by Hearst Newspapers instead of the Seattle P-I.

MC: So might you, in effect, be drawing for other Hearst papers, too?

DH: It looks like I will be providing my work to all of the Hearst newspapers, though I'll be based here at the (P-I) website. Hearst has 16 daily newspapers – well, for now, counting the P-I. My work will primarily go to websites and will be available for print versions.

MC: So how has being employed by Hearst affected your online presence?

DH: Well, one fortunate thing for me is that Hearst had this idea to create channels within the website, and that pulled me out of the editorial page and created DavidHorsey.com. And I've been doing a lot more writing as well as cartoons. That created me as a separate entity that can be plugged into any website. I'm not sure logistically how that will happen now – I think I'll be linked to (the Hearst newspapers in) Houston, to Albany, to Laredo, to San Francisco. I think Hearst finally decided that it's time to (push) online newspapers.

MC: Beyond your obvious talent, then, it seems you've either had great vision or benefitted from Hearst's decisions – or both.

DH: I've been quite fortunate and the timing has been right. Part of it goes back to my first job as a reporter – now it's the other way around. (Writing columns) has helped me expand online. They're looking at me as a "multimedia commentator" rather than as "just" a cartoonist.

MC: So with Hearst's sale deadline upon us, do you hold out any hope at all for a last-minute buyer?

DH: There haven't been any serious prospects. ... (laughing as he jokes) Maybe some crazy Microsoft billionaire.

MC: Just the other day, I heard a commentator say that Paul Allen should spend more of his billions on worthy causes.

DH: His name came almost immediately (in January). He does like to buy toys. The complication in Seattle is that we're a JOA (Joint Operating Agreement) with the (Seattle) Times, and you would be buying sort of the junior partner -- the P-I is a newsroom, we don't have presses. ... He'd probably wait until the Times went on the market, because it's a more complete package. ... If you're buying the P-I to get the website, that might be worth it.

It's such a shaky thing – to own newspapers. It's just not too attractive. ... And if I wanted to start a news website, I'd start it fresh and unencumbered by hiring (talented) journalists who've been thrown out of work

MCT

Marc Francois is one of many political cartoonists who has taken his craft from the print newspaper to the internet. With newspaper closures on the rise, comics staff look to the internet for content.

Precision dominates acrobats' performance

ACROBATS from page 5

solid 10 minutes. Similarly, in "Acrobats of Five," one woman supported the weight of five of her fellow acrobats – along with eight or nine small white benches – with just her legs.

All the performances were nearly flawless. Every step, twist, jump, even every flick of the wrist, was choreographed with absolute precision. The level of practice and dedication required to produce such near perfection seemed almost superhuman.

The only obvious mistake was one missed catch in the Diablo section. The audience's astonishment of every other stunt, however, allowed the error to be easily forgiven. Spectators clapped even harder for the girl who missed, perhaps because every other act was so perfect it was a relief to witness some evidence of humanity. After all, to err is human.

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredett@student.umass.edu

MATTHEW HARKIN/DAILY COLLEGIAN

In addition to awing the crowd with balancing acts, the National Acrobats of China performed juggling stunts in unison.

Oldham releases new album under Bonnie 'Prince' Billy moniker

BEWARE from page 5

many of the "Beware" songs in an old barn, surrounded by bobcats, coyotes and, at the coastline nearby, caterwauling baby elephant seals. The tossed-off instrumentation of "Beware" evokes the setting – a ramshackle, de facto music hall where a person could drift in, grab a beer out of an icy bucket and sit and listen for as long as no other earthly responsibilities intervened.

That looseness is what Oldham seeks in every recording. He insists that his revolving stable of musicians, which has included Faun Fables' Dawn McCarthy and fellow Louisville native David Pajo, forgo rigorous rehearsal for the spontaneity caught in the first few takes. McCarthy, who shared vocals with Oldham for the bulk of "The Letting Go," described Oldham's approach as "voodoo and karnikaze ... he'll just change the key of a song one day"; sometimes he keeps some musicians intentionally in the dark until the last minute. "He wouldn't let the guitarist Emmett Kelly hear the songs," McCarthy said. "He had him prepare by listening to traditional Yugoslavian music."

Oldham's technique boils down not to willful subterfuge but to the joys of listening. "I like to listen to musicians play. I like to listen to them making decisions – how long they choose to hold a note or a word and thinking that, ideally, that is unique to the moment. That is the thrill for me of listening to anything I like."

Oldham's influence is somewhat mystical. He has inspired Smog's Bill Callahan, as well as legions of younger followers such as Bon Iver and Phosphorescent. He was the first to champion Joanna Newsom, who opened for him for several shows before her debut album.

A fan website, the Royal Stable, does yeoman's work of cataloging Oldham's sprawling discography and set lists from hundreds of live performances. In addition to the rambling country he carved out with Palace, Oldham won fans with the plucked-clean Americana of his second album as Bonnie "Prince" Billy, "I See a Darkness" in 1999. Since then, his music has expanded: Both "Beware" and "Lie Down in the Light" include sloppy, happy songs, the kind that feel written for singalongs in crowded dive bars.

Matt Sweeney, from Chavez and one of Oldham's most frequent collaborators, echoes McCarthy's sentiments of Oldham being like family. "At a time when I was feeling especially down about my musical abilities and some bad life decisions, he sent me an e-mail with lyrics he wrote, asking me to make them into songs," the guitarist wrote in an e-mail. "Rising to that challenge made a big difference in my life. Will is so great to make music with. He lives it."

He's also an actor with a renewed purpose. His career, which slowed down in the '90s after appearing in John Sayles' "Matewan" and some smaller fare, has been reinvigorated with his understated work in Kelly Reichardt's meditative and unsettling films "Old Joy" and "Wendy and Lucy."

For Oldham, music and acting offer the same chance to do what he ultimately loves best: inhabiting the written word. "Singing and doing music the way I do," he explained, "is related to the idea of personifying a text of some sort, and looking for my idols in text personification. ... It's as if Elvis Presley is a written, created character like Stanley Kowalski."

He even creates dream roles in his music. The stirringly proud "My Life's Work," one of the songs on "Beware," was conceived as a lost gem from what Oldham thinks of as Presley's heyday in the early '70s. The dusky track "There Is Something I Have to Say" was distilled with British folk singer June Tabor in mind. He also greatly admires Merle Haggard and R. Kelly, whom he's covered on several occasions, sublimating his lust, for instance, into a version of "Ignition."

Losing himself in his work, in both the creation and in communing with his idols, might be one way that Oldham fights through the pain of being everywhere and nowhere at once. The middle child of three sons, Oldham lost his father, Joe Oldham, in 2006 when he died of a heart attack while on his weekly bike ride.

When asked if any of the songs on "Beware" reflect grief about his father, Oldham's eyes filled with tears. His fingers flew into his beard, quickly stroking it, before he said, "I can't tell where me or anyone in my family is in the grief stage ... so I don't know how this record might relate to that."

For now and maybe a long time, Oldham will work it out in the way he knows how – living his lyrics, but as if they were sung by someone else. Whenever he plays "I Called You Back," the last song from "The Letting Go," the album that was released close to the time his father died, "I get kind of devastated," he said quietly. "I imagine myself singing the song to my dad from my mom's point of view."

The Books display new works

BOOKS from page 5

This song, a staple for The Books, was synched with video of older men putting on and taking off hats. Not much to it, you might think, until you hear the intense layered percussion. The Hunter Center felt like it was built for a song like this, incorporating every rich sound The Books could dish out.

The videos, much like the music, were wildly eclectic and sometimes uncomfortably bizarre. There were some really close shots of the heart valves and the process of breathing was closely examined during the next song.

Other highlights during the show included "Smells Like Content," in which Zammuto seamlessly matched the pace of the flowing poem on the screen, and "Classical Penguin," which featured footage from actual home movies of Zammuto and de Jong. Zammuto's subtle voice and the endearing nature of the video blended well, and before anyone knew it, the concert was wrapping up.

For an encore, the duo tackled Nick Drake's "Cello Song," with surprising beauty and style. De Jong was perfectly at ease with his electric cello, which seemed to embody The Books' twist on Drake's famous song.

To finish the concert, The Books paid a tribute to the alphabet, using sounds all set to the key of A. Zammuto had written the song for his son, along with a video featuring the different letters.

"I wrote it for him, but he was absolutely terrified when I first showed it to him," Zammuto explained. And when the video commenced, it was easy to see why. The abrasive music moved eerily from letter to letter. By the letter E, the audience must have felt a bit anxious.

The concert ended without much of a bang, but it didn't seem to matter at all. It wasn't a flawless show, but the band felt perfectly at ease in their home, and really, that's all they needed.

Alex Butler can be reached at ajbutler@student.umass.edu.

American Idol sees diverse contestants, perennial gossip regarding orientations

By Ann Powers
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — This week, the lucky 13 contestants in the latest top tier of "American Idol" begin the serious phase of competition with a dip into Michael Jackson's songbook. Jackson, who recently announced a series of comeback shows, is the single biggest influence on the young R&B stars that many "Idol" strivers emulate, but he's also the ideal subject for what's turning out to be a rather strange season.

At the heart of his troubled legacy are the anxieties "Idol" also confronts, however mildly — America's troubling history of racial divides and assimilation, and the sexual repression and need for release that is a basic subject of pop music itself.

There's been some joking on various websites that this year's most flamboyant front-runner, Adam Lambert, will perform Jackson's early '90s hit "In the Closet" as a response to recently leaked photographs of him kissing a man and dressed in glamour-queen drag. Jackson released the song just when his astounding musical charisma began to strain under the weight of his eccentricities.

"In the Closet" could be the theme of this year's "Idol" season. Lambert is not the only resident in this year's "Idol" house to have an uncommon identity or a bothersome back story. Reality — and not the usual well-managed kind the show embraces — is breaking through as "Idol's" producers strive to further the contest's popularity among a diverse array of viewers without giving up the fiction of a unified mainstream.

The closet metaphor most often applies to hidden homosexual identities, and that's certainly a hot-button issue for "Idol." The show has drawn its own curtain around apparently gay contestants over the years. So far, Lambert has been as matter-of-fact about his preferences as possible without actually uttering the word "gay" on camera.

During its first season, the Fox Network demanded that Top 10 finalist Jim Verraros remove "gay-friendly" comments from his page on an "Idol" sponsored website. Season Two near-winner Clay Aiken waited five years to come out. Last year, David Hernandez was quickly eliminated after his past as a stripper in a gay club came to light. (There's apparently never been a lesbian contestant, although several have fought off rumors, starting with Kelly Clarkson, the first winner).

Hidden sexualities on "Idol" always must be viewed in light of the general discomfort about sex that dominates the show. It's fairly ridiculous that a program designed to create the next major pop star barely lets its participants show leg or sing racy lyrics, especially when the charts are dominated by songs such as Flo Rida's "Right Round" and Lil Wayne's "Lollipop" – both fairly blatant celebrations of promiscuity and oral sex.

"Idol's" closet contains much more than sexuality, though. It encompasses everything from language differences to religious affiliation to its contestants' complex family lives. The daring Lambert might break down the wall of homophobia this season, but it's just as likely one of the show's several Christian worship leaders, including Lambert's main male rival, Danny Gokey, will push the producers to let fundamentalist Christianity out of the box in which it's not very well contained.

Or perhaps this year's outlier will be Jorge Nunez, making a mark for the Hispanic community by insisting on singing songs in Spanish. Then there's Scott MacIntyre, who is legally blind and who might keep forcing the producers to adjust to a front-runner with an obvious disability.

Issues of race pose new challenges this year. Nunez's dark skin and curly hair mark him as different from the Enrique Iglesias-style Latin crossover acts more common in Hollywood.

Anoop Desai succeeds Season Six's most beloved self-made joke, Sanjaya Malakar, as a serious contender of South Asian descent – and judging from his moves while performing Bobby Brown's "My Prerogative" last week, he means to become a heartthrob. The sexy Asian male is still an infrequent presence in American pop culture, and Desai is already facing a tendency among commentators to turn him into a joke.

The more current mainstream pop stars that "Idol" relentlessly celebrates also have complicated but smoothed-over identities. Mariah Carey took years to come to terms with being biracial; Quebecois Celine Dion continues to wrestle with her bilingual reality. Whitney Houston became increasingly problematic for music industry handlers after marrying Brown and becoming more "black" in both her affect and her sound. Barry Manilow's sexuality has been fodder for rumor throughout his entire career.

Jackson fits in perfectly with this pantheon of spiritual mentors. His secrets might push at the door of his closet, but he's never let them out. We'll see if "Idol" finds another kind of opening.

The new season of American Idol will feature another contender with rumors surrounding his sexual orientation.

IMPORTANT ANNOUNCEMENT
REGISTRATION FOR FALL 2009
The Writing Program Placement Test will be offered on:
Wednesday, March 11, at 7:00pm in Bartlett 310
You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit 112 (College Writing).
This test may be taken only once.
Students do not need to register for the test.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

Minutewomen hope to continue win streak

Lyons leading young, improved offense as team preps for Yale

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

Coming off its biggest win of the season against No. 13 Dartmouth, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team ventures into Ivy League territory once again to take on Yale in the inaugural game at the newly-completed Reese Stadium.

With two straight wins, the Minutewomen (2-3) are in position to rebound from a tough 0-3 start and get back to the .500 mark. Beyond just improving the record, the turnaround, which included the team's first win over a ranked opponent since the 2007 season, has given a young UMass team a newfound confidence.

"Especially for some of the younger, even older, girls, [the Dartmouth game] gives us a taste of what it feels like to play a full 60 minutes, playing such a great team and really working on the details and executing," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

"I was really proud of how our team reacted to playing with a lead, something we haven't been a part of for the majority of the season," she added.

Despite a 1-3 record, the Bulldogs have played well this season. Venechanos sees Yale as one of the country's top programs that has played much beyond its record.

"Yale's a very competitive, very strong program. Their record isn't an indication of how well they've played. They have strong leadership all over the field, and they have talented players," Venechanos said. "So it's going to be a great matchup, it's going to be a close battle, and we're looking forward to the opportunity."

The Bulldogs are led by senior Jenn Warden, who has 13 goals this season and junior Jenna Block (nine points on five goals and four assists). Warden comes into the game on a high-note individually, scoring four of the team's nine goals in a 14-9 loss to Stony Brook. Block, meanwhile, started off on the bench but has worked her way into the starting lineup after recording five points in the season opener against Fairfield.

Both sophomore Katie Janian and freshman Katie Quackenbush have seen time in goal for Yale this season. Quackenbush has played in all four games this season, getting the start in three of them and boasts an 11.10 goals-against average. Janian, meanwhile, has started one game and holds a 12.55 goals-against average.

Leading the Minutewomen on offense are sophomore Jackie Lyons (16 points) and senior Holly Drown (11 points). Both Drown and Lyons are coming off of three-goal performances against No. 13 Dartmouth in a 13-10 win.

Expected in goal for the Minutewomen will be freshman Katie Florence, who has started all nine games this season. Florence, who is coming off a nine-save effort against Dartmouth, will play a vital role for UMass and currently holds a 12.80 goals-against average.

Wednesday's game will be the first game for the Yale women's lacrosse program at the newly-renovated Reese Field. However, Venechanos does not expect the fresh arena to play a factor in the upcoming game.

"We don't care if we play Yale in a park," she said. "We don't care if we play Yale here or up in Boyden grass field. We're excited to play another team."

Junior midfielder Merritt Cosgrove is greeted by her teammates as she is introduced to the crowd. The Minutewomen are 2-3 this season entering Wednesday's game against Yale in New Haven, Conn.

The matchup against the Bulldogs is a continuation of the grueling schedule that the Minutewomen have begun the season with. The schedule, which included women's lacrosse powerhouses Northwestern and Maryland, has challenged the young team early on. But with two straight wins, the schedule should be a strong proving ground as UMass looks ahead to conference play.

"In the first two games, we battled, but we were lacking on the execution. We were also playing with a lot of trust in each other," Venechanos said. "I feel from the past two games, we've gained a lot of confidence and looking to bring that confidence into our game against Yale."

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

Teams in ECAC impressing

Hobart, Loyola, St. John's, among teams off to good starts

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

Last season, Loyola was the only team to represent the Eastern College Athletic Conference in the NCAA Tournament.

The Greyhounds fell to top-seeded Duke, 12-7, in the first round of play after making the tournament for the second straight season in 2008.

Despite attackman Shane Koppen's four tallies, the 2009 Greyhounds (4-2, 1-0 ECAC) fell to the ninth-ranked Blue Devils Saturday, 11-9, in the first meeting between the two teams since the tournament last season. But Loyola bounced back Tuesday, defeating Bryant, 15-11, at home.

This season, a number of teams in the ECAC could earn bids to the annual tournament if they keep their momentum going and continue to win against ranked opponents before conference play picks up.

The victories have paid off with several teams being named in the Nike/Inside Lacrosse Top 20 Media Poll this week.

No. 17 St. John's (NY), Fairfield and the No. 18 Greyhounds all started conference play with a victory while Hobart (4-0) is undefeated overall without playing a conference game so far.

No. 14 Massachusetts is 3-2 overall and has yet to play an ECAC opponent. The Minutemen suffered a set-back Tuesday, falling to Albany, 12-9, in another tough road game.

The Minutemen and the Statesmen have yet to face an ECAC team, while No. 12 Georgetown (1-2, 0-1 ECAC), Penn State (2-3, 0-1) and Rutgers (1-4, 0-1) have struggled so far.

PSU may have turned things around, however, capturing a road win, 10-8, over Villanova on Tuesday night.

The Hoyas (1-2, 0-1 ECAC) face a Delaware team Thursday that has struggled early with losses to the Stags (2-1, 1-0 ECAC) and the Great Danes.

Big win for Nittany Lions

Penn State has faced three ranked opponents in its three-game home stand, and after falling to the Greyhounds by one goal on Feb. 28, it bounced back with an 11-5 upset over then-No. 15 Ohio State.

The Buckeyes fell from the Top 20 this week after receiving five votes after back-to-back victories over Bucknell and FU.

Attackmen and brothers Jack and Roh Forester combined for five goals and two assists to give the Nittany Lions their first victory of the season.

A perfectly executed offense and stingy defense enabled PSU to get off to an early lead against OSU, even with the Buckeyes outshooting the Nittany Lions, 41-36.

The third quarter was especially effective, with PSU outscoring the OSU 4-1 to lead 8-3 going into the fourth.

Two goals by the Buckeyes were not enough, as the Nittany Lions added three in the final period of play by Rob Forester, attackman Matthew Mackrides and midfielder Chris Hogan to get the victory.

Both teams grabbed 42 ground balls, but PSU capitalized on 3-of-7 man-up opportunities while holding the OSU to no goals on five chances.

Goalkeeper Drew Adams was impressive in net, recording 17 saves on the afternoon.

Penn State heads to Vermont after its trip to Philadelphia for a contest Saturday, March 15.

Statesmen goalkeeper Silberlicht honored

Hobart junior goalkeeper Max Silberlicht was named the Inside Lacrosse/Nike Player of the Week on Tuesday.

The New Hartford, N.Y., native has been instrumental in the Statesmen's perfect record so far this season. He didn't allow a single goal in the first 39 minutes of action against Bucknell as the team went on to defeat the Bison, 7-2, last Saturday.

Silberlicht was also named ECAC Co-Defensive Player of the Week after recording a season-high 14 saves in the contest.

He has played in all 240 minutes this season, allowing just 19 goals over four games while leading the nation in save percentage (.703) and goals-against average (4.75).

The lone goals by the Bison were the fewest goals scored by a Statesmen opponent since the 1992 season, when Hobart defeated Colgate, 18-2.

The Statesmen will have their work cut out for them when they face the nationally-ranked Hoyas this Saturday at home.

Despite being undefeated, Hobart just missed being ranked in the Top 20 in the polls this week.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

Hobart senior defender Ricky Evans narrowly avoids a collision in a meeting last season with the Minutemen. The Statesmen are off to a great start in 2009, winning each of their first four contests.

Resatarits too much for UM at Albany

LACROSSE from page 10

UMass entered the game with a two-game winning streak and fresh off of a big road win over then-No. 12 Harvard on Saturday. Cannella didn't think the quick turnaround played much of a factor, as Albany, which beat Delaware 15-12 on Friday, was dealing with a similar situation.

He said the difference was that Albany took greater advantage of their opportunities.

"Every chance that you have out on that field matters, and every opportunity should be played like the most important play of the game," Cannella said. "The margin of error in these games now is really small. And a team can win or lose a game in a two or three-minute span."

Jim Connolly, who scored three goals for his ninth career hat trick, tried everything he could for UMass in the fourth quarter. But Connolly and the Minutemen couldn't break through as Minuteman goalkeeper Doc Schneider (seven saves) and the rest of the defense didn't have an answer for Resatarits and Caufield.

"Joe had five goals on seven shots – all of which were on goal. He's a very talented young player who is only going to get better."

Cannella and the Minutemen will get to see it for three more years. Before that, UMass returns to action Saturday at Garber Field against No. 13 Brown.

Game notes

All three of UMass' wins this season (Sacred Heart, Yale and Harvard) came against teams it lost to last year. Same goes for the two losses this year, as UMass beat both Albany and Hofstra in 2008. ... Ryan Marcus had two goals for the Minutemen, while Rory Pedrick, Zach Rogers, Art Kell and Tim Balise each had one. ... Rogers (one goal, one assist) and Ryan Liebel (one assists) made their first appearances of the season.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Bobby Hayes and the Minutemen dropped another tough game to Albany. UMass has lost to the Great Danes five of the last six years.

CHECK OUT THE COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG AT P://BLOG.MASSLIVE.COM/DAILYCOLLEGIANSPO
FOR CONSTANT COVERAGE OF UMASS SPORTS
MEN'S BASKETBALL
MEN'S LACROSSE
HOCKEY
SOFTBALL
WOMEN'S LACROSSE
BASEBALL TENNIS TRACK & FIELD

The Interview: TONIGHT
De-Stress, Dress and Impress
Campus to Career
Wednesday, March 11 • 5:30 p.m.
Memorial Hall (between Herter Hall and the Old Chapel)
Sara Coady Howe'02, senior recruiter with EMC will share best practices for interviews, the proper dress for both men and women and what you can do to prepare for the big day. Seating is limited. RSVP today at UMassAlumni.com/students!
FREE REFRESHMENTS
Thanks to the support of Cape Cod Chips and Kraft/Nabisco
Attend to enter the drawings!
Movie passes - $20 UStore gift card - Seniors only: $1,000 cash prize!
Sponsored by the UMass Amherst Alumni Association and the Student Alumni Association
STUDENT ALUMNI ASSOCIATION
ALUMNI

A-10 coaches errant on award selections

Eli Rosenswaike

Unfortunately for Tony Gaffney, he can't swat away the biggest brick put up in the Atlantic 10 this season.

I'm referring to the air-ball that the league's coaches threw up Monday when their selections for the league's awards were announced. Heck, the 14 coaches couldn't even honor themselves correctly.

The senior UMass forward didn't go home empty handed – winning the A-10 Defensive Player of the Year, as well as earning a spot on the All-Conference Second Team. But as I'll get to later, Gaffney was slighted in more ways than one in the voting.

However, the coaches didn't get everything wrong. They got the most important award right on the money...

PLAYER OF THE YEAR

Coaches pick: Ahmad Nivins (St. Joe's)

My pick: Nivins

Even before the season started, everyone knew this would come down to Nivins and Temple's Dionte Christmas. Neither disappointed, both tied for the conference-lead in scoring at 19.2 points per game.

But this is Nivins' award. He led the league in rebounding (11.7 per game), field goal percentage (.625) and finished fourth in blocked shots (55). Christmas had a terrific year, but Nivins is a force in the low-post and is a player that impacts the game in more ways than Christmas.

MOST IMPROVED PLAYER

Coaches pick: Aaron Jackson (Duquesne)

My pick: Gaffney

This one bewilders me. Don't get me wrong, I love Jackson's game. He's my favorite player in the conference, but this simply doesn't make sense.

I won't deny that Jackson has made a big leap this season. But Gaffney went from nobody knowing who the heck he was last year, to John Calipari calling him the best player on the floor when UMass played Memphis this season (You may have heard of the Tigers, they are 28-3 and ranked No. 3 in the country).

Jackson was pretty good last season: averaging nine points, four rebounds, 3.5 assists and 1.4 steals per game. He also shot 54.9 percent. Now he's a league star (18.3 ppg, 5.7 rpg, 5.8 apg) and actually had a better case than Christmas for player of the year.

But this is the most-improved award. Take a look at Gaffney over the last two years ...

This season: 11.5 ppg, 10.2 rpg, 1.7 ast, 2.0 stl, 3.9 blk, 54.4 percent.

Last season: 3.2 ppg, 4.8 rpg, 0.6 ast, 1.1 stl, 1.7 blk, 46.2 percent.

And it's not like he didn't play last year. He averaged 20 minutes per game. Nobody saw Gaffney as a double-double guy every game and the future A-10 Defensive Player of the Year. Players rarely ever just "find it" after three years of not being all that good. Gaffney did.

FRESHMAN OF THE YEAR

Coaches pick: Andrew Nicholson (St. Bonaventure)

My pick: Nicholson

The Bonnies went 8-22 last season and the few good players they had graduated – so they were picked to finish dead last. They did better than that (15-14, 6-10 A-10), and the main reason was Nicholson.

The 6-foot-9 forward averaged 12.5 points, six rebounds, 2.7 blocks and shot 60.7 percent from the field. He was their best player and had the best season of any freshman in the conference.

Honorable mention to Saint Louis' Kwamain Mitchell (10.9 points, 3.7 assists) and Fordham's Jio Fontan (15.3 points, 4.7 assists). Fontan was terrible from the field and on the worst team the A-10 has seen in a long time, so Nicholson beats him.

DEFENSIVE PLAYER OF THE YEAR

Coaches pick: Gaffney

My pick: Gaffney

Gaffney was first in blocks, second in steals and second in rebounding. Enough said.

COACH OF THE YEAR

Coaches pick: Jim Baron (URI)

My pick: Ron Everhart (Duquesne)

Rhode Island has been pretty good for some time now under Baron. This year, they are a bit better and he deserves some credit for that. They won a 3-team tiebreak for the No. 2 seed in the A-10 Tournament.

But he won the award because the coaches were dumb enough to pick them ninth before the season started. Meanwhile, Duquesne hadn't done much in Everhart's first two years there (13-19 in the conference) and somehow got much better despite losing its five leading scorers from last season. Props to you, Ron.

A-10 FIRST TEAM

Coaches pick: Nivins, Christmas, Jackson, B.J. Raymond (Xavier) and Jimmy Baron (URI)

My pick: Nivins, Christmas, Jackson, Gaffney and Rodney Green (La Salle)

One thing that bothers me is that these teams are never really teams. One big man? Come on. Gaffney HAS to be on the first team. That should be a no-brainer.

We don't need all these guards so I'm kicking off Raymond, who is a very good player, but is not one of the five best in the conference. He's there only because Xavier is the best team in the league. That's not what this is about.

Baron shot so well from long-range, but I view Green as a much better all-around player. He averaged more points, rebounds, assists, steals and even shot better overall. That makes it obvious to me here.

A-10 SECOND TEAM

Coaches pick: Gaffney, Green, Kevin Anderson (Richmond), Derrick Brown (Xavier) and Chris Wright (Dayton)

My pick: Wright, Baron, Anderson, Brown and Raymond

Eli Rosenswaike is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

BY STAN HUANG / COLLEGIAN

With Monday's release of the Atlantic 10 Awards, UMass star forward Tony Gaffney has a lot to gripe about. He's too classy to bark at the coaches who slighted him, so the media will have to do the work for him.

First-round of A-10s full of potential upsets

A-10 PREVIEW from page 10

capable of winning two straight titles.

Everyone else needs to win the tournament to have a shot at going to the "Big Dance."

Here's a look at the four first-round matchups.

NO. 8 LA SALLE VS. NO. 9 SAINT LOUIS (WINNER TAKES ON NO. 1 XAVIER)

This is the most even match-up on paper, pitting two virtually identical teams against each other. La Salle went 18-12 with a 9-7 conference record, while Saint Louis finished 17-13, with an 8-8 conference record.

What is the difference between the two teams? It's La Salle's 68-62 victory over Saint Louis last Sunday.

The Explorers tied for fifth with a 9-7 record, but tiebreakers put them in the eighth seed and has them in the unusual position of having to beat the same team twice in a row to advance in the tournament.

Both teams will be doing a ton of film work on that game, and whichever coach makes better adjustments should win a close game. In the first meeting, La Salle leading scorer Rodney Green had 24 points including 10-for-11 at the foul line. The Billikens will have to make an adjustment to stop his penetration.

Although La Salle has the recent victory, SLU held a 22-8 lead in the first half before a shooting slump allowed the Explorers to erase the deficit. The Billikens know they have the ability to beat La Salle, so this should be a very interesting game to watch with the winner getting the first crack at knocking off top-dog Xavier.

NO. 6 RICHMOND VS. NO. 11 ST. BONAVENTURE (NO. 3 DAYTON)

Richmond heads into its first-round matchup with a lot of momentum having won five of its last six games, including an 80-75 win over Xavier last Saturday. The Spiders (17-14, 9-7 A-10) hope their hot streak can last against St. Bonaventure (15-14, 6-10 A-10).

This game is not as uneven as most 6 vs. 11 matchups. The Bonnies defeated the Spiders, 71-67, in their only meeting, closing out the game with an 11-0 run. St. Bonaventure also has the underdog chip on its shoulder after being picked to finish dead last in the conference in the preseason coaches poll.

The Bonnies' improvement was sparked by Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Year Andrew Nicholson, who has averaged 12.5 points, 6.0 rebounds and 2.7 blocks, while shooting 61 percent in his freshman year. St. Bonaventure wants to pound the ball to its big man and let him work.

Richmond is led by guards Kevin Anderson and David Gonzalvez, who each average over 15 points per game. The Spiders use an unorthodox Princeton style offense, which tries to control the tempo and look for open shooters.

Both teams want to execute in the half court, but whichever team can defend the other's gameplan better will advance to play Dayton.

NO. 5 SAINT JOSEPH'S VS. NO. 12 CHARLOTTE (NO. 4 TEMPLE)

At first glance, this is the biggest mismatch in the tournament. The Hawks (16-14, 9-7 A-10) have the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year in Ahmad Nivins (19.2 points, 11.7 rebounds per game), one of the best coaches in the Conference with Phil Martelli and they get to face a team with only five conference wins.

What suggests that Charlotte can pull off the upset? Well, home wins over Xavier and Dayton prove that the 49ers have the ability to play at an elite level in spurts.

They do have a standout guard in Lamont Mack who puts in 17.6 points and 6.3 rebounds in league play.

Unfortunately for the 49ers, they never know which team will show up to play. After the Xavier win, Charlotte fell apart and lost four of its last five games with the only win coming against conference-doormat Fordham.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

BY NOAH FINKEL / COLLEGIAN

UMass sophomore swingman Anthony Gurley could play a key role off the bench for the Minutemen in their first-round matchup against Duquesne in the Atlantic 10 Tournament.

UMass feels it owes Dukes some payback

UMASS-DUQUESNE from page 10

streak, they also must overcome the loss they had just two weeks ago to Duquesne. Despite hitting a school-record 16 3-pointers, the Minutemen couldn't stop the Dukes as they fell, 94-77, at the Mullins Center on Feb. 25.

"Duquesne got the best of us on our home court the last time we played them, so we're just going to be ready to play," Lowe said. "I know coach is going to come up with a good game plan."

So far this year when UMass faced a team for the second time, Kellogg's game plan has seemed to be the right one. Despite losing both contests to La Salle, the Minutemen bounced back from their home losses to Saint Joseph's and Rhode Island, to upset both on their home courts later in the season.

"We know we owe [Duquesne] something. We owed URI something; we owed St. Joe's something," said A-10 Defensive Player of the Year, Tony Gaffney. "We're ready to go. Our mentality right now is completely different than it was two weeks ago. It is almost like we have a bad-boy mentality."

But what may have been the most important thing Kellogg did to help UMass win the second time around was getting them to play down the stretch.

"The last couple of games have been coming down to the final four minutes, and as you can tell, we've become a better team in the last four minutes," Lowe said. "Coach has been putting in a lot of time with situations in practice with us so we can come down to the last four minutes and execute."

If the Minutemen want to have a chance to win the game in the last four minutes, they have to play better defense than they did last time against Duquesne. In what quickly became a shootout, UMass became lackluster on defense as it allowed the Dukes to shoot 57.1 percent from the floor in the loss.

"Nobody gave an effort on defense; me, the starting five, the bench players, nobody gave an effort," Lowe said. "If we give an effort like we've been doing the last couple of games, we should be able to come up with a good outcome."

The last couple of games are definitely a blueprint that UMass can look to, as it has won consecutive games for the first time all season in A-10 play. But the pressing tempo and traps that the Minutemen have used to confuse George Washington and Rhode Island may not be as effective against Duquesne.

"It will be hard to press them and trap them as we have the last couple of games because that is how they play," Kellogg said. "But we can't completely get away from that style because it has been successful the last few times and it has kind of re-energized our team."

Whatever game plan Kellogg comes up with, he knows he has his seniors –: Lowe, Gaffney and Luke Bonner – behind him. For them, a loss means the end of their college careers.

A win extends that at least one more game. That next game would be a rematch of Saturday's contest against Rhode Island.

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

For full coverage of the Massachusetts men's basketball team during the Atlantic 10 Tournament, follow assistant sports editors Jeffrey R. Larnard and Scott Feldman on www.dailycollegian.com while they bring you the following from Atlantic City, N.J.:

LIVE GAME BLOGS
GAME RECAPS
NOTEBOOKS
PODCASTS

INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?

THE COLLEGIAN IS ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF BUSINESS MANAGER.

COME TO 113 CAMPUS CENTER TO PICK UP AN APPLICATION.

holy-moly.

| | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1 | | 6 | | | 9 |
| | | 7 | | 4 | | 1 |
| 8 | 4 | | 5 | 2 | | |
| 8 | | | | | 2 | |
| | 4 | 8 | 3 | | 9 | |
| | 9 | | | | | 3 |
| | 8 | 3 | | 7 | 1 | |
| 1 | 5 | | 8 | | | |
| 4 | | 2 | | 3 | | |

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Boesch impediments
8 Curvy letters
11 Use a Singer
14 Complete
15 Chuckle
16 West of "My Little Chickadee"
17 As a result of 18 Repellicous
20 Messy quarters
22 Revised
23 Reverberate
25 Deborah and John
27 Loch of legend
28 Chic
30 "NFL PrimeTime" channel
32 Ely or Howard
33 Rattle pants
36 Geneva's lake
40 New York city
42 Grandpa
43 Fred's first dancing partner
44 Bookcase level
45 Arboreal lemur
47 And also not
48 Diving birds
50 Off the boat
52 Pond coating
55 Isolated
58 Periods
59 Birchbark boats
61 Tasty seed
63 Goddess of love
65 Play over
66 Med. procedure
69 Nostrils
70 Potato-filled turnover
71 Dickens hero
72 Marching drum
73 Commit theft

DOWN
1 Bird Co.
2 Valuable note
3 Actress Zimbalist
4 Cookout settings
5 Pilot
6 Creme de la creme
7 Butterfly with eyespots
8 Grafton of mysteries
9 Way out
10 Herring's kin
11 Inflict a heavy blow
12 Roof overhang
13 Unwanted plants
19 In a can in England
21 Terrier type
23 Beige shades
24 Man of the 26 Put down new grass
29 Tour up
31 No Trills
34 Brittle
35 Family
37 Diverse group
38 Without support
39 Social misfits
41 Hubbub
46 Mobsters
49 "The Accidental Tourist" director
51 Grieve loudly
52 Mischievous rogue
53 Italian isle
54 Lacking coolth?
56 On the move
57 Pee Wee of baseball
60 Units of geologic time
62 Torah holders
64 Author Levin
66 Cold War letters
67 Org. of Flames

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach

THINK AHEAD

Two 6-week summer sessions

Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net

Registration begins March 9

SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Painting: The art of protecting flat surfaces from the weather and exposing them to the critic."

— Ambrose Bierce

WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

CHEAP CITY BY MICHAEL CAPOZZOLA

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELL

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18

To-do list:
1.) Make Chex Mix
2.) Finish to-do lis

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20

Soon you'll find out that being stalked by an array of screaming girls is not as fun as it sounds.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19

Donating to Wikipedia didn't get you anything tangible, like that cool NPR coffee mug, but you do get to make a page about yourself.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20

Your dreams have been wild lately. You would know this already, but you forget everything the instant you awaken.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21

You are easily mesmerized by the Internet's flashing lights and bright colors but most of all, by its plentiful porn.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22

You can't expect to keep your job working the phones at 1-800-FLOWERS by constantly breathing heavily and groaning.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22

No more flossing. I can tell you are becoming addicted to oral hygiene.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22

Your campaign to free Nelson Mandela will come to a peaceful resolution today, when you realize he was freed back in 1990.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22

Today you will scientifically prove the existance of the queef.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21

You are just like Carmen Electra, except not nearly as attractive.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21

Trust in the hawk. It knows the way.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19

Unfortunately, you've put the cart in front of the horse again, this time fatally wounding it.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums

Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!

50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

SUMMER ON CAPE COD!! The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews for summer employment on our Cape Cod property March 26,27,28 and April 2,3,4. Servers, Lifeguards, Beach Attendant and more needed! On-site Housing is Available. Visit our website at www.wychmereharbor.com for available positions and call (508) 432-1000 x129 for details.

ANNOUNCEMENT

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright:

ANNOUNCEMENT

413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900

FOR RENT

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass. Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Center of town. 1,2,3 bedrooms, hardwood floors. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO

FOR RENT

FEES. www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

House for rent. 2 bedroom, kitchen, 2 bath. $1000/month. On bus route 413-549-6091

3 br, 1 b, laundry hookups + appliances, 5 min. to UMass, 3-share max. No pets. Available now. $1000/mo. 1st + last + security + references: 413549-7308

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSWEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 11, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Seventh time the charm?

UMass looks to end six-year drought in conference tourney

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

As far as Derek Kellogg is concerned, there is no losing streak in the Atlantic 10 Tournament for the Massachusetts men's basketball team.

"I don't know anything about a losing streak. The last I remember is winning every game, so that is the way I'm looking at it," UMass' first-year coach said. "There is not a losing streak with this team. I don't know what's happened in the past, but this team is going in with a fresh start. That is the mentality I have, and that is the mentality they better have."

Back when Kellogg led the Minutemen on the court, he went a perfect 12-0 over four years in the tournament — winning four consecutive conference titles from 1992-95. But since then, the Minutemen have not been able to continue that dominance.

On Wednesday when the Minutemen take on Duquesne in the first round of the A-10 Tournament at 6:30 p.m. in Atlantic City, N.J., they hope to find the success Kellogg had during his playing days.

To find the last victory for UMass (12-17, 7-9 A-10) in the conference tournament, you have to go back to 2002 when the No. 4-seeded Minutemen upended No. 5 George Washington, 73-62. UMass lost the following day to No. 1 Xavier and has lost its first game for six straight seasons since then.

From 2003-06, the Minutemen lost in the first round, despite being seeded higher than their opponents. They lost in the quarterfinals in 2007 and 2008 after receiving a first-round bye. Again, the Minutemen continued to lose despite holding a higher seed. In 2007, UMass had the No. 2 seed but lost in overtime to No. 7 Saint Louis, and in 2008, the No. 3-seeded Minutemen lost to No. 6 Charlotte.

This year, however, will be the first time that UMass is the underdog in the first game it plays in the tournament since 1991. With the Minutemen's victory over Rhode Island on Saturday, it propelled them to the No. 10 seed of the tournament, the lowest seed they have ever had. It also sets them up to face off against the No. 7 Dukes (18-11, 9-7 A-10).

But regardless of the seeding, senior point guard Chris Lowe just wants Wednesday to come so he and his teammates can try to end the seven-game losing streak in the tournament.

"It has definitely been on my mind a lot. I can't sleep right now," Lowe said before practice on Monday. "I'm just ready for Wednesday to come, and I can't wait for it to come and get this 48 hours over with."

While the Minutemen must overcome the losing

See UMASS-DUQUESNE on page 8

First-year coach Derek Kellogg would like nothing more to hault UMass' streak of six consecutive one-and-done's in the Atlantic 10 Tournament. Kellogg was a perfect 12-0 as a player for the Minutemen.

Xavier coach Sean Miller and the Musketeers are the top-seed again in the Altantic 10 Tournament. Xavier will get a first-round bye.

Xavier once-again favorites

A-10 Tournament tips off in Atlantic City on Wednesday

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

The Atlantic 10 Tournament is all about matchups.

In a year where no team has fewer than four conference losses and upsets have been the norm, the winner of this year's A-10 Tournament will depend on who catches fire, who gets a bad draw and whether the top teams can live up to their seeding.

For the third consecutive year, No. 17 Xavier enters the Atlantic 10 Tournament as the top seed and the favorite to win the tournament. The Musketeers also might be the only team that has a guaranteed NCAA Tournament ticket punched. Everyone else is going to have to make some noise in Atlantic City.

Just because Xavier is the No. 1 seed does not mean it is the prohibitive favorite. They have four in-conference losses, including losses to Duquesne (Feb. 7), Charlotte (Feb. 19) and Richmond (March 7) – three teams that failed to earn a first-round bye.

Rhode Island, Dayton and Temple are seeded 2-4, respectively. Each team boasts an 11-5 conference record and was seeded on various tie-breakers. Despite having the same conference records, each team has a totally different situation.

URI appeared to be heading to an at-large berth with six straight conference wins, but a buzzer-beating loss to Massachusetts severely damaged its at-large hopes. A low RPI (64) combined with a very soft strength-of-schedule (134) has most experts putting the Rams on the outside looking in. Rhode Island likely cannot lose before making the finals if it wants to maintain any hope of an at-large. Ideally for the Rams, they would play Dayton in the semifinals, which is another team on the bubble.

No. 3 seed Dayton is in roughly the same situation UMass was in last year. The Flyers are the third seed, have several impressive wins, a 14-1 non-conference record and an RPI of 42 that should get them in the NCAAs. However, just like last year's Minutemen, a loss in their first game would be absolutely crushing and likely result in a trip to the NIT.

The last team to receive a bye is defending Atlantic 10 Tournament champion Temple. They are the very definition of a bubble team with a tough schedule (53) and a high RPI (39) being in its favor, but an underwhelming overall record of 19-11 and some bad losses to UMass and Long Beach State.

The Owls do boast A-10 co-leading scorer Dionte Christmas and it's never a good idea to discount the defending champs. Temple is certainly a darkhorse

See A-10 PREVIEW on page 8

Albany does it again to UM

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

The Resetarits family continues to haunt the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team.

Following the precedent set by his older brother Frank, Albany freshman Joe Resetarits scored a career-high five goals Tuesday afternoon to lift the Great Danes to a 12-9 victory over the No. 14 Minutemen.

Curse?

Frank, who scored nine goals in his career against the Minutemen, helped Albany administer UMass four straight crushing 1-goal defeats from 2004-2007. With Frank gone in 2008 and Joe still in high school, UMass took advantage and returned the favor in a dramatic 1-goal win.

| | |
|---|---|
| Albany | 12 |
| UMass | 9 |

But in 2009, the Resetarits family made its triumphant return. And this time Joe provided the damage.

"I think this is the last one," hoped UMass coach Greg Cannella after the game. "I'm not sure, though."

Resetarits wasn't the only thorn in UMass' side in the loss. Brian Caufield had three goals and four assists for the Great Danes (3-1), as the two combined to score all five second-half goals to propel Albany.

The Minutemen (3-2) jumped out to a 4-1 lead in the game's first 10 minutes, but Resetarits and Caufield each scored during an early assault in the second quarter to tie the score at 4. The teams then traded goals for the remainder of the half and for much of the third quarter, resuling in ties at 5, 6, 7 and 8.

Caufield broke the tie with 59 seconds left in the third quarter, giving Albany a lead it would never lose. UMass had some opportunities in the fourth quarter, but goalkeeper John Carroll (nine saves) stepped up his play while the Minutemen scramhled to come back.

"They shot the ball extremely well. They had more shots on goal than us, and we outshot them 48-31," Cannella said. "They took advantage of everything: scoring two extra-man goals and scoring off of our failed clears. I thought our guys put-forth a really good effort. They just played a better game than us."

See LACROSSE on page 7

UMass' Evan Blum, right, and Albany's Ryan Ivory, left, battle for a ball in last year's meeting between the two growing rivals. The Minutemen fell, 12-9, at Albany Tuesday in a back-and-forth game.

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 40 LOW: 13 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 2009

Over 60 faculty may not return next year

Chancellor Robert Holub sent notices of non-reappointment to 60 faculty members, who may not return next year due to the budget shortfall.

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

Some faculty members at the University of Massachusetts may have become the most recent casualties of a looming budget deficit that will hit the University hard starting next year.

Beginning in March, notices of non-reappointment were sent out to 60 non-tenure-track faculty members. The majority of these faculty members are lecturers – 37 are part-time and 23 are full-time faculty.

Currently, 91 faculty members have received notices of non-reappointment; the other 31 were notified this past December.

According to University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski, administration currently has no way of knowing whether of not these faculty members will be laid off officially.

However, because these non-tenured faculty members are contracted to the University, depending on their seniority, each member needs notification by a certain date in the prior year.

If the administration failed to send out warning notices by the specific dates within the faculty members' contracts, then the administration would not be able to lay them off in order to regain some financial stability.

"[The notifications] are really providing the University with some flexibility," said Blaguszewski. "We do not know if layoffs will actually have to occur. The unknown question is how much of a budget gap will there be, and once that occurs we can see how that correlates with budget reductions in the workforce."

Administration cannot determine exactly how much of a budget gap it will need to close, because they are still waiting on the state's decision to allocate federal stimulus money.

As a result, administration cannot determine who, of the 91 faculty members to receive notification of non-reappointment, will actually lose their jobs at UMass.

"I don't know whether the faculty members were expecting the notification, but common sense would tell them, I believe, that the campus was going to send out these letters," said Chancellor Robert Holub. "We hope to hire many of them back if we receive adequate stimulus funding from the federal funds in the state stabilization part of the bill."

"We believe many of these faculty members will be teaching for us next year," said Holub. "Some might be hired back even if we had no hope of stimulus money. I believe that the market is extremely tight for positions in higher education, and that it will not be easy for anyone to find a position for next year."

Blaguszewski said he does not believe there has been any consideration yet of who is most likely to be laid off. Some factors that will decide that may have to do with what departments need these professors, or the size of the class that each professor lectures.

The notices come as another blow to the Amherst 250 plan created in June 2005. At that time, the administration in place had hoped to hire 250 new faculty members to UMass Amherst within five years.

Based on the costs of professors in 2004, the Amherst 250 plan suggested that each additional faculty member would cost the campus at least $130,000.

In an online explanation of the plan, UMass administration stated the Amherst 250 plan would be a "crucial investment required to maintain the campus as a nationally competitive public

See FACULTY on page 3

Speech derailed by protest

Audience interrupts and 'boos' pundit throughout short talk

By Sam Butterfield
Collegian Staff

Both sides wanted controversy, and both sides got it.

In the Cape Cod Lounge Wednesday night, conservative pundit Don Feder took the podium after University of Massachusetts Republican Club president Greg Collins introduced him to a swarm of boos.

The event devolved from there.

Shortly before the speech began, a large group of protesters carrying "anti-hate" signs assembled and filed into the room, where they were met at the door by UMass police.

From the start, the protesters made their voices heard.

"There's absolutely no room for hate speech on this campus," said winter 2008 graduate Natalia Tylim. Her friend, senior Katie Perry, concurred, adding "I think campuses are places for open-mindedness, and this is the opposite of that."

As the room filled, Feder mingled with media, the Republican Club and security personnel, while the crowd buzzed with an eager pulse.

Before the speech began, the evening was marked by drama, as police removed one student holding a ferret before asking another audience member his plans regarding an orange he was holding.

Not all members of the audience were opposed to Feder's appearance.

"I'm curious about why he has these views, they need to let him speak," said freshman Cameron Abolfazli.

When Collins took the podium at just after 7 p.m. to introduce Feder, he added a warning to would-be disrupters of the event.

"Before I introduce Don Feder," Collins said, "any sort of disruption during this event will not be tolerated, and this speech will not specifically address the Justice for Jason movement."

As boos rained down from the gallery, Collins told the crowd that "this speech will address hate crimes," and that "the Republican Club feels that issues surrounding race are frequently dictated by one side on this campus in an intolerant manner."

A number of protesters were temporarily kept out of the speech last night due to security concerns. There were five UMPD officers at the event.

Some members of the audience held signs and turned their seats around in protest as Don Feder took the podium.

From there, tensions only heightened, as Feder sternly redressed the crowd in his opening statement.

"You don't stop someone from speaking who you disagree with," he said, banging his hand on the lectern, "there's something god-damn fascistic about people coming into a speech and deliberately trying to disrupt it."

Feder several times referenced totalitarian political movements.

"Hate crime laws," Feder said, "are fascism, fascism in the guise of protecting minorities."

At 7:13, just minutes into the speech, the protesters turned their seats in defiance, to which Feder joked that "those people who've turned their chairs around are probably wise, I'm nothing special to look at."

After a brief pause, Feder moved into what seemed to be the crux of his speech.

"Excepting laws against libel and slander, we have the freedom to spread lies and disinformation, the freedom to spread lies that are hurtful and even hateful, we have the freedom to say things that would enrage those who would suppress speech in the name of tolerance," he said.

Feder proceeded to address the specifics of hate crime law. He read from the law, "a hate crime is one in which there is manifest evidence of prejudice based on race, religion, disability, sexual orientation or ethnicity."

After Feder related that a 2007 statute meant to protect those targeted for their gender identity was "thankfully vetoed by President Bush," one protester stood up and asked "what about Duanna Summers," a transgendered

See FEDER on page 3

New bar opens in downtown Amherst

By Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano
Collegian Staff

Red Sox and Celtics paraphernalia adorn the walls of the new Stackers bar in downtown Amherst. Several flat screen TVs line the walls of the new establishment, making it a new destination to go and watch the game. The atmosphere is up-scale enough for a sit down meal, yet epitomizes a classic New England bar atmosphere.

Stackers occupies the area between The Monkey Bar and Judie's Restaurant in downtown Amherst, formerly home to another bar, Delano's. The ownership rights were transferred last year from Chick Delano to Amherst resident Brian Stahl, who runs the new establishment.

A great deal of excitement has been generated within the University of Massachusetts community over the prospect of a new hang-out spot. Those who have visited Stackers since its opening say the name isn't the only thing that's changed about the establishment.

"The place has completely transformed since it was Delano's," said UMass junior Bill Paulin. "It's a lot more spacious."

According the Amherst Select Board, over $20,000 was spent to renovate the bar. Stahl downplays the renovation, saying that "it's not like we reinvented the wheel or anything. It's just some new floors and a couple coats of paint."

Stahl, a UMass graduate with a degree in economics, hopes Stackers will be a place for local people as well as college kids to come in and grab a beer or a bite to eat.

Stahl is one of the co-owners at McMurphy's Uptown Tavern, another bar in the downtown area. He envisions Stackers serving as a restaurant during the day, with affordable $5 lunch specials on anything from cheeseburgers to jalapeño poppers. At night, the place will hopefully transform into a college hot-spot, serving drink specials from 8 p.m. to 2 a.m.

It's not every day that a new bar opens in Amherst. In fact, this marks the first time a new bar has opened in the downtown area since Amherst Brewing Company in 1997. For a town that is home to over 30,000 college students, there are only a handful of places where students can unwind over a cold one and a game of pool. In the two weeks since its grand opening, Stahl says Stackers has been "packed to the gills."

"I think people are excited because now is a time when a lot of places are closing down and prices are going up-up-up," said Stahl. "You shouldn't have to break bank to grab a burger and a beer."

Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano can be reached at steinber a student.umass.edu

Football team heads-up marrow drive

By Matt Rocheleau
Collegian Staff

Players from the University of Massachusetts football team were on the offensive yesterday afternoon, as they competed to recruit people walking through the Campus Center to participate in a bone marrow donor registration drive.

Now in its second year, the annual event seeks anyone willing to swab their cheek and fill out some paper work – a process which takes several minutes – to be entered into the National Marrow Donor Program Registry database of potential matches for bone marrow transplants.

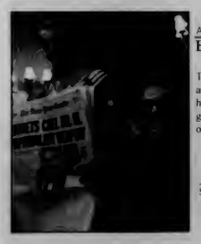
By the time of the drive's conclusion at 2 p.m., the team had registered 240 people, up from around 150 a year ago, said football team video coordinator Bill Sisler.

"People have been fantastic," said Kevin Morris, who was promoted from offensive coordinator to be the team's head coach in January. "We're so thankful to see the UMass community so excited about what we're doing here."

Similar drives are being held by the other 11 schools in the football team's conference, the Colonial Athletic Association (CAA), which holds a competition to see which team can register the most people.

Morris added extra incentive for his players by dividing them up to see which group could sign up the most people. The groups earned points for each registrant, which go towards part of a larger team-wide competition for a reward to be determined at the end of spring.

Last year's campaign was held at McGuirk Stadium on May 3, the day of the team's Spring Game, but the registration was mainly limited to players, coaches and their friends and family, Sisler said.



Sophomore Octavious Hawkins, one of five quarterbacks in the running to be a starter, volunteered to demonstrate for students how to use the cotton swab kits.

Each kit contains four sterilized swabs, which are used to rub against the four corners of the inner cheek – a process much simpler than it was two years ago, when registrants had to give a vial of blood. The swabs are then sealed and sent away to be tested for possible matches. If a match is found, the person tested is con-

See MARROW on page 2

Members of the football team patrolled the Campus Center concourse yesterday convincing passers-by to join the National Bone Marrow Registry.

ARTS & LIVING
EXPLOSIVE FILM

Though a bit cumbersome at just under three hours, the big screen adaptation of the graphic novel "Watchmen" offers an entertaining film.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
A-10 WOES

For the seventh straight year, the Minutemen fell in their first game in the Atlantic 10 Tournament. This time, UMass lost to Duquesne, 91-81.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION
COLUMN | SGA ELECTION PANACEA

Ben Moriarty explores how to fix the lack of student body participation in the Student Government Association's election process.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
SLIDESHOW | SPEECH SPARKS PROTEST

Check out the conflict that erupted between conservative pundit Don Feder and numerous protesters Wednesday night on DailyCollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 32

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Wasserak
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olson
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Deimer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COPIES EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenwaike
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR P.J. Stanley
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacek
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zohniert
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kocrwara
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Melissa Tiertinen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DiBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO Ryan Fung
ASSISTANT PHOTO Matthew Harrison
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillmeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Weiner

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AUTUMN SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ASSABET LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN OWNS ITS COPYRIGHT SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Michael King

COPY EDITOR
Shayna Murphy

PRODUCTION TEAM
Michelle Abbasciano

your week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

TODAY

NEWS

SLIDESHOW:
SEE PICTURES FROM DON FEDER'S TALK, "HATE CRIMES (IT'S NOT WHAT YOU THINK)."

VIDEO:
OUR CAMERA CAPTURES BOTH OPINIONS FROM SUNDAY'S AMHERST COMMON RALLY ON HOW TO REACH PEACE IN THE MIDDLE EAST.

BLOG:
READ THE LATEST IN UMASS RESEARCH, POLITICS AND STUDENT LIFE FOR THE WEEK ON THE COLLEGIAN'S NEWS BLOGS. NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS TELLS OF GOING UNDER THE KNIFE FOR UMASS KINESIOLOGY.

PODCAST:
CATCH A ROUND TABLE DISCUSSION ABOUT THIS YEAR'S SGA ELECTION WITH INPUT FROM COLLEGIAN POLITICS REPORTERS AND THEIR EDITORS.

VIDEO:
SEE MORE OF WHAT THE SGA CANDIDATES HAD TO SAY AT LAST WEEK'S PRE-ELECTION DEBATE.

VIDEO:
COLLEGIAN REPORTER AND UVC-TV 19 CORRESPONDENT GISEL SAILLANT HOLDS LITTLE BACK WHILE SOLICITING REAL STUDENT OPINION ON A VARIETY OF ISSUES.

FRIDAY

SPORTS

PODCAST:
COLLEGIAN SPORTS EDITORS PREVIEW WHAT THE UMASS MEN'S BASKETBALL TEAM FACES THIS YEAR AS THEY HEAD INTO THE A-10 TOURNAMENT.

Air pollution causes deaths

BY THOMAS H. MAUGH II
LOS ANGELES TIMES

Ozone pollution is a killer, increasing the yearly risk of death from respiratory diseases by 40 percent to 50 percent in heavily polluted cities in Southern California and by about 25 percent throughout the rest of the country, researchers reported Thursday.

Environmental scientists already knew that spikes in ozone during periods of heavy pollution caused short-term effects, such as asthma attacks, increased hospitalizations and deaths from heart attacks.

But the 18-year study of nearly half a million people, reported in the New England Journal of Medicine, is the first to show that long-term, low-level exposure to the pollutant also can be lethal.

Current standards for ozone pollution cover only eight-hour averages of the colorless gas; but even with that relatively relaxed rule, 345 counties with a total population of more than 100 million people are out of compliance.

The Environmental Protection Agency "has already said that it will revisit the current ozone standards in the country," said Dan Greenbaum, president of the Health Effects Institute in Boston, one of the study's sponsors. "Undoubtedly, when it happens these results are going to be a very important part of that review," said Greenbaum, who was not involved in the study.

The EPA might need to implement an annual standard, said environmental health scientist Daniel Krewski of the University of Ottawa, a co-author of the paper.

Co-author Michael Jerrett of the University of California, Berkeley, said the findings could have profound implications because they show that ozone worsens conditions that already kill a large number of people. Deaths from respiratory diseases, such as chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, emphysema and pneumonia, account for about 8.5 percent of all U.S. deaths, an estimated 240,000 each year. Worldwide, such conditions account for 7.7 million death each year.

Ozone is what is known as a secondary pollutant, one not formed directly by the burning of fossil fuels. Rather, nitrogen oxides produced by such combustion react in the presence of sunlight to form ozone. It is thus the biggest problem in areas that are sunny and hot, Jerrett said.

As an oxidizing agent, ozone reacts with virtually anything it comes in contact with. In particular, it reacts with cells in the lungs, causing inflammation and other effects that produce premature aging.

Jerrett and his colleagues studied 448,850 people over age 18 in 96 metropolitan regions who enrolled in the American Cancer Society Cancer Prevention Study II in 1982 and 1983. The subjects were then tracked for an average of 18 years. During that follow-up, there were 48,884 deaths, 9,891 of them from respiratory diseases.

The researchers found that every 10 parts-per-billion (ppb) increase in average ozone concentrations was associated with about a 4 percent increase in dying of respiratory causes.

San Francisco had the lowest average ozone level of the 96 regions studied and only a 14 percent increased risk, probably because of the fog and prevailing winds, which reduce ozone formation. The Pacific Northwest also had low levels of ozone, again because of rain and cool weather.

Such Eastern cities as New York and Washington had an average increased risk of about 25 percent to 27 percent.

The researchers found no increase in deaths from cardiovascular disease associated with ozone levels – those deaths are caused primarily by the fine particulates present in air pollution.

They also found no increase in overall mortality, suggesting that ozone is causing deaths in people who were probably going to die in another year or two anyway, according to epidemiologist Joel Schwartz of the Harvard School of Public Health, who was not involved in the study.

"We do know that ozone is particularly dangerous for people living with existing asthma or lung disease," Jerrett said. "And it didn't matter what someone's weight, income or education was. "It seems to affect a lot of people relatively equally."

Mouth-swabbing campaign supports national registry

MARROW from page 1

MATT ROCHELEAU/COLLEGIAN

Quarterback hopeful Octavious Hawkins demonstrates how to use the swabbing kit in the Campus Center basement.

tacted through the form they filled out with the testing kit.

"We are trying to get way more people than any other team so we can help people out," said Hawkins, a communications major.

He said Morris came up with the idea for the team's internal competition to boost the players' motivation.

"It brought out the competitiveness in all of us," Hawkins said. "Our new coach is all about helping people."

Men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella, who graduated from the University in 1988, participated in the drive.

"I'm here to support the football team and potentially help anyone, if need be," he said.

Standing in the main concourse of the Campus Center, the football team also brought many students down the escalators to the basement room where the tests were administered.

"I was recruited by a large football player," said senior Chris Mackay, majoring in Middle Eastern studies. "I'm trying to see what it's all about and if I want to be in the registry."

"I'm all for it," said Smith Vocational [Northampton] senior Mykayla Parisa. "I'm just up for something different really."

On any given day, more than 6,000 people search the NMDP Registry for a donor. These patients have leukemia, lymphoma and other life-threatening diseases that can be treated by a bone marrow or cord blood transplant.

Matt Rocheleau can be reached at mrocheleau@dailycollegian.com.

Obama repeals Bush laws on research involving stem cells

BY ABRAM JONES
THE DAILY UNIVERSE (BYU)

PROVO, Utah — President Barack Obama lifted the Bush administration's strict limits on federal funding for human embryonic stem cell research on Monday.

"Today, with the executive order I am about to sign, we will bring the change that so many scientists and researchers, doctors and innovators, patients and loved ones have hoped for, and fought for, these past eight years," Obama said. "And we will aim for America to lead the world in the discoveries it one day may yield."

Obama's executive order revokes a previous executive order which was signed by President Bush in June 2007. In addition, the order overturns the 2001 Bush presidential statement limiting federal funding of controversial research involving human embryonic stem cells, which are destroyed in the research process.

"In recent years, when it comes to stem cell research, rather than furthering discovery, our government has forced what I believe is a false choice between sound science and moral values," Obama said. "In this case, I believe the two are not inconsistent."

However, many are concerned about the morality of stem cell research, and oppose the president's decision.

"It is categorically wrong to fund unnecessary and immoral research that destroys human embryos," said U.S. Congressman Mike Pence, R-Ind., in a written statement. "In just a few short weeks the president has made it clear he will use the office of the presidency to weaken protections for the unborn, and will do so using taxpayer dollars."

Others, including Sen. Orrin Hatch, R-Utah, say this research enhances, not diminishes, human life.

"I strongly believe that being pro-life means helping the living by allowing critically important and ethical medical research to go forward," Hatch said in a news release. "President Obama's decision to lift the ban on federal funding for human embryonic stem cell research offers renewed hope to millions of Americans afflicted with diabetes, leukemia, Parkinson's, Alzheimer's, spinal cord and traumatic brain injuries and a host of other ailments."

Nano-bots make their mark on DNA

BY MAX BEHRMAN
WASHINGTON SQUARE NEWS (NYU)

NEW YORK — Forget R2-D2 and C-3PO – NYU researchers have developed an entirely different and exciting kind of robot.

After years of research, a team of chemists from NYU and China's Nanjing University has created a two-armed nanorobot with the ability to alter and exchange pieces of genetic code. The catch? Their device has to be small enough to work on a molecular scale.

Built from DNA, the new nanorobot measures approximately 150 x 50 x 8 nanometers. And that's tiny: a nanometer is a billionth of a meter.

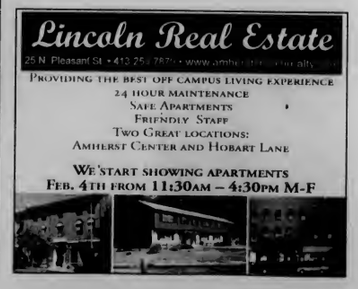
With this device, size really does matter; while one array of molecules that the device studies measures out to be 120 x 50 square nanometers, Hongzhou Gu, a fifth-year chemistry graduate student, said that one of the researchers' goals is to create larger arrays accessible to the device.

"If we can get the array bigger," Gu said, "that means more arms on the array and more information we can store."

Gu said technology tends to follow a top-down method, meaning products continuously get smaller and smaller. However, their group utilizes a bottom-up method, attempting to make their arrays larger.

According to Ned Seeman, an NYU chemistry professor involved in the research, nanotechnology such as this provides "the capability of putting what you want where you want it when you want it there, and all on the nanometer scale."

That manipulation of molecules therefore facilitates the conception of new DNA structures, allowing for the manufacturing of never-before-seen synthetic materials.



Computer processors and circuitry can also benefit from improvements in nanotechnology. Nanomachines inside computers could allow for more binary states, allowing for double the current computing speed.

The new device's arms, which resemble two holes with a space between them, reside within an origami-like rectangular array. The arms, called cassettes, store different pieces of information; while DNA has previously filled that niche, other species such as proteins and chemical components could theoretically be placed in the arms.

Hao Yan, one researcher who worked in the NYU lab, said using the arms in a "controllable fashion" is a breakthrough.

"This is an exciting step toward implementing molecular assembly lines that could be used to control chemical synthesis, to activate protein-protein interaction, or to attenuate signal transductions," Yan said.

Feder faces tough audience

FEDER from page 1

person murdered in Memphis, TN.

Feder was notably peeved at the interruption, asking authorities to "please remove her, if you don't remove her I'm going to stop speaking," before chiding the audience with "you god-damned Nazis."

From there, whatever order existed was lost.

"I'm in a time warp, I'm back at Boston University in 1969," said Feder, as crowd members called back simply with "good."

"I've spoken at college campuses all over the country," said Feder. "I've never experienced anything like this before," as the crowd cheered.

After a prolonged pause, Feder moved on to what would be the final part of his speech, citing statistics about hate crime in America.

Of violent crimes, 47.4 percent were intimidation, 31.4 percent simple assault, 20.6 aggravated assault and 0.2 percent were murder, adding to nine hate crime murders in 2007.

"Your chances of being the victim of a serious hate crime are comparable to being struck twice by lightning and being run over by a high speed train while skateboarding on a national holiday," Feder quipped, before he was derailed for what would be the final time.

"I want to tell you this, Don Feder, fag to me is not only a word," one protester shouted, as Feder remarked, "I won't have to put up with this," before leaving the stage.

After a sustained pause, the crowd chanted "speak, Don, speak!" but received no reply.

Several minutes later, at around 7:30 p.m. Collins again took the stage.

"I apologize to those who came to hear a speech," he remarked, "but the event has been cancelled."

"I'm too old and too tired to subject myself to this," Feder bewilderedly said at the podium after he finished, "it would have been the longest speech of my life."

"These people know there's no consequences, the only place this can happen is on a college campus, anywhere else these people would be arrested for disorderly conduct," he said.

Afterwards Feder said he was disappointed but not defeated.

"If these people want to think they won, that's fine," he said, "the Soviets thought they won until the Berlin Wall came down, the Nazis thought they won until 1945."

Members of the Republican Club were similarly disappointed at the results.

"We intended for the event to be a forum for the expression of a conservative perspective on hate crime legislation, but also to provide a give and take with the audience, who we expected would disagree with his perspective," said Republican Club vice president Brad DeFlumeri.

"With that being said," Defluneri added, "the leftists who did attend made it quite clear quite early that they intended for the event to be shut down, that they intended to infringe upon Don Feder's first amendment free speech rights."

Sam Butterfield can be reached at sjb09@chmpshire.edu.

Conservative pundit Don Feder anticipates student protesting before beginning his lecture on hate crimes Wednesday night as he is introduced by Republican Club President Greg Collins.

Drinking up in a bad economy

BY EMILY OTLEY
MICHIGAN DAILY

EAST LANSING, Mich. — As the old saying goes, "When the going gets tough, the tough get drinking."

Well, not exactly.

But with today's economy, the sentiment is becoming more of a reality every day.

As the stock market continues to fall – hitting lows that haven't been seen since the mid-1990s – and economic stability deteriorates, Americans are flocking to bars and liquor stores in record numbers. Studies have shown that throughout history, in the United States and around the globe, increased economic turmoil has resulted in a spike in alcohol sales.

Many businesses in downtown Ann Arbor have reported an increase in alcohol sales recently, while some campus hot spots, however, have seen inverse effects.

"(Our sales) have been increasing since the economic situation started," said Tim Kramer, manager of Beer Depot. "What do you think people run to? It's easier to drink than go out."

It's one of the oldest remedies known to man, and while people may not necessarily be able to afford a $30 bottle of Grey Goose, they are by no means cutting alcohol from their shopping list.

"If we've seen anything, it's not less sales," said Victor George, the owner of Stadium Market. "We've just been selling less expensive liquor."

George said cheaper vodkas, like Smirnoff and Burnett's, have been selling much better than the more expensive ones.

Liquor stores that attract a student clientele are experiencing a slight decrease in their alcohol sales, and while many factors could contribute to this opposite trend, tighter budgets could be an obvious explanation.

"(Students) are staying home and buying a case of beer from the corner store as opposed to going out and buying pitchers," said an employee at Scorekeepers Sportsgrill & Pub, who asked to remain anonymous because he wasn't authorized to speak for the company.

He said that at Scorekeeper's, students just aren't spending as much as they used to.

Eddie Gilyano, the manager of Strickland's Market, a liquor store located on Geddes Avenue, said the store's alcohol sales have decreased significantly since the economy took a turn for the worse.

But just as campus areas are not representative of the rest of Ann Arbor, they are not representative of the rest of the country, which has technically been in a recession since Dec. 2007.

Last year in Pennsylvania, wine and liquor sales were reportedly up 4.7 percent.

Similarly, Connecticut reported that tax revenue on alcoholic beverages was up 4.7 percent for the fiscal year that ended last June.

The Division of Liquor Control for the Ohio Department of Commerce, as reported by the Ohio University Post, announced that alcohol sales grew $32.6 million from 2007 to 2008, an increase of 4.75 percent.

Alcohol companies across the country – especially wine companies – are also reporting sales are skyrocketing.

Brown-Forman, one of the largest American-owned wine companies, stated that its income has grown 4 percent in the second quarter this year. And Liquor Group Michigan, a liquor and wine distribution company, reported a 78 percent increase in wine case sales in Michigan for 2008.

The recent spike in alcohol sales as the nation's economy falls into a tailspin is not unique, said Economics Prof. John Bound.

In 1991, Bound said the collapse of the Soviet Union and the end of the Cold War directly resulted in soaring alcohol sales.

"Alcohol use went up dramatically in Russia after the fall of the Soviet Union," Bound said.

London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine Prof. Martin McKee, in his journal article titled Alcohol in Russia, discussed the effects of the government's collapse on alcohol consumption.

With the collapse of the communist government, McKee said, there was a collapse of anti-alcohol campaigns, which resulted in heavy drinking across the country. There was even evidence that alcohol consumption levels in the 1990s far exceeded pre-Soviet Union levels.

Parking Services
Regulation Reminder

Effective immediately, Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement. The hours are from 7:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. Valid UMASS parking permits are required in all parking lots, with the exception of metered lots. Metered lots are enforced for payment from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday.

From 5:00 p.m. to 7:00 a.m., Monday through Friday, on weekends and on holidays, vehicles may park in any legal, non-reserved, non-restricted parking space or lot without displaying a permit. Reserved and restricted parking spaces or lots always require display of a valid permit. These spaces/lots include handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces and 24-hour restricted lots (specifically Lots 21, 22, 29, 36, 44, 46, 49, 50, 54, 64P, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.). Parking is never allowed in a tow zone, fire lane, or access lane. For more information, please visit our website http://parking.umass.edu or call Parking Services at 413-545-0065.

Holub hopes to keep staff with new funds

FACULTY from page 1

research university."

As of 2007, after hiring 150 new tenure and tenure track faculty members with state appropriation money, UMass administration had believed the University would reach its 250 quota of new faculty within the five years it had predicted.

Back in 2005, administration felt the campus could hire about 80-85 faculty per year to restore the number of tenured faculty. It predicted costs would equate to at least $10 million dollars per year for three years, and that so long as inflation and other costs did not rise dramatically, UMass would be able to recruit new faculty effectively over this period and restore the faculty to appropriate levels within its five-year plan.

On Feb. 26, Chancellor Holub sent out a broadcast e-mail to students that explained that the current budget situation may force UMass to cut 50 faculty positions, 30 lecturers and 150 teaching assistants.

Holub hopes that receiving stimulus money in addition to other avenues of raising capital or cutting costs will allow UMass to function normally and continue to expand as quickly as possible.

"The budget consists of many parts. It is extremely unlikely that state allocations will improve this year over last year because of the tax revenues in the state," said Holub. "Forecasts indicate next year will bring little relief. After that it's anyone's guess at present. I believe we will receive federal stimulus funds. These funds are one-time money given to us for a two-year period. We do not know the amount we will receive and probably will not know exactly until some time in April."

According to Holub, UMass administration may have to wait until after April to hear a definitive answer from the state.

"We continue to lobby for an increase in state allocations," said Holub. "Just this past Monday I was present at a meeting of the Ways and Means Committee, where President Wilson addressed our budget. I will be traveling to Boston later this month for another hearing. Our government relations office and the office of the president are working on this matter as well."

Other than anticipating gaining federal stimulus funds, the UMass Board of Trustees voted and approved a $1,500 fee increase for in-state undergraduate students on Feb. 27. According to Blaguszewski, the fee increase will cover roughly $20 million of the $46 million expected budget gap.

"For undergraduate students, there are provisions to minimize the impact of the proposed fee increase – particularly for our students with the greatest financial need," said Chancellor Holub in a letter to UMass students on Feb. 25. "The proposed fee increase of $1,500 a year is coupled with a new and enhanced package of financial aid. It will produce new financial aid funding of about $7 million – with roughly a third of the money raised by the fee going directly back to students."

Another $6 million savings will be coming from other sources including the reorganization of the Provost Office that began this year, according to Blaguszewski. Administrative staff will be reduced, and some of those removed from the Provost Office will be reassigned back to other faculty positions. A limited hiring freeze has also been put into place – as faculty members retire, the university will save money by not finding a replacement.

Alyssa Creamer can be reached at acreamer@student.umass.edu.

White House launches website aimed at stimulus transparency

BY AT KAMEN
THE WASHINGTON POST

WASHINGTON — The White House is pledging to make sure all taxpayers know exactly how the money in that nearly $1 trillion stimulus plan – also known as the American Recovery and Reinvestment Act – is being doled out. To that end, it has set up a website – Recovery.gov – featuring a short video explanation from President Obama saying that the site "will be the online portal for these efforts."

The site will "provide projections, based on the planning that went into the legislation," he says, and "once the money starts to go out you will be able to see where and when it is spent." Obama urges us to "take a look now, but come back often," because the site "will be changing and growing a lot in the weeks and months ahead." Or maybe the years ahead.

There's a handy timeline at the bottom of the home page to chart the milestones.

For example, on March 3, federal agencies were to "begin reporting use of funds." In May, the agencies are to report on "allocations for entitlement programs" and begin reporting on grants and contracts. On July 15, recipients are to start reporting on their use of the money.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 2009

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

SGA election panacea

Ben Moriarty

There is a major problem with the Student Government Association election.

No, it's not like what the late Kurt Vonnegut Jr. said – that only nut cases want to be president. It's that the percentage of people who vote on this campus is so minimal that the elections can be called nothing short of pathetic.

In last year's election, according to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, 1,752 students voted in the election.

Almost 2,000 people is a lot of people – that is, until you look at how many undergraduates actually go here. Since that number is over 10 times the number of people who voted, getting around 10 percent of the vote is pretty abysmal.

The two areas of campus which had the highest percentage of voters were Orchard Hill and Central. Only five percent of commuters voted.

The sad thing is this is not just a recent problem. There have been editorials in The Collegian commenting on this lack of voting turnout for a decade.

So where does the blame lie? Is it the apathy of the students, or does the blame lie with the SGA?

Like a Daily Collegian staff editorial said in 2002, "Now obviously the SGA would allege that it is the fault of the students. The apathy of their peers should not be a motivating factor in the way that the campaigning process is dealt with. And although this would seem like a decent argument, it is just a good way to pass off responsibility."

Do you know who is running for any of the positions, especially president? And if you are one of the few who do know that Chris Faulkner and Ngozi Mbuwuike are running for president, with their trustees being Josh Davidson and Emily Bloch respectively, do you know what they think, believe and wish to accomplish?

I sure as hell don't, and it's not because I don't care. And whose fault is that? I really can't believe or think it lies anywhere except in the hands of the SGA and the candidates for not going out and exposing their positions besides one piece in The Collegian.

That is not a campaign.

In a time where every student is up and in a fuss about fee increases and the laying off of professors – where students are protesting on campus and walking days to Dartmouth – don't try to blame it on apathy.

There is a simple solution to this, and that is to put the voting online. By doing so, it would solve all of their problems – or really, all of our problems.

At most, blame it on laziness.

How many times have you seen posters with the candidate's face on it around campus? How many times have you been greeted outside a Dining Commons by the candidate, having him or her shake your hand? The apathy doesn't lie on the student voters, it lies on the SGA and their own apathy and laziness.

There is a simple solution to this, and that is to put the voting online. By doing so, it would solve all of their problems – or really, all of our problems.

You can see why the voting didn't go online this year.

With only five percent of commuters voting last election, it seems obvious the way the SGA goes about having people vote is inconvenient and foolish. Commuting students go to class all day and want to go home. People who are going to the DC want to eat and not wait in a line, fill out forms, answer questions, pull out their UCard and spend 10 minutes voting.

Of course they can stay and vote, but it is obvious that they don't, and it is just silly to expect them to when they have no clue on what the candidates stand for.

After a decade of going down the same road, one which has been shown to be ineffective and unresponsive, the SGA still hasn't adapted.

What is the real reason? UMass is a great school with many different programs. Are you trying to tell me they can't find a computer programmer or a couple of them in all of campus who could set up the site to buff up his resume? The internet wasn't invented a year ago, and the fact that voting has been low for over a decade but hasn't changed shows one thing.

With a website, not only would you be able to vote fast, but you would be able to inform yourself fast. You could, if the candidates decided to, look at their profiles, see their experience, see what they wish to accomplish and learn everything you need to know to make an educated vote. Putting it online would allow more commuters to vote and would influence people who are too impatient to eat to do it later in the night, maybe taking a few minutes off Facebook to do it.

So what is that one thing influencing the SGA to not adapt?

They obviously couldn't care less about you. If they did, and if they wanted the elections to be a true democratic process where a majority of students vote and not some sham were less than 10 percent of the student vote, they would adapt no matter what the reason was for students not voting.

It's been a decade already. You've had enough time.

But, I wouldn't be surprised to see some people from the SGA make it big in politics.

Ben Moriarty is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bmoriart@student.umass.edu.

A microcosm of of madness

S.P. Sullivan

The weather was so nice on Sunday, March 8 that it seemed God himself had promised the Amherst Town Common to the Student Alliance for Israel (SAFI) as it held its "Pro-Israel, Pro-Peace" rally.

Daily Collegian reporter Mike Fox told me it was more likely Amherst town manager Larry Schaffer.

SAFI gathered a formidable crowd on the Common in response to a Student Government Association (SGA) motion to divest funds from "companies that make their millions off the suffering in Palestine," which critics say is an attempt to divest from Israel, akin to a similar measure taken earlier this year at Hampshire College.

The rally was unabashedly pro-Israel, with attendees wrapping themselves in Israeli flags and singing prayer in Hebrew, but its tenor was one of peace.

For a rally – and a counter-rally – that focused on peace, there was a lot of name-calling and finger-pointing going on.

"I don't think there's anyone who doesn't want peace," Danielle Lubin, a Hampshire student and organizer of the event told The Collegian. Lubin said she experienced too much anti-Israeli sentiment on the Hampshire campus and throughout the Pioneer Valley. SAFI responded with a Zionist rally that focused on the possibility of a peaceful, two-state solution.

The event was well organized: SAFI had a stage and PA system. They had T-shirts and signs. They had former Democratic National Committee Chairman Steven Grossman. They had cookies.

SAFI had a lot of capital and resources, if you will.

Then the counter-protesters gathered on the sidewalk between South Pleasant Street and the Common, scrappier, fewer in numbers but just as loud – and also in the name of peace. Scratch that, "peace and justice." The Campus Anti-War Network (CAN), International Socialist Organization (ISO) and Pioneer Valley Coalition for Palestine (PVCP) organized the impromptu counter-protest. A portable PA system – an improvised rehuttal device, or IRD, if you will – gave a crackly counterpoint to each claim made by SAFI's speakers. The counter-protesters came to call for an end of the Israeli occupation of Gaza, of its alleged genocide of the Palestinian people.

"From the river to the sea," they chanted, "Palestine will be free."

The two groups assembled, almost facing each other on the Common, separated only by a long stretch of grass hardly 10 feet wide. A strip, if you will.

It was the stuff of which allegories are made.

But the respectful distance they kept from each other was just about the only thing respectful going on between the two groups, and even that didn't last very long. SAFI President Michael Feder repeatedly told the crowd not to engage the counter-protesters, but found himself going against his own advice about as often as anyone else.

Pro-Israel ralliers – many of them older, grown men and women – took issue when pro-Palestine protesters began advancing forward on the Amherst Strip. Step back, they commanded, we reserved this space. Wait a minute, the protesters countered, this is public space.

I felt as if everybody was missing out on the grade-A symbolism except for me.

Tensions were high as I straddled the Amherst Strip. ISO member Charles Peterson approached me to make sure I was getting both sides' story. An older gentleman from SAFI's rally approached me to make sure I was listening to the counter-protesters' chant. "From the river to the sea," he insisted, meant they were saying Palestine should stretch from the Jordan River to the Mediterranean Sea, as it once did, wiping Israel off the map. Many of the pro-Israel ralliers interpreted this as a call for annihilation.

"I would not say that that chant is anti-Semitic," Beth Guthrie, a member of the PVCP told me in an interview. "And I would not say it's for the annihilation of Israel. A lot of people in that group, I think, they support a one-state solution where Israelis, Palestinians, Moroccans and all the other ethnic groups that live there would have to live under a cohesive government together."

A peaceful pluralist government in one of the world's most war-torn and anti-democratic regions is a bit of a pipe dream, but it's not the fatwa pro-Israel ralliers were claiming it to be, either.

And for a rally – and a counter-rally – that focused on peace, there was a lot of name-calling and finger-pointing going on.

The counter-protesters were equating the folks gathered on the Common with the Israeli government – which has killed an inexcusable number of civilians in its battle against Palestinian terrorists – when in reality those people were representing those in Israel pursuing a peaceful, two-state solution. Meanwhile pro-Israel ralliers were claiming anti-Semitism, equating those wielding picket signs on the sidewalk with those wielding IEDs in Gaza.

But nobody holds the copyright for peace.

How exactly can we expect a peaceful solution in Gaza when the people gathered on the Common – college students, university professors, townsfolk – can't even find a common ground?

As I stood on that thin strip between each group, the soft sun sharpened by discord, clouded by ego, one side began chanting, "Tear down the wall!" and the other responded with, "Take apart the bombs!"

It sounded to me like they both had a point.

S.P. Sullivan is a Collegian columnist. Read him online at blog.masslive.com/umass101.

Finishing what we started

Nick Milano

Thomas E. Ricks' superb analysis of the Iraq War under the command of Gen. David Petraeus ends with a particularly interesting quote from U.S. Ambassador to Iraq, Ryan Crocker: "What the world ultimately thinks about us and what we think about ourselves, I think, is going to be determined much more by what happens from now on than what's happened up to now." In that, Crocker sums up the whole book.

Though the war in Iraq turns six years old on March 20th, the war is not nearly over, but it appears that U.S. soldiers must remain in Iraq until at least 2015.

Anyone who reads Ricks' book will not only close it with that conclusion, but will also realize how important it is for the U.S. to see its mission through to the end.

In "The Gamble: General David Petraeus and the American Military Adventure in Iraq, 2006-2008," Ricks builds on his previous publication, "The Fiasco: The American Military Adventure in Iraq," and traces the remarkable turnaround engineered by Petraeus and Gen. Raymond T. Odierno. For four years, the U.S. military took the wrong approach in Iraq.

After a foolhardy invasion, those designing the U.S. strategy in Iraq failed to react to new developments, adjust policies and mix up personnel. This needlessly cost the lives of far too many Iraqis and American servicemen and women.

There can be no denying this.

Former Defense Secretary Donald Rumsfeld and his subordinates at both the Department of Defense and in Iraq ignored the basic tenets of fighting an insurgency – save for a few military leaders who bucked command and took matters into their own hands.

In what borders on criminal, those at the top ignored the evidence coming from Iraq that the strategy they had in place was charging towards failure. But this was not all, Rumsfeld and others preferred to attack their critics instead of heeding any kind of advice.

The former defense secretary was a prime example of an executive who fails to make crucial changes in personnel, policy and command structure.

After a foolhardy invasion, those designing the US strategy in Iraq failed to react to new developments, adjust policies and mix up personnel.

It was not until the Democratic victory in the 2006 midterm elections that Bush canned Rumsfeld and initiated an overhaul of the military leadership. He brought in Robert Gates, who was willing to hold generals accountable for both successes and failures.

He put Petraeus in charge of Iraq and Odierno in charge of day-to-day operations in Iraq.

The result was a systematic adjustment in the way the US military was fighting the war.

What must be understood is that fighting an insurgency is not a new problem.

Armies have had to contend with insurgencies throughout history. There is a practiced theory on how to fight an insurgency that the first U.S. strategy completely ignored.

By focusing only on trying to transition power to the Iraqis, the U.S. created a power vacuum that left the Iraqi people to fend for themselves.

The obvious offshoot of this was the various Shiite, Sunni and Kurdish militias that sprung up. It was not until Petraeus and Odierno seized control that the US military strategy focused on protecting the population, living among the people and putting a human face on the face on this massive occupying force.

The immediate result was a frightening increase in violence, as 1,124 American soldiers were killed and another 7,710 were wounded in the "surge" months, but the long term, hard-earned result has been relative stability and a continuous decrease in violence.

Thus, the conclusion that Ricks comes to is that the surge and the tactical changes of Petraeus and Odierno have achieved some measured success, but there has yet to be any great political breakthrough. Ricks lists numerous things that can possibly go wrong. The Sunnis who were paid to give up their arms or join the American side could go back to fighting.

The Shiite militias, especially the Mahdi Army led by Muqtada al-Sadr could try to seize power. The military, now being trained by the best military in the world and having success in operations could attempt a coup, most frighteningly because it is dominated by Shiites who might wish to persecute and kill the Sunnis.

This is what makes the coming year so much more important.

Ricks writes that the two important measures from which the year can be judged were the provincial elections that happened in February (did any media even notice?) and other elections set to take place later this year. For this reason, he writes that 2009 could be a far more dangerous and tumultuous first year for Obama than Bush's last year was.

In the end, the effort in Iraq, though started foolishly must be handled with care.

Obama must not begin to withdraw soldiers until Petraeus and Odierno both agree with his timeframe. As recently as a few weeks ago, I thought the best option was immediate withdrawal, but Ricks put the war in a completely different perspective. He demonstrates that the military leadership understands the problems they are facing. We must let them finish the job.

Nick Milano is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

ANALYZING THE ISRAELI APARTHEID

Dear Editor,

RE: "Israel, leader of the not-so-free-world;" Sahhan Tariq, March 2

Subhan Tariq wrote a fine piece of critical thinking and humane feeling (March 2), about a tragedy largely the fault of Europe and the United States for failing to help pre-World War II Jews when they needed help the most, and then loisting our guilt and responsibility unfairly and dishonestly onto the Arabs of Palestine. Read Jordan King Abdullah's statement in 1947 about the problem. Or Google the Feb. 2009 International Lawyers without Borders (ILWOB) interview with Dr. Lamb on Israel's 2008-09 war crimes against Gazans in its indiscriminate massacre of women, children and adult male civilians – the majority of the 1,400 killed and the over 5,000 injured. Study the issue, don't spew hate. Try and learn, don't pretend to know.

And remember, an occupied people always have the moral high ground over the occupiers. Native Americans do over Europeans, Black South Africans do over Boers, Kurds do over Iraqis and Turks, Palestinians do over Israelis. Tactics can be criminal, as hijacking jet airliners or suicide bombing civilians definitely are. Suicide bombing against an occupying army, however, is legal, and so is "kidnapping" an occupying army's soldier when he's part of a clear offensive against the civilian population of the occupied people.

As for qassam rockets – yes, illegally and immorally – fired at Israeli civilian areas, know the facts before you echo the lies of Israeli propagandists: in the seven years they've been fired from Gaza at Israel, with their tiny explosive payloads, they've killed under twenty Israelis. Israel routinely kills that many Palestinians every 10 days or so in the Occupied Territories, not to mention criminally destroying the entire civilian infrastructure of Gaza and the West Bank and drafting illegal laws to force Palestinians out of their homes and businesses and off their lands. Israel is guilty, as historians Ilan Pappe, Tom Segev and even the Zionist Benny Morris all agree, of "the ethnic cleansing of Palestine." That has always been its agenda, and we in the U.S. have subsidized and armed the Israeli Leviathan in this bloody business.

To end this we must take moral responsibility and join the Boycott, Divestment and Sanctions (BDS) movement to end Israeli apartheid, just as was done to end apartheid in South Africa.

Nelson Mandela, Archbishop Desmond Tutu and other South African dignitaries have all said Palestinians suffer worse and harsher injustices than even the Blacks of South Africa did that is no small thing for such great men to declare publicly.

Ritt Steven Greaves

CONSERVATIVES ARE NOT ALWAYS "RIGHT"

Dear Editor,

RE: "The bright side of the stimulus;" Alex Perry, Feb. 22

While glancing through The Collegian this morning, I chanced upon Alex Perry's article outlining his opposition to the Congressional stimulus package. The further I read, the more frequent were my uncontrolled bursts of dismayed laughter.

In typical conservative fashion, Mr. Perry displayed his fundamental lack of understanding with respect to how a stimulus package is supposed to function, as well as his notable lack of concern for those this bill is aimed at protecting. Under the stewardship of the Republican Party, this country's economy fell prey to Wall Street fat cats and an unwavering political dedication to economic principles long disproven. Such "stewardship" drove our economy into the ground. We are in the midst of a recession that may well last five years. Unemployment is now at a dangerously high rate of 7.6 percent. At the peak of this economic crisis, we've learned that Wall Street executives gave themselves $18 billion in yearly bonuses.

The bill, which seeks to ease the deepening credit crisis, put people back to work on decaying highways and bridges and save millions of people from falling into abject poverty is being decried as "wasteful spending" and has become the central rallying point for the same conservatives who caused this mess. Mr. Perry refers to President Obama's platform for change as a drive towards socialism, and speaks only of the potential political gain for his party, forgetting that November's election returns handed moderates and liberals the keys to the national school bus. It was a repudiation of a conservative approach which blindly drove us full speed ahead into ever-deepening debt. It is up to the Democrats to now drive us out of the ditch Mr. Perry's Republicans drove us into. "

The stimulus package is hy no means a perfect hill, hut willfully blind opposition for opposition's sake is not going to save our crumbling, recessive economy. Rather, it only perpetuates the cycle of congressional inaction and failed stewardship which landed us in this predicament in the first place. He fails to accept that his party caused this mess, and lauds his party's persistence in stamping its feet like a petulant child who has broken the rules and been forced to stand in the corner, but just doesn't want to. Mr. Perry sees the current Republican road-blocking to this stimulus bill as a boon to his party's 2010 and 2012 electoral chances. However, if the Republican Party continues to simply and stubbornly be the "Party of No," not only will its political prospects will suffer, but much more importantly, so will we.

Charlie Felder
UMass Student

Letters to the editor should be no longer than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com or submitted online at dailycollegian.com. We regret that, due to space constraints, not all letters will be printed.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Classic cartoon comes to Shelburne Falls

By Justin Gagnon
Collegian Staff

With cartoon contamination such as "The Fairly OddParents" clogging up the airwaves, have you ever wished you could change the channel, and there would be Wile E. Coyote walking into thin air and falling down one of his own traps? Luckily for you, this Friday and Saturday night Pothole Pictures is dropping an Acme anvil of nostalgia onto the heads of local "Looney Tunes" fans.

The non-profit, all-volunteer run organization will be presenting their annual Looney Tunes Cartoon Festival at 7:30 p.m. on March 13 and 14 at Memorial Hall in Shelburne Falls, Mass. The festival will mainly show the older and more classic clips from the "Looney Tunes" library.

Fred DeVecca, the Pothole Pictures film series coordinator, explained, "['Looney Tunes'] has this whole subversive kind of comedy which is actually very modern. Different people see different things in it, and yet, many different people, many different kinds of people enjoy it."

Many of the festival's past customers were primarily West County area natives, but a handful of college-aged students attended the all-ages event. "When I see faces that I don't know, I often try to find out who they are and where they're from, especially if they're younger faces," said DeVecca.

Last year's show had about 350 attendees each night. DeVecca encourages those who plan on attending either showing to get there early in order to beat the crowd.

Along with the screening, there will be a different musical performance from 7-7:30 p.m.

Local accordionists Doug Creighton and Bob Snope will perform on Friday night. Creighton and Snope both work at the Button Box, an accordion shop in Sunderland which previously was located in Amherst.

Their set will consist of a lively mixture of traditional dance tunes on the accordion and the guitar. Speaking high praise of Creighton's skill, DeVecca claimed, "Doug especially is known as being one of the premier dance accordionists probably in the whole country."

LOONEY TUNES FILM FESTIVAL

MEMORIAL HALL SHELBURNE FALLS

FRI./SAT. 7 P.M.

Abdul Baki and Family will perform on Saturday night, an act that should make for an entertaining and interesting show. Baki is primarily known for his work in a few different reggae bands from the area, but will be taking a completely different spin on his music for this show. He will be performing with his wife and children, who play various instruments, such as the piano and the flute. Rather than reggae, the Bakis will be playing a more family-oriented program with a wide array of music, from classical to blues.

Creighton, Snope and Baki have preformed at other Pothole Pictures events, and have been popular with the previous audiences.

What might be the most interesting part of the whole event is the venue. Memorial Hall was built in 1898 and seats 425 people. The hall was shut down in the mid-1960s, and remained empty and unused for nearly 30 years. In 1995, the community of Shelburne Falls collaborated to reopen the theater, in the hopes of preserving the history of the building. As little refurbishing as possible was implemented inside the building.

"The thing that's really cool about it is that it looks like it stepped right out of the 1940's and 1950's. It's a real period piece," said DeVecca. "There's really nothing quite like it around."

Pothole Pictures frequently shows classic, foreign and independent films. The popularity of the theatre has risen with the showings of Metropolitan Opera HD Broadcasts on their big screen. The next will be Bellini's "La Sonnambula" on March 21 at 1 p.m. This past fall, they presented two screenings of "Back to the Future," with special guest Harry Keramidas, the editor of the film.

The musical acts will be preformed from 7-7:30 p.m. both nights immediately before the 90-minute Looney Tunes film. Admission to the event is $6 for adults and $4 for children under 12 years old. If you have prepurchased season tickets, those also will be accepted. Memorial Hall is located at 51 Bridge St in Shelburne Falls. The theater is fully heated and handicapped accessible. For more information, call 413-625-2896.

Justin Gagnon can be reached at jegagnon@student.umass.edu.

Catch up on childhood memories this Friday and Saturday night. Pothole Productions brings "Looney Tunes" to the big screen at Memorial Hall in nearby Shelburne Falls both nights.

'Watchmen' stays true in film adaptation

"Watchmen" the graphic novel was believed by many to be unfilmable, but Zack Snyder proved many wrong with the recently released film version. The overall entertaining film stays true to the source material while coming in at just under three hours in length. The story takes place in an alternate 1985 where Richard Nixon is in his third term as U.S. President, the Cold War still rages and masked vigilantes walk the streets.

By Morgan Meagher
Collegian Staff

"Watchmen," the graphic novel written by Alan Moore and illustrated by Dave Gibbons, is widely regarded as a masterpiece, even the paradigm of the genre. Even the most disdainful literary snob would be hard-pressed to refer to this as a mere "comic book." Until recently, it was widely considered to be unfilmable.

Director Zack Snyder ("300," 2004's "Dawn of the Dead") had his work cut out for him bringing "Watchmen" to the screen.

Of course special effects technology has come a long way since the book was published in 1986. That's not what hinders "Watchmen," and indeed the film is often visually stunning. It's slick and bombastic, in true Zack Snyder fashion.

The ethereal Dr. Manhattan (Billy Crudup) looks magnificent in all his glowing, blue glory. As in the novel, he is naked in nearly every scene. If there is one thing to be said for Snyder, he certainly does not shy away from full-frontal male nudity.

If anything, the movie looks too good, transforming the grimy and gritty world created by Moore and Gibbons into something a bit too bright and beautiful. Snyder is also too heavy-handed at times with effects and camera work. The use of slow motion is entirely too frequent and a grandiose, sweeping shot of a stone angel appearing to weep in the rain, which worked beautifully as a single panel in the book, appears hackneyed on screen.

But the opening credits, in which Snyder delivers all the history of the Watchmen to Bob Dylan's "The Times They Are A' Changing" work perfectly, and most of his direction, while usually following the book shot-for-shot, is certainly well-suited to this genre.

Snyder and screenwriters David Hayter and Alex Tse tried to stay as faithful to the graphic novel as possible. Moore's story centers on an aging group of masked vigilantes in an alternate-reality New York City.

The year is 1985. Nixon is in his third term as president, and the Cold War has reached such staggering heights that the Doomsday Clock, counting down to nuclear war, is creeping within minutes of midnight. Masked heroes have been outlawed, with the exception of two – Dr. Manhattan and the Comedian (Jeffrey Dean Morgan), who are contracted by the government.

The only other active vigilante is the uncompromising and insane Rorschach (Jackie Earle Haley). When the Comedian is murdered – in one of the best scenes in the movie – Rorschach sets out to solve the mystery.

Billy Crudup – the shaggy, mustached man from "Almost Famous" – makes for an odd casting choice to play a naked superhero, but "Watchmen" is rife with relative unknown actors.

Crudup plays Manhattan with the perfect dignity and solemnity. Morgan is fabulously sinister and nihilistic, but Haley is perhaps the best of all. Snarling and growling from behind the mask, vulnerable without it and unflinching and determined at every turn, Haley is everything fans of the novel want Rorschach to be. Snyder makes sure everyone looks the part, with a few minor aesthetic changes.

Coming in at a ponderous two hours and forty-eight minutes, the film stays true to most of the plot. Of course, some things had to be trimmed, and unfortunately the first thing to go was a bit too much of the back stories. The best thing about the novel "Watchmen" is the depth of the characters.

Moore took pains to show the human side of his heroes: their pasts and their complicated relationships.

The film whittles whole scenes of character development down to quick images. Someone who is familiar with the graphic novel would be sure to understand what's going on. Someone who isn't might be left in the dark.

"WATCHMEN"

STRARRING: BILLY CRUDUP

DIRECTED BY: ZACK SNYDER

★★★1/2

Rorschach and Adrien Veidt, alias Ozymandias, are the biggest victims of this reduction. Rorschach, one of the best characters, loses not only a good deal of his past, but also an important part of his present: his psychiatrist, a character whom the novel explores in depth, is all but eliminated. This loss is worth more than its face value. The movie cuts out almost all of the civilians, and in doing so, neglects to portray what the Watchmen are fighting to save.

By slashing these back stories, the focus is shifted to Dr. Manhattan, the only true superhero of the bunch. Jon Osterman was born relatively normal, if unnaturally intelligent. A freak accident transforms the nuclear physicist into a sort of demi-god, capable of shaping matter to his will.

The government wastes no time in molding Osterman into the ultimate weapon, able to destroy anything with a mere gesture. Manhattan is instrumental in winning the Vietnam War and keeping the Soviet Union at bay. His new name is "chosen for the ominous associations it will raise in America's enemies."

The graphic novel is heavy on morals and philosophy. Through the ongoing menace of the Cold War and the references to the wholly unethical but federally commissioned actions of Dr. Manhattan and the Comedian, Moore condemns the government, and throughout the book uses his characters to explore the notions of right and wrong. While some of the graphic novel's soul is unavoidably lost in translation, the adaptation stays true to the heart of the story. The one major change that was made affects the climax of the story, and although it is a drastic alteration, it works just as well, if not better than what happens in the graphic novel.

As a stand-alone film, "Watchmen" is better than most superhero movies, and holds its own next to last summer's greats, "Iron Man" and "The Dark Knight." Snyder delivers everything audiences expect from an action movie: plenty of fight scenes, plenty of sex appeal and a few well-placed explosions.

With "Watchmen" it's all backed up by a good script, good performances and a pretty solid soundtrack, drawn in part from the novel. Judged on its own merits, the film is a success. And while it doesn't add anything to the themes of the graphic novel, it does bring the story to life. Viewers who are acquainted with the book will probably get the most out of it, but in either case, "Watchmen" is definitely worth watching.

Morgan Meagher can be reached at mmeagher@student.umass.edu.

Just another mediocre weekend for theatrical releases

STAFF REPORT
LOS ANGELES TIME

"An American Affair" – Set in 1963, a young teenager has an inside view of JFK's torrid affair with his neighbor and secret CIA assassination plans. With Gretchen Mol, Noah Wyle and James Rehhorn. Screenplay by Alex Metcalf. Directed by William Olsson, (1:36) R

"American Violet" – Based on real events, a smalltown African American single mother of four who is wrongfully swept up in a drug raid and chooses to take on the criminal justice system, Starring Nicole Beharie, Alfre Woodard, Michael O'Keefe, Tim Blake Nelson, Will Patton, Charles Dutton and Xzibit, Written by Bill Haney, Directed by Tim Disney, (1:43) PG-13

"Between Love & Goodbye" – Frenchman Marcel and American Kyle are in love, Marcel marries their lesbian friend Sarah so he can stay in the U.S. with Kyle. Enter Kyle's sister April, a former prostitute, who needs a place to crash and begins methodically dripping poison into the couple's happiness. But where Marcel sees a conniving woman with a not-so-hidden agenda, Kyle sees only his sister in need. Directed by Casper Andreas, (1:37) Unrated

"Bob Funk" – Funk is outspoken, crass and seemingly reprehensible, With serious ex-wife and family issues, he has no idea how to be sober and comfortable in his own skin. Then he meets an attractive young executive who joins his family's company and becomes the object of his affection, With Michael Leydon Campbell, Rachael Leigh Cook, Amy Ryan, Grace Zabriskie and Stephen Root, Directed by Craig Carlisle, (1:40) R

"Cherry Blossoms" – A husband distraught over the sudden death of his wife embarks on a journey to Tokyo in the midst of the cherry blossom festival, With Elmar Wepper and Hannelore Elsner, Written and directed by Doris Dorrie, (2:03) Unrated

"Crossing Over" – Immigrants with hopes and immigration enforcement officials with jobs to do come into conflict in contemporary L.A., With Harrison Ford, Ashley Judd, Sean Penn, Ray Liotta and Alice Braga, Screenplay and directed by Wayne Kramer, (1:53) R

"Eleven Minutes" – This documentary follows fashion designer Jay McCarroll, dubbed "the next great American designer," on Season 1 of TV's "Project Runway," and his yearlong journey preparing his first independent runway show and selling his clothing line to stores, Directed by Michael Selditch and Robert Tate, (1:43) R

"Everlasting Moments" – A woman develops a love for photography while balancing a life with a houseful of children and her husband, an alcoholic, womanizing dockworker, With Maria Heiskanen, Mikael Persbrandt and Jesper Christensen, Screenplay by Niklas Rodstrom, Directed by Jan Troell, (2:05) Unrated

"Harvard Beats Yale 29-29" – Documentary combines rare footage of the wildly unpredictable 1968 Crimson versus Bulldogs game with unguarded, politically charged recollections from the original players, Directed by Kevin Rafferty, (1:45) PG

"Medicine for Melancholy" – A love story about a one-night stand told through two African American twentysomethings dealing with issues of class, identity and being a minority in a rapidly gentrifying San Francisco, With Wyatt Cenac and Tracey Heggins, Directed by Barry Jenkins, (1:28) Unrated

"Must Read After My Death" – After his grandmother's death, Morgan Dews discovers an archive of dictaphone recordings her grandmother had amassed throughout the 1960s as a way to stay in touch with her husband during his extended absences to Australia four months every year, documenting a family's struggles amid an America on the verge of dramatic transformation, Directed by Dews, (1:13) Unrated

"Phoebe in Wonderland" – After being cast as the lead in the school production of "Alice in Wonderland," a young girl retreats to the play's imaginary fantasy world, Starring Elle Fanning, Patricia Clarkson, Campbell Scott, Felicity Huffman and Bill Pullman, Written and directed by Daniel Barnz, (1:36) PG-13

"Scott Walker – 30 Century Man" – Documentary about Scott Walker's career and music, tracing his evolution from bass player on the Sunset Strip to his meteoric rise to fame during London's Swinging '60s as lead singer of the Walker Brothers and as a brooding, crooning solo artist through to his current musical experiments at age 64, Directed by Stephen Kijak, (1:35) Unrated

"Shuttle" – When two friends return from a girls' weekend vacation, they find themselves stranded at the airport on a rain-drenched night, They board an airport shuttle with a helpful, friendly driver for the short trip home that turns out to be anything but safe, With Tony Curran, Cameron Goodman and Peyton List, Directed by Edward Anderson, R

"Street Fighter: The Legend of Chun-Li" – Devastated by the kidnapping of her father, a young girl takes to the streets of Hong Kong, embarking on an epic quest for justice, Based on the video game, Featuring Kristin Kreuk, Chris Klein, Neal McDonough, Robin Shou, Moon Bloodgood and Michael Clarke Duncan, Screenplay by Justin Marks, Directed by Andrzej Bartkowiak, (1:37) PG-13

"Tennessee" – Two brothers on a road trip to their childhood home to search for their estranged father are joined by a woman trying to overcome her past, With Adam Rothenberg, Ethan Peck, Mariah Carey and Lance Reddick, Written by Russell Schaumburg, Directed by Aaron Woodley, (2:07) R

"Toyo's Camera" – A documentary of photographer Toyo Miyatake, who captured life behind the barbed wire for Japanese American interlees at Japanese internment camps during World War II, Directed by Junichi Suzuki, Unrated

"12" – The story of 12 jurors discussing a verdict to pass on an 18-year-old Chechen boy as to whether he is guilty of the first-degree murder of his stepfather, an officer of the Russian army, With Sergei Makovetsky, Sergei Garmash and Aleksei Petrenko, Directed and written by Nikita Mikhalkov, In Russian with English subtitles, (2:39) PG-13

"This Is the Life" – This documentary chronicles the rise and fall of a family of artists while examining their obstacles to commercial success, Directed by Ava DuVernay

—Opinions by Los Angeles Times reviewers

"Between Love & Goodbye," a love story, a family tale and a drama about two men trying to live and love one another, while the forces of society and family try to pull them apart.

Author Cheever finally gets recognition in new biography

A look at a literary giant lost in shuffle

BY SUSAN SALTER REYNOLDS
LOS ANGELES TIMES

"I shall not, for example, try to evoke a rhetorical chiaroscuro of an intellect suspended in the twilight of the last divine monarchy, exposed to the philosophies of anarchy, communism and socialism, stricken by a loss of free speech; an intelligence illuminated as often by Paris and London as by Moscow, the flower of the clash between Aristotelian and Marxist thought. I shall not speak of Chekhov in these terms because I think he would not like it."

John Cheever's respect for what he assumes would be the wishes of the dead author, from his 1977 essay "The Melancholy of Distance," are more than puckish — rarely has an important writer suffered such a wide range of ridiculous reviews. After all, they couldn't just ignore Cheever (1912–82). Every chronicler of the American postwar middle class, genus East Coast (round up the usual suspects: Rick Moody, Joyce Carol Oates, John Gardner), took their shot at him.

The big guns were more succinct: Norman Mailer dismissed him as apolitical; John Updike, perhaps too politely, admired him as a stylist. It was the younger writers such as Moody who twisted themselves into paroxysms of isms, using Cheever to prove their cleverness. No one knew what to make of him.

Here's Cheever at the center of the storm: churning out stories for the New Yorker, getting paid for most of his life far less than other writers of his generation did (Philip Roth, Updike, not to mention all the Hollywood sellouts). He wrote easily, and his material was largely autobiographical, although Cheever's crystal ball was clouded by alcohol, a tortured dance with his sexuality and a willful desire to erase shame — the shame of his family's financial ruin and disappointment in their general plainness. The last thing he needed was reviews. He needed knots untangled, not embroidered.

The impulse to write is enormously complex. For Cheever, one suspects it arose out of his need to rewrite his family history — in the finest American tradition — to reinvent himself and his ancestors. This is an exhausting act: Reality is notoriously slippery and relentlessly tawdry. Cheever consistently made something out of nothing: memorable anecdotes from everyday events, stories from observations. He referred again and again in his voluminous journals to the difficulty, the sheer heavy lifting of facts: "the familiar clash between my passionate wish to be honest and my passionate wish to possess a traditional past."

"I was born into no true class, and it was my decision, early in life, to insinuate myself into the middle class, like a spy, so that I would have advantageous position of attack, but I seem now and then to have forgotten my mission and to have taken my disguises too seriously," he wrote in his journal. This meant that, increasingly, Cheever felt himself unable to simply live, unselfconsciously, without exerting his will, creative or destructive, over reality. Some measure of distance (what M.F.K. Fisher and others have called "dispassion"), however, allowed Cheever to notice, improvise and extrapolate from daily details without getting hogged down in sentiment (Cheever saved that for drunken evenings). His stories, like Alice Munro's, are exhaustive in their examination of the thoughts behind actions, and, like Munro's, they rarely grind to a halt.

So, whether he felt stifled or not, distance was crucial to Cheever's writing. A person who notices everything cannot be similarly engaged without becoming incoherent. The problem, for the writing, anyway, was that the author wrote himself out of a provenance. In the preface to his collected stories, Cheever wrote that the "parturition of a writer, I think, unlike that of a painter, does not display any interesting alliances to his masters. In the growth of a writer one finds nothing like the early Jackson Pollock copies of the Sistine Chapel paintings with their interesting cross-references to Thomas Hart Benton."

He bemoans the immaturity of some of his early stories (particularly the ones in "The Way Some People Live"); Cheever didn't spring into literature fully formed. There are strong echoes of Fielding, Chekhov, Hawthorne and Proust. Perhaps if he had not felt so rootless he might not have drunk so much, complained so much of loneliness to so many strangers or begged, literally begged, so pathetically for sex from people half (and less) his age.

There we go.

Cheever left 4,300 pages of journals, five novels and hundreds of stories, inviting ridiculous posthumous speculation as if he actually wanted to be understood — by his readers if not by the people who lived alongside, tolerated and loved him. Let us first acknowledge with awe the fact that he survived 70 years, with a deep bow to those near him who recognized something important and bit their knuckles till they bled. The pain and self-hatred Cheever felt, no matter who tells the story, was enormous, the amount of alcohol consumed superhuman, the self-deception and loathing over his homosexuality exhausting, the number of sexual relationships (under cover of a 40-year marriage) bewildering and the arrogance spewed, particularly on his children (chiefly on his daughter, Susan) and his wife, Mary, frankly, depressing.

And yet he emerges: Pulitzer Prize and National Medal for Literature in hand, an honorary degree from Harvard despite not finishing high school, beloved and forgiven by his wife and children, his work aging richly even as the world he described, especially the light and feel of Manhattan but something else as well, disappears faster than endangered species in the world's rain forests.

Blake Bailey's biography, like his book on Richard Yates, is beautifully woven, deeply researched and delightfully free of isms. That said, we know more at the end (and it is a wild ride) about the man than we do about his writing (beyond its autobiographical content), or the importance of his writing to American letters. Bailey might have had more stomach for this if he hadn't allowed himself to become so fascinated with Yankee culture and the New York literary establishment.

We really don't need the biographer to weigh in on whether William Maxwell (one of Cheever's editors at the New Yorker) treated the author well or badly. It's enough to know that Cheever felt wounded and cheated. Bailey keeps his paws off Mary Cheever (it would be hard to judge her the way so many do, especially after she was so gracious with the biographer), but he does intercede when it comes to the children — understandably, because some of the anecdotes of how they were treated by their father are appalling. He handles Cheever's sexuality with great gentleness and sympathy for the cultural, ancestral pressure Cheever felt and that very nearly ruined him, and with respect for the young men Cheever left in his wake.

But Bailey is human, and while he does a hang-up job on Cheever's childhood (setting the stage for a life of raw anxiety), by the mid-1950s, he can barely disguise his disdain for Cheever's boorishness, the family's general "cluelessness" during the year they spent in Rome or Cheever's WASP provincialism, played out on the gossip-ridden, in-bred stage of the publishing industry. Readers undoubtedly will come away wondering how American literature has survived even this long, given its epicenter in New York.

As for the collected work, divided into novels and stories, it is an endless source of pleasure, particularly if you grew up in that neck of the woods. "These stories," Cheever wrote in his preface to his 1978 "Collected Stories," "seem at times to be stories of a long-lost world when the city of New York was still filled with a river light, when you heard the Benny Goodman quartets from a radio in the corner stationery store, and when almost everybody wore a hat."

"Now on summer nights," he wrote in a 1960 essay about moving from his apartment near Sutton Place to the suburbs, "the smell of the city sometimes drifts northward on the waters of the Hudson River, up to the wooded, inland banks where we live. The odor is like the stales from some enormous laundry, although I expect that an incurable evacuee could detect in it Arpege, stone-cold gin, and might perhaps even imagine that he heard music on the water, but this is not for me." The beauty of reading the biography alongside the work (so often not a good idea) is that one knows (or thinks one knows) that Cheever is lying here, if only to himself. He was that exile, in every sense of the word, with the exile's acute memory; exquisite pain and never-ending need.

"Collected Stories and Other Writings," by John Cheever
(Library of America, $35, 1,056 pps.)
"Complete Novels," by John Cheever
(Library of America, $35, 960 pps.)
"Cheever: A Life," by Blake Bailey
(Alfred A. Knopf, $35, 774 pps.)

COME ONE, COME ALL: WRITE FOR ARTS
ARTS@ DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
SKYPLEX
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best In Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
BRING YOUR COLLEGE ID FOR COVER DISCOUNT!!!
SKYPLEX is NOW HIRING:
Doors open at 9 to party until 2 a.m.!
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq. Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS. COLLEGE INN APTS.
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS LANTERN COURT APTS
PERRY APTS MILL HOLLOW
177 N. PLEASANT ST. CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Lady 49ers capture crown, NCAA berth

BY NOAH STEINBERG-DI STEFANO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After a storied history of close-but-no-cigar finishes, the Charlotte women's basketball team captured its first conference title in school history on Monday.

The 49ers have earned the right to sit back and relax on selection day, with its NCAA Tournament bid secured. Entering the Atlantic 10 Tournament as the No. 3 seed, Charlotte defeated Duquesne and Temple convincingly before edging out Richmond to capture the conference title and punch their ticket to the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 2003.

Never in its stints in the Sun Belt, Metro or Conference USA has Charlotte made it as far as the conference finals. With a long history of first-round exits, the 49ers were determined not to let history repeat itself in 2009.

"It's difficult coming in knowing that you've lost every year," Charlotte senior point guard Traci Ray told the Associated Press on Monday. "I think once we won that first game it just got us over that hump and let us breathe a little bit."

Ray contributed nine points in the final and was named tournament MVP.

Although Ray had the honor of taking home the hardware, the 49ers were led by A-10 Sixth Player of the Year Shannon McCallum, who fueled Charlotte on both ends of the floor with a game-high of 22 points and five steals.

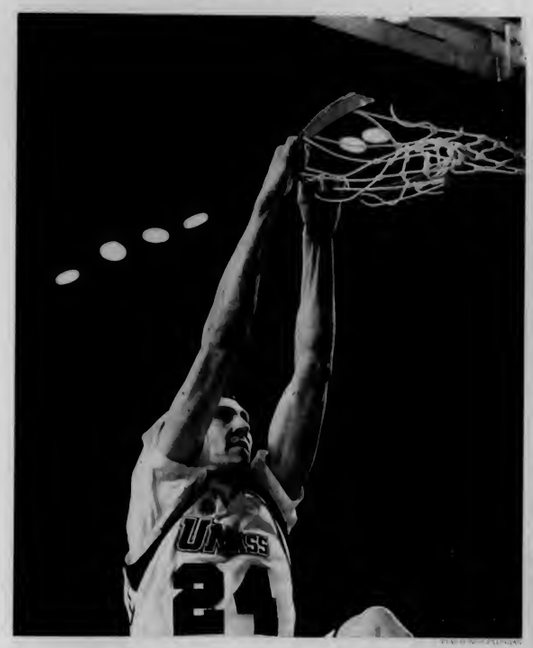
Richmond lead for the majority of the game before Charlotte rallied in the second half for a 59-54 come-from-behind win.

For Richmond, it was a slew of turnovers that doomed them in the second half and allowed Charlotte to mount a comeback. Brittani Shells scored 20 points for the Spiders, but committed nine turnovers and missed a potential game-tying 3-pointer in the final minute of the game.

Richmond reached the championship game by rallying from 19 points down in the second half to knock off Dayton. Shells led that rally, scoring 26 points.

The loss to Charlotte left Richmond clearly on the tournament bubble. 49ers coach Michael Shafter made a strong case for his Spiders and the other teams in the A-10 conference.

"We're the seventh-ranked conference in America. Last year we were the 10th and we got three [teams]," Shafter told the Associated Press. "I feel like we've done a lot. We have seven 20-game winners. Obviously Charlotte's going. I believe Xavier's going. I feel like Temple should go. And I don't want to toot my own horn, but I definitely feel that Richmond should go."



Come Sunday, the aforementioned teams will be waiting with bated breath as the selection committee decides whose resume is impressive enough to warrant an NCAA Tournament bid. Temple finished the season 21-9 and 11-3 in the A-10 before suffering a 23-point loss to champion Charlotte in the conference semi-finals. Despite the loss, the Owls ended the season on a hot streak, winning 10 of their last 12 games.

Xavier seems to have a lone lock on the at-large bid to the big dance. With 25 wins on the season, they hope to secure a high seed and pose a serious threat going into the tournament.

Noah Steinberg-Di Stefano can be reached at steinber@student.umass.edu

Temple's Marli Bennett stands alongside UMass' Teva Wright when the two teams met this season. The Owls are hoping for an at-large bid into the NCAA Tournament after falling in the semifinals of the A-10 Tournament.

Senior Tony Gaffney finished with his 12th double-double of the season (11 points and 10 rebounds) in UMass' loss to Duquesne Wednesday night. Gaffney played all 40 minutes for the Minutemen.

Early rally wasted as UMass struggles late

BASKETBALL from page 10

Minutemen too deep. The Dukes (19-11, 10-7 A-10) quickly built a 10-point lead just over five minutes into the game and extended it to 19 points with 7:59 left in the first half.

"We were coming down shooting crazy 3s and just firing away," Kellogg said. "It was like we were at the carnival just firing away."

Trailing 31-12 at that point, UMass would take its first swing of the game. Ricky Harris (17 points on 6-of-18 shooting, 3-of-13 from 3-point range) hit a 3-pointer that ended a 9-2 Duquesne run and started a 12-0 run for the Minutemen. Anthony Gurley (22 points, four rebounds) followed with a 3-pointer of his own.

Not only did UMass' offense get hot, so did its defense. In the 12-0 run, Lowe, Harris and Gaffney, who recorded his 12th double-double of the season with 11 points and 10 rebounds in 40 minutes, each got a steal that led to points.

The 12-0 run was just a part of a bigger spurt for the Minutemen. From the beginning of that run to the end of the first half, UMass went on a 29-11 run, cutting the Dukes lead to 42-41 going into the locker room.

"They made their run first, they hit us first and we didn't wilt, we hit them back and we got it to a reasonable lead at halftime," Lowe said. "We thought we had it when we came out at halftime, but like coach said, they made the last run to settle the game."

The second half featured eight ties and six lead-changes, coming after a first half in which Duquesne led from start to finish. UMass' poor 3-point shooting in the second half, coupled with no second-half free-throw attempts, doomed the Minutemen.

After going 6-for-20 (30 percent) from 3-point range in the first half, UMass shot 2-for-14 (14.3 percent) in the second half. The Minutemen also failed to get to the line even once in the second half after going 7-of-11 from the free-throw line in the first half.

"I thought we played a good basketball game and there were some points in the second half where I thought we were going to turn it around and come away victorious," Kellogg said. "But we settled a little bit for too many 3s and never got it the free-throw line."

Duquesne will take on second-seeded Rhode Island (22-9, 11-4 A-10) Thursday night at 6:30 p.m. in the quarterfinals.

While Wednesday night's loss was the last game for the Minutemen this season, and the last collegiate competition ever for the seniors, none of the players had regrets about the game.

"If you look across the board, I think every guy left it out there and gave everything they possibly had," Lowe said. "You can't ask for more than that."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com

...k out www.dailycollegian.com on Thursday ni...
...r a podcast recapping UMass' loss to Duquesn...
...the first-round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament

Kellogg will learn from loss

NOTEBOOK from page 10

nobody else on UMass realized the game had started until eight minutes were left in the first half – trailing 31-12 – Gurley kept the Minutemen alive and keyed the rally with 16 points on 7-for-11 shooting in 13 minutes off the bench. He single-handedly made half of UMass' field goals (14-of-37) in the half.

"I was fortunate enough to knock down a couple shots, my layups were falling and my teammates were finding me and I was converting," Gurley said.

He consistently attacked the rim and was the only player on the team who could finish around the basket early on. Even when his shots didn't fall, he opened the lane and allowed UMass big men Tony Gaffney or Tyrell Lynch to get easy tip-ins.

UMass coach Derek Kellogg has preferred having Gurley come of the bench, because he can jump-start the Minutemen if the starters struggle early – as they did against the Dukes.

"Anthony Gurley was fantastic in the first half," Kellogg said. "I like him coming off the bench – he gives us instant offense and he seems to be playing much better defense and coming in with a good attitude."

If there was a downside to his performance, he did cool off in the second half. He finished with 22 points (in 26 minutes) and missed all three of his second half 3-point attempts.

Gurley has had a hot streak at the end of the season for the Minutemen and both he and Kellogg expect that he will only get better as he gains experience.

YOUTH IS SERVED

A dominant performance by a pair of freshmen not only helped lead Duquesne over UMass, but gave the Dukes at least 19 wins for the first time since the 1980-81 season.

Melquan Bolding had his best game of the year with 23 points and 13 rebounds and created match-up problems for the Minutemen all night long.

Fellow freshman Eric Evans chipped in 14 points off the bench all in the second half – including a four-point play with 5 minutes, 22 seconds left with Duquesne leading, 66-69, to give the Dukes a seven-point lead. The play ultimately proved to be the back-breaker for UMass, which never really threatened after that.

The freshmen combined to score 15 of Duquesne's final 22 points, getting to the rim consistency for layups or knocking down free throws to ice any comeback attempt.

3-POINT WOES

All season long, UMass has lived and died by the 3-pointer – when the 3s are falling, the Minutemen can beat anyone, but when they miss, it usually makes for a long night.

The Minutemen could not find their rhythm from long range Wednesday night, hitting 8-for-34 for 23.5 percent efficiency.

Their penchant for the 3-pointer can get them in major trouble, especially when they settle for deep shots and neglect to drive to the paint.

"We settled for too many threes and never got to the free-throw line," said Kellogg, who saw his team take 20 fewer foul shots than Duquesne.

LEARNING EXPERIENCE

It's always tough for first-year coaches in any sport. They have to learn the attitudes of the players, try to implement a new system without confusing the veterans and figure out just how hard they can push players before they break.

The season wasn't as successful in terms of wins and losses as Kellogg and company would have liked, but he did gain a year of experience that will likely prove valuable down the road.

"I think this will be a good springboard for our program for the next two, three, four, five and hopefully 10 or 15 years," Kellogg said. "I got a good indication of how I want the team to play on both ends of the floor. The biggest thing now is our off-season conditioning program. I do know that we have to get bigger and stronger, and continue to get in better shape and improve our athleticism."

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass – on bus route)

April 1 Graduate Info Session
WPI
Join us at our next Graduate Studies
Information Session
On GRAD DAY 2009
Wednesday, April 1
From 1:00–4:00 p.m. Come view research presentations by our current graduate students
At 4:30 p.m. Take a campus tour
At 6:00 p.m. Learn about our graduate programs in Engineering, Science, Management, and the Life Sciences Engineering, Science, and Management at the Bartlett Center • 100 Institute Rd. • Worcester, MA Life Sciences
at the NEW Gateway Park • 60 Prescott St. • Worcester, MA
Ask about our NEW graduate programs in Systems Engineering and Robotics Engineering
Register NOW to attend!
grad.wpi.edu • grader@wpi.edu • 508-831-5301

Minutemen start fresh

UM, Huskies to meet in Hockey East playoffs

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

Nothing in the past matters – this weekend is a new start for the Massachusetts hockey team.

Friday, Saturday and Sunday if needed, the seventh-seeded Minutemen will play second-seeded and No. 4 Northeastern in the 25th Annual Hockey East Tournament at Matthews Arena in Boston.

"This is the most exciting time of year for us. This is why we do what we do," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "The season is great, we're passionate about the season but this is where people get to make their mark. This is where the program gets to make a statement."

The Minutemen (15-18-3, 10-14-3 Hockey East) have had an up and down season, struggling with consistency week-to-week and period-to-period – including against the Huskies. But, UMass still won the regular-season series 2-1 (6-4 win on Jan. 30, 5-3 loss on Feb. 13 and a 4-1 win on Feb. 14).

"Everybody thinks that because we beat them twice it's an easier task for us. Those games have no relevance whatsoever in what's going to happen this weekend," Cahoon said. "This weekend is a playoff atmosphere. The crowd is going to be partisan towards Northeastern. They are more familiar with those surroundings and the impact of those surroundings benefit them more than it does us.

"We have to be able to manage that environment and manage that situation of being in a tournament in their building."

The Minutemen are the only team besides No. 1 Boston University to beat Northeastern twice.

"They are probably thrilled that they drew us, there must be a certain sense of confidence knowing they can play well against Northeastern," NU coach Greg Cronin said during Tuesday's teleconference. "I think they've got a very, very good hockey team, I don't know how the series will play out."

Northeastern (23-9-4, 18-6-3 Hockey East) has been near the top of Hockey East and the national rankings for nearly the entire season.

The Huskies, like most teams, have had a variety of players experience injuries this season, which could have an impact on them during the playoffs.

But with the strength of Brad Thiessen in goal, Northeastern shouldn't have a problem making up for the players who may not be at 100 percent. Thiessen has played in every game for Northeastern, allowing 77 goals with a .931 save percentage and a 2.12 goals-against average.

"He's our best player most nights. It's always good to have your goalie as your best player, it has a real healthy effect on your entire team," Cronin said. "His stats and his performance this year have clearly represented a good start defensively. I think he's probably been our most consistent player as well."

Northeastern and UMass may not match-up statistically, but the team's systems of play are very similar.

"I think that familiarity is a good thing for us, and probably a good thing for them too," Cahoon said. "But we have a real keen understanding about how they go about their assignments in different areas of the ice. They do the same with us, so I like that personally because now it's a question of which team will out-execute the other."

The top eight of 10 teams in the league qualified for the Hockey East Playoffs and the top four schools earned home ice for the first round. This is the Minutemen's seventh consecutive trip to the playoffs and 12th total since UMass joined Hockey East in the 1994-95 season. The Hockey East Semifinals and Championship games will be played at the TD Banknorth Garden in Boston on March 20-21.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com

Senior forward Chris Davis tries to find an opening around two Northeastern players in a game from earlier this season. The Minutemen will take on the No. 4 Huskies in the first round of the Hockey East Tournament.

Hockey East tourney preview

Difference in goaltending is difference of UMass, NU

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

In most college sports, the seed a team earns for the conference tournament has a lot of bearing on how they can expect to fare in the tournament.

The same is true of the Hockey East.

Only three times in the last 13 years has a team higher than a No. 3 seed won the conference tournament. In 2008, it was No. 4 Boston College, while in 2000 top honors went to No. 4 Maine. In 1996, No. 4 Providence snagged a win over No. 3 Maine.

Since then, the No. 1 seed has claimed the Hockey East Championship six times, the No. 2 seed three times and the No. 3 seed, once.

This year Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont, UMass-Lowell and Boston College look to turn the odds in their favor when the tournament starts this Friday.

No. 1 Boston University vs. No. 8 Maine

The Terriers come in with the first slot in the conference and the nation's No. 1 team. They have the second-leading scorer in the country and Hobey Baker candidate Colin Wilson centering their first line.

Beside Wilson, BU has a relentless squad of physical scorers in Nick Bonino and Brandon Yip. Bonino is tied for 12th in the nation in scoring with 42 points (15 goals, 27 assists). Yip has a solid 35 points on the season (16 goals, 19 assists).

But BU's strengths don't end with the front three: the Terriers have some of the best defenseman in college hockey. Matt Gilroy, Brian Strait, Kevin Shattenkirk and Eric Gryba headline a defense that has a plus-74 in goal differential.

And Kieran Millan, BU's freshman netminder, is having a great season in his own right. Milan ranks in the top five at all major goaltending categories and is certainly one of the main reasons for BU's success.

The Black Bears come into the tournament with the last seed, basically falling into the event by default. Maine has lost seven of its last eight games, including a 7-2 loss to BU on Feb. 13 and a 6-0 loss to UML on March 7.

At this point, Maine doesn't have much on its side. Nothing this season has gone its way: netminders Scott Darling and Dave Wilson have been struggling all season. Only Wilson has posted a save percentage over .900, and barely, at .901.

Maine's most formidable scoring threat, Gustav Nyquist, doesn't even break the top 100 nationally in scoring. Nyquist leads the Black Bears with 28 points (10 goals, 18 assists).

No. 3 New Hampshire vs. No. 6 Boston College

The Wildcats enter the tournament overcoming defensive struggles earlier this season, finding their stride and sticking to their system. UNH's top-scorer James van Riemsdyk (15 goals, 22 assists) is without question the team's leading playmaker. The Philadelphia Flyer draft pick has the ability to change a game with one stride across the blue line.

Improving from the first half of the season is the Wildcats' defense and goal-tending. Defensemen Blake Kessel and Kevin Kapstad both have a plus-17 rating and lead UNH defensemen in points.

Brian Foster, the Wildcat net minder, has improved too. Foster has posted a solid .917 save percentage and a 2.45 goals-against average.

As for Boston College, the Eagles come into the tournament winners of its last two games, sweeping last weekend's series against Providence College. No. 18 Boston College been up-and-down all season. Despite starting the season off 5-1, things soon went south for the team. BC was inconsistent for much of the season, but finished only three points behind UMass for the No. 5 spot.

Much like last season, netminder John Muse has started every game for the Eagles. His numbers might not be what they were last year, but Muse has remained not only one of the top goalies in the Hockey East, but in the nation.

Brock Bradford, a Boston Bruins draft pick, led BC with 40 points (23 goals, 17 assists) during the regular season. The senior also poses as a formidable threat with the man advantage – leading the Eagles with nine power-play goals.

No. 4 Vermont vs. No. 5 UMass-Lowell

In the most anticipated match-up of the tournament, Vermont hosts a UML team that has played them quite closely throughout the season – posting a 1-1-1 record in their three meetings.

The Catamounts boast two of the nation's most potent forwards in Viktor Stalberg and Peter Lenes. Stalberg ranks among the best in total points (40) and goals (22). Lenes doesn't quite make the list but still had solid numbers, with 13 goals and 16 assists.

Fortunately for the Catamounts, they've found the solution to their goaltending issue in Rob Madore. The freshman ranks near the top in goals-against average with 2.30, along with a respectable .915 save percentage.

The River Hawks finished last weekend sweeping their weekend series, dominating Maine in every facet of the game. Trying to ride the momentum will be UML's two net minders Nevin Hamilton and Carter Hutton. The two have split time in net all season, each starting 17 games. Both have almost identical stats with Hutton posting a 7-8-1 record, 2.05 GAA and .916 save percentage while Hamilton's 9-6-1, 2.23 GAA and .922 save percentage might have the edge.

Defenseman Maury Edwards leads the River Hawks in points with 27 – something rarely seen. Perhaps more than any team in the Hockey East, UML's scoring is distributed throughout its roster rather than just on one line.

Three of UML's top six scorers are defenseman, a rarity in the game. So, needless to say, defense will be depended on by both sides in this series.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com

Sophomore forward Chase Langeraap and the Minutemen enter the Hockey East Tournament as the No. 7 seed.

Skating off the ice after New Hampshire eliminated the Massachusetts hockey team from the Hockey East Tournament last March, UMass coach Don Cahoon put his arm around Paul Dainton, imparting some wisdom on the then-freshman goaltender. The pair disappeared into the tunnel, as the Wildcats circled the ice saluting their fans.

In a game and a half, the Wildcats scored eight goals on Dainton. Dan Meyers relieved him and suffered a similar fate. Twelve months removed from a bitter end to a disappointing season, the UMass goaltenders are in the exact same predicament. This much we know. Northeastern can score. Its fans are unruly, relentless and loud. And after losing two games to UMass this season, the Huskies have a little something to prove against the Minutemen.

UMass may be the underdog this weekend, but the difference between the two teams – record aside – is negligible. Either way, NU coach Greg Cronin wants this one bad.

"UMass beat us twice. They are the only team besides BU that we didn't win a series against," Cronin said in this week's Hockey East coaches' teleconference. "They are probably thrilled that they drew us; there must be a certain sense of confidence knowing they can beat Northeastern."

Nice try coach.

Cahoon's been at this for a while. His team is hardly a pillar of mental toughness, but they're smart kids. They know a battle awaits them when they take the ice of the oldest arena in the world. And they know a blatant motivational tactic from an opposing coach when they see one.

The Huskies need it right now, though. They led the conference for the entire season until a 4-1 loss to Boston College allowed Boston University to claim the regular season championship and No. 1 overall seed in the tournament. There was a supreme confidence emanating from Huntington Avenue until that loss in their regular-season finale.

NU may have been the darling of college hockey for most of the season, but the Huskies were more than a good team who picked off a few giants. They cruised, and only found themselves in second place when BU reeled off 13 wins in its last 16 games – the other three were ties – to end the season.

The easiest and most likely way for NU to regain that poise is for Brad Thiessen to make a few big saves early in Friday's game. Thiessen struggled against the Minutemen allowing 12 goals in the three games. If he's on, NU wins. If he's not, NU can still win. The fact that NU won games when Thiessen wasn't on or its offense disappeared proves the difference between NU and UMass. If Dainton or Meyers struggles, the Minutemen will lose this series.

"We've prepared these guys, and they're confident and capable," Cahoon said about his goaltenders. "In order to win, we're going to have to get good goaltending, that's just the standard we've got to expect. We're going in there expecting that these guys will make the saves they should make and steal a few on the way.

"If we get good goaltending, and we play well then we've got a legitimate shot."

Neither of those factors were part of the equation in last season's quarterfinal matchup. The Minutemen struggled in all three zones forcing Dainton and Meyers to contend with odd-rushes and nine UNH power plays.

"It's been a long time since last year's playoffs. It's been a long time for him and, hopefully, he'll step up the challenge," Cahoon said of Dainton. "There's not much made of what happened last year. It's 12 months – totally different person by now, totally different goaltender by now. He's got two years under his belt."

The comments apply to Meyers as well. On Feb. 14 against Northeastern, he made 21 saves in UMass' 4-1 win at Matthews Arena. Still, as well as the pair performed this season, the fact that no one besides Cahoon and his coaches know who will play Friday night proves the point.

Goaltending tandems can work, and both Meyers and Dainton can lead UMass past NU to the Hockey semifinals at the TD BankNorth Garden. If they will, and which one will do it, is a whole additional question.

Northeastern doesn't have this problem, in fact most of the nation's elite don't. NU has Thiessen. BU has Kieran Millan. New Hampshire has Brian Foster. The list goes on – all the Minutemen have at this point are questions.

Joe Meloni is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com

Joe Meloni

R·I·T Rochester Institute of Technology

- Art, Design, Crafts, Photography, Film, Graphic Arts
- Engineering and Technology
- Business, Management, and Human Services
- Education, Psychology, and Human Resources
- Computing and Information Sciences and Technology
- Multidisciplinary/General Studies
- Science, Mathematics, Statistics, and Imaging Science
- Sustainability

Graduate Study at RIT

Career-focused. Specialized. Technologically based.

- 80 graduate degrees, including MS/MBA/MFA/Ph.D. programs
- Talented and diverse faculty with industry connections
- Scholarships and assistantships available
- 3,000 corporate and government partnerships
- One-year master's degrees and online programs
- 50 research centers supporting applied research, consulting and innovation
- 100,000 alumni worldwide

Contact us at: www.rit.edu/gradstudy/4 1-866-260-3950

Visit Us Anytime

Most programs still accepting applications
Graduate Study Open House March 18

Need An Apartment?

Puffton Village

- Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
- 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments
- 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
- All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
- On site laundry, off street parking
- Basketball and Tennis Courts

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Be sure to check out www.dailycollegian.com during Spring Break for coverage of the UMass hockey team in the Hockey East Tournament.

sheesh.

| | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 1 | | | 6 | | 9 |
| | | 7 | | 4 | | 1 |
| 8 | 4 | | 5 | 2 | | |
| 8 | | | | | 2 | |
| | 4 | 8 | 3 | | 9 | |
| | 9 | | | | | 3 |
| | 8 | 3 | | 7 | 1 | |
| 1 | 5 | | 8 | | | |
| 4 | | 2 | | 3 | | |

amherst cinema
Fri Mar 13 - Thu Mar 19
Oscar Nominated Live Action Shorts 2:00 7:00
Oscar Nominated Animated Shorts 4:00 9:00 + 11:30 Sat & Sun
Waltz with Bashir 1:45 4:15 7:15 (No 7:15 Tue) + 11:45am Sat & Sun slumdog millionaire 2:30 (2:15 Thu) 5:00 7:30 10:00 + 12:00pm Sat & Sun No 2:30 Wed No 5:00 Thu
Milk 9:15
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org (413) 253-2547

Pleasant Street Theater
Fri Mar 13 - Thu Mar 19
The Class 4:30 7:15 9:45 No 4:30 Thu +1:45 Sat Sun & Wed
The Wrestler 4:15 9:30 No 4:15 Mon
The Reader 7:00 +1:30 Sat & Sun +4:15 Mon +10:15am 1:30 Wed
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantsttheater.org (413) 584 5848

What's on Tap at the Amherst Brewing Company:

Every Wednesday:
Lost Upstairs at ABC

Thursday March 12:
Downstairs 10PM - 1AM
DJ Vip Kid

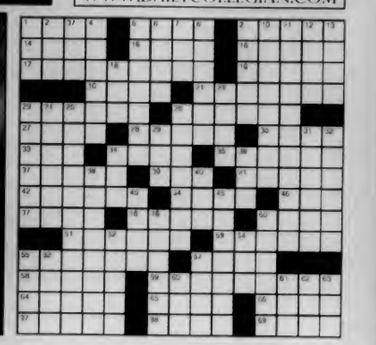
Sundays:
Sunday Brunch 10AM - 2PM

Tuesday, March 17:
St. Patrick's Day
Traditional Corned Beef and Cabbage served all day long

29 North Pleasant St Amherst
www.amherstbrewing.com

ACROSS
1 Skewed view
5 Spanish surrealist painter
9 Show teeth
14 Top-rated
15 Grand tale
16 Cruise ship
17 Meadow associated with the Magna Carta
19 Star-like bloom
20 Comprehends
21 Repairers
23 Most docile
26 Miss a step
27 Raw minerals
28 Fuzzy and Gray
30 Circle parts
33 Chasing game
34 Stepped (on)
35 Enticement
37 Muse of poetry
39 Slangy okay
41 Quaking tree
42 Peninsula near Singapore
44 Clarified fat
46 Brace number
47 Wait a minute!
48 Africa's largest city
50 Abuse vocally
51 Interlocks
53 Babies and spees
55 Spruce (up)
57 Elevator maker
58 Asia Minor region
59 Under attack
64 Wet out
65 Seemingly forever?
66 Volcanic output
67 Hidden obstacles
68 Snow coaster
69 Brief test

DOWN
1 Drinks counter
2 Promissory note
3 Beattie or Blyth
4 Human input systems
5 Mother of Persephone
6 Simkins
7 Topper
8 "The Cometh"
9 Incline
10 Bridge do-overs
11 Buttinsky
12 Lecher's look
13 Slips up
18 Certainly!
22 "Lohengrin" heroine
23 Tribal emblems
24 Noah's landfall
25 Ego gone mad
26 "Adesso"
29 Orbison or Acuff
31 Worked aboard
32 Madrid misters
34 Plaything
36 Young man
38 Coming to a point
40 Golfer's norm
43 Discomfort
45 "Cyrano de Bergerac" playwright
49 Virgil's hero
50 Push and shove
52 Hangs around
54 Comic
55 Knights
56 React to an ache
57 Ha-ha-boy
60 Actor Gibson
61 Not aired
62 One Gabor
63 Beaver project



Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

T Shirts & Sweatshirts in 1-3 Days!
sunraise printing
Custom Printed Tees
Student Discounts
586-7133
sunraiseprinting.com
Hadley, MA 01035

Intersted in getting Business Experence?
The Collegian is accepting applications for the position of Business Manager.
Come to 113 Campus Center to pick up an application.

Quote of the Day

"Bureaucracy defends the status quo long past the time when the quo has lost its status."

— Laurence J. Peter

Wondermark by David Malki

Brewster Rockit: Space Guy! by Tim Rickard

Cheap City By Michael Capozzola

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You'll be real glad you packed a lunch when you get kidnapped and thrown in the back of a white van.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Today you'll find $20 on the nightstand when you awake, but your dignity will be gone forever.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Thanks to Daylight Saving Time you've got a whole extra hour to play with Barbie before bedtime.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Do not put your older sister's Wild Banana-flavored jelly on your toast, if you know what's good for you.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You're not addicted to oil anymore, but every once in a while you sneak off for a little high-octane petrol.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
When is the SGA election happening?

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Your crusade to abolish sin will be even less successful than your crusade to stop the Wiggles.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Just because you can still fit into your wheelies doesn't mean its a good idea to wear them around campus.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Assisting an elderly woman across the street will help your karma situation, which hasn't been helped by all those dead old ladies.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Its up to you to reestablish the Pog Club, with yourself serving as Chief Slammer.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Don't cry you baby. Maybe you should go to jail for being so easy to mug.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Your new MacBook may have a George Foreman Grill, but it still lacks a salad dressing dispenser.

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums

Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

Classifieds

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

SUMMER ON CAPE COD!! The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews for summer employment on our Cape Cod property March 26,27,28 and April 2,3,4. Servers, Lifeguards, Beach Attendant and more needed! On-site Housing is Available. Visit our website at www.wychmereharbor.com for available positions and call (508) 432-1000 x129 for details.

Announcement

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblow-out.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-

For Rent

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstrealty.com 253-7879/ 781-979-0076

House for rent. 2 bedroom, kitchen, 2 bath. $1000/ month. On bus route 413-

For Sale

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 12, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New coach, same result

When UMass coach Derek Kellogg was playing for the Minutemen, his teams went a combined 12-0 in the Atlantic 10 Tournament. That was a long time ago as UMass has now lost eight straight games in the A-10s.

UMass leading-scorer Ricky Harris had a tough night from the floor in the Minutemen's 91-81 loss to Duquesne Wednesday night in the first round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament in Atlantic City, N.J.

A-10 skid continues for Minutemen

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — It was a different team, a different opponent, a different head coach, yet still the same result.

With the Massachusetts men's basketball team hoping to win its first Atlantic 10 Tournament game since 2002 — something its coach Derek Kellogg never failed to do in his playing days at UMass — the Minutemen failed to land the last punch against Duquesne, resulting in an all-too-familiar ending.

"[Duquesne] plays a fun, fast style; we play a fun, fast style and it was a game of swings," said Kellogg following Wednesday night's 91-81 loss to the Dukes in the first round. "They made the last swing to come out victorious."

Despite multiple lead changes in the second half, Duquesne reeled off one last run in the final five minutes of regulation to pull away for good. But the Dukes might have to give UMass senior point guard Chris Lowe credit for starting the run.

With 5 minutes, 22 seconds left in the game, Duquesne freshman guard Eric Evans hit the most important shot of the contest. With the Dukes on top, 69-66, Evans took a pass from point guard Aaron Jackson and fired a shot from 3-point range. Lowe, who would lead the Minutemen with 23 points, made an effort to disrupt the shot, but instead fouled Evans as the ball fell through the net.

"I fouled a kid on a 3-point shot and he knocked it down," Lowe said after the loss. "That was the turnaround of the game."

Evans would complete the four-point play, extending Duquesne's lead to seven, a lead it would not relinquish. The Minutemen (12-18, 7-10 A-10) would cut the deficit to five points less than a minute later, but the Dukes, who were led by freshmen Melquan Bolding's double-double of 23 points and 13 rebounds, continued to hit shot after shot, extending the lead to as many as 14 before the end of regulation.

| | |
|---|---|
| Duquesne | 91 |
| UMass | 81 |

As well as making the last run of the game, Duquesne made the first run – one that just 12:01 into the game, seemed to bury the

See BASKETBALL on page 7

Atlantic 10 Tournament Woes
(UMass in first game played)

- 2009: LOSS (91-81 Duquésne)
- 2008: LOSS (69-65 Charlotte)
- 2007: LOSS (74-71 Saint Louis)
- 2006: LOSS (75-66 Xavier)
- 2005: LOSS (70-64 La Salle)
- 2004: LOSS (79-76 Duquesne)
- 2003: LOSS (85-74 George Washington)

Gurley rises to the occasion

Sophomore shows flashes of promise despite tough defeat

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — The Massachusetts men's basketball team may have fallen short in its comeback attempt Wednesday night in a 91-81 loss to Duquesne, but it wasn't Anthony Gurley's fault.

The sophomore transfer has had a rocky year that saw him struggle and get removed from the starting lineup, but he certainly lived up to his preseason hype helping UMass end the first half down only one point after falling behind by 19. He certainly impressed Duquesne coach Ron Everhart.

"Gurley was tremendous in the first half, he came in and really lit us up," Everhart said. "He ran hard, he caught and shot, when he couldn't shoot he put it on the floor and got into the teeth of our defense and either made [a basket] or got it out to [UMass guard Ricky] Harris on the other side."

In a game where it seemed like

See NOTEBOOK on page 7

Anthony Gurley played by far his best game as a Minuteman, scoring a season-high 22 points in the loss to the Dukes in Atlantic City.

Lyons shut down in defeat to Bulldogs

By Holly J. Galvin
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has proved on more than one occasion this season it can go toe-to-toe with the nation's best.

Following Wednesday afternoon's game against Yale, the Minutewomen need to prove they can do it against everyone else.

UMass fell to Yale, 7-4, in New Haven, Conn., Wednesday as its offense struggled against the Bulldogs.

| | |
|---|---|
| Yale | 7 |
| UMass | 3 |

In the first-ever women's lacrosse game at Yale's newly-minted Reese Stadium, a prolonged offensive scoring drought prevented the Minutewomen (2-4) from making a game with the Bulldogs (2-3).

"We got enough shots off but we just couldn't score," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said, refusing to blame either her defense or goalkeeper Katie Florence for the loss that ended a two-game win streak.

"It's really hard to win lacrosse games only scoring four goals and I think that was the biggest thing," Venechanos added.

Despite averaging 13 goals in its last two contests, UMass found the back of the net only once in the first half.

The Bulldogs scored four unanswered goals in the first 25 minutes of the second half to extend the lead to 7-1.

"I thought they were the better team today," Venechanos said. "[Yale] held some long possessions on us. I thought our team responded fairly well to those long possessions. We made them work for their scoring opportunities."

The only time the Minutewomen put together a run was in the final minutes, with a streak of goals from Colleen Mulligan, Steph Hopkins and Meghan Reddy.

"Coming out of this loss we're a little bit more hungry – that's the fact," Venechanos said. "I'm hoping we enter [the March 14 matchup vs. Stony Brook] with more focus."

Collegian staff writer Nick O'Malley contributed to this report.

Holly J. Galvin can be reached at hgalvin@student.umass.edu.

Jackie Lyons had 12 goals in her first five games this season for the Minutewomen. But Lyons failed to score in UMass' loss to Yale Wednesday.

Hockey East Preview (page 8)

T.J. Syner maneuvers between two Northeastern players in a Mullins Center meeting between UMass and the Huskies earlier this season. The Minutemen, who beat Northeastern twice in three games this season, take on the Huskies in the first round of the Hockey East Tournament.

the daily collegian

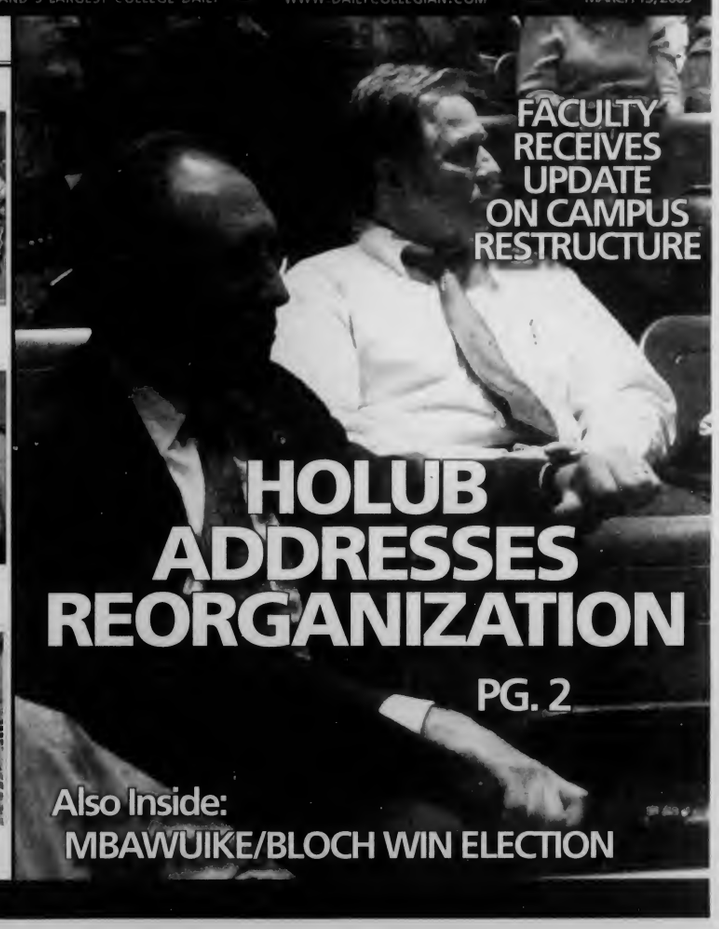
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MARCH 13, 2009

inside this issue:

SPORTS

SEE PAGE 12

ARTS&LIVING



SEE PAGE 6

FEATURES

SEE PAGE 3

FACULTY RECEIVES UPDATE ON CAMPUS RESTRUCTURE

HOLUB ADDRESSES REORGANIZATION

PG. 2

Also Inside:
MBAWUIKE/BLOCH WIN ELECTION

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

CXVIX
ISSUE 33

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Waszczuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Leigh Greaney
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenswaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor P.J. Stanley
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Koczwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Larnard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo Matthew Harrison
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Weliver

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914, AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
ON STAFF TODAY

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. SULLIVAN
COPY EDITOR
MICHELLE FREDETTE
PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
MICHAEL SARKES

SGA election results in on major races

By Mike Fox
Collegian Staff

Election results indicate that Ngozi Mbawuike was elected as the new Student Government Association president and Emily Bloch was chosen as the new campus trustee over two days of voting this week.

Mbawuike beat Southwest Governor Chris Faulkner with 1687 votes to Faulkner's 738. Bloch won with 1659 votes to Southwest Senator Josh Davidson's 677. According to campaign literature and information from their debate earlier this month, both Mbawuike and Bloch plan to represent students not only on campus-related issues but also as a part of statewide advocacy programs that plan to make higher education a priority for state officials.

Speaking about their victory, the Mbawuike Bloch campaign said, "We're excited about the results and about working

See ELECTION on page 3

Holub writes on UM reorganization

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

Chancellor Robert Holub released details to the University of Massachusetts community regarding a proposed plan to restructure the University's academic schools and colleges that includes the consolidation of the life science departments.

Holub and Jane Fountain, chair of the Task Force on Reorganization, also addressed the Faculty Senate yesterday afternoon to describe the direction of the proposed plan.

The chancellor's campus-wide memo marked a shift in rhetoric.

He urged the UMass community to accept reorganization on the merits of its possible benefit to streamlining curricula and academic programs.

Holub stressed the positive implications reorganization could create intellectually for departments, especially in the area of faculty research.

"I believe we will need to proceed beyond the proposed structure, if we are going to compete with the top public research institutions in the country," the chancellor wrote in his e-mail.

Formerly, the chancellor's communications to faculty, staff and students primarily highlighted the potential cost savings of restructuring, estimated to be around $1 million annually.

In addition, Executive Vice Chancellor for University Relations Tom Milligan said the one-time restructuring costs associated with the transition will be relatively immaterial.

Holub's plan includes the creation of a College of Natural Sciences to bring the life sciences into one administrative unit, effective next fall.

The most contentious part of the chancellor's proposed direction involves the College of Humanities and Fine Arts (HFA) and the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences (SBS). Despite the Task Force's recommendation to create a large College of Arts and Sciences, Holub instead called for a longer analysis of a potential merger before a final decision is reached.

"What I'm asking for is for people to enter a deliberative process with open minds and see what comes out of it," Holub said.

In his e-mail, the chancellor expressed reservations about creating such a large administrative entity that would conceivably consist of over 40 academic departments. He also articulated his desire to avoid further consolidation of the non-preprofessional disciplines.

Yet some of the faculty members in attendance remained skeptical of Holub's plans, including the fate of the SBS and HFA colleges.

See REORGANIZATION on page 3

(Editor's Note)

Defending and cutting speech

Lisa DeBenedictis

On Wednesday night, Don Feder's Republican Club-sponsored speech on hate crimes was abruptly cancelled due to a high level of disruption by student protestors.

"Feder refused to speak anymore," said University of Massachusetts student Greg Collins, president of the UMass Republican Club, of the official reason for the event's cancellation. "Overall, I don't believe he spoke for more than 10 minutes."

In response to the event's cancellation, many UMass students – and even alumni have commented on Dailycollegian.com: Some speak with anger at Feder's views, others with a defiant belief in some of the points he made. But more than anything else, most have commented with disgust that none of these views were able to be explored at a deeper level because those who disagreed with Feder disrupted the event to such an extent that he no longer wished to speak to his audience.

It is difficult to discern the goal of the protestors – whether it was indeed to stop Feder from speaking or to simply voice their opposition to his views. If it was to prevent his speech from occurring, then they certainly succeeded. But to attempt to stop another person from voicing his opinion is treading on very dangerous ground. If the tables were turned and another group had hosted a very liberal speaker, would it then be acceptable for the Republican Club to shout out at him disrespectfully and to abruptly turn their chairs around in the middle of his speech, too?

The key issue – more than what the legalities of a hate crime may be, or whether you support them or not, or whatever you may believe – is the importance of remaining tolerant and respectful of all people, no matter how different their views are from your own.

As one student commenting on the site, who refers to himself as Ed, said, "For what it is worth, I have friends … all of whom I consider to be individuals, and no, they don't always agree with me on every political issue. In fact, some of my closest friends are to the left of the mainstream. I think they are wrong, and they I, but that doesn't mean that I can't respect them as persons."

In a world of varied religions, cultures and ideologies, no two people will ever see entirely eye to eye on everything. For many students, college is just the place to learn another point of view, explore new and abstract philosophies and challenge one's own beliefs so that they are ultimately reinforced or reassessed.

"What happened at this speech was a crime against the intellectual discourse that is supposed to take place at universities across the country. UMass should be a sanctuary of higher education, and an integral part of 'higher education' is framing a debate in a way that facilitates dialogue," said Breti, another commenter on the Dailycollegian.com article.

A college environment is often ripe with controversy. There will always be protests; there will always be speeches and there will always be those who disagree. The most intelligent of students are those who are mature enough to let those who see things differently speak, learn from their different perspectives and interpret it as they choose.

In an interview with The Collegian following the event, Collins added that he had no problem with protestors attending the event, as long as they did not infringe upon Feder's right to speak. He added that the Republican Club had planned to include a question and answer period after the event, in which students would have had the opportunity to ask Feder anything they wished about his speech and his views.

As I scroll through these different online comments, it becomes quite apparent that many students on campus do have mature and respectful viewpoints, and they do have much to say on both sides about what defines a hate crime and what constitutes free speech. The real shame, more so than anything else I mention here, is that none of these thoughtful and intelligent views were able to be discussed at Wednesday night's event.

Lisa DeBenedictis is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at ldebenedictis@dailycollegian.com.

Warnings don't rain on this spring break

Students walk on wild side to MX

By Kathryn Foley
Collegian Staff

For thousands of college students a year, traveling to Mexico – one of the most popular locations for spring break – entails excessive, legal partying and getting a nice tan. But now this idea of a luxury vacation could be at risk.

Last month, a new travel advisory for Mexico was issued by the U.S. State Department. The purpose of the warning was primarily to draw awareness to the rising dangers resulting from the massive amount of drug cartel violence, especially along the U.S.-Mexico border.

Mexican drug cartels are involved in a progressing violent dispute both among themselves and Mexican government forces for control of trafficking routes. The exceeding brutality in Mexico killed more than 6, 290 people last year and more than 1,000 within the first eight weeks of 2009.

Many universities across the country have taken the initiative to warn their students of the recent dangers of traveling to Mexico, but few have gone so far as to blatantly tell students that they shouldn't go there.

In a campus-wide email sent by Esther Terry, vice chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life, University of Massachusetts students were encouraged to read the U.S. State Government travel alert if they planned on spending their upcoming break in Mexico. She said that all potential travelers should be aware of the alert and highlighted the fact that U.S. citizens should "exercise caution in unfamiliar areas and be aware of their surroundings at all times."

According to UMass Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin, paying mind to the information in the Vice Chancellor's email is important. She said the University isn't telling students not to travel there, but, "in view of the advisory, we caution students to take due care in their travels – be aware of their surroundings, know where the U.S. Embassy is and avoid areas where drug trafficking is prevalent."

UMass junior Heather Duquette thinks it is good that universities are offering parents and students information about safety precautions, "however, most students who are going to Mexico are going to be in a gated resort area. So, I think it's silly that some universities are urging students not to go. Informing is one thing, but overreacting and worrying parents is another."

According to the travel alert issued by the U.S. Department of State, the greatest increase in violence has occurred near the U.S. border, especially in Ciudad Juarez, Tijuana and Chihuahua City. The alert counseled U.S. citizens to adhere to many safety precautions including: traveling on main roads (particularly the toll roads) during daylight hours, remaining in homes or hotels, avoiding large crowds, avoiding downtown and surrounding areas (places where there is a large amount of drug dealing and prostitution), not displaying jewelry, money or other valuables, and leaving a copy of the trip's itinerary with someone back home.

Most students who have booked a trip to Mexico this spring break are well aware of the most recent occurrences but have not let the alert affect their travel plans.

Frequent traveler, sophomore Andrea Fondulas said, "I chose Mexico because I love it there – I've been there four times now. We found a time share available there, and the warnings have made me nervous, but it hasn't even crossed my mind to cancel my trip. I just know we have to take extra precautions about our surroundings and to never wind up alone."

As indicated by Orbitz Worldwide Vice President of Corporate Communications and Government Affairs Brian Hoyt, this widespread travel agency also pushes student travelers to use their own judgment, while staying conscious of the fact that these warnings are primarily targeted to towns on the border where there is "unrest" with the drug cartels and the Mexican government, unlike popular vacation spots like Cancun and Cabo.

Two of Cancun's signature elements: A palm tree and a condo tower. Students are hoping its all they see this spring break with increased violence in some parts of Mexico.

The U.S. Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, Firearms and Explosives also released an advisory recommending that college students avoid areas in northern Mexico. The Bureau's alert specifically dissuades travel to Tijuana and Rosarito Beach where drug-related violence may be at its worst.

"My clients are either interested in a beach vacation in Cancun or the Maya Riviera area," Belchertown, Mass., Travel Loft representative Deborah Walsh said. "I haven't had any of my clients express concern or cancel trips. They tend to be well-traveled and understand that the violence right now has not spilled over into the beach/tourist areas," she added.

A more serious concern for spring break travel could be the state of the economy. Big-name travel agency Expedia, has had booking rates to Mexico drop since last year. Ian Jeffries, an Expedia public relations representative said that bookings everywhere are down, with the exception of the Dominican Republic.

According to Jeffries, the peak period of spring break travel is from March 16 to April 5. Compared to last year's travel rate to Mexico, tickets sold to Puerto Vallarta dropped 17 percent and fare prices were down 9 percent. Tickets sold to Cozumel dropped 22 percent while prices dropped 18 percent. Tickets sold to Cancun dropped 22 percent in spite of prices dropping 20 percent.

Hotel prices in Cancun also dropped dramatically in the first quarter of 2009, compared to the same time period in 2008.

Kathryn Foley can be reached at kffoley@student.umass.edu.

Mbawuike/Block get most votes in election

ELECTION from page 2

with the student body this coming year."

According to Chancellor of Elections Sean McNair, approximately 2500 people, or 13 percent of the campus, showed up to vote this past Tuesday and Wednesday. He said he was thrilled with the turnout, which was up from 12.6 percen two years ago.

In an official statement to The Massachusetts Daily Collegian, candidate for student trustee Joshua Davidson wished both Mbawuike and Bloch luck and expressed his hope that both serve the campus successfully.

The message also said that 13 percent of student participation is something to be improved upon. He charged both Mbawuike and Bloch with fixing what he called an inefficient elections process that does not allow for maximum student participation.

"An election where roughly 13 percent of the student body votes means a loss for everyone," Davidson said. "The solution to this lack of voter participation is online elections. Plain and simple."

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

Holub on structure:

Admins. discuss progress in crisis

REORGANIZATION from page 2

"It's quite clear that the faculty still have some concerns," biology professor Randall Phillis said. "We are still eager that our opinions will be heard and considered carefully. But there does seem to be a trajectory about this whole process that is immutable."

Fountain presented the several reorganization alternatives to the Senate, mostly involving SBS and HFA.

"There are a lot of different opinions and not all are reconcilable," Holub told the senate regarding reorganization. "We have to keep ourselves open and rumble to a lot of things if we're going to be successful."

Additionally, Holub provided a brief update on the campus budget situation. Since federal stimulus has not yet been appropriated, the administration is formally proceeding with the creation of departmental budgets assuming the $46 million shortfall in funding.

No employees will be laid off on April 1 as previously feared, according to the Chancellor's current budgetary estimates.

Ben Williams contributed to this report.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu

editorial&opinion

"FREE SPEECH IS THE WHOLE THING, THE WHOLE BALL GAME. FREE SPEECH IS LIFE ITSELF" - SIR SALMAN RUSHDIE

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Words do not always speak louder than actions

Matthew Robare

I knew it. On Wednesday evening, on my way to a meeting, I went through the Student Union. I passed the Cape Cod Lounge where the Republican Club was setting up for Don Feder and went down the stairs, where I saw a cluster of people. As soon as I saw them, I knew they were going to crash the grand old party upstairs.

I wish I had seen the ferret, though. I've never seen one before. Ah well, can't have everything, I guess.

This brings me to today's main topic: hate crimes and the libertarian (Rothbardian anarcho-capitalist libertarian) views thereof. I imagine that most socially conservative libertarians would agree with the republicans that hate crimes are just an example of the curtailing of free speech.

Now, while there have been examples of that in other countries – for example, in Canada at least one person has been charged with a hate crime for defending a heterosexual definition of marriage. However, in the United States, the issue is more complex.

My libertarian political philosophy stipulates that the only two ways a crime can actually be committed are through the initiation/use of coercion against another person and through fraud. Laws that regulate moral standards, such as drug prohibition or forbidding same-sex marriage, are considered forms of coercion by the state because they interfere with a person's free choice.

Hate crimes are not usually classed with fraud, although discrimination could – provided the seller of the good or service in question advertised it as being available regardless of whatever categories with which people dehumanize other people – nor are they victimless crimes, like the morality laws I mentioned. Therefore, hate crimes must be considered under coercion –and the libertarian definition of coercion is still a thorny issue.

Coercion is usually defined as the use of some means to get someone else to do something involuntarily. Theft is a form of coercion, involving the involuntary relinquishing of legitimate property – that little talked of consequence of Rothbardian theory would be the return of all of the Americas to the original inhabitants, or rather, their descendents. So, do hate crimes constitute a form of coercion?

> So, do hate crimes constitute a form of coercion? I think they do.

I think they do. Hate crimes involving assault are obviously forms of coercion – being the involuntary sustainment of bodily injury, but a hate speech is another can of worms. Can language get someone to do something involuntarily? Can speech coerce people? More importantly, are harmful words the same as harmful actions?

As a writer, I know full well that words have power. They make us laugh, they make us cry, they make us angry and they calm us down. But the power of words still has as its source the mind of the reader or hearer.

Simon and Garfunkel said it best, "And in the naked light I saw/ Ten thousand people maybe more/ People talking without speaking/ People hearing without listening . . "

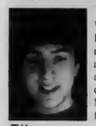
I once heard someone say that "In our society, if I feel threatened, I'm being threatened."

That is a fallacy. Feeling is not the same as being. Feeling is subjective – being is objective. I know that fact intimately from my own experience.

From early October to late February, I lived in an almost palpable darkness, a wasteland of despair and meaninglessness. I lived my life without really living it; it was like I was on autonastic pilot. More often, I felt completely separate from my body – like I was viewing everything through a veil or from far away.

I remember so many times when it was like physical pain, like I was seriously wounded in many places. I wanted it to end. I would have done anything to staunch the pain. I came face to face with my own limitations and called myself a coward for being unable to commit suicide.

There were times when I felt so worthless and alone and friendless, I would think that the only way to see who my real friends were would be to somehow see who came to my funeral. I suffered in silence so much that my friends who read this will be learning about this for the first time.



The point is, what I felt was different from the reality. I was never alone, nor was I really separate from my body.

As individuals we are responsible for our own actions. The provocative words of others or our feelings in response to the words of others – regardless of content – do not excuse us of this responsibility. To be called "fag" or "freeder" or "skinhead" or "pinko" or "kook" may feel threatening. It may even be shouted in your face with aggression dripping off each syllable, but that doesn't change the fact that words are words and not physical actions.

In 1966 Murray Rothbard wrote, "There is no point to a 'freedom of speech' that only permits people to say what you or I would like them to say. The only freedom of speech worth talking about is one that permits the speech of groups and ideologies that we hate." And that is the important thing to remember.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

Keeping Berkshire's nocturnal eating etiquette classy

Eli Gottlieb

I have to make a confession. When I wrote two weeks ago that Berkshire Dining Commons had instituted overly strict policies against alcohol being brought in and food being brought out, I was completely and utterly wrong. Not only was I outright wrong, I feel the need to issue a retraction.

What happened to convince me? I talked to Ryan, the manager of Berkshire.

He explained to me that the policy was originally created because students were drinking in Berkshire with extreme flagrancy during late night, and that the administration gave Berkshire the choice of either stopping the drinking or stopping late night.

He explained the exact level of flagrancy: students passing empty six-packs of beer cans into the kitchen on their trays and leaving open handles of liquor on their tables.

Apparently, Berkshire's workers allowed students eating at late night to store their bags in lockers if they liked, instead of leaving them out in the open. They really didn't care about small amounts of food "disappearing." In fact, I even heard that people used to come to late night drunk and get in fights that necessitated calling the police.

Still, somehow parents got to reading my inaccurate criticisms of the thing and complained that their poor, little children weren't able to get as much food as they needed. In fact, last I heard, campus outcry had somehow managed to get the "leave your bags at the door" policy repealed despite its having been in place for years.

> In fact, I even heard that people used to come to late night drunk and get in fights that necessitated calling the police.

Ryan even said that he originally worked at Worcester DC, where the students behave respectfully and helpfully. If Worcester's diners behave in a respectful, helpful fashion compared to the ones at Berkshire, we have a problem.

Look, everyone. I think it's time we all had a tiny bit of class and care for the university we attend and its facilities.

I know as well as you do that the facilities really don't amount to much sometimes. The plumbing leaks and the dryers don't actually dry in our dorms.

Departments that don't make a lot of money get stuck in a floor of some building somewhere, like Lederle. Dining-commons food always sucks, even when it's damn good compared to the other universities I visited back in senior year of high school.

The Student Government Association (SGA) does little to actually help out the student population, and somehow, all the state money for public higher education goes into new buildings – meanwhile I still can't get a meal on Orchard Hill or in Upper Central.

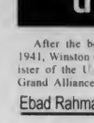
However, these things mean nothing if we students are at fault for the problems. If we litter on our campus, we must take the blame for its filth. If we drink in the dining commons and expect the workers there to clean up after us, we bear responsibility for the consequences when the DC must enact a stringent policy to prevent the kind of reckless, irresponsible things we do.

If we turn out in miniscule rates to vote for the SGA and never actually demand that it do anything at all for us, we must accept that it will become held hostage to the special interests that actually take an interest. If we forget that the people who take on the extra burden when we act irresponsibly are fellow students receiving a wage barely above minimum, we deserve so much less than we always receive from them.

In computer science we always make sure to apply the GIGO principle to our programs: "garbage in, garbage out." Every person with a bit of sense knows that this applies equally to life, computers, universities and almost everything else.

We don't need some dramatic campaign of volunteerism to make this university work more smoothly and more happily. We just need everyone to have a bit of this thing that once existed called "class."

Class means keeping your drinking on the down-low and not picking fights in a public place. Class means disposing of your garbage in a trash can or recycling bin and not giving university facilities crap their job description doesn't actually require them to handle. Class means having some basic respect and courtesy for the people who work here to make sure that we can get our educations in relative material comfort.



I've tried it – even when rearing drunk – and trust me, it helps. Hell, a long time ago and in a galaxy far, far away on a planet called "Sanity," class even made the opposite sex feel more attracted to you.

So, just think of what they think the next time you feel inclined to show off your lack of common humanity for others, and instead help someone out or something. The university wins, we students win and you win.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Support Israel: encourage them to give support

Ebad Rahman

After the bombings in Pearl Harbor in 1941, Winston Churchill, former prime minister of the U.K., wrote in his book "The Grand Alliance," "No American will think it wrong of me if I proclaim that to have the United States at our side was to me the greatest joy – I knew the United States was in the war, up to the neck and in to the death. So we had won after all!"

Churchill knew that, even though his ally was hurt, the U.S. held the key to bringing an end to the war, with its vast resources and brute force. It took the U.S. a threat to its self-interest to pressure it to do the right thing and use its might in unlocking peace.

Right now, Israel holds the key to bringing peace in the Middle East. Divestment pressure, like that from Hampshire College and pending legislation from the Student Government Association, will push Israel into unlocking peace.

Israel unquestionably holds enough power, militarily, economically and through its alliances that the stability of the region depends on how Israel chooses to act.

According to Infoplease.com, the Israeli "military spending in 2005 totaled $9.45 billion, which is equivalent to 7.7 percent of GDP, and represents 16.3 percent of government expenditures. The United States provides approximately $2.4 billion per year in security assistance."

> Like the Drunk Driving Prevention tagline: Friends don't let friends drive drunk. Israel is drunk with support and its upper-hand in the region and its supporters should call it out.

In terms of percent of GDP, its military ranks sixth in the world, according to the CIA World Factbook.

As for Israel's economy, the fact book stated that it has a GDP of $205.7 billion and a per capita GDP of $28,900. The Palestinians, however, have a skimpy GDP of $11.95 billion and a per capita GDP of $2,900.

Moreover, much of the Palestinian economy is contingent on Israel. The blockade around Gaza gives Israel control over what leaves and what enters. In the West Bank, Israel has checkpoints set up along the roads, which gives Israel the power to determine what enters and what leaves the West Bank.

The U.S. also gives Israel a lot of support, whether it is diplomatically through the U.N. or financially through aid. If Israel is strongly determined to pursue a peace process with Palestine, U.S. support is not far behind.

The Palestinian economy is in shambles, their capability of violence is insignificant, and they lack any force or structure to bring about peaceful change. Israel, on the other hand, has massive military and economic resources and the "unshakable" support of the U.S. to establish a solution agreeable to both sides.

Hamas has even proposed a peace plan which would establish a Palestinian State within 1967 borders, with Jerusalem and right of return for refugees.

Believing that Israel is incapable of bringing peace in its circumstance would be an insult.

Currently, the SGA is discussing whether to pass a resolution to divest UMass from war profiteering in the occupied territories. The deliberations began March 4 and will continue on March 25.

This resolution is necessary to pressuring Israel to pursue peace before it becomes too late. The divestment itself will not be significantly damaging to Israel, but it sends a strong message – particularly through the media – that they are being held accountable.

One of our greatest allies, the U.K., is even applying divestment pressure. On March 3, the U.K. government boycotted tycoon Lev Leviev, whose companies develop settlements in the West Bank. The U.K. citizenry cried out against Leviev when the U.K. embassy planned to move to a building owned by Leviev.

The move was cancelled and a powerful but specific message was sent to Israel – the U.K. does not support building settlements in the West Bank.

The resolution in the Senate will not place Israeli businesses in the crosshairs; it will, rather, target specific businesses that profit on the occupation. It will send a message from the university that we do not approve the occupation and will push Israel into pursuing a pence process.

This resolution is urgent – a Gallup poll reports a meager 29 percent of Israelis and 18 percent of Palestinians still hold on to hope for peace, and this was before the attack on Gaza. As the conflict rages on, more people will lose hope for peace and it will become less likely any reconciliation can be negotiated.

Divestment pressure will reinvigorate the peace process and bring hope to those who have lost it.

Supporters of Israel should be at the forefront of the divestment. Like the Drunk Driving Prevention tagline: Friends don't let friends drive drunk. Israel is drunk with support and its upper-hand in the region and its supporters should call it out.

We must understand that Israel is not infallible, and if we keep supporting Israel despite its wrongdoing, we let it justify doing something far worse in the future.

The ball is in Israel's court – let us push it to make the right decisions.

Ebad Rahman is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at erhahman@student.umass.edu.

Quarter-life crisis control

Rachel Dougherty

Three days before my twentieth birthday, I called up my friend and asked her if she wanted to go bungee jumping. After asking what it was about getting older that suddenly makes people want to hurl themselves off rock surfaces and out the backs of planes, she said something very wise.

"You're turning 20, not 40. Buy some cupcakes and leave me alone."

Cupcakes alone weren't enough to calm that feeling of panic, as the thought hit me that my last days of being a teenager were slipping through my fingers.

Goodbye to the days of blaming bad skin and irrational behavior on teenage hormones. Goodbye to Happy Meals and Pez and riding the toy cars at mini-malls. Well, maybe.

Childhood's really been gone for a while now, but turning 20 makes it grossly official.

My quarter-life crisis fast approaching, I began to reflect on what it means to be an adult. What does it mean to be 20 years old in America in 2009?

> After all, I've been kicking around for a solid two decades already. Shouldn't I at least have conquered a few kilos of Mesopotamia by now?

There are a lot of landmarks on the "journey" – or "train-wreck" – to adulthood. Thirteen was all about acne and shaving gel. Sixteen meant wheels. Eighteen means porn and lottery tickets, not to mention the beckoning freedoms of college life. At 21, you can drink. But what about 20? What illicit behaviors are permitted by the big 2-0?

Answer: nada.

That may be the real reason they keep the drinking age at 21; to give us something to look forward to after we turn 20. Even if fake IDs and fraternity parties have leeched away some of the anticipation of the big day, the idea of being able to go into a bar without worrying that some adult or cop will cause trouble, makes 21 one of those "woah" birthdays.

Twenty, too, is a "woah" birthday, but it's more like, "Woah, I'm 20 years old and I still have no idea what I want to do with my life." Twenty is the first freak-out birthday, the moment we realize the term "kid" doesn't really apply anymore and all the responsibilities of adult life begin to crash in on us.

Twenty is also when we start to feel the pressure to accomplish things, to make a name for ourselves. By the time they were 20, Mary Shelley had written and published the Gothic novel Frankenstein, Jean Piaget had a PhD, and Alexander the Great was leading an army into Mesopotamia.

Miley Cyrus has already launched a successful music, acting and fashion career – and she's only 16. Who knows what she'll be able to accomplish if she can stay off hard drugs long enough to reach 20.

Thinking about the lives of these great writers, thespians and dictators really puts things in perspective. After all, I've been kicking around for a solid two decades already. Shouldn't I at least have conquered a few kilos of Mesopotamia by now?

This kind of thinking is what led to the sudden interest in hungee jumping. After all, why wait until you look like Jack Nicholson to start living your bucket list?

Ultimately, though, turning 20 isn't about jumping off cliffs or conquering nations. Or even cupcakes and drinking.

Turning 20 is about becoming an adult, about accepting the responsibilities that come with that. Sometimes our lives are defined by what we do – and sometimes - by the things that are happening in the world around us.

I am 20 years old in the year 2009. I am coming of age in a time of war, environmental degradation and political radicalism.

We're about to inherit more than student loans and car payments. We're inheriting an economic recession, a housing crisis, two unsuccessful wars and that whole fantastic global warming thing.

For a generation of Americans turning 20, 21, 22, the problems facing the nation aren't political; they're personal.

More than half of college graduates ages 22-25 were unemployed in 2006, and this was before the economic collapse. This, more than anything, is what it means to be 20 years old in 2009.

But, hey, at least we have Bud Lite to look forward to.

Rachel Dougherty is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at rdougher@student.umass.edu.

More at DailyCollegian.com:
Readers Respond | Don Feder speech cancelled because of protest

COURTESY LAUREN GREENFIELD

"Girl Culture" and "Thin," two documentary projects by photographer, author and filmmaker Lauren Greenfield are currently on exhibition at the Smith College Museum of Art in Northampton. The exhibits implement both photographs and videos to examine conflicting societal messages.

The 'Thin' and narrow

Pair of exhibits highlight female societal pressures

By Nora Crocker
Collegian Correspondent

"Girl Culture" and "Thin," two documentary projects done by contemporary photographer, author and filmmaker Lauren Greenfield, are currently on exhibition at the Smith College Museum of Art in Northampton.

The pieces highlight the pressure girls feel to look a certain way in a society consumed by unattainable ideas of beauty. Both projects are series of photographs interspersed with words from and about the subjects. They are shown in conjunction with each other.

"Girl Culture" is shown in the first room. It begins with an overwhelmingly large photograph of Amelia, 15, who had been attending weight loss camp at the time. A few other photographs depict girls at weight loss camp. One is of young girls in their bathing suits. Weight loss camp is the only place they feel comfortable enough to wear them in public.

"[The photographs] are about what is private and what is public and where the line that divides the two lines lies, when that line exists at all anymore," Greenfield said in her statement, "Mirror, Mirror."

Young girls are common subjects of the photographs. One of the most arresting photographs is of Lily, then 5, in a belly-baring top shopping for clothes at Rachel London's Garden – a shop where Britney Spears has some of her clothes designed – in Los Angeles, Calif.

"I want to be famous so everyone can see my pretty face and my whole body. How I look and stuff. When I grow up, I'm going to be so cool," reads a quote from Lily.

Quite a few of the photographs depict mirrors and reflections. Greenfield understands that the image filtered through the mirror is open to many different interpretations. In her statement she says, "This project has been my mirror and my attempt to deconstruct the illusions that make up our reality."

Experiences that many girls go through – dances, weight issues, shopping, spring break, parties, unwanted attention from guys – and

See THIN on page 8

the source

PLANNING YOUR WEEKEND SO YOU DON'T HAVE TO.

SATURDAY

ENTER THE HAGGIS

CANADIAN-BASED CELTIC-ROCK BAND ENTER THE HAGIS WILL PERFORM SATURDAY AT THE PEARL STREET NIGHT CLUB IN NORTHAMPTON. THE EVENING SHOULD BE A PERFECT APPETIZER FOR ST PATRICK'S DAY

VENUE: PEARL STREET NIGHT CLUB
DOORS: 10:00 PM
PRICE: A. $17.50 - D. $20.00

BIG BAD BOLLOCKS

IF HAGGIS ISN'T YOUR FLAVOR HEAD OVER TO THE IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL WHERE ST PADDY'S DAY IS ALSO THE THEME. THE BIG BAD BOLLOCKS WILL PERFORM A GUINESS-AND-BUSHMILLS-INSPIRED SET FOR THE NORTHAMPTON FAITHFUL.

VENUE: IRON HORSE MUSIC HALL
DOORS: 7:00 PM
PRICE: $12.50 - $15.00

Nite Jewel dazzle dozen

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

Wednesday night Nite Jewel, Eric Hnatow, and Triangle Forest played at Smith College's Davis Ballroom to about 40 or 50 people, maximum. By the end there weren't even two dozen left standing.

It's really a shame that people didn't know about the show. The small turnout was likely due to one or more of three reasons: hyper-individualism, low publicity on the part of Smith's radio station WOZQ, who put on the event; or the fact that the show was scheduled during Smith midterm exams. There was far more space in that ballroom and there were certainly far, far more students both at Smith and in the area that would have had a blast if they forked over the mere $5 for entry.

Triangle Forest opened, but the show would have been better if they hadn't even played. It was embarrassing watching the trio churn out song after song, each sounding exactly like the one preceding. To top it off, there was no drum set, just a man sitting behind a drum-pad and a kick-drum-pad clicking out what could have easily been pounded out on an actual set. This faux-instrumentation was supplemented by some sort of robot guitar, as well as a robotic vocal manipulation. At least the Chromeo-sounding voice was a break from the singer's grating whine, which resembled the pompous sneer of Spoon's Britt Daniel.

All this boredom wasn't helped by the two keyboard players just standing there like mannequins. You'd think these electronics buffs would have all their gear's inner workings down, but there were multiple malfunctions which they blatantly let everyone know about.

Mr. Hnatow went on next, which the crowd welcomed. "I don't want to be the main feature," Eric said, and while he wasn't, he was more entertaining than the first act. He played songs from his newest E.P. which were exceedingly fun, glitchy, heavy and spacey.

He donned his Christmas-light-coated sweatshirt and reached for the ceiling while he jerked about. The jacket is coming to be a real trademark even though he only wears it for one song before peeling it off and leaving it on his table of devices, illuminating the board.

Wednesday he busted out a rap that his brother Tim wrote, which he delivered unintelligibly while running and place and generally flailing. The best part about Hnatow's sets is he keeps getting better. And what's not to love when the guy keeps all his handmade posters from past shows and gives them out for free at each show, along with stickers, pins and glow-in-the-dark patches.

By the time Nite Jewel went on, hardly any of the crowd remained. It wasn't even late, but everyone was sleeping on the show. The unexpectedly short Ramona Gonzalez, along with her tall companion, lived up to the sound of her record "Good Evening." While the two basically just stood and rocked back and forth (one of the issues with Triangle Forest), they were endlessly mesmerizing.

After their first song Gonzalez prematurely blurted out "I'm gonna play a few more songs," a dry take on bands' tendencies to stick around on stage for too long after saying they're almost done (which Triangle Forest did earlier). They played many more, including new tracks appearing on a new 12" as well as favorites from "Good Evening" (Human Ear Music) such as "Weak For Me," "Chimera" and "Lover," which ended the set.

After shows at South by Southwest, Gonzalez must go back to L.A. to finish her last semester at Occidental College. Hopefully after school she keeps on with the sleepy dance jams because everyone can use a soundtrack to a warm, streetlamp-lit summer night, and the sounds of "Good Evening" are perfect for such an instance.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

COURTESY SUBMITTED PHOTO

Local musician Eric Hnatow and his now-trademark Christmas-light coated sweatshirt were one of the highlights Wednesday night.

PARKING SERVICES
REGULATION REMINDER

Effective immediately, Parking Services is returning to regular hours of parking enforcement. The hours are from 7:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday. Valid UMASS parking permits are required in all parking lots, with the exception of metered lots. Metered lots are enforced for payment from 9:00 a.m. to 5:00 p.m., Monday through Friday.

From 5:00 p.m. to 7:00 a.m., Monday through Friday, on weekends and on holidays, vehicles may park in any legal, non-reserved, non-restricted parking space or lot without displaying a permit. Reserved and restricted parking spaces or lots always require display of a valid permit. These spaces/lots include handicapped spaces, vendor spaces, state vehicle spaces and 24-hour restricted lots (specifically Lots 21, 22, 29, 36, 44, 46, 49, 50, 54, 64P, 67, North Village Apts. and Lincoln Apts.). Parking is never allowed in a tow zone, fire lane, or access lane. For more information, please visit our website http://parking.umass.edu or call Parking Services at 413-545-0065.

'Kings' is royally weird

By Robert Lloyd
Los Angeles Times

HOLLYWOOD — "Kings," which begins Sunday on NBC, is certainly the strangest series to be offered by a major network in this slowly unrolling winter season, a parallel-world modernizing of the biblical story of King Saul and little David, who with his sling slew Goliath and later became king himself. (Goliath in this case is the name of a kind of tank, and the sling is a bazooka.)

Playing like some weird mix of "Dirty Sexy Money" and "Battlestar Galactica" – though I doubt that was the pitch – it is an interesting muddle of a show, smart and silly by turns. It's corny, ponderous, literary, ambitious, obvious and, at the beginning at least, as slow as molasses, but continually re-energized by Ian McShane as King Saul, or, as he's known here, King Silas Benjamin, possibly because Saul Benjamin sounded too Jewish.

Whatever religion these people practice — and there is a lot of calling on God, and the winning and losing of his favor — it isn't the one followed by the authors of the Old Testament. The King's brood is solidly Anglo-Saxon, or whatever they'd call it in this world. Country boy David (Chris Egan), who is called David Shepherd — you know why that is, Sunday schoolers — comes right out of a Norman Rockwell farmhouse. And the prophet Samuel has become the Rev. Samuels (Farmonn Walker), whose presence speaks Black Church — although Jesus isn't a player in this realm, either. There are mystical butterflies, however: the sign that showed Silas his destiny and the sign that shows Silas David's destiny.

As Saul was the first king of Israel, so King Silas has created a new nation, Gilboa, and raised a great city, Shiloh, from which to rule it. (Shiloh is basically New York with digital alterations.) The people, seen in great computer-animated crowds, make happy sounds, even though a war is still being fought against the kingdom of Gath, a few hours away. (It's as though the United States were at war with Canada, if Canada were more like Russia. Gath has a "premier" and a military culture.) It's in this war that David not only slays a Goliath, but rescues the king's son, Jack (Sebastian Stan) and so becomes a media star and a threat to the king.

"Kings" is naturally a little more elaborate than biblical version, which is pretty much a sketch. It doesn't recast biblical themes so much as realize a Neat Idea. I picture creator Michael Green, who worked formerly on "Heroes," coming up with it while sitting through the haphtara at some friend's child's bar mitzvah. Catching the concordances can make for a fun game: David, a harper in the Bible, becomes a pianist (they have Beethoven in this world). "Saul has slain his thousands, David his 10 thousands" becomes "I see Silas commands his

See KINGS on page 8

COURTESY LAUREN GREENFIELD

"Thin" features a variety of photographs by Lauren Greenfield. In this image, Erin, 24, is blind-weighed at an eating disorders clinic in Coconut Grove, Florida. This is done to ensure she does not see her weight gain.

Examining 'Girl Culture'

THIN from page 6

the way physical appearance plays into them are represented in "Girl Culture." It is the depiction of these experiences that sets the context for the adjacent project, "Thin," which is a shocking look at what happens when girls are pushed to far.

Between the years 2004 and 2006, Greenfield spent her time completing the documentary project "Thin," at Renfrew, a treatment center for girls with eating disorders. Accompanying the photographs is the film "Thin," which follows the story of four patients: Shelly, Brittany, Alisa, and Polly Ann.

The series begins with a photograph of Shelly, 25, with a feeding tube inserted into her emaciated stomach. Surprisingly, it is not the most disturbing photograph.

Brittany, 15, was photographed with her mother, who also struggles with anorexia nervosa.

"We do this thing called Chew and Spit. We would have the greatest time with it. We would buy bags and bags of candy and just chew and spit it out," reads the statement.

The back wall is lined with huge close-ups of Renfrew patients, all looking sad and displaced. Though small in body type, the grave looks on their faces, along with the immensity of the photographs, overpower and command the audience to contemplate the struggles they have faced.

Many of the photographed subjects have been through significant trauma, such as rape and abuse, and suffer from depression or other mental disorders. Some self-mutilate, which is captured in a few haunting images. One is of a girl with horizontal scars up and down her arms and legs. Her face is visibly wet with tears.

The exhibition ends with photographs of Polly Ann, to whom "Thin" is dedicated. Polly Ann died from an overdose of sleeping pills in 2008 at the age of 33. It is said that her suicide was a result of her struggles with anorexia.

Lauren Greenfield is the author of "Fast Forward," "Girl Culture" and "Thin." She was named by "American Photo" as one of the 25 most influential photographers today. In 2004, Greenfield directed and produced "Thin," which earned her an Emmy nomination for Best Direction. Her second film, "kids + money," won the Audience Award at the American Film Institute Film Festival and the Michael Moore Award for Best Documentary at the Ann Arbor Film Festival. Her projects, "Girl Culture" and "Thin," are on exhibition at the Smith College Museum of Art until April 26.

It is increasingly important to analyze and critique a culture that continues to emphasize the outer appearance of females. "The body has become the primary canvas on which girls express their identities, insecurities, ambitions, and struggles," Greenfield has said. "[It] has become a palimpsest on which many of our culture's conflicting messages about femininity are written and rewritten."

"Thin" and "Girl Culture" are on exhibition at the Smith College Museum of Art in Northampton until April 26. The museum is open Tuesday-Saurdayt 10-4 and Sunday 12-4. Cost is $5 for adults, $4 for seniors (65+), $3 for students (13+ with ID) and $2 for youth (6-12). Admission is free for Five College students and faculty and for children 5 and under. It is free to all on the second Friday of the month, 4-8 p.m.

Nora Crocker can be reached at ncrocker@student.umass.edu.

NBC's newest an odd addition

KINGS from page 7

thousands while David brings his hundred thousands," referring to the money donors who are willing to pay to sit next to each at a ballet opening. There are also what strike me as references to contemporary Middle East politics (and a pair of Shakespearean clowns as palace guards).

But if you factor out the references, you're left with a fairly typical rich-and-powerful-big-family soap opera, peopled with familiar types doing largely predictable things. Son Jack, once rescued and home, turns out to be a bit like "Gossip Girl" antihero Chuck Bass, angry, dissolute, full of issues; daughter Michelle (Allison Miller), a health-care activist who likes David, returns again and again to unsuccessfully petition her father in his court overlooking what we in this world know as Columbus Circle. Wife Rose (Susanna Thompson) is a subtle power behind the throne, whose brother (Dylan Baker) controls the treasury through his very own military-industrial complex.

It can all get a little pretentious. Green's language ships into King James Bible cadences and poetic word inversions. Sometimes it gets away from him completely, as in David's peacemaking speech to the Gaths, overwrought and overwritten and, in any case, delivered to an audience too far away to hear him, even if they weren't sitting inside tanks. Although they somehow do.

And yet McShane is equal to the script's most extreme theatricality. He's an actor with whom age agrees, his prettiness having fallen away to reveal the substance below, every line on his face conferring an extra degree of authority, amplified by a voice that smacks of Scotch, black coffee and handfuls of earth. Rather like his Al Swearengen on "Deadwood," McShane's Silas is a man who identifies his own fortunes with that of his country, to the point that he has no compunction over putting his enemies away. But he's also full of humor and love, and is far and away the best reason to check this odd thing out.

(MCT)

Christopher Egan stars as David Shepherd in NBC drama series, "Kings," airing March 15 on NBC (8-10 p.m.).

White shows off his newest stripe

White Stripes frontman unveils newest side project

By Randy Lewis
Los Angeles Times

NASHVILLE, Tenn. — Jack White took the wraps off his new band here Wednesday night, launching Phase 3 of his ever-evolving career with a 20-minute live performance by Dead Weather, fronted by the Kills singer Alison Mosshart, at the site of his new Third Man Records headquarters.

The private show, attended by about 150 invitees, took place in the downtown building that houses not only the label's offices but a performance space, a record store specializing in vinyl, a photo studio and a darkroom.

White and Mosshart are joined in the new group by two of White's Raconteurs band mates, guitarist Dean Fertita (also from Queens of the Stone Age) and bassist Jack Lawrence.

During the four-song set, Mosshart writhed at the mike while Fertita and Lawrence provided the heavy blues-rock groove on sibling white single-cutaway Gretsch hollow-body guitar and bass. Mosshart joined them with a matching white Bo Diddley cigar-box guitar for "So Far From Your Weapon."

White took his place at the drums, the instrument on which he first learned to play music. He came out from behind his kit just once, duetting at the mike with Mosshart on "Weapon."

The band's debut album, "Horehound," is due in June, and the first single will be "Hang You From the Heavens," which Third Man is issuing on a 7-inch vinyl single as well as making it available for download.

Before the performance, White, outfitted head to toe in black, said that he had wanted to put together a multifaceted space like the one he's created for Third Man for some time but that his myriad musical pursuits had proved too much of a distraction.

"I've been wanting to do this for eight years, but it's taken that long to have enough time — and I mean like 15 minutes," White, 33, said, as guests, including Sheryl Crow and Martina McBride, chatted in the complex's kitchen-lounge, which was decorated with a '40s and '50s retro vibe.

"He said Third Man would focus mainly on his musical projects. He aims to reissue whatever music of his own that's out of print as well as recordings that are out of circulation, and he spoke energetically about restoring some of the physical component of experiencing music that's been lost in the age of downloading and what he calls "invisible music."

"Only 20 percent of music released during the 20th century is available right now," White said. "That's a lot of music that's getting lost."

It was easy to get lost in "Horehound" during Wednesday's listening session. The album was cranked close to the pain threshold on monstrous vintage McIntosh tube stereo amplifiers, one of them whimsically relabeled a "JackIntosh."

White, who has a penchant for vintage country-western clothing, has managed to find considerable inspiration in his adopted hometown of Nashville. He has recorded much of his work with the Raconteurs here, as well as the 2004 album he played on and produced for Loretta Lynn, "Van Lear Rose."

He bought a house in 2005 for a reported $3.1 million — painting the front door and chimney White Stripes red and establishing Music City as his new home with his wife, supermodel Karen Elson, and their two young children.

He turned most of his attention to the Raconteurs after White Stripes drummer Meg White pulled out of a planned 2007 tour because of sudden-onset anxiety. But the duo reportedly has been recording periodically and resurfaced for a performance on "Late Night with Conan O'Brien" for the host's final show before taking over "The Tonight Show."

Meg White, along with the Raconteurs' Brendan Benson, was on hand Wednesday to show support for Dead Weather, which has more in common sonically with the stripped-down White Stripes and, occasionally, the sinister rock of the Kills than with the Raconteurs.

The shy White Stripes percussionist wasn't talking, but her manager said the duo was alive and well. "They've made a movie and there will be a new album out, probably next year," Ian Montone said.

Jack White's multipronged approach to musicmaking has made him the poster boy for a new millennial model in which musicians develop different forums for their creative impulses.

Ultimately, his experiment to build a company that can usher music directly from those who create it to those who want to hear it faces the same question Dead Weather poses in the closing track of "Horehound":

"When I set sail / Will there be enough wind? … Will there be enough water / When my ship comes in?"

(MCT)

Jack White performed with his newest band, Dead Weather, Wednesday night in front of 150 invitees at the site of his new Third Man Records headquarters in Nashville, Tenn.

Irish Student Union hosts party

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

You may know the Commonwealth Room as something else. Most of you have heard it called Earthfoods Café. Others, like myself until Wednesday night, have never stepped inside of the small dining area.

Wednesday night the café was unrecognizable to even the most avid of patrons. The room, which usually serves vegetarian entrees, fruits and vegetables, was decorated in green, with small square replica Irish flags hanging from the doorways and across tables.

The Commonwealth Room was transformed into a makeshift musical venue for the second annual Irish Student Union's St. Patrick's Day party.

From 7 p.m. to a little past 11 there was music, dancing, storytelling and of course, singing.

The beginning of the night featured six members of a band called Tir na nOg, or Land of Eternal Youth. The talented Irish band played an hour set containing classic songs such as "Mason's Apron" and "Swinging on a Gate."

Amanda Bernhard, a fiddle player in the band, also displayed her expert vocal range in an all-Gaelic tune near the end of their set. Another member of the band, Gregory J. Dorchak, a fiddle player as well, is a grad student at UMass who teaches a public speaking class at the university. Most of the band's members perform on Thursday and Friday nights at the North Amherst bar The Harp.

"I've been playing a long time … probably [since] around the fourth grade," said Dorchak. "It's just something that I grew up with. You have to be persistent … it takes a while before anything you play starts sounding like music."

While the next band, King Falcon, set up, the ISU's treasurer, Devon Courtney, courageously performed a couple of his own renditions of the popular Irish songs "Finnegan's Wake," "Wild Rover" and "Whiskey in the Jar." The recent graduate then told some classic Irish jokes and proverbs to the delight of the crowd.

In almost perfect harmony, as King Falcon was about to take the stage, 20 students entered the room to enjoy the party. The band, made up entirely of UMass students, entertained the crowd for 30 minutes with smooth vocals and rhythms that practically forced everyone to clap their hands and stomp their feet. Although the band didn't play a single Irish tune, the group claimed their cultural relevance in their attire (a Celtic Football Club jersey) and in a band member's first name, Seamus.

For a perfect closing to the night, the crowd welcomed a group of UMass Irish Step Dancers. The group of six girls danced until they literally had no energy. They performed a traditional three-tunes Irish dance, a double forehand choreographed slip jig, a treble reel, a hard reel and an a cappella finale by the group's two most experienced dancers.

The head of the group, Bill Quinn, has been dancing for about 20 years. But after the first dance Quinn decided to let the girls take over the crowd. His wife, Mary, is an instructor at the Daddaigh School of Irish Dance, located in Springfield, Mass.

If you're interested in learning how to Irish step dance, you can go to the Newman Center every Wednesday night where it only costs $5 for one hour.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

ARTS & LIVING IS HIRING!

CD Reviewers,
Movie Reviewers,
Fashion Writers!

INTERESTED?
ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.

There's always next year

High and lows and my experience

P.J. STAVELEY/COLLEGIAN

Derek Kellogg probably had the same sort of expression on his face in UMass' Atlantic 10 Tournament loss Wednesday night against Duquesne.

Scott Feldman

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — So this year wasn't so hot for the Minutemen, but what did everyone really expect?

The team lost three seniors, including Gary Forbes, the centerpiece of the offense. UMass was forced to hire a new coach after Travis Ford's unexpected (and classless) leap to Oklahoma State, and they had to play one of the toughest schedules in the country.

It was definitely an adjustment for everyone on the team, getting used to Ford's style of coaching, then suddenly having to learn new coach Derek Kellogg's system.

Ultimately, it was too much for UMass to handle this season, as they suffered what felt like 100 agonizingly close losses and brutal shooting slumps that always seemed to happen in the last five minutes.

It made an especially frustrating year for the seniors, which culminated in Luke Bonner's flagrant foul against Duquesne's Aaron Jackson near the end of UMass' exit from the tournament. The foul, which split Jackson's nose, came after UMass had erased a 19-point deficit in the first half, only to fall in the final minutes.

Stumbling late seemed to be the theme of the year. The first game at the Mullins Center set the tone for the 2008-09 Season. Holding a five-point lead with 26 seconds left in the game and possession, UMass somehow allowed six unanswered points to drop a shocking 70-69 loss.

The Minutemen had a lot of talent, but were terribly inconsistent all year. It was maddening to watch games because no one ever new what to expect. Some games, they looked like a program that was on the verge of being elite, such as Temple and Xavier. Other games they looked like they should drop down to division two in blowout losses to Vanderbilt and Houston.

Now don't get me wrong, I know there were bright spots in the season. An awesome one-point victory over defending National Champion Kansas, a near upset against Xavier, wins over the 2-6 seeded teams in the Atlantic 10 including a beatdown of Dayton in Derek Kellogg's hometown of Springfield, and two game-winning plays by Chris Lowe against Saint Joseph's and Rhode Island.

And that's without even mentioning the massive improvement of senior forward Tony Gaffney, which is another story in itself.

Despite those positives, a 12-18 overall record and yet another one-day stay in the conference tournament has me feeling pretty safe that everyone involved in Massachusetts basketball can't wait for next year, and sincerely believe themselves when they say they are better than their record.

The returning players should feel more comfortable with Kellogg's approach now that they know what to expect, new recruits are coming in, which are likely to fit in Kellogg's system, guards Ricky Harris and Anthony Gurley are returning, and Matt Hill will be back from his ACL injury.

I could see UMass doing next year what Duquesne has done this year. Combine a run-and-gun offense, experienced play at the guards, one athletic big man, get lucky with an impact freshman or two and a team can go from 12-18 to something like 23-8 in a heartbeat.

Now for a few of my personal thoughts on the season. UMass were always exciting watch and cover. And while Kellogg has not been the head coach long enough for me to assess his coaching ability, I can assure everyone he is one of the nicest guys I've ever met and always good to talk to. (Soccer coach Sam Koch is still No. 1 though).

The seniors, especially Lowe and Gaffney were among the most quotable athletes I've ever met and they showed some real leadership keeping the team focused during some dark days.

Ask any craps player worth his salt, it only takes one good roll of the dice to change your luck. I'm learning that firsthand.

Stuff I learned on the boardwalk

I officially hate Duquesne fans, which spent the entire game vs. URI whining about the game being fixed while they were winning!

I hate my partner Jeff Lamard for writing an article talking about me winning before we left the casino. He might as well have put a voodoo hex on me.

The value of money is seriously warped in a casino. A 5$ chip is a "nickel," a 25$ chip is a "quarter," and people are totally fine losing 500$ in five seconds. It's surreal.

I will be in work hours after I leave Atlantic City. I will almost certainly be a hot mess.

Complimentary Jack Daniels is both the best blessing and the worst curse there is.

If you see a homeless man with a boom box dancing to "You know you got it girl," you are probably walking in the wrong direction.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

CINEMARK®
The Best Seat In Town
Advance tickets & showtimes available online at cinemark.com
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. • 1-800-FANDANGO + Exp 1118#
EARLY BIRD SPECIAL M-F, 1ST MATINEE SHOWTIME $5.00
ADULT MATINEE BEFORE 6PM $6.25 • STUDENT $7.00 (WITH ID)
$5 Tuesdays are back!! All shows all day are $5!!

◆ RACE TO WITCH MOUNTAIN [PG] 130 420 710 935
◆ LAST HOUSE ON THE LEFT [R] 135 435 735 1025
◆ MISS MARCH [R] 105 410 715 955
◆ CORALINE 3D[PG] 140 650
◆ WATCHMEN [R] 145 330 515 700 845 1030
◆ JONAS BROTHERS 3D CONCERT MOVIE [G] 4:50 9:20 - Tickets $15
◆ FIRED UP [PG13] 150 440 745 1005
◆ GRAN TORINO [R] 115 415 705 950
◆ CONFESSIONS OF A SHOPAHOLIC [PG]145 430 725 1000
◆ HE'S JUST NOT THAT INTO YOU [PG13] 100 400 705 1010
◆ TAKEN [PG13] 110 425 730 1020
◆ PAUL BLART MALL COP [PG] 125 445 720 945

MET OPERA 3/18/09
MADAMA BUTTERFLY Encore 7pm

Senior Show 3/19/09 10am
CONFESSIONS OF A SHOPAHOLIC

CREDIT CARDS ACCEPTED
◆ NO PASSES-NO CLASSIC SUPERSAVERS

CHECK OUT
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN SPORTS PODCAST @
www.dailycollegian.com

JENNA GELSOMINO/COLLEGIAN

Senior Jim MacDonald is hitting .250 with one double and three RBIs in UMass' six games this season. The Minutemen take on Navy and Monmouth this weekend.

Pitching and defense stressed this weekend

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

Productivity on offense early in the season is paying off for the Massachusetts baseball team.

The Minutemen will hope to see that productivity continue this weekend when they travel to Annapolis, Md., to square off against Monmouth and Navy.

Monmouth (1-6) has been outscored 59-38 and has struck out 50 times as a team this season while the Minutemen have only 36. Monmouth isn't doing much when they put the ball in play, either. The Hawks have 15 extra-bases hits and nearly one-third of them are due to outfielder Paul Bottigliero's three home runs.

Bottigliero also leads Monmouth in RBIs, with 12, but he's also tied for second on the team with seven strikeouts. He also has triple the number of RBIs of his teammates.

The Minutemen are having better luck than Monmouth this season when attempting to advance the runner. Four UMass players all have had at least eight successful steals when trying to move the man on base. Both infielders Adam Tempesta (7) and Austin Weymouth (6) have at least five hits with runners in scoring position.

Tempesta and junior Mike Donato lead UMass in hits and each player adds their own unique flair to the game.

"He's off to a great start," UMass coach Mike Stone said of Donato's production this season. "He's had great RBI production in terms of the opportunities he's gotten. Adam is a veteran who you can rely on for four years. He's a tough hitter, plays great defense and is a real competitor."

Tempesta is a speedy player, getting on base mostly by singles and doubles. Tempesta also brings a tremendous defensive presence to the team.

Last season, Tempesta turned 22 double plays with only six errors. He also led the team with 45 RBIs, nearly 20 more than any other Minuteman.

Donato is a player who is more of a power hitter for UMass. He's already feasting on right-handed pitchers, getting 10 hits in six games. His four doubles lead the team and he had a key homerun last weekend against Arizona (8-7). The score was 8-5 until Donato ripped a solo shot off Wildcat closer Jason Stoffel.

Hopefully Stone won't need those kinds of late-inning heroics against Navy (4-5-1). The Midshipmen are a team that thrives off of its starting pitching because their bullpen is performing poorly so far this season. Navy relievers are responsible for giving up 20 runs this season.

Despite the nine strikeout, one earned run effort by senior pitcher Mitchell Clegg against Arizona, many members of the UMass pitching staff have been roughed up lately. Junior Jared Freni has three hit batsmen and leads team in walks with six. Sophomore reliever Garrett Butt gave up four runs in one appearance without recording a strikeout.

The Midshipmen are a fast team with impressive base-running skill. Navy has 21 stolen bases as a team and infielder Kendall Bolt has four of those steals this season. Bolt leads the team with 13 RBIs and 12 hits but he also has four errors for the Midshipmen. However, the fact that Navy has played four more games than the Minutemen also plays a factor in these statistics.

Due to the cold weather of the Northeast, teams like UMass get less playing time and are at a disadvantage when they play teams like Navy and Arizona – who play in warmer weather.

"We've got some tough opponents ahead of us," Stone said. "We've got nine games in eight days so we've got to be ready to go. We're a little bit banged up right now but hopefully we'll be ready to go by the weekend."

UMass' game on Saturday against Monmouth starts at 11 a.m. and the game against Navy starts at 2 p.m. Sunday's game against Monmouth starts again at 11 a.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN FEDOR/COLLEGIAN

Senior Carly Morin could play a pivotal part in the Minutewomen's success this weekend. UMass plays five games this weekend in Clearwater, Fla.

Weekend in Florida

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

Heading into spring break, students usually have hard work located somewhere in the rear closet of their minds. But for the Massachusetts softball team, their mindset has to stay the same – concentrated and competitive.

The No. 14 Minutewomen are coming off possibly their most impressive weekend, sweeping the NFCA Leadoff Classic in Columbus, Ga., from Feb. 27 to Feb.28. UMass was led by Brandice Balschmiter's two complete-game shutouts, where she struck out 13 while only walking three as the Minutewomen beat Nebraska, 3-0, and DePaul, 2-0.

This weekend, like the past two its played, UM ass heads back down south to Clearwater, Fla., for a five-game set.

UMass (8-4) begins its weekend taking on Central Michigan (4-8) Friday afternoon at 1 p.m.

The Minutewomen will likely face the Chippewas' star pitcher, Ali Pettit. The senior pitched her first perfect game a week ago against Columbia. Pettit has a 2-4 record and a 1.33 earned-run average in her seven appearances this season.

Early Friday evening UMass takes on a tough University of South Florida team at 6 p.m. The Bulls (19-10), are playing hot as of late. USF has won seven of its last eight, including last Tuesday's day-night doubleheader with UConn, keeping the Huskies scoreless in both games.

UMass will have to watch out for the power that the Bulls carry in their lineup. USF has two players with three home runs and five players that have more than 10 runs batted in. But hitting isn't the team's only strength; USF doesn't have a pitcher with an ERA over 2.70.

If the Minutewomen want to beat the Bulls then perhaps playing small ball would be their main priority.

The games continue on Saturday morning at 11 a.m., with UMass taking on Loyola Marymount. Much like UMass, LMU goes into the Sunshine State playing in its final tournament of the regular season. The Lions (11-13) have had a tough go of it lately, going 2-5 in their last seven games.

LMU's schedule this weekend isn't any easier. The Lions play three teams that made it to the NCAA Regionals last year.

Almost as soon as UMass' game against LMU ends its next begins. The Minutewomen take on a hot Jacksonville team that has won eight of its last 11 games including a sweep over Liberty last Monday.

Unique to college softball is the three-pitcher starting rotation, which the Dolphins currently use. Ashley Eliasson, Karla Pittman and Melissa Dowling have started the vast majority of the games for JU. All three pitchers have an earned run average under 2.50 and boast nine complete games between them.

In the final game of the tournament the Minutewomen take on their toughest test, Florida Gulf Coast. The Eagles (25-4) have won their last 17 games, four of those being shutouts. Cheyenne Jenks, the Eagles' third baseman, has hit 14 home runs to go along with 45 RBIs and a .506 batting average.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@dailycollegian.com.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa

Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

UMass to play No. 13 Brown

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

Every game this season has been the opposite of last season's result for the No. 14 Massachusetts men's lacrosse team. Although UMass coach Greg Cannella isn't superstitious, the Minutemen will benefit if the current trend continues.

A win on Saturday over No. 13 Brown would give UMass (3-2) a crucial win heading into conference play. The Minutemen will host the Bears (3-1) at 2 p.m. in their first home game since Feb. 28.

"[Brown] is a very good team, very disciplined team and excellent defensive team," Cannella said. "They have a fantastic attack that is comprised of five guys."

Thomas Muldoon, Jack Walsh, Kyle Hollingsworth, Collins Carey and Andrew Feinberg lead Brown's offense and have scored 29 of Brown's 42 goals, including Feinberg's team-high 12 tallies.

"[Feinberg] is probably one of the best inside guys we'll face all year," said Cannella. "He's nonstop, first of all, and he's got a knack to get open and get a shot off inside. He's a really smart player."

Of the 42 goals Brown has scored, only 12 of them have been unassisted.

"They are very unselfish as a group," Cannella said. "It looks like they are doing a lot of pick-and-roll stuff where you move the ball and look for another pass. I think they have a great understanding of what they want to accomplish against certain teams and where they are sliding from."

Besides a strong attack, Brown has one of the top goalkeepers in the country in Jordan Burke. He has allowed 36 goals, averaging 8.79 per game and has a .544 save percentage.

"[Brown] has a really good goalie that's been really consistent over his career. He's left-handed so it's a little bit different look for our guys," Cannella said. "[He's] a really good athlete. He stands in there and commands the defense. He has a lot of respect from his teammates and UMass as well."

Brown is known to be strong with its man-up opportunities, going 9-for-19 on the advantage (47 percent). Six of the nine man-up goals were scored against Denver in Brown's 12-11 win on March 8.

The last time Brown and UMass matched up was on March 15, 2008, in the lowest-scoring game for UMass since 1966 (a 3-1 win over MIT). Brown defeated the Minutemen, 4-3.

"You would expect [a similar game] but you never know. It could be 15-14," Cannella said. "For our liking it would be a higher-scoring game."

The Minutemen are coming off of a 12-9 loss at Albany on Tuesday. But last Saturday the Minutemen had a successful showing in their 7-3 win over then- No. 12 Harvard.

"Even in our two losses (March 10 at Albany and a 11-10 loss at Hofstra) I think we've played well other than a few mental mistakes, so it is crucial for this weekend and for the rest of the season to play at a high level and that's really all we ask our guys to do," Cannella said. "I think it's important to play at a high level for every game. With the ECAC it shouldn't be any different than the non-league games we prepare for."

This is the Minutemen's last game before Eastern College Athletic Conference play begins on March 21 against Loyola.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@dailycollegian.com.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Senior Evan Blum has five goals through three games this season. The Minutemen take on Brown, Saturday in Amherst, Mass at 2 p.m.

UM takes on slumping Stony Brook

By Holly J. Galvin
Collegian Staff

Call it a warm-up lap. This Saturday the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team will have one last chance to face a sub .500 opponent at McGuirk Stadium before taking on two Top 20 teams in a row.

The challenging UMass schedule includes an evening date with the nation's top team (No. 1 Northwestern) immediately after spring break, following a road rivalry game at No. 13 New Hampshire.

Yet in the wake of offensive adversity during Wednesday's loss at Yale, UMass coach Alexis Venechanos and the Minutewomen aren't taking any opponent lightly, and for good reason.

After a seven-day break prior to the Yale loss, a refreshed UMass (2-4) will be home for its second game in four days against a team with a similarly mediocre record: 3-4 Stony Brook. Coping with an inconsistent offense, Venechanos will look to her attacking defenders to get into the offensive mix Saturday.

"Our defense in the second half [of the Yale game], especially the last 20 minutes, buckled down," the third-year coach noted, tempering her comments by saying the attacking portion of the defense, "needed to step up their game in order to beat a team like Yale."

For better or worse, Stony Brook would have fit the description of "a team like Yale," had it not beaten the Bulldogs by a five-goal differential just a week ago. In fact, the Seawolves are on a roll and riding a two-game winning streak. Showing what they can do to a similarly average team, Stony Brook outshot its last opponent (1-3 Sacred Heart) 42-29, netting almost half (20 goals).

Stony Brook's potent shooting of late offers a stark contrast to UMass' scoring struggles. Though the Minutewomen outshot Yale by a ratio of nearly 2:1 Wednesday, UMass only converted four of its 24 shots.

"We had problems shooting [Wednesday] and I think that was the biggest thing," Venechanos said. "We've probably gotten the same amount of shots off the last two games."

One person intensely familiar with UMass' current offensive-defensive discrepancy is freshman goalkeeper Katie Florence, who continues to play solidly despite UMass' struggles to find the back of the net on the other end.

"Florence didn't get as many shots as she's seen in the past," Venechanos explained. "I felt she played huge. She made some saves to keep us in the game. Early on, Yale could've gone up by four or five goals. [Florence] kept us in the game."

In goal for the Seawolves will be junior Mickey Cahill, who has come up big for Stony Brook. Cahill made two game-clinching saves in the final 20 seconds to preserve Stony Brook's recent one-goal victory at Le Moyne. Cahill, a transfer from Boston College who did not play lacrosse at her former school, is coming off a 12-save performance versus Sacred Heart.

The Seawolves dominated SHU on offense in their most recent performance, with three players finding the back of the net over four times each.

For a freshly motivated UMass team that is 1-0 at McGuirk this season, Venechanos remains confident.

"As far as being able to bounce back, I'm confident that we'll be prepared," she said.

Holly J. Galvin can be reached at hgalvin@student.umass.edu.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Merritt Cosgrove has three goals in six games played for the Minutewomen. The junior also ranks among the UMass leaders in shots on goal with 10.

UMass not only AC loser

Jeffrey R. Larnard

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. — Not everyone from the University of Massachusetts might be leaving the Atlantic 10 Tournament and Atlantic City as losers.

Well, my beat partner Scott Feldman – or partner in crime, whichever you prefer begs to differ.

Despite being up – according to my calculations because he won't count until we are leaving – at least a couple hundred dollars, he believes I have cursed him by saying someone might leave here a winner.

He would rather I break a couple mirrors in front of him or throw him under a ladder than jinx him by writing this.

But oh well, I did it. Hell, if he loses all his money, it doesn't affect my pocket.

As for the losers here in Atlantic City, that would be the Massachusetts men's basketball team – who lost to Duquesne, 91-81, in the first round of the tournament, the eighth A-10 Tournament game in a row they have lost – and myself.

Now, I do not have a losing streak like UMass, but I am down 60 dollars, which is a lot since I only came with 100 dollars to play with.

Also, this is the first time I have gone to a casino and lost money. It also just happens to be the first time I've gone to a casino and gambled, mostly because I've yet to reach the pinnacle of one's life, the age of 21.

Oh well, just don't tell the Tropicana that one of the kids staying in room 1646 of the North Tower is illegally gambling.

But this trip has not been all about gambling – at least for me.

Scott, on the other hand, is at some table every chance he's got, but for good reason: He's winning.

We have done our job of covering the basketball team, and luckily for us we only had to do it for one game.

Since we booked the hotel for two nights we figured we'd stay the second day, watch some more basketball and of course gamble some more, which means I go more in the hole and Scott can keep winning.

And I knock on wood, because when he wins I pretty much win.

So far his winnings have bought me a belt – because I forgot one back at home along with toothpaste, a toothbrush, a razor and shaving cream – as well as lunch at Hooters.

God are they big there! I'm talking about the buffalo chicken finger sandwich I got. It was huge. What did you think I was talking about?

The Hooters came after I found Scott at the craps table Thursday afternoon, where he left with $490 in chips.

He started at the table with $200. I told you someone from UMass was a winner here in Atlantic City. I'm just going to start betting on whatever he does for the rest of the trip.

The trip may end up forcing me to dip into my account with all my rent money, but I have to say it is worth it.

Just a five-hour car drive, about $50 in gas money, $60 for the two nights in the hotel and $10 for me accidentally ordering "Bride Wars" on the TV this morning. I swear it was an accident, I just woke up and thought I hit menu but instead hit order and the $100 I've blown at the tables, which will most likely become more like $160 by the end of Wednesday night.

I mean, that isn't that much, right?

Not if I had an actual job and didn't deliver pizza to other poor college students who don't know how to tip.

But whatever, my mom just did my tax returns and I'm supposed to get around $400 back, so I'll just keep throwing my money away.

I figure I have a better chance of making money here than in the stock market.

I just hope Scott wins big again, so maybe I can eat another nice free meal.

If not I'll just swing by the pressroom here at Boardwalk Hall and grab a meal. Oh, and you can bet I'm going to watch "Bride Wars" tonight after I blow the rest of my money.

If you haven't got the theme of this piece yet I'll give it to you: I'm broke and this town is making me broker by the minute.

I paid a ridiculous price of 10 bucks for that movie and I'll make sure to make it worth it. Even if I have to watch it three times.

Jeffrey R. Larnard is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Hopefully for Jeffrey, he didn't have this "waitress" at Hooters in Atlantic City. But knowing Scott, it wouldn't be a surprise if he pulled off a crazy stunt like that with the high spirits he was in.

These guys aren't Scott and Jeffrey, but judging by their expressions it certainly could be judging by what we've been told. While Scott was making it rain at blackjack, Jeffrey was busy losing his rent money.

comics

JORNALISM AT ITS FINEST

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, telephone (internet access) in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for JUNE and SEPTEMBER. NO FEES. www.amherstrealty.com 253-7879/ 781-979-0076

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass. Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

House for rent. 2 bedroom, kitchen, 2 bath. $1000/month. On bus route 413-549-6091

ANNOUNCMENT

Worship at Dwight Chapel on Sunday mornings at 9 or 11. For rides and information please call us at 256-8059 or visit www.dwightchapel.org

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com, Montrealexpress.net. 781-979-9001/ 781-979-0076

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900

FOR SALE

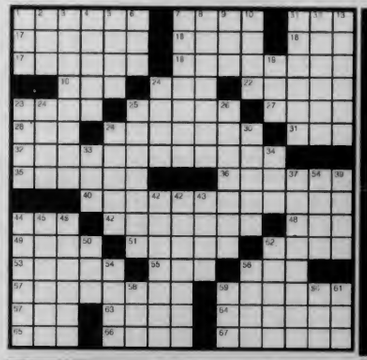
Breed: English Bulldog
Sex: Male & Female
Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks)
Champion Bloodlines: No
Champion Sired: No
Show Potential: Yes
What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com



ACROSS
1 Greek letter
7 Metal seam
11 Chum
14 Doing the same old same old
15 Eager and enthusiastic
16 Adam's mate
17 Encapsulate
18 Kept
20 O.I.Y. buy
21 Do it wrong
22 Wet behind the ears
23 Wasn't colorfast
25 Bay window
27 Craving
28 Sculling instrument
29 Passed through a membrane
31 Positive answer
32 Raw meat entree
35 Storage room
36 Acting ruler
40 Flowing above the rim
44 Slow-witted
47 Glacial periods
48 Block of time
49 Qatar leader
51 Esteem
52 Gun on stage e.g.
53 Vaulted recesses
55 Neither a companion?
56 Periphery
57 Narcissus
59 Spring from cover
62 New Haven alum
63 Anderson of "WKRP"
64 Opposed
65 Writer Hentoff
66 "East of ___"
67 Peruse anew

DOWN
1 Prevarication
2 Cape ___, MA
3 Spanish fish
4 Interwoven locks
5 Fine, dry particles
6 Noshed
7 Bathe hand
8 Highest peak
9 Set aflame
10 6/6/44
11 Extreme poverty
12 Get even for
13 Rock shelves
19 $ promise
21 Ms. Bombeck
23 Type of pear
24 Past due
25 Bird with plumes
26 Student
29 Giraffe's cousin
30 Cabernet sediments
33 Pacino and Kaline
34 Self-regard
37 Always
38 Roman tyrant
39 Lobster catcher
41 Of the pride
42 Lotion ingredient
43 Frankenstein's golfer
44 Muffle
45 Chevy model
46 Maladjusted individual
50 Gridiron zebra
52 Actress Laurie
54 Flounder cousin
56 Room
58 Pentagon grp.
59 ___ excellence
60 Made in the
61 Turner or Mack

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

www.dailycollegian.com

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst Outreach
THINK AHEAD
Two 6-week summer sessions
Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net
Registration begins March 9
SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

INTERESTED IN GETTING BUSINESS EXPERIENCE?

THE COLLEGIAN IS ACCEPTING APPLICATIONS FOR THE POSITION OF BUSINESS MANAGER.

COME TO 113 CAMPUS CENTER TO PICK UP AN APPLICATION.

Tanya Harding this ish.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | 3 | 9 | | | | 8 | 5 | |
| | | 8 | 3 | | 4 | 6 | | |
| 6 | 4 | | | | | | 3 | 1 |
| | | | 4 | 2 | 3 | | | |
| | | | | 8 | | | | |
| | | | 1 | 5 | 6 | | | |
| 8 | 6 | | | | | | 9 | 3 |
| | | 7 | 9 | | 8 | 4 | | |
| | 9 | 4 | | | | 1 | 7 | |

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your future spouse will want to name your daughter "Candy," but you will make them settle for "Reese."

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You've got the Lord on your side. Do as you will this weekend.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
You vote the same way you shower: slowly and irregularly.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Pay off the cops with a shiny, new Abraham Lincoln, and if that doesn't work, try a 12-pack of Coor's Light.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
You'll feel perfectly at home in the insane asylum, which isn't surprising, considering your family members.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Fall of the American Empire, Reason #341: All of the remaining open land has been homesteaded by Walmart and McDonalds.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Now that the snow is melting, you will quickly realize where you dropped your cell phone last December.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Don't allow yourself to get caught listening to an argument about the semantics of bagels again. Toast? Maybe.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Prepare to be frightened and shocked by your new inner ear canal porn DVD.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Just admit it: You are more overpaid than Bernard Madoff's shredder boy.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Today you will purchase another self-help book, but it will again fail to make you more independent-minded.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
There's no reason for me to speculate on your future. The doctors have already told you you're not going to live another week.

QUOTE OF THE WEEKEND

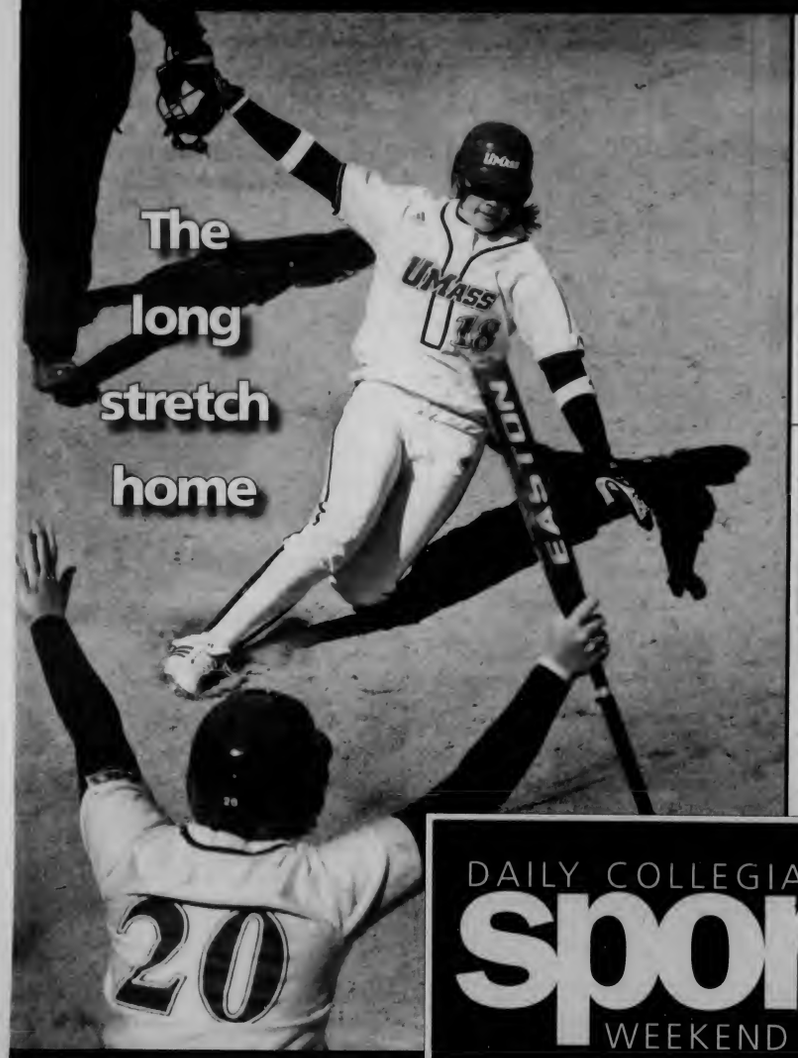
"The trouble with weather forecasting is that it's right too often for us to ignore it and wrong too often for us to rely on it."



— Patrick Young

BLISS BY HARRY BLISS

"Well, right now I'm feeling a little uncomfortable ..."

DEBAUCHERY IN A-CITY

While covering the UMass basketball team in Atlantic City, Collegian beat writers Scott Feldman and Jeffrey R. Larnard engaged in some questionable activities.

SEE PAGE 13

MEN'S LACROSSE

The Minutemen have beat every team they lost to last season. Similarly, they have lost to every team they defeated last year. UMass hopes that continues Saturday vs. Brown.

SEE PAGE 12

DAILY COLLEGIAN
sports
WEEKEND EDITION

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

PLEASE NOTE:

The Paper is
Not Published
During School break

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

Pt. SUNNY | HIGH: 36 LOW: 16 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, MARCH 23, 2009

Getting to sleep while in Sderot

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

SDEROT, Israel – Next year, 18-year-old Amit Rom will join the Israeli Defense Forces in hopes of helping the citizens of Sderot live in quiet. Before doing so, he is taking the year off to experience the lives of the people he will be protecting next year instead of enlisting straight out of high school.

Rom volunteers at two elementary schools and a middle school in Sderot for students as young as the third grade. There, he provides comfort to the kids, especially on days when rockets are launched towards Israel.

It's not exactly typical living conditions for someone who graduated from high school less than a year ago and grew up in Ra'anana, 55 miles from Sderot.

Though in a temporary situation, Rom has found a way to make the city his home with a hospitable neighborhood and a warm community.

But with the war in Gaza, Sderot can feel a little too much like home. Rom's experience in the city has been so rattling at times that he has dramatically increased his nicotine intake over the past year.

"It's scary when you hear a car honk and confuse it for an alarm," Rom said.

Dr. On Karni, who works for the Trauma Center in Sderot, said that such symptoms are typical in patients they admit almost every day.

"If you try to help people and give them therapy or try to help them continue life here, the lifestyle doesn't give them a chance to really recover," Karni said.

The Center has seen over 2,000 cases of trauma and anxiety out of the 19,000 residents in Sderot with one psychologist and two social workers on staff. During the height of the war, Karni has seen up to 40 patients in one day.

Their professional staff uses a combination of medication and narrative therapy in order to help patients get back to normal life. While patients often feel better after one of these sessions, hearing a rocket explode can cause a relapse in the trauma and force them to come back.

Karni has found that time is of the essence in treating patients. If their anxiety isn't calmed within 48 hours, the chances of getting Post Traumatic Stress Disorder greatly increase.

Rom often sees this occurring with the younger children he teaches.

His students either soil themselves or cry uncontrollably and suffer from fatigue because they can't get enough sleep at night.

In order to get their mind off the war, Rom will usually find some sort of activity or game to play. He draws from his past in the Tzofim (Israeli boy scouts) to help them have fun no matter what happens.

If the "red alert" comes on during recess, they will run to shelter until they receive clearance. Until then, Rom does everything he can to eliminate their fears and go back to playing. Throughout the alarm, he will hold their hands or sing to calm some of the emotions.

Rom's strategy works best with older students used to their living situation because they will go about their day even with the threat of a rocket hitting the area.

"They hate the situation, but they're older so they're more used to it," Rom said. "Life goes on."

See SDEROT on page 3

Avi Pilchick (seated) observes military operations in the Gaza Strip along with other Israeli civilians from a hilltop in Sderot.

A new study says that women who drink heavily to impress men may be doing just the opposite. Researchers hope this new information will slow binge drinking on college campuses.

Group grows from demand for balance

By Nina Heikkinen
Collegian Staff

The lights dimmed in the Campus Center room, as a group of about 40 people settled in to watch a screening of the documentary about the Palestinian perspective of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, "Occupation 101 – Voices of the Silenced Majority," on the Monday evening before spring break.

The documentary screening was the official debut for a new student organization at the University of Massachusetts, the Muslim Public Affairs Coalition (MPAC), which was created in part to meet a growing demand on campus for information about Palestine. Events like this one have become more common in the Five College area as more college students are expressing a growing sympathy for Palestinians as well as frustration with what they see as a media presentation of the conflict that is overwhelmingly pro-Israel.

"The image we consume in the media is that they [the Palestinians] are the aggressors," said Michael Frye, a senior, in a discussion following the documentary. "Why is that the only story we are told?"

Frye said later in an interview that he had made an effort to learn more about the Israeli and Palestinian conflict since the recent war in Gaza in January. He encouraged other students to look past the image of Palestine presented in the media and to read more independently about the subject.

The Muslim Student Association's (MSA) public relations officer, Jamal Salah, a junior, said that he had noticed a marked change in the level of interest in the Israeli-Palestinian conflict since the war in Gaza in January. He had seen more students expressing pro-Palestinian sentiments and identifying with the humanitarian crisis in Palestine.

"Most people were pretty neutral, whether they were Muslim or not," said Salah. He counted himself as part of that group, until earlier this semes-

See MSA on page 3

Study says sober up

Research declares heavy drinking a turn-off

By Jessica Kemp
Collegian Staff

Some college women assume men are interested in someone who is able to drink a substantial amount of alcohol.

However a new study from Loyola Marymount University and the University of Washington claims that women overestimate the amount of alcohol a typical guy wants his friend, girlfriend or date to drink.

The survey included 3,616 heterosexual college students, of which approximately 62 percent (2,242) were female. Students came from a variety of racial backgrounds, academic class standings and social groups on campus.

Some 19 percent of the participants were freshmen, 24.8 percent sophomores, 27.1 percent juniors and 29.1 percent seniors. The sample also consisted of 21 percent who belonged to a fraternity or sorority.

Women were asked about their personal drinking behavior as well as the amount of alcohol they thought a typical college man would want them to drink. In addition, the men were asked about their personal preferences on how much alcohol they would want a female to drink.

The survey revealed that 71 percent of the women believed a man finds it appealing and sexually attractive when women drink in excess. About 26 percent of the women agreed that a college man would want to be friends with a woman who drank five or more drinks, and another 16.7 percent believe that a man would be more sexually attracted to a woman that drank that much.

Contrary to the females' views on the subject, survey results collected from the men differed significantly. According to a recent issue published in Psychology of Addictive Behaviors, the women's estimates about how much men wanted them to drink was nearly double what the male respondents actually said.

The study leads some to believe women are overestimating what men really see fit when it comes to a female's alcohol consumption.

Many women may think that drinking significant amounts of alcohol may impress men, but subconsciously there may be other motives to their actions.

Rather than thinking strictly about impressing a man, women may think of drinking as a relaxant to relieve stress, a way to feel more confident in themselves, or just a way to have fun.

"When I go out drinking, my intention is never to impress

See DRINKING on page 3

UM scientist uses gel caps to boost omega-3 in diets

By Chris Shores
Collegian Staff

A research scientist at the University of Massachusetts has developed a way to incorporate omega-3 fatty acids into a diet without making it distastefully obvious.

Dr. Julian McClements, associate professor of food physicochemistry, has been working with a team from the University of Massachusetts-Amherst Center for Health & Wellness. The researchers have developed small microgel capsules that can trap fatty acids and chemically prevent the acids from spoiling. These capsules then can easily be incorporated into liquids and foods such as dressings, yogurt and ice cream all without altering the taste, texture or appearance of the food item.

McClements' discovery is both important and timely.

The typical American diet is deficient in omega-3 consumption, said Dr. Laura Hutchinson, professor of nutrition at UMass and Holyoke Community College. This is regarded as a significant problem because omega-3 is one of two essential fatty acids needed in diets. It is responsible for supporting and protecting the cardiovascular, musculoskeletal, GI and immune systems.

While not having enough omega-3 in the diet, most Americans have an excess of the other essential fatty acid: omega-6. The combination can put one at risk for heart disease, inflammatory and autoimmune diseases and some cancers, said Hutchinson.

Omega-3 can be found in fish oil, walnuts and flax seed and Hutchinson incorporates them into her diet by eating fatty fish – such as salmon – twice a week and sprinkling flax seeds and walnuts over cereal and yogurt.

Robert Boder, a freshman neuroscience major, has no problem incorporating omega-3 into his diet. He loves fish, so he eats it whenever it's served at the dining commons. On average, he said, that's about two fish servings per week.

But having a diet heavy in fish may not be the best option either, said Hutchinson.

"There are a number of different forms of omega-3 in the diet. Fish oil (or fatty fish such as salmon and tuna) contains both docosahexaeno-

Dr. Julien McClements, UMass associate professor.

See OMEGA on page 3

ARTS & LIVING

HAIR RAISING

Pioneer Valley Performing Arts Charter Public School's performance of "Hair" brought together all the elements of a strong musical giving the play to a new life.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS

SEASON ENDS

The Massachusetts hockey team's season concluded on March 15 in an overtime loss to Northeastern in the deciding Game 3 of the Hockey East Tournament.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORAL & OPINION

To Subhan Tariq, the fact that the U.S. government gives military aid to Israel is the same as American citizens directly putting money towards the conflict.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

BLOGS | RESEARCH

Keep up with the latest scientific developments going on in your own backyard with Research This Week.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIX
ISSUE 34

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Michael King
MANAGING EDITOR Joe Meloni
BUSINESS MANAGER Alex Waszczuk
PRODUCTION MANAGER Michael Sarkes
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Kate Olesin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Dan Hurley
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Max Detmer
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Brian Wood
COPY EDITOR Nick Bush
EDITORIAL EDITOR Leigh Greaney
EDITORIAL EDITOR Nick O'Malley
NEWS EDITOR William McGuinness
SPORTS EDITOR Eli Rosenzweig
MULTIMEDIA EDITOR S.F. Sullivan
FEATURES EDITOR Andrea Murray
PHOTO EDITOR P.J. Stanley
WEB EDITOR Victor Jacob
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Matt Zohlnierz
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Brendan Cherry
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
DISTRIBUTION MANAGER Norman Provost
CLASSIFIED MANAGER Emily Stapleton
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Kevin Kerwave
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Ian Nelson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Mellim Turtinen
ASSISTANT NEWS Lisa DeBenedictis
ASSISTANT NEWS Matt Rocheleau
ASSISTANT NEWS Ben Williams
ASSISTANT SPORTS Scott Feldman
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ryan Fleming
ASSISTANT SPORTS Jeffrey R. Larnard
ASSISTANT PHOTO Danielle Augeri
ASSISTANT PHOTO Ryan Fung
ASSISTANT PHOTO Matthew Harrison
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Mike Gillemeister
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA Peter Rizzo
ASSISTANT MULTIMEDIA James Wellner

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN A BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Kate Olesin

COPY EDITOR
Michelle Fredette

PRODUCTION TEAM
Nick Guarino

Community Clips

Summer Session 2009 Registration
Summer Session is a perfect time to catch up or get ahead. Take classes online or on campus.
Mon. March 9 to Fri. Jul 17, 2009
Mass Venture Center Suite 201
- Continuing & Professional Education

Spring Break
Classes resume on Mon. March 23.
Saturday, March 14 to Sunday, March 22, 2009

BDIC Information Session
An information session on creating your own major through interdisciplinary studies
Mon. Mar 23, 2009, 12:15 p.m.
Goodell 608

Drug Information Table
At this table, students can receive drug information and learn about resources on campus from the peer health educators.
Mon. March 23, 2009, 4 p.m.
Franklin Dining Commons

Dinner on Us Dinnertime Workshops for Parents of Infants and Young Children
This week's Dinner on Us speaker is Catherine Sanderson, Ph.D. Professor Sanderson is the author of the book "Slow and Steady Parenting: Active Child-Raising for the Long Haul (Birth to Age 3)," and is the mother of three children.
Mon. March 23, 2009, 5:30 p.m.
Student Union The Commonwealth Room (a.k.a. Earth Foods)

University Without Walls Information Session
Come learn how you can design your own degree program and how you can earn credit for the learning and experience you have done "outside the walls" of UMass Amherst.
Mon. March 23, 2009, 5:30 p.m.
Greenfield Community College

UMass Ballroom Dance Club Hustle Lesson
Join the UMass Ballroom Dance Team for a hustle lesson, followed by social dancing.
Mon. March 23, 2009, 7 p.m.
Fine Arts Center
Exhibit: SAND T: New Work
The Student Union Art Gallery presents an exhibition of forty new works by SAND T.
Mon. March 23 to Fri. April 3, 2009
Student Union Art Gallery

BDIC Information Session
An information session on creating your own major through interdisciplinary studies.
Tues. March 24, 2009, 1 p.m.
Goodell 608

RefWorks Workshop
Learn how to use RefWorks, a free citation management software product that also creates bibliographies.
Tues. March 24, 2009, 2:30 p.m.
Library, W.E.B. Du Bois Calipari Room

Opening Reception: "A Reason to Remember"
The opening reception of "A Reason to Remember," the traveling exhibit from Hatikvah Holocaust Education Center.
Tues. March 24, 2009, 4 p.m.
Herter

Life Outside the Cardboard Box: Making a Living in the Arts
This seven-part lecture series explores opportunities to help artists build successful careers in their chosen field.
Tues. March 24, 2009, 5:30 p.m.
Herter 227 (above Herter Gallery)

Entrepreneurship Initiative's Executive Summary Competition
This competition will recognize the most talented and committed collegiate entrepreneurs.
Tues. March 24, 2009, 5:30 p.m.
Engineering Lab II 119

Faculty Clarinet Recital
Faculty clarinetist Michael Sussman performs the music of Australian composers.
Tues. March 24, 2009, 8 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall

Workshop: Basic Mediation Skills
This two-part workshop will explore basic mediation skills that employees can use to support problem-solving in their organization.
Wed. March 25, 2009, 9 a.m.
Campus Center 917

BDIC Information Session
An information session on creating your own major through interdisciplinary studies.
Wed. March 25, 2009, 11:15 a.m.
Goodell 608

"Up 'til Dawn" St. Jude Research Hospital Letter Writing Campaign
The "Up 'till Dawn" event provides a way for the UMass Amherst community to help raise money for St. Jude Children's Research Hospital.
Wed. March 25, 2009, 2 p.m.
Student Union Ballroom

Guest Speaker: Ed O'Reilly
Alumnus Ed O'Reilly will discuss his decision to run for the U.S. Senate and how money, power and vested interests influence health care, economic and social justice, foreign policy and political inequality.
Wed. March 25, 2009, 4 p.m.
Student Union Cape Cod Lounge

Drug Information Table
At this table, students can receive drug information and learn about resources on campus from the peer health educators.
Wed. March 25, 2009, 4 p.m.
Hampshire Dining Commons

Jerusalem: The Politics of Sacred Space
A lecture by Salim Tamari, Professor of Sociology, Birzeit University, Ramallah, Palestine.
Wed. March 25, 2009, 4 p.m.
Herter 601

Renaissance Wednesday
"The Byzantine Renaissance" will be presented by Marios Philippides.
Wed. March 25, 2009, 4 p.m.
Renaissance Center

It's Spring - Sweet!
Enjoy a Freshen smoothie and "create your own cupcake" to further sweeten your day.
Wed. March 25, 2009, 5 p.m.
All Dining Commons

Film: Welcome To Macintosh
A screening of the Apple documentary that Steve Wozniak calls "by far the best one I've ever seen."
Wed. March 25, 2009, 7 p.m.
Campus Center 904

Women's Lacrosse vs. Northwestern
Head coach Alexis Venechanos leads UMass into action against the No. 1-ranked Northwestern Wildcats.
Wed. March 25, 2009, 7 p.m.
McGuirk Alumni Stadium

Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival: Lady Kul el-Arab
Lady Kul el-Arab is a dramatic and moving portrait of a family caught between cultures.
Wed. March 25, 2009, 7:30 p.m.
Isenberg School of Management 137

Apartment Complex Rental Fair
Representatives from the area's largest apartment complexes will set up information tables on the Campus Center Concourse.
Thu. March 26, 2009, 10 a.m.
Campus Center Concourse

School of Public Health and Health Sciences 12th Annual Research Day
The School of Public Health and Health Sciences 12th Annual Research Day features a presentation on educational opportunities in the department, a poster session, a featured speaker and refreshments.
Thu. March 26, 2009, 12:30 p.m.
Campus Center Auditorium

Lecture: Alex J. Zautra Ph.D. - "Resilience, More Than a Metaphor"
The Center for Research on Families is pleased to announce the next Tay Gavin Lecture, featuring Dr. Alex J. Zautra.
Thu. March 26, 2009, 4 p.m.
Tobin 521B

Film: For the Bible Tells Me So
A film that explores the intersections between religion and same-sex sexuality in the U.S. and how the religious right has used its interpretation of the Bible to stigmatize the LGBT community.
Thu. March 26, 2009, 7 p.m.
Stonewall Center

Film: Throne of Blood
Throne of Blood will be shown at Amherst Cinema Center.
Thu. March 26, 2009, 7 p.m.
Amherst Cinema Center

Magic Triangle Jazz Series: 3 Things to Say
Violinists Terry Jenoure, Billy Bang and Charles Burnham pay homage to the most important violinist to emerge in the post-Coltrane era: the late Leroy Jenkins.
Thu. March 26, 2009, 8 p.m.
Bezanson Recital Hall

Lecture: "Are We Crying Wolf?
Jenna Marquard, assistant professor of mechanical and industrial engineering at UMass Amherst, will speak on decision-making and health information.
Thu. March 26, 2009 Thompson

Bringing classes beyond UMass

With time ticking, students urge others to head to class elsewhere

week ahead on DAILY COLLEGIAN

GEO-LOCATE YOUR NEWS

FOLLOW NEWS GEOGRAPHICALLY WITH DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM'S "NEWSGARDEN" APPLICATION ON THE HOMEPAGE

NEWS

BLOGS | ALL WEEK
KEEP UP WITH THE LATEST SCIENTIFIC DEVELOPMENTS GOING ON IN YOUR OWN BACKYARD WITH RESEARCH THIS WEEK.

FIND OUT THE NEWS BEHIND THE NEWS AT EDITOR'S NOTE, RUN BY NEWS EDITOR WILL MCGUINNESS.

PODCAST |
COLLEGIAN EDITORS HAVE A ROUNDTABLE DISCUSSION OF THE ISRAEL / PALESTINE CONFLICT WITH A LOCAL TAKE.

ARTS & LIVING

VIDEO | WEDNESDAY
AN INTERVIEW WITH LOCAL AUTHOR TRACY KIDDER ON HIS ACCLAIMED BOOK, "MOUNTAINS BEYOND MOUNTAINS," AND HIS NEXT PROJECT, DUE OUT IN AUGUST.

DailyCollegian.com is looking for multimedia storytellers.

Get your feet wet in new media.

BY MAGGIE CUTLER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

For University of Massachusetts students interested in studying abroad in the coming semesters, the time to act ends soon. The deadlines are quickly approaching, and with so many programs to choose from, it is best to start researching as soon as possible.

With the exception of intergalactic exploration, students who want to study abroad literally have a world of opportunities. The International Programs Office (IPO) at UMass sponsors programs on six continents: Africa, Asia, Australia, Europe, North America and South America.

Choosing a program through the IPO certainly has the advantage of organizing everything in house. You can walk right into the program's office or into the offices of the registrar, financial aid and housing.

But like any university or organization, UMass can only supply a limited number of programs. With substantial research and planning, students can participate in programs that are offered through other universities and institutions. For instance, students can go through the University of Virginia's famous Semester at Sea program and live on a cruise ship for a semester while they circumnavigate the globe and stop in ten different countries.

If community service is one's preferred alley, one could look for a program that involves teaching children in Bolivia or working on global nutrition programs in Senegal. There are also organizations that offer students internship experiences abroad while either focusing just on the internship alone or combining it with an international education. An internship abroad certainly stands out on a resume, while showing independence and leadership qualities as well.

For such a large university, it may come as a surprise that a relatively small percentage of UMass students choose to study abroad. While the thought of venturing out of one's comfort zone can be intimidating, students said the program is a chance to be self-reliant and to stretch their boundaries beyond Amherst.

"I learned a lot about living on my own," said Tessa Childs, a recent graduate who spent a semester in London at American Intercontinental University during her sophomore year. "Living at school is 'alone' but not like living in a foreign country. I couldn't go home whenever I wanted; I had to deal with problems myself. I learned how to cook. I learned how to be completely on my own and make new friends without a support system around me."

Jennifer Kantor, a UMass sophomore who is currently studying at the Lorenzo de' Medici University in Florence, Italy, said, "There are times when I miss home but [also] times I sit back and say, 'Wow! Look where I am – it's incredible!' I know – just like a roller coaster – when the ride is over I will want to get back on and do it again."

Most programs require a personal essay and a 2.5 GPA, but this varies. Generally, the acceptance rate is high.

When notification of acceptance is received, it is time to brave the red tape for which UMass is so famous.

This is when the advantages to choosing a UMass sponsored program are revealed. The most important things to figure out right away are how you are going to pay for it and how your credits are going to transfer.

Financing a study abroad semester is a concern shared by many students. What most students do not realize is there are numerous opportunities for financial aid to help offset the cost of the experience. For students who currently receive financial aid to attend the University, there is a good chance it can also be used towards studying abroad, however it is not guaranteed. The form's deadline for the fall 2009 semester has already passed, but there is still time to apply for the semester of spring 2010.

In addition to financial aid, several scholarships are available for students studying abroad. Some scholarships are based nationally, and others are distributed through the separate UMass colleges and departments.

Most majors and many minors will give credit toward departmental requirements for courses taken while overseas. It is best – and sometimes required – to have courses preapproved by academic advisors before departure.

When asked what they would do differently if they could redo their experience, almost everyone responded exactly as Nikki Zambarano – UMass senior and Australia veteran of spring 2008 – did, who said that she "would stay longer or never leave."

Recent graduate Joshua Essig studied abroad during spring 2007 and while reflecting on his undergraduate career, he said, "[S]tudying abroad is a journey of self discovery. It tests your wit, and you find out what you are made of. It allows you to really find out a lot about yourself, and you'll be amazed with what you thought you could never do, and what you really can do."

Kathryn Murphy, Sophia Yavorski, Allie Moss and Stephanie Tumsuden contributed to this story.

Maggie Cutler can be reached at maggiecutler@gmail.com.

Private schools brace as economy leads to sharp application decline

BY DARINA SHTRAKHMAN
DAILY PENNSYLVANIAN (U. PENN)

As admissions officers sift through applications this spring, some schools' choices may be more limited than they were last year.

Many private colleges – especially top liberal arts schools – saw declines in application numbers this year, which admissions experts attribute to both the economic downturn and a natural fluctuation in the admissions cycle.

Application numbers declined by 20 percent at Williams College, 2 percent at Middlebury College and 10 percent at Swarthmore College.

Other colleges saw smaller declines. Amherst College's numbers decreased by 1 percent, and Dartmouth College's dropped by 1.6 percent.

By contrast, Ivy League institutions did not see any significant declines. In fact, Penn was the only Ivy League school whose application numbers went down overall, and the decrease was only 90 applications.

Colleges typically worry about declines in applications because it inflates their acceptance rate. U.S. News & World Report factors in acceptance rates when determining rankings, according to the magazine's Web site.

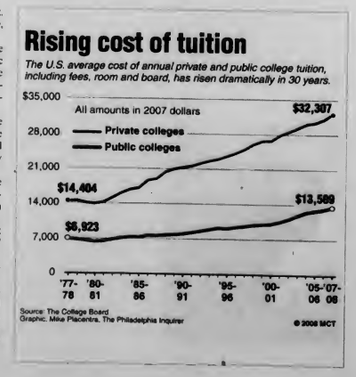
Michele Hernandez, president of Hernandez College Consulting, noted that "of course the economy affects the numbers of applicants at expensive top-tier liberal arts schools," but explained that some change is normal from year to year.

"It's good to keep in mind that applications have gone up just about every year for the past 10 to 15 years, so it's not unusual to see small drops to make up for the gains," she said.

For example, she explained, applications at Williams were up "a tremendous amount last year," so the drop this year is not so much a decline as a "stabilization."

Michael Chimes, director of college guidance at the Gill St. Bernard's School in New Jersey, has noticed this trend as well.

He stressed that "families are nervous about their economic futures, and the price tags of the more expensive private institutions, like Penn, are very intimidating."



Chimes also noted the large expense of applying to ten or more schools, which made students "pull back" from applying to too many colleges this year.

In terms of the trend's possible impact on Penn, Hernandez suspects the biggest effect will be in the school's yield this year.

"Some students might get accepted but not be able to attend," she said.

She predicts more waitlist activity this year than in previous years.

Most regular-decision admissions decisions will be released at the end of the month. Penn, as well as the other Ivy League schools, will post decisions online on March 31.

Almost 200 people took part in a demonstration held on Monday afternoon outside the Hebrew University in Jerusalem, December 29, 2008, protesting the military operation in the Gaza Strip.

MSA looks to change Middle East opinions

MSA from page 1

ter when he participated in his first Palestinian peace rally at UMass. "I was always neutral about it, then I went to the rally and I actually protested, I'd never done that before. It definitely changed me as well," he said.

Zamil Akhtar, a junior and the vice president of the MSA, said that when he first came to UMass there wasn't really a vocal pro-Palestinian movement on campus. Now he has seen people become more energized in their support for Palestine. "What happened in January was a wake-up call," he said.

As more UMass students express support for Palestine, tensions between Israeli and Palestinian supporters on campus have also increased, according to some students. Salah expressed reservations about how closely groups like the MSA should work with Student Alliance for Israel (SAFI). "I couldn't relate to them, I feel like being involved with them so much would make it seem like I support their views, which I don't," Salah said.

At the same time, Israeli and Palestinian supporters at UMass have engaged in more dialogue recently as a result of the war in Gaza.

SAFI president, Michael Feder, a senior, said SAFI has had more interactions with the Muslim Student Association, Arab Student Club and Muslim Public Affairs Council at UMass this semester. He considered the interactions between the groups an example of greater unity that has developed among moderates on campus on both sides of the issue.

"We're all searching for ways to have more constructive dialogue," said Feder. He cited the controversy over Palestine as a catalyst for more informal conversations between the student groups.

Still, Feder admitted that there was an increased polarization between SAFI and the more radical groups on campus: the International Socialist Organization (ISO), Campus Anti-War Network (CAN) and the Radical Student Union (RSU). He said the stance of these groups, which called for a one-state solution between Israel and Palestine, was "basically denying Israel's right to exist."

"It's really the world against us," said Feder.

Natalia Tylim, a member of both the ISO and the CAN, said the organizations supported Palestine because they saw the Palestinians as oppressed people living under imperialist rule. "We have the unapologetic stance that Palestine has the same right to exist in one state for Arabs, Jews and Christians," she said.

Feder emphasized that radical pro-Israeli or Zionist sentiment was discouraged in SAFI, and he predicted that a similar trend toward the evolution of a moderate stance would occur in other students groups on campus.

This opinion was not shared by student leaders of the MSA and the MPAC. Akhtar and Ebad Rahman, who count radical student groups on campus as some of the most vocal supporters of the Palestinian cause on campus. They added that many of their members supported a two-state solution and did not deny Israel's right to exist.

"These groups, they have done more than Muslims for ending the conflict, so those are mostly the groups we work with," said Rahman, who is one of the founders of the MPAC.

Akhtar, who is also a member of the Campus Anti-War Network, said efforts to work with SAFI had mixed results. On March 5, the Israeli, Muslim and Arab student groups collaborated to host speakers from One Voice, a grassroots Israeli and Palestinian peace organization which promotes a two-state solution.

Akhtar found the dialogue with SAFI members frustrating.

"We tried to talk about what we agreed on, but in my perspective they were obviously against us," he said. "They can't take criticism. To us, their position is so biased towards Israel."

But, Akhtar hopes to spread a different message through the MPAC.

"Our goal is to make people aware of the reality of the human rights situation," he said. "If they knew they would take offense."

Nina Heikkenin can be reached at nheikkin@student.umass.edu

UMass' McClements creates new way to ingest omega-3

OMEGA from page 1

Dr. Julien McClements in his lab. He and other researchers are using microgels to incorporate omega-3 into more diets.

ic acid (DHA) and eicosapentaenoic acid (EPA). This is controversial, since these are fish that tend to contain high mercury levels as well. This is why supplementing with omega-3 is a good option," she said.

Hutchinson takes an artificial supplement every day. She said as the general population has become more educated about omega-3, supplements have seen an increase in sales. She reasons it would be a similar case for McClements' microgel capsules, saying that she thinks "the public is ready and willing to invest in fortified products high in omega-3 fatty acids."

Lauren Heeren, a junior majoring in eco-friendly marketing (BDIC), disagrees.

"Honestly, I don't see this product being very successful," she said. "People like to think they are hopping on board to a healthier lifestyle, but like many other nutrient-enhancing products, I believe people will not see physical effects and get bored with it. No matter how good a product is for you, if physical results aren't seen, then people will stop using it."

Heeren admits to not receiving enough of the fatty acid. She eats breakfast cereal that sometimes mixes in flax seeds, but she rarely eats seafood and only eats walnuts when they're in trail mix. Despite that, she isn't concerned.

"I do not see my diet changing for higher omega-3 consumption," Heeren said. "I live a pretty healthy life with both good eating habits and exercising a few days a week. As good as omega-3 may be for my body, I just don't see it making a huge difference in how I live.

"I understand that they can help prevent a lot of diseases, keep bodily processes regulating, but I've never been one to experience extreme health issues, so I'm not really worried about not consuming an adequate amount of omega-3," she continued.

Boder liked McClements' development of the microgel capsules but also expressed some concern that it could lead some to over-consume omega-3.

According to Hutchinson, there are indeed possible toxicity symptoms that could arise from eating an excess of the fatty acid.

"[There could be an] increased risk of bleeding and hemorrhagic stroke," she said. "[It] may be an issue for people consuming very high amounts of omega-3 who are susceptible to bruises, are taking blood thinners or have a bleeding disorder."

McClements and his team continue to work on the product. Their focus now is mainly the structure of the gel that surrounds the fatty acid. The researchers also are focusing on "molecules known as phytosterols from oats that can lower cholesterol, and flavonoids in orange peel that show promise for killing cancer cells," according to statement.

Chris Shores can be reached at cshores@student.umass.edu.

Study says overdrinking has little effect on impressing guys

STUDY from page 1

guys – I simply like to hang out with friends and have a good time," said Jennifer Kantor a sophomore and kinesiology Major at the University of Massachusetts. "I actually think it is rather unattractive to see girls drinking so much they cannot stand up – I don't know any guy who would think that was cool."

However, if a woman's need to drink in excess is truly related to forming social relationships then women's misconceptions may be encouraging them to drink to risky levels.

Alcohol consumption, of any amount, has been known to be a major risk factor for unwanted sexual behavior. Depending on how much alcohol has been consumed, a woman's chance of experiencing sexual aggression becomes three to nine times higher. According to the U.S Department of Justice, more than half of sexual assaults on campuses occur when a woman has been consuming alcohol.

Information collected from a nationwide study on alcohol consumption also showed that 35.8 percent of college women have driven after drinking, 30.2 percent have missed a class and 19.8 percent have experienced five or more problems due to alcohol use.

According to Joseph LaBrie, lead author of the study, there are many reasons why college students, particularly women, drink. The fact that women believe men want them to drink more could explain why females drink to dangerous levels.

"We believe universities and other public health organizations could use this information to help curb binge drinking among young women," said LaBrie.

Jessica Kemp can be reached at jmkemp@student.umass.edu.

Coming of age during times of conflict, war

SDEROT from page 1

When dealing with kids in such a stressful situation, Rom keeps a relationship with the parents to help ease the comforts of sending their kids to school. Sometimes, the parents become too scared and keep them at home.

His parents have become no exception to that fear.

Although his parents know that Rom will likely be involved in combat next year, the thought of him living close to Gaza doesn't exactly help them sleep at night. He tries to temper their concerns by telling them that he has shelter almost everywhere and can stay safe.

Aside from having confidence in his well-being, Rom knows the one thing that is similar between this year and his next three in the army is that he's putting his country ahead of himself.

That's why when a red alert goes off, he focuses more on making sure his students are in hiding and feel comfortable instead of running for cover.

"During the war, all I thought about was how I could calm the kids down instead of worrying about my safety," Rom said.

Rom personally finds his job more gratifying than having to put on an army uniform because he can directly see the impact of who he is helping.

Sderot is the setting for Amit Rom's war spent volunteering in and reflecting on his country in time of war.

"Just because the city is bombed, it doesn't mean [the people] don't need us to plan activities or for us to be with them," Rom said. "In fact, they need it more. Every kid you talk to just wants someone to be there for them."

Adam Miller can be reached at amiller@student.umass.edu

WWW DAILYCOLLEGIAN .COM
Updated daily with video, slide shows, podcasts and so much more. Check it out today!

Welcome Back to Your Award Winning Dining Services!
MARCH - APRIL - MAY Upcoming Events
• It's Spring – Sweet
• Tyson Week
• Cooking/Baking 101
• American Produce Week
• Visiting College Chef Series: Texas A&M Univerisity
• UMass Idol Preliminary
• Visiting College Chef Series: Princeton University
• Student Iron Chef Competition
• Taste of UMass
• Visiting College Chef Series: Davidson College
• Taste of Home
• Spring BBQ
• Midnight Buffet
www.umassdining.com
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
RESTAURANTS ivy

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

MONDAY, MARCH 23 2009

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

AIG bonuses shatter confidence

Nicole Sobel

American International Group (AIG) recently received four bailouts totaling some $170 billion. American taxpayers had to contribute to this bailout money just to keep AIG afloat after all the financial trouble it was in. And now AIG is using the money to give big time executives huge bonuses? That is ridiculous.

Now, angry American taxpayers are looking for answers to questions about how the system became so badly broken. Deconstructing all the entanglements concerning this unethical use of bailout money is essential for Congress to do. It is imperative that it assists the American people by doing all it can to restore faith in the government for the American taxpayers and show them that the government is capable of fixing this payout gone bad.

AIG owes American taxpayers an apology while Congress and the Treasury need to help the American people understand how the system became so badly broken and what government and President Barack Obama are doing precipitously to fix it. Taxpayers also need to be informed and aware of the exact nature of the banks' dealings with AIG.

The government is trying to fix the mistake by taxing the bonuses by 90 percent – so now the AIG executives are fearful. This is how they are trying to get the money that was misused back: instilling fear in the executives and making them pay for this misuse of bailout money. Also, at least three executives have already chosen to give their bonuses back. This is a step in the right direction, but AIG still have a long way to go. They don't exist without the government, and taxpayer money.

There are two sides that American taxpayers need to look at. The first is that of the banks that received this bailout money, and their precise nature in dealing with AIG. The second is the side that AIG represented on "60 Minutes," when Federal Reserve chairman Ben Bernanke talked about AIG and described it as, "a company that made … unconscionable bets." American taxpayers are betting that the banks are acting in good faith, and that AIG is acting unconscionably in terms of bets. However, it's always possible that the banks and AIG are attempting to play a game to their own advantage.

Paying bonuses that amount to around $165 million or more to executives and employees in the very division that caused the problems that led to the federal bailouts is beyond frustrating to watch.

It is imperative now more than ever that Congress investigates this matter and uses the new disclosures to get them started. They owe this to the hard-working taxpayers who are appalled with the ridiculous use of bailout money that they are witnessing. Another $30 billion was added to the AIG bailout pot this month and I think all American taxpayers and Congress are aware that this money needs to be accounted for as soon as it's spent. This still leaves some $32 billion of hard-working taxpayer money unaccounted for. In this economy with every cent counting, that's no chump change. So where did it go? The largest recipient of the AIG bonuses, the bank Goldman Sachs, received around $12.9 billion, according to The New York Times. That amount is absurd, even by Wall Street standards.

AIG claimed it needed to give out these huge bonuses to its executives and financial institutions because they were an important part of AIG and had to be kept around. When AIG explains it like that, I'm pretty sure American taxpayers are still angry and frustrated. Yes, AIG has finally succeeded in answering some questions about where the money went. Yet the answers to the questions have only succeeded in raising many more questions.

Paying bonuses that amount to $165 million or more to executives and employees in the very division that caused the problems that led to the federal bailouts is beyond frustrating to watch.

Taxpayers are outraged, and have every right to be. Thank goodness President Obama actually acknowledged that outrage on Monday when he spoke – and he did vow to try his best to stop the payments. President Obama's words did give taxpayers a feeling of comfort and assurance. However, when it surfaced that his words contrasted with the words of his top economic advisor and the Treasury Department, the feeling of assurance was replaced with confusion over the mixed messages.

The Treasury Department said that, in actuality, there's nothing it can do to stop the payments. That definitely doesn't make us feel any better about the predicament at hand with AIG or increase our faith in the government as far as believing in their ability to fix this.

Americans are now stuck trying to figure out which part of the mixed messages reflects the true position of the administration. Giving bonuses from bailout money to the people that got AIG in the bad financial predicament in the first place is outrageous. American taxpayers now have another reason to be pissed off and lose faith in the government.

That faith needs to be restored in the government. It needs to be shown by example to the taxpayers that the government is capable of doing the right thing with the taxpayer's money. It must prove to us that this can be fixed.

Nicole Sobel is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at nsobel@student.umass.edu.

Drug market fuels violence

Eric Magazu

The Student Government Association (SGA) will soon have the opportunity to investigate new initiatives as it swears in Ngozi Mbawuike as its next president in early April. If events continue as they have since we left for spring break, the SGA will continue the consideration of a motion that seeks to have the University of Massachusetts endowment become divested from companies that provide war material for the Israel Defense Forces.

As students, this brings us to the point where we need to consider another timely divestment initiative. It is imperative that we urgently divest from the purchase of illegal drugs.

The purchase and use of drugs by students on campuses throughout the United States contributes significantly to the support of drug cartels that operate on the United States-Mexico border. According to Alex Johnson of MSNBC – quoting statistics from the National Drug Intelligence Center (NDIC) –these cartels control about 90 percent of the market for cocaine, along with most of the market for marijuana, methamphetamine and heroin.

According to the NDIC's 2009 National Drug Threat Assessment, which is available on its website at www.usdoj.gov/ndic, drug-trafficking organizations (DTOs), especially those originating in Mexico, are gaining strength throughout most major American cities and are responsible for a substantial portion of gang-related violence. The assessment asserts that these drug-related activities are the greatest organized crime threat in the United States.

In addition to the terror brought to American cities as a result of the use of illegal drugs, the use of these drugs contributes to violence among the various cartels that do their business along the Mexican border.

Since 2008, these armed conflicts have resulted in the deaths of over 6,000 people. Young Mexicans are being initiated into these gangs and inculcated with the values and morals that come along with gang life. Not only are physical lives being lost, but the souls of young people are being given over voluntarily to the enemy.

There is a strong argument that is occasionally made for drug legalization. The case rests upon the free-market notion of supply and demand. This is an economic principle that many of us have studied in introductory courses on microeconomics.

The contention is made that by suppressing of the supply of illegal drugs through law enforcement interdiction, while there simultaneously exists a high demand for such drugs among the populace, we only drive up the prices for illicit drugs. Thus, we can conclude that the extraordinary profits that can be realized by entering into the business of supplying drugs are what drive the gangs to resort to violence.

The use of any drug, excepting out of genuine medical necessity, should be identified for what it is – the handiwork of our enemy.

This line of reasoning fails because the decision on what is to constitute the law of the land, both within our local communities and throughout our nation, is not based on economic principles alone, but on the values, traditions and morals of our people. If these values, traditions and morals are ordered rightly, then there is no alternative than to assert that the law of the land comes from "on High," and that it is the job of man to carry this out in our civil law.

Whether civil law reflects the highest values of our communities or the proper purpose of man, it remains up to us as students to take a strong stand on our personal divestment from the purchase and use of illegal drugs. The French poet Paul Claudel once remarked, "Youth was not made for pleasure, but for heroism." If we take these words to heart and follow our conscience, then divestment should not be difficult at all.

If we examine the situation of the young people who become ensnared in the life of drug cartels in Mexico, gangs in U.S. cities or social pressures in American colleges, there is one thing of which we can be sure: This is not what their life is meant to be. To put it succinctly, their souls are far too important to be left to such a life, which is a life in exile from its true purpose. The use of any drug, excepting out of genuine medical necessity, should be identified for what it is – the handiwork of our enemy.

By continuing to purchase and use drugs, we unwittingly remain enslaved in the service of a cruel tormentor, a tyrant who reigns over us through our pleasures and desires. We believe that our actions will cause little harm to others and that we are merely exercising free choice. But, by serving this false master, we not only continue to remain enslaved ourselves, but also work to keep our fellow man enslaved.

By divesting from the use of our money in this way, we can instead choose to proclaim freedom for those who are held in bondage. Let us resolve ourselves, on this very day, to use our wealth, along with our time and our unique talents and abilities, to pay the ransom necessary to redeem the souls of our fellow young people who are held in callous exile, wherever they may live in the world, and without regard for social class or national identification.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

Be careful where you point your pitchforks and torches.
-Ed/Op

U.S. dollars fund Gaza deaths

Blood is cheap here in America. The lives of other human beings have become worthless and we have become a society ready to kill for any cause. Some may read this and say: "This isn't true, not in the society I live in." Well even if you're not willing to kill someone else, others will do it for you, and, of course, with your money.

Subhan Tariq

You may not realize it, but you continue to give military aid around the world to governments that use it to slaughter people. You and I, the taxpayers, are responsible for the deaths of thousands of people around the world and we continue to be the reason for the suffering of millions.

One example of this recently made headlines all over the world: "Further accounts of Gaza killings released," read the headline in The New York Times. But why should murder, ethnic cleansing and slaughter occurring in the Middle East matter to Americans?

Because, in this case, we paid for it. The U.S. gives $3 billion a year to Israel in military aid. We, the taxpayers, give more money in military aid to Israel than we do to all other countries combined.

Why do we give them money, which has cost each taxpayer over $24 thousand since 1949? We do so because they say they will only use it for self-defense. We do so because they say they will not kill women and children with our weapons. We do so because they say they follow international law when using the F-16s, Apache choppers and other tools of destruction we provide them. False.

Our money – our tax dollars – goes directly to Israel's infliction of suffering on millions of human beings in Gaza and the West Bank. The Times article referred back to a Haaretz feature entitled "Shooting and Crying," which covered the accounts of Israeli soldiers who participated in "Operation Cast Lead," the bombing and land invasion of Gaza. It revealed how Israeli soldiers intentionally targeted innocent civilians in order to increase the suffering of the people.

For example, when asked why an elderly woman was killed, a squad commander in the Israeli army was quoted as saying: "What's great about Gaza … you see a person on a path, he doesn't have to be armed, you can simply shoot him. In our case it was an old woman on whom I did not see any weapon when I looked. The order was to take down the person, this woman, the minute you see her. There are always warnings, there is always the saying, 'Maybe he's a terrorist.' What I felt was, there was a lot of thirst for blood."

Surely, then, there must have been widespread condemnation from the governments of the U.S. and Israel for an atrocity like this. False.

Defense Minister Ehud Barak told Israel Radio that he believed such incidents to be exceptions, adding, "The Israeli Army is the most moral in the world."

In the Haaretz feature, a soldier named Aviv described the orders he was given. "From above they said it was permissible, because anyone who remained in the sector and inside Gaza City was in effect condemned, a terrorist, because they hadn't fled. I didn't really understand: On the one hand they don't really have anywhere to flee to, but on the other hand they're telling us they hadn't fled so it's their fault."

You and I, the taxpayer, are responsible for the deaths of thousands of people around the world and continue to be the reason for the suffering of millions.

He is completely right: He didn't understand. This wasn't an operation to find and kill terrorists. This was by definition an act of terrorism in itself to scare the people of an area into submission by destroying their property and murdering them.

"You do not get the impression from the officers that there is any logic to it, but they won't say anything. To write 'death to the Arabs' on the walls, to take family pictures and spit on them, just because you can. I think this is the main thing in understanding how much the (Israel Defense Forces) has fallen in the realm of ethics, really. It's what I'll remember the most," Aviv went on to say.

Take a closer look at the death tolls. During the conflict, 13 Israelis were killed. Of those, 10 were military personnel. On the other side, 1434 Palestinians were killed. Of those 980 were civilians, and over 550 were women or children. The sheer numbers tell a troubling story, a story of gross overuse of force. A death ratio of over 100 to 1 doesn't even take into account the 6000 Gazans injured during the war, nor the 50,800 Gazans made homeless because their houses were destroyed.

It's all ok though, because in the words of Ehud Barak, Israel remains "the most moral army in the world" – an army that admittedly targeted defenseless women and children, an army that went on killing indiscriminately, an army that didn't allow outside media sources to cover their slaughter in Gaza. If that is moral, I don't ever want to see want an immoral army is capable of.

Subhan Tariq is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at stariq@student.umass.edu.

Which of the following is not a way to get your voice heard in The Daily Collegian?

a) E-mail editorial@dailycollegian.com
b) Go to DailyCollegian.com - Letter to the Editor
c) Complain to your friends at dinner
d) Use the Comments feature on any article on DailyCollegian.com

Note: This will be graded

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 23, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

'Hair' stands up at Bowker

Pioneer Valley charter school gives riveting performance

By Michelle Fredette
Collegian Staff

The musical "Hair" is a combination of chaotic musings, seemingly unrelated songs and a connecting story thread about fighting against the draft during the Vietnam War. The Pioneer Valley Performing Arts Charter Public School successfully embraced this mix of chaos and organization in their performance of "Hair" this past Friday at the University of Massachusetts' Bowker Auditorium.

"At its core, 'Hair' is a story about young people [the tribe] … their personal journeys to understand themselves and their connection to the world around them," writes director Alecia Chakour. "Throughout these explorations they confront countless questions regarding sexuality, race, class, drug use, war violence, religion, capitalism, environmentalism and personal and social growth."

The cast dealt with the difficult themes with refreshing maturity, singing about drug use, race and even masturbation without a flinch.

The PVPA truly embraced the show's uncertain mood. But those involved in the production clearly thought about more than just the acting and singing necessary to capture the mood. Choreography, costume, musicians, props and lighting were all carefully planned to fulfill each facet of a strong performance.

Chakour, who choreographed in addition to directing, made the dancing reflect the blended chaos and order of the play's structure.

Performers weaved in an out each other freely, then quickly came together to spin or point in synchronized movement. Even when the cast did move in unison, however, it wasn't entirely synchronized. Individual bodies moved with different pacing and style, emphasizing the free, uninhibited nature of the 1960s.

The students at the Pioneer Valley Performing Arts Charter Public School put on a performance of 'Hair' at Bowker Auditorium over spring break.

Choreography played a role when the cast was not dancing, per se. Throughout much of the musical a large cast sat on stage, listening and responding to whoever was in the spotlight at the moment. Yet, to preserve that feeling of liberation actors got up, walked across the stage and sat back down again, as if they were visiting one group of friends, then another.

Lighting designer Emily Brownlow planned beautifully.

Muted pink and blue lights shone during scenes of drugged haze while stars lit up the back of the stage, moving so slightly that audience members felt delirious.

With a cast of 27 and a band of nine on stage, the lighting had to be focused properly to capture the focus. This was achieved wonderfully, especially as Claude (played by Dan Robert) was left alone in the brightness as the rest of the cast stepped into the blackness of the back of the stage.

A superb use of lighting also occurred when the refrain of "Aquarius" was sung again towards the end of the second act. Just as the cast sang, "Let the sun shine in," lights from above beamed down, looking almost like rays of sunlight.

The show's lead actors sang well, including Robert, Zoe Weiszenbaum (Sheila), Andrew Lederman (Woof) and Dylan Makowski (Berger). But leads are expected to sing well in high school musicals. What was truly impressive was that even those with smaller roles showed incredible range and quality of voice. Tyler Renee was impressive as Dionne and Hannah Levy sang bell-like as Chrissy.

The musicians played skillfully, as well. Their presence on stage (rather than off to the side) made them a true part of the performance, and even they were dressed in 1960s costume.

Compared to the musical portions of the show, the moments without song were weak in the first act. After so much action and coordination during the singing, the dramatic pauses in line delivery felt too slow in comparison, but this picked up in the second act and the musical as a whole came together.

Props played a large role in helping the performance be whole in every aspect. Claude's mother and father were brought in on pedestals, emphasizing their stiffness and creating a strong contrast between them and the loose hippie nature of the "tribe."

Similarly, the triple-principal was wheeled in behind a huge, oppressive podium, underscoring the authoritarian atmosphere of the scene. And during Claude's hallucination huge skeletons, tiki-masks, pterodactyl-like props and much more – all glowing under black lights – zigzagged across the stage, adding to the surreality.

Overall, the PVPA's production of "Hair" was exceptional. Other than some slowness in Act I and a few technical difficulties with microphones, the show ran smoothly and showed a level of thought rare for high school productions.

Michelle Fredette can be reached at mfredett@student.umass.edu.

Even at 80, West stays on top of his game in television

By Geoff Boucher
Los Angeles Times

Adam West barely recognizes Gotham City these days. "Batman is so dark now," the 80-year-old actor said with a carefree chuckle. "The new films, they are grim, Gothic, full of explosions, mayhem. It's the way of things, I suppose; the whole world seems darker."

Well, the world was also heaving with angst back when West wore the cape for 26 months of prime-time silliness that began in January 1966. The native of Walla Walla, Wash., became an icon of camp with his masked-man deadpan and, for much of America, his version was the definition of the Caped Crusader for decades.

That's changed since the cemetery cabaret of Tim Burton's Bat-movies and the ferocious revenge films of Christopher Nolan, whose "The Dark Knight" hit the billion-dollar mark at the box office a few weeks ago. Batman now seems closer kin to Dracula and Dirty Harry than to Dick Tracy, but don't tell that to West, who is still dancing the Batusi and enjoying his busy role as an elder statesman of farce.

"I look at it this way. They've got 'The Dark Knight,' and I was the bright knight," he said with the breathy, oddball diction that still keeps him in demand as a voice actor in animation. "Or maybe I was even … the neon knight."

West has an upcoming appearance on "30 Rock," and there's also his ongoing voice work on "Family Guy," on which he plays Mayor Adam West, that namesake role, along with his portrayal of himself (albeit, a cat-obsessed version) on the loopy Nickelodeon series "The Fairly OddParents," has given him a new generation of fans who have never seen the old "Batman" series except maybe in clips on YouTube. He's also had voice roles in "Chicken Little," "Meet the Robinsons" and animated Batman shows on which he played the mayor of Gotham, not its infamous mystery man.

"I'm like Madonna. I keep reinventing myself," said West, who splits his time between Palm Springs, Calif., and Sun Valley, Idaho. "I get called Mayor West a lot in airports. I've been very fortunate to have a fan base that keeps growing, and the work gets such a warm response and humor from people."

This week, West is back in a familiar comedy vehicle – literally. The film "Super Capers," yet another superhero parody, opened Friday, and while it's showing in just 80 theaters nationwide, it's a memorable gig for West because it puts him back in the driver's seat of his most famous ride.

"It's a very bright comedy adventure. In it I'm a cabdriver who's gotten hold of the Batmobile and converted it to a taxi cab – with air conditioning," West said. "I meet up with a young guy who's trying to be a superhero, played by an actor named Justin Whalin, who is quite good, and I'm able to drive him around on some of his misadventures."

And how was it to sit in that grand old tail-finned time capsule? "It was great," he said. "All those things that you do in a long career come back pretty easily once you get your hands on the wheel."

Like William Shatner of "Star Trek," West spent a considerable amount of his career feeling smothered by his short-lived but unforgettably eccentric TV role from the 1960s. "I remember the struggle that I had," West said. "I mean, I did the Music Center in L.A., I did the Mark Taper Forum, I did regional theater, anything I could to keep working. I think it's an actor's obligation, if possible, to keep working, playing the instrument. But, yes, there were a lot of doors closed for a long time."

As the years passed, West (again, like Shatner) eventually decided the better tactic was to celebrate and spoof the old reruns instead of fighting them. Still, there's a tinge of jealousy in West's voice when he talks about the actors today who can play Batman, Wolverine or Iron Man and simply move on to the next nowhere role without the sort of treacherous typecasting that faced West, Clayton Moore, George Reeves and Christopher Reeve.

"I've never felt the envy … well, I don't know. Maybe I have a little," West said. "I look at it and I think, Well, it's a lot simpler now to do other things.' And why is that? Well, I think they're in big movies on big screens and they're in roles written so the actor can have moments outside of that superhero thing. I fought for that a little bit and they gave me a little more Bruce Wayne, but still he was a comedic Bruce Wayne … It was still theater of the absurd."

All subjects come back to "Batman," and there West is in a legacy-maintenance mode. He has a new DVD venture called "Adam West Naked," which has him recounting anecdotes about all 120 episodes of "Batman." As the title suggests, the behind-the-scenes tales are often sexed-up stories about a 1960s comcat who sometimes comes off like Austin Powers with a cape.

The Neon Knight says he has no plans to slow down despite the fact that 55 years have passed since he made his television debut in "The Philco Television Playhouse."

"The reaction has been so positive and good for me that I love it now," West said of his enduring pop-culture image. "How could I not? I would hate to be a bitter, aging actor. I've been so fortunate to have this opportunity to bring Batman alive on the screen. There's a lot of talent, money and expertise with the new films. They're beautifully crafted, but there's something about our Batman that still strikes a chord. And as for me, I'm too young and pretty to retire, as somebody once said."

Rudd prefers comedian over eye candy

Paul Rudd stars in the comedy "I Love You, Man" with his wife (played by Rashida Jones). The movie opened this past weekend at the box office and was another hit for the actor who has taken on the role of a comedian over being type-cast strictly as a "love interest."

By Monica Hesse
The Washington Post

Let's imagine a convention of Paul Rudd fans:

There's lots of spittle, spraying from the mouths of "The 40 Year Old Virgin" fans who jab at each other and say, "You know how I know you're gay?" then laugh hysterically. There's a bunch of young women who secretly watch "Clueless" whenever it's on TBS, which is at least twice a week. Guys wearing Sex Panther cologne are here, plus "Reno 911" acolytes, and that weird co-worker who owns all the "Friends" DVDs and talks as if it's still on the air. Throw in the Shakespeare buffs and the one person who remembers that Rudd was in "Cider House Rules," and suddenly everybody you know is present.

If we were to give this convention a keynote address, here is what it would be:

"Character Actor With a Leading Man's Face: How the Erstwhile Next Big Thing Became a Funny Supporting Thing, Then Finally a Funny Big Thing."

"In college I had this friend who would come up with certain terminology and everyone would use it. ... Everyone kind of spoke Dave Dorothy language," says Rudd, 39. He's eating brunch at a diner in New York's Meatpacking District. He lives a few blocks from here with his wife and 3-year-old son, and today he's dressed like your husband dresses on the days when he just pulls a wrinkled sweater off the floor. This feels appropriate since Rudd is the guy every single woman of a certain age wants to marry.

"Like imbe–." Back to the terminology. The "imbe–" prefix, Rudd explains, could be added to any noun to imply that the thing looked dumb. "A grown man wearing his socks pulled up to his shorts, that became 'imbe-socks.' ... I would adopt (the lingo) when I was around them. Oh look. Imbe-hair. Ha ha ha!"

This, essentially, describes the plot of his latest project, "I Love You, Man," which comes out Friday.

Outwardly, it's about real estate agent Peter (Rudd), who gets engaged (to Rashida Jones), then realizes he doesn't have any guy friends to serve as best man. Let the man-dates and bromance commence. Throw in Lou Ferrigno.

But the movie is really about the difficulty of making new friends, especially for nice guys who are deeply uncomfortable calling beers "brewskis" but who understand that mastering such terminology is necessary to cultivating straight male relationships. In "I Love You, Man," Rudd is this awkward guy. Jason Segel ("Knocked Up," "Forgetting Sarah Marshall") is his boorish platonic soul mate.

The plot all fits into a genre that – thanks to the current Judd Apatowian man-toddler craze – some clever critics have described as "kidult." This word makes Rudd put down his fork and snort.

"Kidult. It sounds like something my grandmother would have made for Purim. Would you please pass the kidult?" Then he laughs at his own joke. Then he mocks himself for laughing at his own joke. Then he laughs again, collapsing helplessly into the vinyl booth.

Rudd's self-effacing self-awareness is what makes "I Love You, Man" work – what makes it, despite a few dog poo jokes, actually feel smart. And more important, true to life.

"The character of Peter has to be self-aware," says director John Hamburg. "If he's not aware of the fact that he gets nervous around other men, then he's just a loser. ... That aspect of Paul, that you know he knows what he's doing, that's what makes it real."

In one scene, Rudd's character tries to "snake a heer" from Segel, only to have his request come out, mangled, as "snake a brame." Rudd's Floor, please swallow me now expression afterward is hilarious.

He also starred in November's "Role Models," as a cranky salesman assigned to mentor an uber-geek. Before that, you'd most often find Rudd in the background. He hammed it up as a surf instructor behind Segel in "Sarah Marshall," as a desperate husband behind Seth Rogen in "Knocked Up," and in countless other slacker-y films made by the incestuous comedic crew. "Jason Segel says they should call us the Fat Pack," Rudd says.

He's clearly delighted by the phrase, but Rudd isn't tubby, schlubby or any other sad-sack adjective that could describe Segel, Rogen and gang. He's got dark, wavy hair and a Colgate smile and downright chiseled bone structure. He's handsome, which made watching him in any Fat Pack ensemble comedy confusing: What's the cute guy doing in there? Shouldn't he be out front?

If he'd succumbed to the fortune of his own good looks, he might have reached leading-man status long ago – just not the one he wanted.

"Paul is a good-looking guy," says Hamburg. "I'm man enough to say that. But I think that for the early part of his career, people didn't realize he was also really funny."

Casting directors didn't realize that. They saw cheekbones, they thought "love interest."

Rudd's first big break came in 1995, a few years after he moved to New York (he'd grown up in a Kansas City suburb and studied theater at the University of Kansas), when he was cast as Alicia Silverstone's perfectly sweet ex-stepbrother in "Clueless."

After that he was Leonardo DiCaprio's perfectly sweet competition in "Romeo (plus) Juliet" and Jennifer Aniston's perfectly sweet gay love interest in "The Object of

See RUDD on page 6

Adam West was the first man to wear the bat suit on screen in the 60s campy comedy that brought the actor to fame.

'Untitled' Picasso masterpiece explained and understood

By Blake Gopnik
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — To watch a great art thinker's mind at work, we asked T.J. Clark to have a go at a Picasso that he hadn't known before, an untitled still life from 1918. It hangs in the East Building of the National Gallery, just two floors up from where Clark's Mellon lectures will begin Sunday.

THE BLACK

Clark had never really thought about Picasso's still life until we put him face to face with it. In reproductions that he's glimpsed, he's found the whole thing "terribly jolly." Not praise, coming from Clark. Standing in front of it, he's immediately struck by the "extraordinary black border" that wraps around three sides. That makes the whole scene graver, he says, noting how Picasso's black border creates a special tension between the "lighthearted bric-a-brac" that fills the painting's table and a sense of "grim confinement."

Coming very close to the painting, Clark points out how the dark paint actually covers areas in its bottom half that were once the same lively turquoise found on the painting's vase and cards. (The earlier paint peeks through cracks in the darker tones laid overtop.) Picasso, standing before his half-finished picture, seems to have had the same concerns about its "jolliness" as Clark.

Once Picasso had revised and completed the picture, Clark notes, he laid down a blood-red signature that crosses over between dark border and bright scene, laying claim to both.

THE SPACE

Clark is interested in the confined spaces and interiors you get in Picasso. Even when a picture's so kaleidoscopic that you can't make out the objects in it, he says, Picasso almost always gives a sense of the domestic space they're in. And, of course, you get just such a space in this picture's view into the corner of a room. Picasso, the great hater of abstraction, was always committed to delivering "something solid and felt," says Clark.

Stepping far back from the picture, Clark shows how well Picasso has achieved his end: What had looked like cubist complexities from up close resolve into a clear sense of a cluttered table standing in a corner with a chair. However close a Picasso painting comes to abstract pattern, says Clark, it has to "relate to some particular situation" in the real world.

Rather than dwelling on making each object separately clear and visible, that is, Picasso "wants to show us the way things in a certain world fit together." Picasso asks himself: "How imperiously can I play with these particular identities and still have them contribute to an overall interior?"

THE PAST

For all its radically modern look, says Clark, the enclosed world seen in Picasso's pictures is essentially nostalgic. They depict the cozy world of a 19th-century bourgeois. For Picasso, Clark says, the bourgeoisie is a social force that is "both confining and wonderful": His interiors register that confinement, but they also revel in the comforts and objects that they gather into "the familiar space of the room."

Picasso had painted such old-fashioned rooms even when he was living in the mess of his unheated studio at the Bateau Lavoir. By 1918, when he's actually achieved the comforts of the bourgeoisie, he seems to step back from them - to frame them in black and hold them up to sight.

THE OBJECTS

Picasso depicts the "stock properties" of bohemian sociability: guitar, sheet music, cards, fruit bowl, even maybe an absinthe spoon and glass at the front edge of the table. They are, says Clark, "utterly banal and familiar things - they stand for the sufficiency of the bohemian world."

That world is "a mixture of the celebratory and the down-at-heels," says Clark. "Never was a carpet less luxurious - or the stuffing in a chair." Although, in a typically Picassoid oxymoron, that down-at-heels carpet is also the one place in the painting where the artist resorts to showy brushwork.

By 1918, however, this very successful painter barely had a foot left in bohemia: His still life is looking back at something the artist has lost. The longer we look at the painting, Clark says, the more clearly it seems to be about "its stock properties being stock." Its vase and playing cards are cartoons of themselves, the fruits in its fruit bowl become four black-edged blobs of pink. "Never has fruit been more vestigial."

THE MOMENT

1918 wasn't a good year for Europe, exhausted by a four-year war. If the painting wears black, that could be why.

Yet Clark insists that the picture is not portentous or histrionically doom-laden. Clark could imagine someone asking, "How dare a painter paint cards and a guitar in 1918 - how can this painting be other than trivial?" And that's the question Picasso answers, in a painting of "tremendous gravity." Picasso, says Clark, wants us to "enter its world of familiar delights, but full of a sense of that world being something to struggle for."

THE ARTIST

The great achievements of cubism were over when this still life was painted, and there was a real risk that the movement was becoming empty style. "He knows that the moves are becoming too preestablished," Clark says. This last moment of cubism has the "terminal flavor" of "a language tremendously conscious of itself as a language, on the verge of just sedimenting up." The airless, lightless scene in this 1918 still life, says Clark, "is on the verge of not being vivid."

Clark wonders if Picasso uses the black border on this picture to show that he's aware of this. His border presents the scene as a work of art, as a framed picture, rather than as an unmediated view into a real portion of real space. That is, the painter is letting us know that he knows that his moves are starting to be more about painting than about the vivid world that they once showed.

Whereas earlier, fully cubist pictures, which tended to trail off into open blankness at their sides, had simply let us sense their space, without all the editorializing.

In this still life, then, Picasso's sense of space has started to register as a particular sense of confinement - the confinement of a painter who feels trapped in an artistic style, too far from reality and truth.

A drawing done by 9-year-old Picasso showed some talent, but did not hint at what he would become as an artist.

A different type of leading man

Paul Rudd started his career as a 'pin-up' type actor in the movie "Clueless," but now has reinvented himself as a comedic force on the big screen.

RUDD from page 5

My Affection." On the release of that movie, one gaga reviewer declared that Rudd "could now claim universal pin-up status."

"That's definitely the direction that the Hollywood machine was trying to push him in," says writer and director David Wain, who has worked with Rudd on several projects, including "Role Models." "But he's always been this hyper-smart, hysterically funny guy. He's like Paul Newman, but then he's got this absurdist sense of humor."

Still, the machine might have succeeded, except that Rudd got his second big break: In 2000 he happened to read Wain's wacky, odd comedy script "Wet Hot American Summer."

"It felt like a truer representation of myself than most of the things I had auditioned for," says Rudd, who ended up playing a sleazy, un-sweet camp counselor. Although the film was out for "maybe two weeks in two theaters," says Rudd, "I was so excited to be in that movie because I knew it was different than all the stuff I'd done."

He worked his way into Judd Apatow's circle – "I think Paul may have stalked me," Apatow writes via e-mail – and by 2004 he'd all but erased his romcom past. As many fans began to recognize him as the mustachioed "Anchorman" sidekick as they did a romantic hero.

Not everyone immediately understood the switch from leading guy to offbeat character actor. When "Clueless" director Amy Heckerling, who also directed Rudd in 2007's "I Could Never Be Your Woman," learned he'd be second banana in "Knocked Up," "I said: 'No, Paul, you've got to be the lead! You're the guy!' But I'm not his mother and I'm not his agent," remembers Heckerling.

Of course, as Heckerling now says, "Knocked Up" turned out to be a wise career move, becoming the crude zeitgeist of summer 2007.

Now Rudd's career has come nearly full circle, back to the land of the leading man. But in his most recent movies, he gets to be the dashing guy who gets the girl, but he also gets to be the comic relief. Or, as Hamburg says, "He can be the center of a movie but not be boring in it."

Rudd doesn't take his changing status for granted. "I certainly feel like I have options and opportunities that I never had before," says Rudd. "But I'm waiting for the other shoe to drop."

Meanwhile, he has ascended to what many would consider the pinnacle of actorly fame: He graces the cover of the latest Vanity Fair, which celebrates the current kings of comedy.

"Clueless" fans rejoice: He's got stubble and expensive lighting, and his face looks dreamy.

Comic fans rejoice: He is wearing a barrel.

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM
Updated daily with video, slide shows, podcasts and so much more. Check it out today!

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
■ PRESIDENTIAL APTS ■ COLLEGE INN APTS
■ COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS ■ LANTERN COURT APTS
■ PERRY APTS ■ MILL HOLLOW
■ 177 N. PLEASANT ST. ■ CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

SPHS School of Public Health and Health Sciences
RESEARCH DAY • Thursday - March 26, 2009
UMass Campus Center Auditorium • 9:30AM-5:30PM PROGRAM
9:30-11AM
Considering Graduate School in Public Health and Health Sciences?
Come join us for a presentation on educational opportunities in public health and health sciences at UMASS.
• What public health and health sciences is all about
• Why UMASS Amherst is a great place to study public health and health sciences
• The admissions requirements and application processes
12:30-3:30PM
Poster Viewing and Judging
2:00PM
Light Refreshments
4-5:00PM
Featured Speaker -
David P. Ropeik B.S.J., M.S.J.
The Risk Response, Why Our Fears Don't Match the Facts
Mr. Ropeik is an Instructor at Harvard University and an international consultant, teacher, and speaker on risk communication to government, business, consumer groups, and educational institutions. He is a former Instructor of risk communication at the Harvard School of Public Health, and was co-director of the school's professional education course 'The Risk Communication Challenge'.
5:00PM
Research Day Award Recipients Announced
ALL events are FREE and open to the campus community
For further information:
Contact the Deans' office at 413-545-2526
or phallister@schoolph.umass.edu.
Co-sponsored by
The School of Public Health and Health Sciences
The Rho Chapter, Delta Omega Honorary Public Health Society

March Madness: the Holiday?

I have a proposal for President Barack Obama.

Award all serious fans of college basketball the Monday following Selection Sunday until the end of the first round of the NCAA Tournament off from all duties. This will be a time when they have no obligations other than college basketball and filling out their brackets and watching the two most thrilling days in sports.

There are no wives or girlfriends – or husbands and boyfriends for the females out there who take the most exciting thing in sports seriously – no kids, no work, no school. Nothing except brackets, statistics and way more ESPN, ESPN2, ESPNEWS, ESPNU and ESPN the Ocho than anyone should consume in one week.

Jeffrey R. Larnard

Obama has already pushed for a playoff in college football so why not this? And I know he would love to be relieved of his presidential duties for a week to make sure his bracket is in tip-top shape at noon on the day the madness begins. He did take the time to go on ESPN and fill out his bracket, so you know how much he cares.

Isn't our economy going down the drain? Yet he could spare time to go on SportsCenter? Just asking.

But he may be on the right track with using his presidential powers in the sports world. Come on, many people in this country know more and probably care more about college football and March Madness than they do about the economy, even if it means they will lose their job.

Now, here is why I think this is needed.

First off, on the two days of the first round, no one does any work in his or her cubicles. CBS builds a button into their video player to make an Excel spreadsheet pop up so workers can hide the fact that they are watching the games all day. If I'm not mistaken, over $1 billion was lost last year in productivity due to the tournament. What is the point in having them even work?

Second, it creates tension between loved ones. For me, personally, the University of Massachusetts picks the most inopportune time to put its students on spring break. While most other schools across the country have spring break during the week of the conference tournaments, UMass gives us the following week every year.

This is unfortunate for me because I have a long-distance relationship and that means that entire week is spent with my girlfriend. But she doesn't understand how much the tournament means to me and the bragging rights at stake.

So that is why I was finalizing my bracket between 1 a.m. and 4 a.m. the day the tournament began. And by finalizing it I mean, not putting nearly as much thought into it as I would have liked.

I did spend the first few days after the bracket was released working on a bracket based on the cheerleaders of each school – check it out on the sports blog at dailycollegian.com – as a fun thing for the blog (ok and for myself). I got my girlfriend to help out with it and told her I wanted her input just so she would put up with me spending hours looking at hundreds of cheerleaders and not mind that I was spending time doing that instead of paying attention to her.

Well she quickly got annoyed with it anyways – and understandably so – and had heard more than she ever wanted to hear about brackets. So when I woke up late because I didn't go to bed until 5 a.m. and I was late for the plans we made, I was careful not to tell her I was up all night working on my tournament picks.

It's just better for the two of us.

Having downed multiple Moutain Dews to stay awake, Jeffrey R. Larnard looks at his two brackets, which are sure to fail. If only he had a few days off from work to fully prepare, he may have faired better.

It's not polite to point, Mr. President. However, Jeffrey R. Larnard is pointing to you to solve one of the nation's biggest problems: the lack of a national holiday during the first two days of March Madness.

> No kids, no work, no school. Nothing except brackets, statistics and way more ESPN, ESPN2, ESPNEWS, ESPNU than anyone should ever consume. .

Now don't get me wrong, I love my girlfriend and want to spend time with her as well, but unless you are serious about March Madness like so many in this country are you just can't understand. She'll tell me we only see each other every few weeks. And I could respond: "Well, March Madness comes just once a year," but I don't think it would work.

That's why it is up to Obama. He's preached change, and here is a perfect opportunity for it. Plus, former president George W. Bush left him such a hole to dig out of, he may need the extra votes come 2012 for reelection and here is a perfect opportunity for a couple million. He'd sure get mine.

Jeffrey R. Larnard is a collegian columnist and can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com

For me, I change my mind on my brackets constantly. The first bracket I put out looks nothing like the one I finished with.

Now if UMass just moved its spring break to the same week as most of the country, then I could spend that week with my girlfriend and then skip my classes the following week to work on my bracket. If UMass did this it would help me out somewhat, but what about the millions of other people who participate?

That's why it is up to Obama. He's preached change, and here is a perfect opportunity for it. Plus, former president George W. Bush left him such a hole to dig out of, he may need the extra votes come 2012 for reelection and here is a perfect opportunity for a couple million. He'd sure get mine.

Jeffrey R. Larnard is a collegian columnist and can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com

For more coverage of all UMass sports
Check out the Collegian Sports Blog
at
HTTP://BLOG.MASSLIVE.COM/DAILYCOLLEGIANSPORTS/

Season ends in OT loss

HOCKEY from page 10

at two and extend their season.

The Minutemen gained the zone and forced a shot on NU goaltender Brad Thiessen – who was named Hockey East Player of the Year later in the week – but couldn't net the equalizer. After Thiessen stopped an attempt from freshman defenseman Matt Irwin, the Huskies looked to clear the zone. UMass sophomore James Marcou stole the puck from Vitale and quickly fired the puck across to Irwin at the left point. Irwin wound and quickly fired a slap shot that beat Thiessen to his stick side.

Irwin scored a goal in each of the three games against the Huskies. All three came on slap shots from the blue line. Much like Irwin's goal on Sunday, his tally on Friday tied the game, 1-1, in the third period. Senior winger Chris Davis poked his own rebound past Thiessen 4:10 later to give UMass the 2-1 lead in Game 1 of the series.

The Minutemen held on to win Game 1. NU skated to a 4-1 victory in the second game, which forced Sunday's matchup.

Marcou gave the Minutemen a 1-0 lead on a two-man advantage in the second period of Game 2 with his team-high 15th goal of the season. Irwin held the puck at the left point and found Marcou on the goal line to Thiessen's right. Marcou headed toward Thiessen deliberately and tried to slide the puck across the goal line, it deflected on Thiessen's stick then the back of NU defenseman Denis Chisholm and into the net.

Following the goal, the Northeastern forwards found an extra gear on their rushes and quickly took a 2-1 lead. After Tuckerman tied the game, 1-1, on a power play, NU leading goal scorer Ryan Ginand headed an odd-man rush. UMass freshman defenseman Michael Marcou took away any passing lanes, forcing Ginand to shoot. Dainton slid out, and Ginand picked the top corner over Dainton's blocker to give NU its first lead of the game, 38 seconds after Tuckerman tied it.

In the three games, Dainton kept the Minutemen with the Huskies despite long spats of offensive inadequacy. The Huskies held the Minutemen to five goals in the three-game series, and prevented UMass from establishing the sound puck movement and cycling that it demonstrates during its best offensive efforts.

The Huskies' offensive system is tailored much like UMass'. While the UMass defensemen succeeded in the same way Northeastern did for most of the weekend, the Huskies capitalized on their opportunities more frequently than the Minutemen. The speed of forwards like Casey Wellman and T.J. Syner resulted in several odd-man rushes throughout the weekend, but Thiessen and the NU defensemen forced the Minutemen to take bad-angle shots if a shot was even attempted.

Seconds before Tuckerman's overtime winner, Syner and Marcou raced through the neutral zone with two NU defenders standing in front of them. Syner hesitated briefly to get the defenseman off balance and create a potential 2-on-1. Marcou continued, though, and crossed the blue line before Syner, drawing an offside call from the officials.

GAME NOTES

James Marcou finished tied with BU's Colin Wilson for most points in Hockey East games with 35. ... Following the loss, Berry signed with the Toronto Maple Leafs, the club that drafted him in 2005 before he arrived in Amherst. The Maple Leafs assigned him to the Toronto Marlies of the American Hockey League. Since signing, he's played one game for the Marlies. ... Tuckerman was named Hockey East Rookie of the Week after scoring three goals in the series with UMass. ... The victory in the first game of the series was UMass' first win when scoring fewer than three goals since defeating Clarkson in the first round of the NCAA Tournament on March 23, 2007 – a span of 75 games. ... Former UMass defenseman Thomas Pock was named one of the 25 top defenders (the list included defensemen and goaltenders) in Hockey East history as part of the league's 25th anniversary celebration.

Joe Meloni can be reached at managingeditor@dailycollegian.com.

BY STANLEY ANTHIAN

Sophomore James Marcou and the Minutemen fell just short in upsetting No. 2 seed Northeastern in the first round of the Hockey East playoffs. Marcou finished the year with a team-high 15 goals and 32 assists.

Reeves, Plourde power UM over Dayton

SOFTBALL from page 10

3-0 lead. Leftfielder Samantha Salato followed with another home run, this one a solo shot to left field.

Reeves' second home run came in the top of the sixth with UMass already up 7-0. With the bases loaded, Reeves took another pitch deep, this time to left field on a grand slam, to put UMass up 11-0.

Game 1 had no lack of offensive output from the Minutewomen either, as they jumped all over Dayton pitching for 14 hits and 16 runs. UMass was led by its 1-3 hitters (Carly Normandin, Williams and Mollica) who combined to go 7-for-9 with two walks, seven runs and eight RBIs.

Brandice Balschmiter began the day on the mound, pitching three innings, giving up one hit and striucking out four. Bailey Sanders finished the final two innings allowing just one base runner on a walk.

The sweep of Dayton comes after UMass went 3-2 in the Under Armour Classic last weekend at the University of Southern Florida. The Minutewomen started the tournament with a 6-0 victory over Central Michigan to give Balschmiter her 100th career victory. UMass fell in the second game of the first day of the tournament, 1-0, to South Florida.

Day two of the tournament saw a sweep by the Minutewomen as Balschmiter and Plourde combined to strike out 21 batters as UMass beat Loyola Marymount, 7-0, and Jacksonville, 5-1. The Minutewomen finished the tournament with a 6-3 loss to Florida Gulf Coast.

The Minutewomen continue their A-10 schedule against St. Bonaventure on Friday and Saturday in their first home games of the season.

After finishing up the majority of their non-conference, Sortino is pleased with how her team has progressed and looks forward to their return home.

"I think they are in a good spot. I thought they are broadening their horizons everyday as they get a little bit better," Sortino said. "We're putting some more things into our toolbox and I think that we're really looking forward to coming home on Friday."

Jeffrey R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@dailycollegian.com.

Minutewomen fall short in 2 matches

Florida Atlantic, Division II

Barry too much for tennis team

BY JAY ASSER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Entering the unofficial midway point of the season, the Massachusetts tennis team struggled, falling to both Barry University and Florida Atlantic in their week-long spring trip to Florida.

The Minutewomen first traveled to Miami Shores to take on Division II power Barry on Monday.

Though UMass notched three singles wins, it was swept in doubles play en route to dropping a close 4-3 match. With the victory, the Buccaneers improved to 10-4 on the season, while the Minutewomen fell to 8-7.

At No. 1 doubles, duo Candynce Boney and Maude Lecluyse came up short against Angie Werschel and Yulia Kashelkina, suffering an 8-5 defeat. Following suite at No. 3, Lauren MacKay and Kaitlyn Carpenter fell to Mei-Jing Ang and Julie Cadet by the same score.

Caroline Wendling and Laime Contreras of Barry were too much for Laura Danai and Tanisha Hodgson at No. 2, handing the pair an 8-4 loss and topping off the Buccaneers' sweep in doubles.

The Minutewomen had more success in singles play, receiving wins from Lecluyse, MacKay and Danai to highlight a strong effort.

Moving up to play 1st singles, Boney began the match with a strong start, taking the first set, 6-0. However, she was unable to close it out as Werschel answered back by claiming the last two sets, 6-4, 6-1, for the impressive comeback victory.

Not to be outdone, Hodgson and Kashelkina countered with their own back-and-forth match at No. 3 singles. After Hodgson took the first set, 6-2, Kashelkina responded by fighting back with 6-1 second-set win, setting up a deciding third set. Kashelkina won in a tiebreaker, 7-6 (7-3), earning the hard-fought victory.

Also going to a third set at No. 4, Lecluyse defeated Contreras, 2-6, 6-0, 6-2 for her ninth singles win of the season.

The next day, UMass traveled to Boca Raton to face Florida Atlantic (6-14) on a rainy Tuesday afternoon.

For the second consecutive match, the Minutewomen dropped the doubles point, winning only one match against the Owls. Despite receiving victories from Boney and Danai in singles play, UMass fell to Florida Atlantic, 5-2. The loss drops UMass to .500 on the season, with six regular season matches remaining until the Atlantic 10 Championships.

After entering a perfect 10-0 on the season, the team of Lecluyse and Danai lost for the first time against Natalia Totevska and Dominique Wimmer, 8-5.

At No. 2, Carpenter and Hodgson earned UMass its only doubles win, defeating Cassie Bergeson and Emma Rossiter, 8-2.

Playing at No. 1 singles for the first time this season, Kaitlyn Carpenter fell to Wimmer, 6-3, 6-3. Boney bounced back from her last match by defeating Totevska in a hard-fought, 6-4, 6-4 victory.

At No. 6, Danai overwhelmed Bergeson, 6-0, 6-0, giving UMass its second win of the day. In the only match to go to three sets, MacKay came up just short against Virginia Augustin, 6-4, 3-6, 6-1.

The Minutewomen will be back in action when they face another back-to-back situation starting March 27, as they take on Old Dominion and A-10 rival Richmond.

Jay Asser can be reached at jasser@student.umass.edu

Schneider's 17 saves leads to key victory

M. LACROSSE from page 10

each other. Connolly scored his second, giving UMass an 8-4 lead while MacDonnell scored once more in the third and again in the fourth to close out the game.

While MacDonnell had a huge day against the Minutemen, Loyola's other two main scoring threats, Finnerty and Shane Koppens, were shut down, recording one point between them.

Loyola outshot UMass by a 15-shot margin, 44-29, and beat out the Minutemen in ground balls, 41-28. While the Greyhounds had numerous opportunities in the game, they failed to convert in no small part because of Schneider in goal.

Schneider played stopper to 17 Loyola shots while his Greyhound counterpart, Jake Hagelin, recorded eight saves on the day. Schneider's performance improves his goals-against average to 7.48 and his save percentage to .614.

The key to the UMass victory was the fact that it did not beat itself. The Greyhounds may have dominated in a number of areas, but the Minutemen did not commit a single penalty on the day – giving Loyola no man-up opportunities.

The Minutemen return to action in a home meeting with ECAC foe Penn State – which is one spot behind UMass in votes – on Saturday at Garber Field.

GAME NOTES

UMass is now 2-11 in 13 career meetings against Loyola. The Minutemen were 0-8 against the Greyhounds in Baltimore. ... The new polls came out on Sunday night; the Minutemen moved all the way up to 14 with the victory.

Nick O'Malley can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu

UMass collapses in second half in loss

W. LACROSSE from page 10

tion of us learning to trust each other and [gaining experience]."

"We're a fairly young team and I think its going to be something we will improve on throughout the year."

Freshman goalkeeper Katie Florence stopped 17 shots, one shy of her career-high in the Minutewomen's upset attempt.

UMass committed 27 turnovers in the loss, and its lack of ball security was a major factor in UNH's second-half comeback. Preventing turnovers will be a focus of the team's next practice.

One positive for the Minutewomen was their improved draw control. They finished with a 12-11 edge after having significant problems winning draws earlier in the season.

Wednesday's game against UNH was the fourth time UMass has faced an opponent ranked in the top 15. The other ranked teams it has faced are Maryland, Boston University and Dartmouth. UMass is 1-3 in those games – the lone win coming in a 13-10 effort over then- No. 13 Dartmouth on March 4.

The loss came days after a solid performance against Stony Brook. The Minutewomen were led by sophomore midfielder Haley Smith who tallied a career-high six goals in the win.

Smith and senior captain Meghan Reddy (three goals) provided most of UMass' offense.

As has been their trademark all season, the Minutewomen played an excellent first half and held a 7-3 lead at the break. The Seawolves (3-7) managed to cut the lead to 8-7, but UMass scored four straight goals, including two by Smith, to put the game away.

The Minutewomen displayed their versatile offense against Stony Brook. When the Seawolves focused their efforts on containing Lyons, Reddy and the attack, Smith was able to take advantage of the openings from her midfield position.

"I think she is someone who stepped up and took advantage of opportunities our attackers set up for her," Venechanos said. "We're looking for people to step up each and every game depending on what teams are giving to us."

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

INTERESTED IN WRITING ABOUT SPORTS
CONTACT
JJ ROSENSWAKE AT SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

NEED AN APARTMENT?
PUFFTON VILLAGE
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Offense piles up 24 runs in blowout

BASEBALL from page 10

down the stretch."

The Spiders won Saturday's game, 12-11, in 13 innings. Minuteman starter Mitchell Clegg gave up eight runs in five and one-third innings while striking out eight.

Left fielder Matt Zink hit a grand slam and third baseman Cameron Brown had three RBI for Richmond.

Tempesta and third baseman Jim Macdonald combined for seven RBI on the day.

Friday night UMass starter Jared Freni gave up two runs on five hits and walked four in six and one-third innings. He also had four strikeouts.

The Spiders scored the game's first run in the third inning when shortstop Adam McConnell hit an RBI double to left-center field. UMass came back in the fifth inning when center fielder Brian Baudinet scored on a fielding error and left fielder Kyle Multner hit a sacrifice fly to right field.

The teams were deadlocked until the 14th inning when Richmond pinch-runner Robby Massar scored on a wild pitch by Gedman (0-1).

The Minutemen played Virginia Commonwealth (10-6) on Wednesday and Nick Serino (1-1) had 11 strikeouts and gave up just three hits in six innings to earn the win as UMass beat the Rams, 4-3.

MacDonald had two hits, an RBI and a run scored.

The win broke a string of four-straight losses to start spring break for UMass. George Mason (16-4) beat the Minutemen, 3-1, behind first baseman Justin Bour's three RBI.

Monmouth (7-8) took both games from UMass last weekend, winning 9-1 on March 15 and 5-4 two days earlier.

Navy (6-12) won last Saturday's game, 6-5. Midshipmen starter Wes Olsen pitched seven and one-third innings, giving up five runs off of seven hits and two walks. Olsen also struck out five to get the win.

UMass will return to action to face Hartford (1-9) on Wednesday at 3 p.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Eating Disorder Treatment
Treatment of Adults Suffering from Anorexia and Bulimia Nervosa
Informed clinicians refer their clients to Laurel Hill Inn. LHI provides the most effective treatment and deploys the highest staff-to-client ratio in New England. We provide extensive programming in a highly structured and, supervised non-institutional therapeutic setting. Evening, day, and residential treatment as well as weekly support groups in West Medford and West Somerville. Call Linda at 781 396-1116 or visit www.laurelhillinn.com.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
North Amherst Motors
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)

ONE GET OUT OF CLASS FREE COUPON
Present this coupon to your professor and he/she will give you an excused absence for the day.
Limit one coupon per student. Some conditions may apply. Offer not actually valid anywhere.
Go to www.dailycollegian.com/comics for more info

Gotcha.

| | | | | | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 5 | | | | | | | | 9 |
| | 9 | 4 | | 5 | 3 | | 7 | |
| | | | 2 | 4 | | | | |
| 4 | 2 | | 5 | 8 | | | | |
| | 5 | | | | | | 6 | |
| | | | | 7 | 4 | | 2 | 3 |
| | | | | 2 | 7 | | | |
| | 8 | | 1 | 3 | | 9 | 4 | |
| 2 | | | | | | | | 1 |

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Pitfall
5 Mashed potato service
10 Grouch
14 ___ Ward
15 Teresa's home
16 Hard to find
17 Direction
18 Luminous star
19 Suffix for refer or differ
20 "The City of Roses"
23 Infuriates
24 Dance type
25 Merry
28 Lather
33 Cheer
34 Stoppers
35 Org. headed by Heston, once
36 Sushi bar offerings
37 Privileged
38 Just "tiny amount"
39 Traitor
40 Goes across
41 Make malicious remarks
42 Dieter's nemesis, often
44 Student's item
45 Suffix for cook or book
46 Positive
47 Will Rogers Memorial Center location
54 550 and 551
55 Cigarette brand
56 "___ old cowhand ..."
58 Chimney channel
59 Bhun a formal ceremony
60 Infamous emperor
61 Peepers
62 Holy meal
63 Chew

DOWN
1 Literary initials
2 Harvest
3 To boot
4 Ben Franklin & Paul Revere
5 Serves soup
6 Eye layers
7 Neighbour of Wis
8 Begged
9 Throw a monkey wrench into 10 Disgusting folks
11 Pealed
12 Gas station chain
13 Has- ___ one no longer popular
21 Loyal
22 Collapses
25 Taunts
26 New York city
27 Conference site
28 Hurl
29 Pitcher's delights
30 Took apart
31 Window covering
32 Curved sword
34 Be foresightful
37 Parts of a TV series
38 Adding on
40 Distort
41 Father
43 Madison and Lincoln
44 1939 Clark Gable role
46 Form
47 Small flute
48 Sebaceous
49 Raise
50 Part
51 Trampled
52 '86-'91 sitcom
53 Gilbert for one
57 Currently

Continuing & Professional Education
UMass/Amherst Outreach
THINK AHEAD
Two 6-week summer sessions
Take a sneak peak at UMassULearn.net
Registration begins March 9
SUMMER SESSION
UMass Amherst

QUOTE OF THE DAY

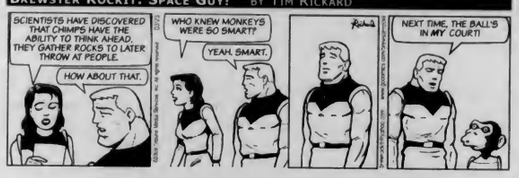
"Human salvation lies in the hands of the creatively maladjusted."

— Martin Luther King Jr.



www.dailycollegian.com/comics

WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! BY TIM RICKARD

CHEAP CITY By MICHAEL CAPOZZOLA

BLISS By HARRY BLISS

"Wait, they might be lawyers!"

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
You will soon be blessed with a position of great responsiblity and trust. Be sure to take advantage of this immediately.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
When you get called out for groping someone's butt, play it off as if you were just reaching for their groin.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Let this be the last St. Patty's Day parade that you find yourself walking up in a Holyoke gutter covered in green novelty beads.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Stop suggesting that your friends play your mixtape of John Mellencamp and Lil' Wayne mashups.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
The time has come to begin crafting your first novel, "The Spanking of the Monkey."

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Don't worry: It's impossible to get an STD from a gourd.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Sadly, joining a fraternity or sorority will ultimately force you to put your party before your country.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
It's never a good idea to reuse condoms that you have cleaned in the dishwasher (unless you use Cascade detergent).

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Handing out business cards that list yourself as a "Professor of Cunnilingistic Studies" at UMass will not help you get laid.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Opportunity will come to you today in the unusual form of a badly-clogged toilet.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You are the last of a quickly dying breed: horny virgins.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
There's no such thing as a free lunch, unless you come prepared with a coupon.

ROCK OUT WITH YOUR CLOCK OUT
comics@dailycollegian.com

CLASSIFIEDS

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520 ext. 162

ANNOUNCEMENT

You're not alone! Stressed? Panicking? Grieving? Wondering what comes after college? Mental Health Services support groups can help. Call (413) 545-2337

Order Contacts Online. Eye Care Services at UHS makes it easy with our new Contact Lens e-Store. Visit www.umass.edu/uhs/services/eyecare/estore or call (413) 577-5383

Montreal Party Weekends from $69. Montrealblowout.com or Montrealexpress.net 781-979-9001 or 781-979-0076.

Pregnant? Need help? Would you like to talk? Please call Birthright: 413-549-1906. 233 North Pleasant St. Amherst. 24 hour hotline: 1800-550-4900

FOR RENT

Amherst: FREE Wii and entry to win a FREE flat-screen TV! $500 off security! (When you apply before April 15th for lease starting June 1st- Sept. 1st) 2,3,4 BR apts with 2 full baths, AC, dishwasher and FREE HEAT! Bus to UMass. Going Fast! call 253-7377 or go to www.MillValleyApts.com

Looking for housing next year? 3 bedroom apt. in Puffton Village for rent starting June 1. Located 1/2 mile north of campus on bus route. Call Mike at 845-596-3656

28 Stockbridge St: 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room eat in kitchen, pantry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 miles to campus! www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

House for rent. 2 bedroom, kitchen, 2 bath. $1000/month. On bus route 413-549-6091

FOR SALE

Breed: English Bulldog Sex: Male & Female Birthdate: 3/1/09 (9 weeks) Champion Bloodlines: No Champion Sired: No Show Potential: Yes What's Included: Registered / registerable (AKC, NKC, etc.) Current vaccinations, Veterinarian examination, Health certificate. You can reply to: walter_riley2001@yahoo.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 23, 2009 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass can't tame Huskies

Season ends in OT loss to NU in HEA playoffs

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

BOSTON — Northeastern freshman winger Alex Tuckerman picked up the puck and raced around the net. Paul Dainton did his job; he dropped into his butterfly, bounding toward Tuckerman as his wrists snapped back and forward in an instant.

Dainton had the shot lined up, it seemed. Then a Massachusetts defender reached his stick out, like he's supposed to, to block Tuckerman's point-blank attempt. The puck deflected off the outreached stick and immediately headed for the crossbar, tucking under the pipe and rattling around the cage.

The Huskies bench rushed Tuckerman, who waltzed through the slot in celebration of Northeastern's 3-2 win in Game 3 of its Hockey East quarterfinal series at Matthews Arena. Dainton and the Minutemen drifted to the bench and through the tunnel with only thoughts of a long summer ahead.

"I don't remember much. I kind of blacked out," joked Tuckerman after the game. "I just walked out front and next thing I know I was on the ground celebrating."

"That was a tough loss for us," UMass coach Don Cahoon said. "We had the puck luck at the end of the game, and [Northeastern] had it in overtime. But they deserved it; they're a great college hockey team.

"That was playoff hockey at its very best: great goaltending at both ends and all sorts of scoring chances."

For seven Minutemen, thoughts shifted immediately to the four previous years. They leave Amherst as one of the most successful classes in the modern era of the program. Their careers include a Hockey East semifinal and NCAA Tournament appearance during the 2006-07 season.

"We all played hard all weekend," said senior captain Cory Quirk, who set a program-record with his 150th career game played in the loss, holding back tears. "Every guy in that locker room worked as hard as he could to get this done."

With the win, Northeastern advanced to the Hockey East semifinals, held at the TD BankNorth Garden in Boston on Friday. The Huskies, the No. 2 overall seed in the tournament, lost to Massachusetts-Lowell in overtime on Friday night. UML won in overtime after tying the game, 2-2, with fewer than 20 seconds remaining in regulation.

Before Tuckerman dashed UMass' hopes with the overtime winner five days prior, the Minutemen managed a similarly shocking comeback attempt. Cahoon called a timeout before a neutral-zone faceoff. Quirk won the ensuing draw with Northeastern captain Joe Vitale. At 18 minutes, 51 seconds of the third period, Cahoon pulled Dainton in favor of extra attacker Alex Berry as the Minutemen tried to knot the game

See HOCKEY on page 8

Freshman forward T.J. Syner and the Minutemen dropped a 3-2 overtime decision to Northeastern in Game 3 in the first round of the Hockey East playoffs. The loss ended UMass' season.

Plourde tosses no-hit gem

By Jeffrey R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

Perfection means to be flawless or without any mistakes. One simple mistake that can amount to nothing can mean the difference between a one-hitter and a no-hitter or a no-hitter and a perfect game.

For freshman pitcher Sara Plourde, that simple mistake — a hit batsmen on the second pitch she threw in the game — was what gave her a no-hitter instead of a perfect game in the Massachusetts softball team's 11-0 win over Dayton on Sunday.

The game was the second of a double header — UMass won Game 1 16-0 in five innings — in Dayton, the first two conference games for the No. 17 Minutewomen (13-6, 2-0 Atlantic 10). For the Flyers (13-20, 1-3 A-10), it was their second conference series, after splitting with Rhode Island earlier in the weekend.

For Plourde, Game 2 was the second start of her career and just her fifth appearance, but one couldn't tell with the numbers she has put up so far. On Sunday, Plourde struck out nine in six innings due to the mercy rule and hit one batter for the only blemish in her near perfect game.

"I thought she did a good job and I thought she moved the ball around well," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said of Plourde's performance. "I thought she pitched back from deficits when she was behind and she didn't give them any extra chances."

In Plourde's five appearances, the freshmen has pitched 20.2 innings, striking out 30 batters to go along with a 2-0 record and a 1.02 ERA, while only walking six batters and giving up five runs.

While Plourde stood out in Game 2, she wasn't the only star of the game. Junior Sarah Reeves led at the plate out of the cleanup spot going 2-for-3 with two home runs, one walk and seven RBIs.

The first home run came off Dayton's Eva Rappe (1.1 innings pitched, eight hits, six earned runs, two home runs) in the first inning after consecutive singles by Whitney Williams and Whitney Mollica. After taking two balls, Reeves took the next pitch deep to centerfield to give the Minutewomen an early Junior first baseman Sarah Reeves cracked two home runs, including a grand slam, in an 11-0 victory over Dayton Sunday. She had 7 RBIs in support of freshman pitcher Sarah Plourde, who pitched a no-hitter.

See SOFTBALL on page 8

Offense explodes in series finale victory

Competitive weekend against Richmond ends in 24-9 win

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

Starting pitchers can't pitch nine innings every game. A bullpen is comprised of several pitchers to spread out the responsibility of sustaining leads and closing out games.

Six of the eight games the Massachusetts baseball team played in the last nine days (UMass went 2-6) have all been decided by two runs or fewer. Eight games in nine days takes a toll on the body and the Minutemen (5-9, 1-2 Atlantic 10) had to rest key players to ensure their long-term health is at its peak as the season goes on.

Resting productive players was especially important last week because three of the week's games went into extra innings, including back-to-back 13-plus inning games against Richmond (11-5, 2-1 A-10).

Senior second baseman Adam Tempesta wasn't in the starting lineup for two games in this past week's schedule, which hurt the team. UMass relies heavily on its offense and Tempesta is a proven threat in the batter's box. He has a team-leading 12 RBI as well as two home runs off of 18 hits.

Tempesta was back in the lineup for the Minutemen's final game against the Spiders on Sunday and was as productive as ever. He had two RBI hits, as well as two runs in a 24-9 beat down of Richmond.

Mike Gedman came into the game for Tempesta in the bottom of the eighth inning; he proved to be effective in the top of the ninth when he hit a two-run home run to right field, capping off the 15-run win for UMass.

First baseman Peter Copa hit the other homer for the Minutemen in the second inning when he hit a solo shot to right-center field. UMass tagged Richmond starting pitcher Ian Marshall for seven runs in two and two-thirds innings.

Mike Dicato (1-2) gave up five runs but still earned his second win of the season behind six strikeouts and an explosive offense.

"We needed to get pitching like that," UMass coach Mike Stone said of his starters this week. "We needed that so we didn't burn out our bullpen. It was great to get our young players some time, and that'll help us

See BASEBALL on page 8

Lyons' 3 goals not enough vs. UNH

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

With the Atlantic 10 season fast approaching, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has shown the potential to beat anyone – but only if it can carry over its strong first-half performances into the final minutes.

UMass fell to No. 13 New Hampshire, 13-10, on March 18, despite having held a five-goal lead at the end of the first half. The Minutewomen did win their other game over the break, defeating Stony Brook, 14-9, on March 14.

"I think we have been working on trying to get a killer instinct," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We do a great job coming off the hat, but we have to use that momentum."

The Minutewomen (3-5) raced out to an 8-3 lead at intermission against the Wildcats behind three first-half goals by Holly Drown and an unassisted goal by Jackie Lyons — who also scored three goals – with one second remaining.

UMass could not sustain its pace in the second half and eventually wilted under the relentless pressure of the Wildcats (6-2), who outshot the Minutewomen 38-20, including a dominant 21-7 advantage in the second half. UNH's star player Sarah Von Bargen, who is second in the nation in goals, notched three of her four goals in the second half.

The Wildcats had a 4-to-1 run in the second half to bring the score to 9-8 with 17 minutes, 35 seconds remaining. Lyons tried to slow their momentum with a free-position goal, but New Hampshire scored five unanswered goals in the final 10 minutes to lock up the victory. UNH outscored UMass 10-2 in the second half.

The result was disappointing, but Venechanos believes her team can beat anyone if the Minutewomen can find a way to maintain their consistently strong first-half performances.

"We have to realize how to play with a lead without looking at the scoreboard," Venechanos said. "If we continue to play like its 0-0 the entire game, we'll be able to put a complete game together. I think it's a combina-

See W. LACROSSE on page 8

Doc cures UM losing streak

Schneider makes 17 saves in ECAC win over No. 14 Loyola

By Nick O'Malley
Collegian Staff

They were outshot. They lost the faceoff battle. And they were slaughtered in ground balls. They had every reason to lose. Yet, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team beat the odds to defeat No. 14 Loyola on Saturday for just the second time in school history, 8-6.

Senior goalkeeper Doc Schneider faced 44 shots, recording 17 saves as he carried the Minutemen to the victory in Baltimore, Md. It was a big win for UMass, which had lost two straight entering the first Eastern College Athletic Conference matchup of the season.

After two straight losses knocked them out of the national rankings, the Minutemen (4-3, 1-0 ECAC) responded by gutting out a win where they led in only a couple of statistical categories. Despite the overall dominance of the Greyhounds (5-3, 2-1 ECAC), UMass led in the one stat that truly matters: goals.

Senior Jim Connolly and junior Bobby Hayes both scored twice in the win with Hayes also recording an assist. Connolly leads the team with 22 points on 19 goals on the season. Meanwhile, Hayes is now tied for second on the team with 15 points on seven goals and eight assists. Junior Cooper MacDonnell had a hat trick and an assist for Loyola, scoring the team's final three goals on the day.

The Minutemen drew first blood 2 minutes, 36 seconds into the game when Art Kell hooked up with Hayes for his first goal of the day. The Greyhounds would respond just over a minute later but the Minutemen closed out the half by scoring three unanswered goals.

Senior Evan Blum put the Minutemen ahead with 30 seconds remaining in the first quarter, while fellow seniors Connolly and Rory Pedrick tallied goals before halftime to give UMass a 4-1 lead.

The Greyhounds made hardly a dent in the lead for the rest of the game.

Loyola's Colin Finnerty opened up the second half just under two minutes in with a goal, one of eight in the third period. But the Minutemen would respond with goals by Hayes and senior Tim Balise.

The scoring outburst of the third quarter included goals by MacDonnell, Kell and Matt Langan all within a minute of Senior goalkeeper Doc Schneider had 17 saves in UMass' 8-6 victory over No. 14 Loyola Saturday. UMass is now 4-3 on the season.

See M. LACROSSE on page 8

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY | INDEPENDENTLY SERVING THE UMASS COMMUNITY SINCE 1890

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY

COLLEGIAN

HIGH: 48 LOW: 23 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MARCH 24, 2009

Internships going to highest online bidder

By Kathryn Foley
Collegian Staff

Some charity websites are taking advantage of the current instability of the job market by offering internships, as long as you have the money to pay for them.

Websites like Charity Buzz and Charity Folk started by auctioning off once-in-a -life-time experiences like appearing on screen with Johnny Depp, lunch with Alicia Silverstone for old-school "Clueless" fans, private soccer lessons from David Beckham, tickets to "The Ellen DeGeneres Show," "Saturday Night Live," the Emmys and the Barack Ohama's presidential inauguration. All of the auctions are aimed at raising money for non-profit organizations.

Then, Charity Buzz and Charity Folks came up with a new idea. Collaborating with many big-name corporations, these sites decided to auction off internships many students would die for. Ever dream of interning at magazine like Glamour, Rolling Stone,Christian Dior, Cosmopolitan, US Weekly? These one- to three-week internships had estimated values varying anywhere from $1,500-$7,500.

There is just one problem: Some students have the merits for these internships but don't have the money to "buy" them. What happens when it is a toss-up between a student who has a perfect GPA, an exceptional resumé, a flawless cover letter, a handful of recommendations and a book of published work, and a student who can cough up $5,000?

"I feel strongly that UMass students don't have to hother with the internship auction sites," said Jeff Silver, associate director of UMass Career Services for Field Experience. "UMass Career Services has such a strong relationship with employers such as Rolling Stone magazine, MTV, Family Fun Magazine, The [David] Letterman Show, that UMass students are basically guaranteed a high-quality semester internship at a major NYC media outlet .... We can't guarantee them their first choice but if they apply to six, they will obtain one for the semester."

Most universities have a dedicated team of experts to help students find their way to an appropriate internship. UMass faculty members are not the only ones who discourage students from partaking in websites that auction off internships.

The Fund for American Studies (TFAS) is an educational non-profit organization that has been preparing students here, as well as globally, for leadership since 1967. In an interview with Patricia Lee, the media relations manager at TFAS, she expressed a hint of disinterest when asked if the opportunities available through Charity Folks and Charity Buzz were worth the money.

Because TFAS members feel strongly about the necessity of fairness involving distributing internships, the idea of offering students jobs that can be bought off seemed almost dishonorable and unmerited to Lee."We don't believe that students should have to pay for an internship," she said. "Internships are an opportunity to learn about an industry, gain experience, contacts and in some instances, credit in exchange for free or paid labor (stipend). There are ways to gain insights into desired industries that do not require one paying for employment."

Also, according to Lee, auctioning off internships is basically sending messages to those without means that they will not be able to reach their dream jobs because many of their desired opportunities are set aside for the people who can afford to pay.

Reserving internship spots for paying customers limits the amount of opportunities available to other people while also making the pool of available spaces a lot more competitive.

"This practice is unfair, because it's a display of preferential treatment. Such practices occur at college/universities but have now trickled over into the job market, a sphere that prizes hard work and ability. Applicants who may not be as qualified for a role, or who may not gain as much out of the experience, are placed above others," said Lee. "It concentrates opportunities within the reach of a small subset of the population and locks out others. This seems to stand in opposition to the value of equality of opportunity that breathes life into the American dream."

Kathryn Foley can be reached at kfoley@student.umass.edu

Drinking trumps studying

Study analyzes student habits

By Kathryn Foley
Collegian Staff

According to a recent study on the drinking habits of college students, studying has taken a backseat to partying for many college students.An online education program for first-year college students called 'AlcoholEdu for College' is the first step in a project created by Boston-based Outside the Classroom in collaboration with the NASPA, a group representing higher education.

According to the program's background document, its "underlying philosophy" is to provide students with the proper information to aid them in making informed choices about their alcohol use.The program incorporates an online survey that is completed two weeks prior to taking the course. It assesses students' alcohol-related attitudes, behaviors and the consequences of drinking.

Last year, 30,183 first-year students from 76 colleges and universities took this course after the first semester began. Nearly 70 percent, reported consuming alcohol in the two weeks before the course began.

In the survey, students were to record how long their drinking episodes lasted, how many drinks they had and how long it takes them to finish each drink. These statistics were then used to estimate the total amount of time each student spent drinking during the first 14 days of college.

For those 20,801 freshmen who drank during this period of time, the average amount of time spent consuming alcohol was 10.2 hours per week.

The survey also had questions about time spent on other activities. The following averages were recorded: Studying 8.4 hours; Exercising 5.0 hours; Online Social Networking or Playing Video Games 4.1 hours; Social Networking 2.5 hours; Working for Pay 2.5 hours.

"This study doesn't necessarily suggest that college students are spending more time drinking now compared to previous years; that may or may not be the case," said Brandon Busteed, Founder and CEO of Outside The Classroom. "But what's clear is that many college students knowingly or unknowingly are spending more time drinking than studying."Different from the really scary life-and-death statistics that have typically been thrown at students, this finding is potentially the most motivating of all because it's something every student can relate to, and it fundamentally calls into question the priorities of being a student."The National Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse at Columbia University also reported that around 3.8 million (49 percent) of full-time college students drink.

In 1993, it was recounted that between 1989 and 1991, researchers from Southern Illinois University and the College of William & Mary surveyed approximately 58,000 students from 78 campuses. Eighty-five percent of respondents said they drank alcohol in the past year, and 66 percent of students under 21 years of age had as well.

Nevertheless, the recent study performed by the Center at Columbia University found that the intensity and frequency of drinking now has increased since 1993, as the quantity of students who binge drink three or more times over a two-week period of time has escalated by 16 percent.

Gwendolyn Jordan Dungy, executive director of NASPA, told USA Today that their "hope is that this new finding will motivate campus community leaders to join us as we redouble our efforts to de-emphasize the role of alcohol in college life."

Kathryn Foley can be reached at kfoley@student.umass.edu.

A recent study has found that on average students spend about two hours more a week drinking than they do studying.

Alcohol sales up in bad times

By Gary Tarantino
Collegian Staff

The country's economic situation is described mostly in terms of negatives – layoffs, buyouts and cuthacks. But there is one area that is seeing a significant uptick: alcohol sales.

Despite the tough economic times, Americans are turning to bars and liquor stores in record numbers.

Studies have shown that throughout the history of the United States and the world, increased economic turmoil has usually been met with a corresponding spike in alcohol sales.

Recently, many downtown businesses in Ann Arbor, Mich., have reported a heavy increase in alcohol sales, while some campus hot spots across the country have seen the reverse effect.

Liquor stores that attract a student demographic are experiencing a slight decrease in their alcoholic sales, and while many factors could be the cause of this opposite trend, tighter budgets are an obvious explanation.

"[Students] are staying home and buying a case of beer from the corner store as opposed to going out and buying pitchers," said an employee at Ann Arbor's Scorekeepers Sportsgrill & Pub, who asked to remain anonymous because he wasn't authorized to speak for the company.

Eddie Gilyano, the manager of Strickland's Market, a liquor store in Ann Arbor, said the store's alcohol sales have decreased significantly since the economy took a turn for the worst.

However, much of the rest of the country, which has officially been in a recession since December 2007, is seeing an increase in alcohol sales.

"[Our sales] have been increasing since the economic situation started," said Tim Kramer, manager of Beer Depot, in Ann Arbor. "What do you think people run to? It's easier to drink than go out."

"If we've seen anything, it's not less sales," said Victor George, the owner of Stadium Market, in Ann Arbor. "We've just been selling less expensive liquor."

George said cheaper vodkas, like Smirnoff and Burnett's, have been selling much better than the more expensive brands.

Last year in Pennsylvania, wine and liquor sales were reportedly up 4.7 percent. Similarly, Connecticut reported that tax revenue on alcoholic beverages was up nearly 5 percent for the fiscal year that ended last June.

The Division of Liquor Control for the Ohio Department of Commerce, announced that alcohol sales grew $32.6 million from 2007 to 2008, an increase of 4.75 percent, according to The Ohio University Post.

Alcohol companies across the country, especially wine companies, are also reporting skyrocketing sales.

Brown-Forman, one of the largest American-owned wine companies, stated that its income has grown 4 percent in the second quarter this year and Liquor Group Michigan, a liquor and wine distribution company, reported a 7.8-percent increase in wine case sales in Michigan for 2008.

The recent spike in alcohol sales as the nation's economy falls into a tailspin is not unique, said University of Massachusetts economics professor John Bound.

In 1991, Bound said the collapse of the Soviet Union and the end of the Cold War directly resulted in soaring alcohol sales.

Gary Tarantino can be reached at gtarant@student.umass.edu

Goshen, Mass., waits for thaw

Annual event raises money for local charity

By Dinah Gorelik
Collegian Staff

The annual "Meltdown" event in Goshen, Mass., sounds a lot like the proverbial watching paint dry, but waiting for ice to melt under a concrete block has never been so interesting, or profitable.

The object of the event, organized by Goshen resident Bob Labrie, is to guess the time and the day, without going over, and when a 69-pound concrete block will fall through the ice of a local pond. The winner receives half of the proceeds, while the other half goes toward an organization associated with Goshen, even though the event ranges far outside of Massachusetts borders."Tickets submissions have been received from my regulars in Florida, Nevada, Maryland, New York, Connecticut and Rhode Island, not to mention a strong showing from the Massachusetts delegation," said Labrie. "A ski-patrol colleague of mine was even able to sell some 'Meltdown' tickets to a few business clients of his from Thailand and France. Adding that to previous sales in Australia and India now categorizes us as a world-class endeavor."

A firefighter and accountant, Labrie is the supervisor of the lake upon which the block is placed. He frequently updates his website in regards to the block's condition and other relevant news. Sponsored by the Hammond Acres Association, "Meltdown" not only entertains locals, but it keeps people who have homes in the area aware of what is going on there.

The block is tied to a rope, which is connected to a clock. When the block falls through the ice, the clock is supposed to be pulled out from a wall socket and stopped, indicating the time of the block's fall.

People can guess the time and day of this occurrence by purchasing tickets for $1 each. This year, half the proceeds will go to the Northampton Survival

See GOSHEN on page 3

When the concrete block with a flag attached falls through the ice, it will stop a clock attached by a rope. The person who submits the closest time, without going over, will win half the procedes raised by the event.

ARTS & LIVING
JOHNS TO PERFORM

John Darnielle and John Vanderslice will perform in an all acoustic setting tonight at the Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton.

SEE PAGE 5

SPORTS
TOUGH OUT

Collegian hockey columnist Joe Meloni shares his thoughts on the contributions of the seniors of the 2008-09 Mass Attack.

SEE PAGE 10

EDITORIAL & OPINION
CHRIS AMOROSI

Collegian columnist Chris Amorosi draws parallels between TV series Battlestar Galactica and world history.

SEE PAGE 4

DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

As UMass' winter sports come to and end, Collegian beat writers and columnists share their thoughts on the teams

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIX
Issue 35

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Michael King
Managing Editor Joe Meloni
Business Manager Alex Wasetcuk
Production Manager Michael Sarkes
Night Supervisor Kate Olesin
Advertising Manager Dan Hurley
Advertising Production Max Detmer
Arts & Living Editor Brian Wood
Comics Editor Nick Bush
Editorial Editor Leigh Greaney
Editorial Editor Nick O'Malley
News Editor William McGuinness
Sports Editor Eli Rosenswaike
Multimedia Editor S.P. Sullivan
Features Editor Andrea Murray
Photo Editor Matthew Harrison
Web Editor Victor Jacek
Asst. Business Manager Matt Zolnierz
Assistant Advertising Brendan Cherry
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Distribution Manager Norman Provost
Classified Manager Emily Stapleton
Asst. Arts & Living Kevin Kocrwara
Asst. Arts & Living Ian Nelson
Asst. Arts & Living Melissa Turtinen
Assistant News Lisa DeBenedictis
Assistant News Matt Rocheleau
Assistant News Ben Williams
Assistant Sports Scott Feldman
Assistant Sports Ryan Fleming
Assistant Sports Jeffrey R. Lamard
Assistant Photo Danielle Augeri
Assistant Photo P.J. Stanley
Assistant Multimedia Mike Gillmeister
Assistant Multimedia Peter Rizzo
Assistant Multimedia James Wellner

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the Collegian Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967. The Collegian has been printed on recycled paper since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Joe Meloni

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION TEAM
Dan Centola

Campus Perspectives

What is your opinion on this matter?

MANY STUDENTS ARE ANXIOUS ABOUT THE LIKELIHOOD OF SECURING AN INTERNSHIP FOR THE SUMMER. DO YOU HAVE AN INTERNSHIP LINED UP FOR THE SUMMER? OR ARE YOU LOOKING FOR A SUMMER INTERNSHIP? DO YOU THINK IT WILL BE MORE DIFFICULT TO GET INTERNSHIPS THIS YEAR AS COMPARED TO PAST YEARS?

By Alyssa Creamer
Collegian Staff

senior
Hospitality and Tourism Mangement
Amanda Hacker

"Last summer I interned in New York City for an event planning company called Professionals in the City. I think that companies might be looking for more unpaid interns, because they would rather take on interns than hire and pay others to work for them. Because I'm graduating, I am hoping to get a job instead of internship."

senior
Architecture major
Allison Phillips

"I do feel like it's going to be difficult to get an internship. I remember looking for internships last summer and things were going badly then. It took me a few months to find one. There are a lot of reasons why it is so difficult, but they all stem back to the country's economic situation. In the field of architecture, there is not a lot of building going on because of the economy and so there is no need for companies to hire interns."

junior
Economics major
Kevin Maio

"It is going to be very difficult, impossible, even, to get an internship this summer. Companies are not hiring as many interns so the competition is higher. I'm looking for a summer internship in finance. So far, I've tried at Ernest Young and the Boston Red Sox, but I've had no luck. The only thing students can really do is keep a detail-oriented resume and contact employers. I hope I can land one."

senior
Communications and Economics major
Neil Goldfluss

"I'm looking for an advertising or marketing internship for the summer. I've heard that a lot of students in the [Isenberg School of Management] are having a hard time getting internships due to bad economic times. Personally, I've had internships in the past, but companies are looking for interns that will work for no pay or for college credit. I had my past internships in the Northeast, but I might have to relocate in order to get a job."

week ahead on Daily Collegian

GEO-LOCATE YOUR NEWS

Follow news geographically with dailycollegian.com's "Newsgarden" application on the homepage.

NEWS

Blogs | All Week
Keep up with the latest scientific developments going on in your own backyard with Research This Week.

Find out the news behind the news at Editor's Note, run by news editor Will McGuinness.

Podcast |
Collegian Editors have a roundtable discussion of the Israel / Palestine conflict with a local take.

ARTS & LIVING

Video | Wednesday
An interview with local author Tracy Kidder on his acclaimed book, "Mountains Beyond Mountains," and his next project, due out in August.

DailyCollegian.com is looking for multimedia storytellers.

Get your feet wet in new media.

New study finds red meat harmful

By Rob Stein
The Washington Post

WASHINGTON — Eating red meat increases the chances of dying prematurely, according to a large federal study that offers powerful new evidence that a diet that regularly includes steaks, burgers and pork chops is hazardous to your health.

The study of more than 500,000 middle-age and elderly Americans found that those who consumed the equivalent of about a small hamburger every day were more than 30 percent more likely to die during the 10 years they were followed, mostly from heart disease and cancer. Sausage, cold cuts and other processed meats also increased the risk.

Previous research had found a link between red meat and an increased risk of heart disease and cancer, particularly colorectal cancer, but the new study is the first large examination of the relationship between eating meat and overall mortality.

"The bottom line is we found an association between red meat and processed meat and an increased risk of mortality," said Rashmi Sinha of the National Cancer Institute, who led the study published today in the Archives of Internal Medicine.

In contrast, routine consumption of fish, chicken, turkey and other poultry decreased the risk of death by a small amount, the study found.

Although pork often is promoted as "white meat," it is believed to increase the risk for cancer because of its iron content, Sinha said. It is often grouped with red meat in nutritional studies.

"This would be the Rolls Royce of studies on this topic," said Barry Popkin, a professor of global nutrition at the University of North Carolina, who wrote an editorial accompanying the study. "This is a slam-dunk to say that, 'Yes, indeed, if people want to be healthy and live longer, consume less red and processed meat.'"

There are many explanations for how red meat might be unhealthy: Cooking red meat generates cancer-causing compounds; red meat is also high in saturated fat, which has been associated with breast and colorectal cancer; and meat is also high in iron, which also is believed to promote cancer. People who eat red meat are more likely to have high blood pressure and cholesterol, which increases the risk of heart disease. Processed meats contain substances known as nitrosamines, which have been linked to cancer.

Regardless of the mechanism, the research provides new evidence that people should follow long-standing recommendations to minimize red meat consumption, several experts said.

"The take-home message is pretty clear," said Walter Willett, a nutrition expert at the Harvard School of Public Health. "It would be better to shift from red meat to white meat such as chicken and fish, which if anything is associated with lower mortality."

The American Meat Institute, a trade group, dismissed the findings, however, saying they were based on unreliable self-reporting by the study participants.

"Meat products are part of a healthy, balanced diet, and studies show they actually provide a sense of satisfaction and fullness that can help with weight control. Proper body weight contributes to good health overall," James Hodges, the group's executive president, said in a written statement.

For the study, researchers analyzed data collected from 545,653 volunteers, ages 50 to 71, participating in the National Institutes of Health-AARP Diet and Health Study. In 1995, the subjects filled out detailed questionnaires about their diets, including their meat consumption. Over the following 10 years, 47,976 men and 23,276 women died.

After accounting for other variables that might confound the findings, such as smoking and physical activity, the researchers found that those who consumed the most red meat – about a quarter-pound a day – were more likely to die of any reason, and from heart disease and cancer in particular, than those who consumed the least – the equivalent to a couple of slices of ham a day.

Women who ate the most red meat were 36 percent more likely to die for any reason, 20 percent more likely to die from cancer and 50 percent more likely to die from heart disease. Men who ate the most meat were 31 percent more likely to die for any reason, 22 percent more likely to die of cancer and 27 percent more likely to die of heart disease.

In contrast, those who consumed the most white meat were about 8 percent less likely to die during the study period, the researchers found. Poultry contains more unsaturated fat, which improves cholesterol levels, and fish contains Omega-3 fatty acids, which are believed to help reduce the risk of heart disease.

The risk was also elevated among those who consumed the most processed meat, which included any kind of sausage, cold cuts or hot dogs. Women who consumed the most processed meat, about an ounce a day, were about 25 percent more likely to die overall, about 11 percent more likely to die of cancer and about 38 percent more likely to die from heart disease. The men who ate the most processed meat were 16 percent more likely to die for any reason, about 12 percent more likely to die of cancer and about 9 percent more likely to die of heart disease.

Experts stressed that the findings do not mean that people need to eliminate red meat from their diet but instead should avoid eating it every day.

"You can be very healthy being a vegetarian, but you can very healthy being a non-vegetarian if you keep your red meat intake low," Willett said. "If you are eating meat twice a day and can cut back to once a day there's a big benefit. If you cut back to two or three times a week there's even more benefit. If you eliminate it entirely, there's a little more benefit, but the big benefit is getting away from every day red meat consumption."

According to a new study, regularly eating red meat like steak, hamburger and pork chops increases the chance of premature death.

Need An Apartment?
Puffton Village
• Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass •
• 1 Bedroom Garden Apartments •
• 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses •
• All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas •
• On site laundry, off street parking •
• Basketball and Tennis Courts •
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

'Meltdown' contest heats up as April draws closer

GOSHEN from page 1

Center's Hilltown Pantry.

According to the survival center's website, the Center distributes about 2,000 pounds of food in nutritionally-balanced food boxes every weekday.

"With the economy in the midst of a recession, the current economic climate brings additional challenges for people that have found themselves in need of a helping hand," Labrie's website says. "The Hilltown Pantry provides low-income residents of Chesterfield, Cummington, Goshen, Plainfield, Westhampton, Williamsburg and Worthington with a nutritionally-balanced food box once a month."

In the past four years, the official day and time of the block falling into the ice was April 16 at 3:04 p.m. in 2008, April 21 at noon in 2007, April 1 at 8:18 p.m. in 2006, and April 12 at 4:47 p.m. in 2005.

"With 548 tickets now sold, the range of dates spans from Feb. 28 to May 14 with April 2 and 16 tied for the most picks with 26 each," said Labrie. "April 14 and 15 are close behind with 25 picks each. The most popular times are 1 p.m. and 3 p.m. with 19 picks each. The law of large numbers is starting to take shape and a familiar pattern from years past is now starting to emerge."

Last year, there were 1,099 submitted tickets, and the most popular days were April 1 and April 7, with 3:30 p.m. as the most commonly guessed time. The deadline for ticket submissions this year is April 1 and the ticket can be downloaded from www.goshenmafire.com/2009meldtown.html, filled in with a proposed day and time, and mailed in.

Dinah Gorelik can be reached at dgorelik@student.umass.edu

Credit cards slam consumers

By Ylan Q. Mui
The Washington Post

Anita Hare thought she was playing it smart when she took advantage of a low introductory interest rate on her Chase credit card to buy a Harley-Davidson motorcycle last spring. For four months, the 46-year-old from Baltimore County said, she paid her bill on time at a rate of 3.99 percent. Then she missed one payment by a few days – and her rate shot up to 28 percent, she said. The higher rate has pushed her balance above the original cost of the Harley.

"I was so careful not to let that happen," she said. "I've been absolutely livid."

Situations like Hare's are the target of sweeping new regulations approved by the Federal Reserve late last year that promise to change the way the credit card industry does business. But the rules do not take effect until 2010, and advocacy groups say consumers are still struggling with mounting debt and tightened access as the credit crisis helps fuel the economic downturn.

"It's the worst of all possible worlds," said Travis Plunkett, legislative director of the Consumer Federation of America. "We know that these practices are not justifiable, and yet federal regulators have given the credit card industry a year and a half to continue to use them."

The average standard rate on credit cards declined from 15.21 percent in February 2007 to 14.03 percent last month, according to IndexCreditCards.com, as the Federal Reserve slashed a key interest rate to close to zero. Interest rates are expected to fall further as a $1 trillion government program to spur consumer lending gets underway.

But those averages do not reflect penalty rates that lenders may charge for late or missed payments. According to a survey last year by Consumer Action, an advocacy group, those rates average 26.87 percent.

Since the beginning of this year, said Bill Hardekopf, chief executive of LowCards.com, an independent review site, several companies have raised rates, increased fees and adjusted rewards programs.

"They have been very much damaged by this economic downturn and tightening of credit and all the losses that their banks have faced," he said. "If you as a consumer do anything to increase your risk, you will probably very quickly be hit."

Congress is considering legislation that would essentially force lenders to adopt measures similar to the Fed's within as little as 90 days. But the credit card industry and federal officials say the scope of the new rules make such a quick turnaround virtually impossible.

The regulations issued by the Federal Reserve, the Office of Thrift Supervision and the National Credit Union Administration in December ban "unfair and deceptive practices." The rules prevent banks from raising interest rates on existing balances unless a payment is more than 30 days late, charging late fees without giving a borrower a reasonable amount of time to pay and applying payments so that debts with higher interest rates are repaid last.

The changes will require the credit card industry to reassess how it determines the risk of lending. Federal officials and industry groups said moving too quickly could cast doubt on the accuracy of those calculations, scaring off investors who buy the debt and help fund new lending which in turn could further constrict credit and drive up interest rates.

"It is our belief that this impact will be broad and not uniformly positive, potentially leading to reduced access to credit for millions of Americans and small businesses at the very time when they need that access to credit," said Kenneth Clayton, general counsel of the American Bankers Association, a trade group, in written congressional testimony.

Best Film, Best Director, Best Cinematographer
– 2008 Newport Beach Film Festival

Fugitive Pieces is an emotionally-charged drama about a boy who is orphaned in Nazi-occupied Poland, the Greek archeologist who rescued him, and the woman whose love restored him to life. It is a film about love, loss and redemption.

Thursday, March 26 at 7:30pm
School of Management 137

FREE with UMass or Five-College ID; $8 general admission
More info at www.umass.edu/jewish

UMass Amherst
Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs in conjunction with the Pioneer Valley Jewish Film Festival; cosponsored by the Department of Judaic & Near Eastern Studies and the Center for Student Development, Student Affairs & Campus Life.

Welcome Back to Your Award Winning Dining Services!
MARCH - APRIL - MAY Upcoming Events

• It's Spring – Sweet
• Tyson Week
• Cooking/Baking 101
• American Produce Week
• Visiting College Chef Series: Texas A&M Univerisity
• UMass Idol Preliminary
• Visiting College Chef Series: Princeton University
• Student Iron Chef Competition
• Taste of UMass
• Visiting College Chef Series: Davidson College
• Taste of Home
• Spring BBQ
• Midnight Buffet
www.umassdining.com
Dining Services UMass Amherst
Ivy Bistro Plants & Flowers

UMass Idol
Mark your calendar!
Sign Up and Enter Today!
Are you the next UMass Idol?

Enter today to win your chance to sing at the Taste of UMass 2009
TO QUALIFY: April 9, 6—9 pm · Berkshire DC
To register send an e-mail to:
mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or visit www.umassdining.com & click on UMass Idol banner
• All entries must be received by April 6
• Each contestant receives an I ♥ the DCs tee shirt & $10 Gift Card
• Limited to 30 participants
Sponsored by: Coca-Cola, Lazer 99.9, Dining Services UMass Amherst, Taste of UMass 2009
www.umassdining.com
Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself." - Sir Salman Rushdie

TUESDAY, MARCH 24, 2009

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Unions and deception

Greg Collins

Words can be deceiving. The Employee Free Choice Act (EFCA) bill that is being considered on Capitol Hill today is the perfect example of how people can manipulate words for their own close-minded causes.

How would the act support "free choice" for employees? Essentially, the EFCA would deny employees the right to vote privately to decide whether to join a union. Instead, the law would mandate that employees sign public ballot cards - ostensibly to enable union leaders to make sure they are in fact joining the union.

In addition, the EFCA would allow the federal government to mediate a disputed collective bargaining agreement between employers and unions if the two parties cannot agree on an agreement within 90 days.

This begs the question: Where is the free choice? What freedom does this provide for the people directly affected by the legislation – namely, non-union employees?

To supporters of the bill, the "free choice" will be created because it gives workers more freedom in deciding whether to be represented by a union. These people claim that employers frequently intimidate employees in convincing them not to join unions.

Of course, this reasoning conveniently dismisses the reality that union leaders also have the ability, under existing law, to try to convince employees to join unions. In essence, right now employees can take into account the competing interests of both employers and union members – both, mind you, are pursuing selfish interests – and then can make an exclusively private and personal decision through secret ballots to choose to join a union.

The EFCA strips this right away from employees to make a personal decision because it would require a public – rather than a private – card-check system. Of course, employers would still have the opportunity to convince workers not to join the union. However, a public ballot would provide a heavily unfair advantage to union bosses to pressure workers to join one.

Imagine if we applied the EFCA to our voting system in America today. Currently, candidates can try to convince, persuade, cajole and sweet-talk us into voting for them. Ultimately, we are able to decide on the merits of their rhetoric by voting for them in private. No one has the right to see whom we vote for on our ballot before we cast it. No one has a right to step inside our voting booth and coerce us into voting for a particular candidate. And no one has a right to treat us unequally for voting in a way that does not conform to the prejudices of whoever is pressuring us at the time.

So where is the "freedom" in regard to non-union workers?

But if the EFCA were implemented, candidates could follow us into our voting booths, coerce us into voting for them, and guarantee us sweet kickbacks for doing so. Free choice would be eliminated.

So where is the "freedom" in regard to non-union workers? Employees would certainly not be receiving more freedom as a result of the bill. The people who would benefit – the people who would be receiving more "freedom" in a twisted sort of way – are union bosses.

They would be able to intensify their efforts to intimidate workers to join the unions by trying to cajole them at bars, houses and bowling alleys. They would be able to intensify their coercion by demeaning employees who are not part of unions. And, most important, they would have the "right" – the "freedom" – to demand that workers make the decision to be represented by a union in pure daylight.

The clever wordplay unions employ for their selfish gains is evident on campus as well. The Graduate Employee Organization (GEO) claims it represents workers' and students' "interests" by continually making demands to increase salaries and benefits for grad students. Yet, they also decry the fee increases.

Guess where the money for higher salaries, stipends and benefits come from? Right out of your pockets.

So when you hear that the GEO and other unions are fighting for students' and workers' "rights" and "interests," ask yourself: Which workers? Which students?

Certainly not those workers and students who are not part of unions, yet who still have to use money out of their own pocket to pay for unions' demands. Certainly not those workers who were laid off due to the increased costs unions impose on businesses and universities. And most certainly not those workers, who hesitate to join unions, yet are still bullied into doing so anyway.

It is no coincidence that the states with the most powerful labor unions are also those with the highest unemployment rates – Michigan being the most conspicuous example.

European countries with powerful unions and government intervention in the economy consistently have double-digit unemployment. Compare this to the uproar in America today about how the unemployment rate is creeping over 8 percent.

Perhaps those labor unions really are protecting workers' rights by supporting the EFCA. Perhaps they really are trying to ensure more freedom for employees by demanding public ballots.

Yet this still begs the question: Which workers?

And, more importantly: Whose freedom?

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Time to invest in both sides

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Adam Miller

For too long, advocates on either side of the Israeli-Palestinian conflict have traded catch phrases and labels to excuse themselves from dialogue with the other side.

You have heard people on the Israeli side call Arabs a threat to Israel's existence and people not interested in peace with Israel. On the other side, Israel has been compared to an apartheid state that only cares about killing Arabs.

Using these labels makes it convenient to justify violence and advocate singling out the other side instead of listening and trying to understand each other. Many readers of Al-Jazeera refuse to read The Jerusalem Post with the same seriousness as their own news source and vice versa.

It continues to be a contest of who can suffer the most, counting dead bodies and rockets instead of rooting for breakthroughs in peace talks.

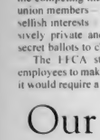
This kind of thinking strives for a winner and a loser. But more recently, it has only resulted in both sides losing out.

Rather than attempting to reach common ground, these attitudes only breed more extremism.

Activism that demands divestment from Israel undermines these efforts to have real dialogue and instead encourages the cycle of extremism to continue.

Hamas, which, in the past, has refused to recognize Israel, told the Associated Press in a March 12 story, "Now is the wrong time for [rocket] attacks," and it fears, "new rocket fire could disrupt the reconciliation talks" between Hamas and Fatah over how to achieve peace with Israel.

This change in policy shows that now is the time for cooperation – not isolation – with Israel. What pro-Palestinian circles at UMass and across the world must do is sacrilegious, but necessary to ensure that we move towards a future Palestinian state: They must invest in Israel.



I know that what I'm asking for isn't easy, and that this solution might not change anything for years, but the Israel-Palestine conflict is incomparable to any other conflict in world history. And yes, that includes South Africa.

A complex problem such as this cannot be solved with traditional thinking when that direction has only worsened the situation. Divestment by the pro-Palestine movement would further hurt the peace process because it treats Israel as an enemy instead of a negotiating partner and discourages Israel from making concessions to the Palestinians.

If the conflict were solved today, Israel would be foolish not to take a hands-on approach in helping a future state of Palestine flourish to prevent it from becoming a bigger version of Gaza.

University of Massachusetts students who are serious about a two-state solution and the welfare of Palestinians must be willing to change how they deal with supporters on the other side.

Our world: Battlestar Galactica's reality

Chris Amorosi

The series finale of Battlestar Galactica aired last Friday. I have watched the series since its premiere six years ago and I am sorry to see it go. I suppose canceling good television drama frees up more time in Sci Fi Channel's schedule for wrestling.

In the finale, the characters assess their civilization's long, cyclical history of destruction. What struck me, as science fiction often does, was the reflection of our world in the show's story. One of the show's themes was summed up in the pessimistic phrase "All of this has happened before, and all of this will happen again." Allow me to provide a brief explanation laden with spoilers.

Humans originally came from a planet called Kobol in the series canon. Much like today, humans became increasingly reliant upon technological civilization. Unlike today, however, those humans eventually turned to robotic slavery. The slaves revolted and the resulting war rendered Kobol uninhabitable.

The humans and robots departed their ruined home planet separately. Twelve groups of humans eventually built 12 colonies and continued their civilization. A 13th group of the robot slaves settled their own planet.

The Twelve Colonies fought each other until the reinvention of robotic life, which were the Cylons of the television series. The Colonials abused their creation and another war began. The only survivors escaped with the help of the Battlestar Galactica, a powerful warship.

During the course of the series, we find out the fate of the 13th refugee group. Ignoring their own origins as slave laborers, the robots created their own subject race of robotic life and their war wiped out all but a handful of people.

Do bloody clashes of civilizations sound familiar in our mundane Earth history?

Pedantics and Vikings aside, Christopher Columbus opened the Americas to Europe.

Do bloody clashes of civilizations sound familiar in our mundane Earth history?

The resulting colonization effort snuffed out entire civilizations consisting of millions of people within decades. The mines of New Spain, the political unit of Spanish territories in North America and Asia Pacific from 1535 to 1821, devoured so many native laborers that the introduction of foreign African slaves became an economic necessity.

New Spain, New France, the area in North America colonized by France from the 16th to the 18th century, and New England were not built solely by plucky colonists, but on an international trade system based on slave labor. Squanto was in a position to help the early American Pilgrims not because he simply lived in the area but because English slavers taught him the language and attempted to "civilize" him by making him a servant.

In the early 19th century, slavery went out of fashion. The slave trade was abolished and slavery itself began to die out in Caribbean islands or newly liberated American colonies minus the United States and Brazil. Instead, Europeans conquered African land in the name of civilization. But the colonists were after a profit.

Cecil Rhodes and King Leopold of Belgium replaced Stone Age barbarism with industrial-age brutality. Workers who escaped from forced labor at the De Beers diamond mines had their feet lopped off or ankles crushed so they couldn't run away again. The Belgian rubber plantations in the Congo were built by massacring villages for rubber tree space.

By the 1950s the system fell out of favor. Instead, we now buy our luxury goods at a trifling price from overworked laborers overseas and far from our awareness or concern. I write this column on a computer with no part indigenous to the United States, while sitting on an equally foreign-made chair and wearing foreign-made clothing. How much do I, or any of us, contribute to our material way of life?

At the end of the finale, the Galactica and her crew discover a planet with only a prehistoric level of human civilization. Initially, crew members decide to adopt the primitives into Colonial society, but one character has an epiphany. He suggests that those aboard the Galactica abandon the technology that has ultimately led them and their ancestors to near-destruction. Instead, the Colonials decide to join the primitives and teach them language and agriculture. They send their spaceships into the sun and split up across the planet to mentor all the Stone Age groups they can find.

Fate presented a human civilization with the chance at a clean slate and the humans accept in the hopes that, while all of this has happened before, it doesn't have to happen again. Perhaps it was the right choice for Battlestar Galactica to end in such a way, but I don't believe such pessimism yet applies to our world.

I hope humanity, as it is today, isn't beyond saving in its current form. I hope what we built was worth those who died.

Chris Amorosi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at camorosi@student.umass.edu.

You can't fix everything – and you can take that to the bank

Jon Peterson

"Social gains," the "social good" and other social "goals" have become such an integrated part of Massachusetts culture and life that the necessitation of a "social benefit" in any project has now become something we take for granted. Now, there are no projects that may be looked upon poorly if they intend to better some "social injustice."

Businessmen and women who act in their own self-interest are often insulted and demonized by the media and politicians. Many mid- and upper-level employees at large banks, who had nothing to do with the direction their banks were going, are now subject to protests outside their own homes, as have been going on in the past few days in Connecticut.

Also, while the Massachusetts banking industry has performed poorly in the country during the financial crisis, one bank has stood out from the crowd. Nearby, East Bridgewater Savings Bank is an irregularity in our country, and in states' banking and loaning industry.

The bank has assets of $135 million and deposits of $84 million. Its loans and leases account for 21 percent of its total assets, as opposed to 71 percent for comparable banks in the country with assets of $100-$300 million. From 2003 to 2008, 28 cents were loaned for every dollar deposited in the bank, while according to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the average bank put out 90 cents on the dollar.

And while the banking industry lost $26.4 billion during the fourth quarter, East Bridgewater Savings Bank squeaked out a profit of $87,000. While there are potentially millions of faulty loans in the country, East Bridgewater Savings Bank has had no foreclosures or delinquent loans and hasn't set aside any money for anticipated losses.

"We're paranoid about credit quality," Joseph Petrucelli, the chief executive of the bank, has said. "We want to make loans, but we also wanted to avoid the next blow up."

But East Bridgewater Savings Bank has been given a rare "needs to improve" rating for its loaning practices by the FDIC, under the guidelines of the Community Reinvestment Act (CRA). "There are no apparent financial or legal impediments that would limit the bank's ability to help meet the credit needs of its assessment area," the FDIC said in its CRA evaluation.

The CRA has been glossed over because of its attempts to fight "injustice," and we now are facing the consequences of these poor decisions.

This is quite extraordinary, given the fact that the banks that did expand their lending to the limits of what they legally and financially could do have generally ended up needing to be bailed out.

Thus, with the claim that the bank didn't advertise its loans well enough, the FDIC has stated that responsible banks are in need of improvement when they only make loans that they judge to be safe. Others, who have been and are more "generous," are judged to be better, and receive taxpayer money so that they do not need to change their lending behaviors.

The current train of popular thought has been that the financial crisis was caused by greed on Wall Street. But when looking at statements like these ones by our own government, it seems to reason that much of the greed could have been based in the good intentions of the FDIC and the CRA.

When the CRA was originally legislated in 1977, it was nothing but a weak encouragement from the government to get banks to lend out more because of the feeling that there was discrimination going on between individuals in the banks and people from different neighborhoods.

The regulations were largely on a case-by-case basis, and ratings could affect whether or not the banks would be allowed to expand in mergers and acquisitions.

In 1995, under President Bill Clinton, legal restrictions and fines were placed on banks that didn't give out certain amounts of loans, mostly in the form of subprime mortgages.

This form of promoting the "social good" and "equality" hurt banks like East Bridgewater Savings Bank, and even now, there is no way of knowing for sure how many of these safe banks were caught under the tires of the CRA.

And still, our own congressman, US Rep. Barney Frank, the chairman of the Financial Services Committee, has consistently denied any wrongdoing by the government in seeking to achieve this illusory goal of this social utopia.

His faith has always been strong that more government involvement would fix the mess. "The private sector got us into this mess," Frank said. "The government has to get us out of it. We do want to do it carefully."

The problem extends from a belief in a social responsibility trumping self-interest. The CRA has been glossed over because of its attempts to fight "injustice," and we now are facing the consequences of these poor decisions.

Safe banks like this one didn't cause the financial crisis – it was caused by people trying to solve social "problems." And laws like the CRA, which fights for the "social good," exemplify everything wrong with our country.

Jon Petersen is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jpeterse@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 24, 2009

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

The Mountain Goats lead singer John Darnielle will play in an acoustic-only setting in Northampton tonight. Darnielle will perform with John Vanderslice at the Pearl Street Night Club.

Johns to perform

Adept storytellers play tonight at Pearl Street

By Brian Wood
Collegian Staff

Tonight the Pearl Street Night Club welcomes two guys named John and a pair of acoustic guitars.

The event is being billed as a "primitive evening of amplified sound," an accurate banner for what promises to be a night of contrasting styles and barebones collaboration.

Headliner John Darnielle (frontman of The Mountain Goats) is returning to Northampton for the second time in as many years. Following last year's full-band performance, the acoustic-only setting will offer concert-goers an entirely different – and arguably more authentic – Mountain Goats experience.

Until recently – 2002's "Tallahassee" to be precise – Darnielle was the poster child for lo-fi recording and songwriting methods. The majority of his lengthy discography consists of self-recorded efforts with little more than an acoustic guitar to supplement his nasal-driven narratives. This current all-acoustic tour is in many ways a return to old habits.

The same cannot entirely be said for Darnielle's counterpart for the evening, John Vanderslice. Vanderslice has made a career of developing infectious vocal melodies and pop songs. While Darnielle shines as an artist, it is his rough-around-the-edges delivery, Vanderslice offers listeners the opposite appeal, creating polished and highly-stylized songs.

Where the two connect, however, is in their ability to tell stories through song. Both artists are renowned for their ability to craft lyrical narratives and their vivid imaginations.

Following respective solo sets, the two Johns will join each other on stage for a collaborative set. The duo have joined forces in the past, releasing a song titled "Surrounded" under the name The Comedians.

The tour's unusual format comes at a similarly atypical juncture for the pair. Neither artist is touring in support of an album; instead they are using the tour as a creative vacation and exploration.

"We are going to light out for the Territories in a van with two acoustic guitars, some notebooks, our soundman, Brandon, and a pouch full of charms against ill omen. We are going to get elemental. We are going to stomp our feet and hammer at the strings until we get what we want from them," said the two in their tour statement.

Darnielle's latest full-length offering was 2008's "Heretic Pride." The album, which features plenty of studio-produced, full-band accompaniments, was an other large step away from his lo-fi roots. His latest releases are a pair of under-circulated EPs, "Satanic Messiah" and "Black Pear Tree." Both albums were released toward the end of 2008.

"Black Pear Tree" is a collaborative effort with post-rock songwriter Kaki King, and was given a limited release on vinyl. The topics covered on the album are – as always is the case with Darnielle – vast. One selection is even sung from

See JOHNS on page 6

Reality is musical diversity

By Ann Powers
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — What does "African music" mean to Americans? Light-spirited guitar lines made danceable by polyrhythmic talking drums, big bands led by tall men in regal garb, dancing women in bright headdresses.

In the two decades since rock stars Paul Simon and Peter Gabriel enlivened their music with an African tinge, a stereotype has formed, created by crossover hits, charity concerts and "The Lion King" – an ethnographically rich pageant, politically relevant but separate from pop.

Now, as part of a movement toward a global music marketplace, the American cliché of African music is falling apart – or, really, exploding. A new wave of artists and archival releases is now exposing the diversity of sound that's always been the African reality.

Recently, a group of African artists came to America to promote new releases or to perform. In conversations through a translator, they discussed tradition and globalization and their hopes for making music for a worldwide audience.

And they aren't all wearing those bright colors.

"For me that's not really how it is," said South African star Vusi Mahlasela, 44, who has released two albums of folk-pop on Dave Matthews' ATO label.

Mahlasela's storytelling gifts and glistening tenor have gained him a cult audience around the world; he even performed at the world's most elite nerd-fest, the Technology, Entertainment, Design (TED) Conference, in 2003.

"I have been going on stage with T-shirts and jeans. I don't need to project that identity because my skin tells it all," he said.

Rokia Traore of Mali might agree.

"I never have done traditional music because I can't," said the 35-year-old singer-songwriter about "Tchamantche," her electric-guitar-focused second album for the Nonesuch label, released in February.

"I don't know how to think and how to compose in that language. There are some schools for that, and I didn't have this chance to learn this music. My style is unusual, and in Mali I have a special career," she said.

Traore grew up a diplomat's daughter. Fluent in French and Bambara, a language spoken in Mali, she sings one song in English on "Tchamantche" – a cover of George Gershwin's "The Man I Love."

"I started listening to American traditional blues, jazz and R&B when I was 5," said Traore. "I was listening to this the same time as I discovered African music. To say that the blues began in Africa, everybody knew about that. And African music comes back to American blues for people like me."

Amadou & Mariam, a blind married couple from Mali whose career-changing 2005 album, "Dimanche a Bamako" (Sunday in Bamako), helped define the current African shift, have a similar relationship to their homeland and the world.

Their new album, "Welcome to Mali," partly produced by British-pop elder Damon Albarn, takes their "Afro-blues" sound into unexpected corners.

"The way we are doing this music is a positive side of globalization," said Amadou Hagayoko from London, promoting the American release of "Welcome to Mali," coming March 24 on Nonesuch. "For us to be able to collaborate with people from different cultures is good. We're still doing our own music, but we are open to others."

For Somali-born hip-hop artist K'Naan, "African music" can't be contained by any one definition – and not even by the boundaries of the continent itself.

"Troubadour," his just-released second album and debut on the A&M/Octone label, incorporates Ethiopian funk with reggae, rap and hard rock. Metallica guitarist Kirk Hammett solos on one cut.

"In my music, I do address Africa in general," said K'Naan, 30, in Hollywood for a February date at the Roxy. "I address Somalia more specifically because I know it more intimately. I was made in that stream. I owe a debt and gratitude to that world. But I think there is no real start and stop between being African and being an immigrant. My spirit is obsessed with movement and the distance that is caused by the movement. So I never allow myself to feel at home anywhere."

In America, the links among African music, jazz and the blues were forged through the slave trade. Another parallel emerged during the 1960s, when South African exiles Miriam Makeba and Hugh Masekela represented the civil-rights struggle globally.

Contemporary American listeners' ideas about African music

See AFRICA on page 6

Musician Vusi Mahlasela has released two folk-pop albums on Dave Matthews' ATO label. His storytelling abilities have earned worldwide fame.

Bridging genres with only a fiddle

By Randy Lewis
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES — Mark O'Connor sat in the small theater at the University of California, Los Angeles, as three earnest young music students – a violinist, a cellist and a pianist – determinedly worked through one movement of his Piano Trio No. 1, a piece commissioned and recorded by the Tesla Trio, one of chamber music's stellar ensembles. Once they finished, O'Connor walked onstage, complimented their performance and picked up his violin to demonstrate a few pointers on tempo, technique and playing style.

"At letter G," the violinist-composer said, as his charges quickly flipped pages to find that spot in the score, "this section emulates the Johnny Cash guitar strum where he goes up the neck." He mimicked the Man in Black's signature chick-chicka-chick strumming style and then mentioned how Cash's late-career performance of the Nine Inch Nails song "Hurt" had introduced the veteran artist to a new generation of fans shortly before his death in 2003.

"Go to YouTube," he suggested, "and watch the video of him singing it. It's a very effective performance. Hearing and seeing him play that song will help you play this part."

Over the last two decades, O'Connor has built an imposing repertoire of his own compositions, including his piano trio "Poets and Prophets," inspired by Cash's life and music. Among other pieces of music, he's written six concertos, three string quartets, six caprices and other works for solo violin (among them his signature "Appalachia Waltz"). The world premiere recording of what might be his most ambitious work yet, the six-movement "Americana Symphony" as played by the Baltimore Symphony under conductor Marin Alsop, will be released Tuesday on O'Connor's own Omac record label.

